CALIFORNIA DELTA FARMS, Inc., v. CHINESE AMERICAN FARMS, Inc.*
(Sac. 4148.)

Supreme Court of California. May 29, 1929.

Rehearing Denied June 27, 1929.

1. Conspiracy $\S$ 28—Intentional acts to carry out contract to convey land to corporation, majority of whose stockholders were aliens ineligible to citizenship, constituted "conspiracy" (Alien Land Act 1920, $\S$ 10, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1020, $\S$ 9).

Intentional acts of two parties in concert after December 9, 1920, to carry out provisions of contract for conveyance of agricultural land to corporation majority of whose stock was beneficially owned by persons ineligible to citizenship, with knowledge of the alienage, constituted "conspiracy," in violation of Alien Land Act 1920 (St. 1921, p. lxxxiii) $\S$ 10, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1020, $\S$ 9.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Conspiracy.]

2. Conspiracy $\S$ 24—Act lawful if done by one person may be unlawful if done or attempted by several.

An act may be lawful if done by one person and unlawful if done or attempted by a concert of action on the part of two or more persons.

3. Conspiracy $\S$ 37—Successful fruition of conspiracy does not bar prosecution for conspiracy itself.

The successful fruition of a conspiracy is no bar to a prosecution for the conspiracy itself.

4. Contracts $\S$ 107—Contract founded on act penalized by statute is void.

When a statute pronounces a penalty for an act, a contract founded on such act is void, though the statute does not pronounce it void nor expressly prohibit it.

5. Aliens $\S$ 10—Transfer knowingly violating Alien Land Act is invalid as between parties (Alien Land Act 1920, $\S$ 10, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1020, $\S$ 9).

Transfer made knowingly in violation of Alien Land Law effective Dec. 9, 1920 (St. 1921, p. lxxxiii) $\S$ 10, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1020, $\S$ 9, is invalid whether vendor was cognizant of extent of alienage in corporate purchaser, and statute renders illegal consideration underlying executory provisions of such contract, as against vendor's contention that alien would get a defeasible title and that defect therein could not be raised between the parties but only by the state.

6. Aliens $\S$ 10—Corporation prevented from completing land purchase contract because of alienage of majority of its stockholders held entitled to accounting and lien for payments on price (Alien Land Law 1920, $\S$ 10, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1020, $\S$ 9).

Where contract for transfer of land to corporation failed because majority of beneficial owners of corporation's stock were aliens ineligible to citizenship under Alien Land Law

1920 (St. 1921, p. lxxxiii) $\S$ 10, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1020, $\S$ 9, vendee was entitled to accounting in equity as of December 9, 1920, the effective date of statute and lien on property for amount found due it for its payments on purchase price less proper set-offs, since contract when made and until December 9, 1920, was valid as against every one other than the state.

7. Vendor and purchaser $\S$ 54—Vendee's full equitable title matures only on full payment of purchase price.

Equitable doctrine that vendee under land contract is owner of property applies only to payments made on purchase price, and full, equitable title matures only on full payment of price.

8. Aliens $\S$ 10—Statute authorizing alien ineligible to citizenship to acquire title to realty to satisfy lien thereon held not to authorize completion of existing land contract to alien purchaser (Alien Land Act, $\S$ 7, as amended).

Provision of Alien Land Act (St. 1921, p. lxxxiii) $\S$ 7, as amended (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, p. 1, Act 261, $\S$ 7) that act shall not apply to realty acquired in enforcement or satisfaction of any lien existing upon "or interest in such property" so long as realty so acquired remains property of alien acquiring it in such manner, and in limiting time for which land so acquired may be held to two years, held to constitute an exemption of real property acquired in satisfaction of any lien on such property or on any interest therein, and did not permit completion of executory contract to purchase on theory that alien purchaser, ineligible to citizenship, had equitable interest.

9. Vendor and purchaser $\S$ 335—Vendee in default not entitled to lien may have judgment for purchase money paid if consideration has failed without his fault (Civ. Code, $\S$ 3050).

Under Civ. Code, $\S$ 3050, vendee, though not entitled to lien for purchase money, may, even when in default, have judgment for purchase money paid if consideration for contract has without his fault failed.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; George F. Buck, Judge.

Action by California Delta Farms, Inc., against Chinese American Farms, Inc., which filed cross-complaint. From the judgment, defendant appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Adopting opinion in 268 P. 1050. See, also, 255 P. 1097, and 278 P. 232.

A. B. Bianchi, Manson & Allan, Albert H. Elliot, and Bianchi & Hyman, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Nutter, Hancock & Rutherford and A. P. Hayne, all of Stockton, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. In this cause a rehearing was granted and argument and additional briefs from both sides followed. After careful reconsideration of the issues, we are satisfied with the opinion of the court in bank, written by Mr. Justice PRESTON, and hereby readopt the same as the opinion of this court herein as follows, to wit:

The able briefs on file in this cause cover a wide range of subjects, but we will consider only a few of them, as we have been led to the conclusion that the appeal is controlled by the provisions of the Alien Land Law, which became effective December 9, 1920 (Stats. 1921, p. lxxxiii), and particularly by section 10 thereof, which reads as follows:

"If two or more persons conspire to effect a transfer of real property, or of an interest therein, in violation of the provisions hereof, they are punishable by imprisonment in the county jail or state penitentiary not exceeding two years, or by a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars or both."

This provision was broadened to cover any violation of the act by an amendment passed in 1923 (Stats. 1923, p. 1020).

The complaint in this action sets up a contract of sale and purchase, dated August 1, 1919, between plaintiff and one C. C. Wing, a native-born citizen of Chinese descent, covering 3437.58 acres of agricultural land, situate in San Joaquin county. Said contract provided that the total purchase price should be $893,770.80, $50,000 of which was paid upon execution thereof, and the balance of $843,770.80 was to be paid in yearly installments terminating January 1, 1928. The final balance of the purchase price remaining due on said date, to wit, $291,770.20, was to be paid by the assumption and discharge of an assessment made by Delta Farms Reclamation District 2030, amounting to $325,436, then outstanding as a lien upon said land, upon which reclamation bonds, bearing 6 per cent. interest, had been authorized and would be payable in approximately equal amounts annually from 1928 to 1938, inclusive.

It is further pleaded that all payments called for by said contract were made up to January 1, 1922, on which date there became due and payable $51,563.70, a like sum on January 1, 1923, and a like sum on January 1, 1924; that the total of said sums, plus interest on contract and other items due thereunder, less payments amounting in the aggregate to $151,649.63, made thereon, left a balance due of $231,263.42; that plaintiff had demanded repeatedly from said defendant payment of the said installments due on the purchase price, together with interest, assessments and taxes, and, after waiting more than 30 days, declared the rights of said defendant under said contract forfeited. The prayer is that said contract be declared no longer binding upon plaintiff, that said defendant be directed to deliver same up for cancellation, and that possession of said premises be ordered surrendered to plaintiff. The complaint was filed September 15, 1924.

Defendant, in a second amended answer and cross-complaint, admitted said default in payments, but set up, as an alleged waiver of plaintiff's right to claim a forfeiture under the contract, certain acts and conduct of plaintiff. The pleading alleges: That said C. C. Wing, an American-born Chinese, was acting on behalf of a corporation, to be thereafter organized, and which was later organized and became the defendant herein; that the $50,000 paid upon said contract prior to the formation of said corporation was more than 80 per cent. advanced by Chinese aliens, which fact plaintiff well knew, and that after said corporation was formed and transfer of said contract made thereto, although more than 50 per cent. of the issued and outstanding capital stock thereof stood of record in the name of native Chinese, eligible to citizenship, nevertheless at all of said times more than 50 per cent. of said stock so issued, to wit, 80 per cent. thereof, was actually, equitably and beneficially owned by aliens ineligible to citizenship, and this situation continued throughout the time covered by said contract. Further: "That the Alien Property Law of 1913, hereinabove particularly referred to, was changed and a new alien land law passed by initiative proceedings approved by the electors of the state of California November 2, 1920, Statutes of 1921, p. lxxxiii, in effect December, 1920, and which said Alien Land Law of 1920 was amended in 1923 by act of the Legislature of the state of California, and that from and after the time of the effective date of the Alien Land Law of 1920 the contract and agreement herein referred to as Exhibit A became impossible of performance; that the agreements, understandings, plan, and scheme of the plaintiff and defendant corporations to effect a transfer of the real property mentioned in said agreement became and were and now are in violation of the terms and provisions of said Alien Land Law of 1920 and 1923"; that by reason of said statute respondent was not able to carry out said agreement to convey or transfer merchantable or any title to or interest in the land the subject of the contract; that the agreement had become void in that the consideration therefor had wholly failed; that the terms of said agreement had become impossible of performance on the part of either party; that the objects and purposes of the agreement had become unlawful, and this without fault on the part of appellant.

It was further pleaded that at the time of the commencement of this action, appellant had paid to respondent under said contract the sum of $466,702.26, which sum, with interest thereon, appellant was entitled to have returned to it; that appellant had enjoyed the possession and benefits of said real property during all the times mentioned in the complaint and was ready, able, and willing and offered (and alleged that it had theretofore offered, also) to return possession of said real property to respondent, together with all benefits and profits which had accrued to it, together with interest at 7 per cent. from the dates when same was received and to restore plaintiff to its original position and status and to do all things in equity the court might determine to be meet and equitable to restore respondent to its original position, provided respondent pay to appellant the sum of $244,135.99, together with interest at 7 per cent. per annum, said sum representing the total amount of payments made by appellant on account of said contract, together with the value of improvements made upon said property, after deducting therefrom the proceeds, income, revenues, and every other receipt or money accruing to appellant from said possession and farming operations upon said property.

The prayer of the cross-complaint was that it be decreed, determined and adjudged that there had been a total failure of consideration in connection with said agreement; that the same had become impossible of performance by the parties; that said agreement be declared of no force and effect in law or equity; and that the purposes and objects thereof had become and were unlawful and that said agreement was for that reason void; and that said court determine the respective rights of the parties thereto after a full accounting and that equity in the premises be done; that plaintiff have and be restored to possession of said real property upon payment to defendant of the sum of $244,135.99, or such other sum, of greater or lesser amount, based upon a full accounting between the parties.

Plaintiff filed an answer denying the allegations of the cross-complaint, claiming, among other things, that it was without any knowledge or information whatsoever relative to the alleged participation of ineligible aliens in the transaction and their ownership of stock of defendant; that it was innocent of any intention to violate the provisions of the Alien Land Law; that defendant was an insolvent corporation, without funds or assets other than its pretended interest in said real property, and praying that the prayer of its complaint be granted.

From the findings and admissions of the pleadings, the following pertinent facts appear: (1) That the majority of the stock of defendant corporation has at all times herein been beneficially owned by Chinese aliens, hence by persons ineligible to citizenship in the United States (numerically the stockholders being about 1000, with 95 per cent. aliens, all Chinese); (2) that on December 9, 1920, when said Alien Land Law came into effect, there had been paid to plaintiff on account of said contract the sum of $297,557.21; (3) that up to and including January 1, 1922, there was no dereliction whatever on the part of defendant in making the payments called for by said contracts of sale and purchase; (4) that between January 1, 1922, and the time of commencement of this action, there had accrued upon said contract, and was then due and owing as a balance, the sum of $236,186.11; (5) that defendant went into possession of said property on January 1, 1920, and remained in possession thereof until the rendition of judgment herein on May 29, 1926; (6) that said property, and the whole thereof, is agricultural land and was during all times herein cultivated by said defendant and its lessees and sublessees as agricultural land; (7) that when said Alien Land Law of 1920 went into effect no particular attention was paid thereto by either party, but defendant, acting in apparent good faith in all other respects, proceeded until January 1, 1922, to carry out literally the terms of said contract, and apparently used its best efforts to continue to comply with said contract, but partially failed, as above noted; (8) that plaintiff in this action likewise gave no heed to the enactment of said statute, the court finding that it had no actual knowledge of the exact alien ownership of said stock, but the court also found that defendant corporation was organized for the purpose of taking over said contract and that it was known to plaintiff that ineligible aliens would be the owners, to some extent at least, of said stock and that 80 per cent. of the first payment on said contract was made by persons who were ineligible aliens and that during the whole period between the date of said contract and the commencement of this action, aliens, ineligible to citizenship, were owners and holders of at least part of the stock of said corporation.

The question for solution is the effect of said section 10 of the Alien Land Act of December 9, 1920, upon the contract here involved. The validity of this section of the act has been upheld. In re Akado, 188 Cal. 739, 207 P. 245. Criminal prosecutions have been carried on under it. People v. Cockrill, 62 Cal. App. 22, 216 P. 78; In re Okahara, 191 Cal. 353, 216 P. 614. Prosecution of the seller and buyer under a general conspiracy statute occurred in Washington. State v. McGonigle, 144 Wash. 252, 258 P. 16.

[1-3] The acts of the parties intentionally done with knowledge of the alienage of defendant and in concert to carry out the provisions of this contract were after December 9, 1920, a clear violation of this statute, so clear that it occurs to us that extended discussion is unnecessary. It is true the statute does not punish criminally the substantive act of making or receiving the transfer of title, but it is an accepted holding that an act may be lawful if done by one person and unlawful if done or attempted by a concert of action on the part of two or more persons. In re Akado, supra; and, also, 5 R. C. L. § 9, p. 1070. It is also true that the successful fruition of a conspiracy is no bar to a prosecution for the conspiracy itself. The completion of this contract would form conclusive proof of a conspiracy under the act if plaintiff possessed knowledge of the extent of the ownership of defendant's stock by ineligible aliens.

[4] We then come to the application of the well-known doctrine that, "Where a statute pronounces a penalty for an act, a contract founded on such act is void, although the statute does not pronounce it void, nor expressly prohibit it." Berka v. Woodward, 125 Cal. 119, 127, 57 P. 777, 780 (45 L. R. A. 420, 73 Am. St. Rep. 31); Smith v. Bach, 183 Cal. 259, 262, 191 P. 14; Wallace v. Zinman, 200 Cal. 585, 588, 254 P. 946.

[5] But counsel for respondent contend that this rule is here inapplicable, stating their views as follows:

"Even if it were true that a criminal conspiracy was consummated by conveying title to an alien, yet under the 1920 law the alien would get a defeasible title and the defect of the title still could not be raised between the parties."

This contention really forms the foundation upon which respondent rests its claims. In other words, it declares the existence of an exception to the general rule and cites in support of this contention such cases as Suwa v. Johnson, 54 Cal. App. 119, 203 P. 414; In re Akado, supra; In re Okahara, supra; Mott v. Cline, 200 Cal. 434, 253 P. 718.

In the first-mentioned cause the lessor attempted to avoid his lease to a Japanese alien under the provisions of the Alien Land Act of 1913 (St. 1913, p. 206), declaring agricultural lands thereafter acquired by aliens ineligible to citizenship subject to escheat at the hands of the state. The court, following some of our own decisions and a score or more from other jurisdictions, said:

"The question presented is not new and the act of 1913 discloses no intention on the part of the Legislature to provide any new rule for its determination. It has uniformly been held under statutes forbidding ownership of land by aliens that, an alien grantee takes a defeasible estate, 'free from attack by any one except the government' in a direct proceeding." Suwa v. Johnson, supra, at page 121 (203 P. 414).

It is true that some of the provisions of the 1913 act are carried into the 1920 act, but section 10, above quoted, is entirely new and is sui generis. It provides an additional deterrent, one which may reach the owner of the soil about to be conveyed to the alien. It is true that in Re Akado, supra, some unfortunate expressions are found, parenthetically intimating that this action might not change the rule announced in Suwa v. Johnson, supra, in the respect before us, but there is much other language therein found indicating that the Legislature was applying a drastic policy "to prevent any attempts to create relations between such aliens and other persons whereby the title to land would be taken by any other person and the use thereof would be enjoyed by the alien." In re Y. Akado, supra, pp. 742, 743 (207 P. 246). "Furthermore, it is to the interest of the state that all persons owning land should be effectively deterred from attempting to evade or frustrate the provisions of the act forbidding the acquisition of such land by such alien, by means of colorable conveyances and unrecorded trusts." In re Y. Akado, supra, p. 742 (207 P. 246).

In Re Okahara, supra, it is said:

"The purpose of the Alien Land Law, as is well said in O'Brien v. Webb [(D. C.) 279 F. 117] supra, 'was apparently to prevent ownership and legal interest in farming lands from passing to aliens who never could become citizens.'"

And in Mott v. Cline, supra, at page 445 (253 P. 724) it is said:

"This question depends largely upon the legislative intent and upon whether or not the objects sought to be attained are within the police power of the state. There is no direct language upon this point, but there is general language which necessarily implies an intention to prevent an executory contract from ripening into a fee simple. * * * It is appellant's view that the option provision has been rendered void by section 10 of the act of 1920, which makes it a crime punishable as a misdemeanor or felony to conspire to effect a transfer of real property or an interest therein in violation of the law. This is the only act that is made a public offense and penalized by imprisonment or fine or by both (In re Akado, 188 Cal. 739 [207 P. 245]). The exaction imposed for all other violations of the act inhibiting transfers is that the conveyance is rendered void as to the state and the real property escheats to the state upon action brought by the Attorney General or district attorney of the county in which the violation occurs. People v. Cockrill, 268 U. S. 258 [45 S. Ct. 490, 69 L. Ed. 944]. Our statute follows the common law as to the escheat proceedings. It cannot be said that Ah Chue violated any provision of the conspiracy section."

These authorities not only do not offer comfort to respondent's position, but clearly point to the opposite conclusion. We see no room for the contention that this provision is not effective to invalidate any contract made knowingly in defiance of its terms. The object of the law was to strengthen the act of 1913 and to make effective the inhibition against allowing our agricultural lands to get either directly or indirectly into the hands of aliens ineligible to citizenship. This view is confirmed by the act of 1923 (Stats. 1923, supra), which, as above noted, extends the provision to cover conspiracies to violate any of the provisions of the act. The executory provisions of the contract before us, if knowingly acted upon, are within the condemnation of this section. The police power is used in its "highest and truest sense" in confining the ownership of the soil to persons who are and from whom may be made citizens of the republic (Mott v. Cline, supra, and other cases there cited). We therefore interpret said section of the act as an innovation upon the common law and effective to destroy and render illegal the consideration underlying the executory provisions of the contract before us.

If respondent knowingly acted with appellant in any effort to effect a transfer of the lands here involved it would be committing an offense. Appellant, which is little less than an aggregation of ineligible, and the stockholders and agents thereof, would after December 9, 1920, certainly be conspiring to violate said section if it pursued its efforts to obtain title to the lands, and this is true whether the seller was or was not cognizant of the extent of the alienage in the corporate ownership.

[6] Appellant invokes the rule announced in Montgomery v. Meyerstein, 186 Cal. 459, 199 P. 800 and 195 Cal. 37, 231 P. 730, to the effect that if a contract fails for any reason not due to the default of the vendee he may recover from the vendor in an accounting the amount paid on the purchase price less proper credits and set-offs. And under this head it demands an accounting in equity as of December 9, 1920, and a lien on the property for the amount found due it. This, we hold, it is entitled to have. It has already appeared that it was in possession of the lands from January 1, 1920, to the date of the judgment, May 29, 1926. It also appears that subsequent to the effective date of said act it has paid large sums of money to respondent amounting to some $151,649.63. While appellant is certainly entitled to no affirmative advantage growing out of anything occurring subsequent to December 9, 1920, and while it was proceeding in violation of the statute, still we see no reason resting in law or equity to deny it the rights accruing to any other person or corporation up to said date. And this embraces the right to employ any remedies the law affords to eligible persons to secure those rights. Under the universal doctrine announced in Suwa v. Johnson, supra, and Mott v. Cline, supra, and elsewhere, the contract when made was not void but valid and binding as against everyone other than the sovereign state, which condition obtained until December 9, 1920. Appellant could have legally assigned, prior to said date, its rights under said contract to an eligible person. Mott v. Cline, supra. The provisions of section 7 of said Alien Land Act are in part as follows:

"* * * The provisions of this section and of sections two and three of this act shall not apply to any real property hereafter acquired in the enforcement or in satisfaction of any lien now existing upon or interest in such property so long as such real property so acquired shall remain the property of the alien, company, association or corporation acquiring the same in such manner. No alien, company, association or corporation mentioned in section two or section three hereof shall hold for a longer period than two years the possession of any agricultural land acquired in the enforcement of or in satisfaction of a mortgage or other lien hereafter made or acquired in good faith to secure

[7, 8] Under this section the act itself allows appellant to secure to itself the proceeds of an accounting in equity as to all lawful matters pertaining to said transaction, including the assertion of a lien upon the property for the amount found due, and this carries the right to continue in possession of the property until same is satisfied. But respondent not only denies consolation to appellant from the provision of the act last above quoted but advances a construction thereof which will allow such contracts as we have before us to ripen into full title without penalties, civil or criminal, of said statute. The contention is that in equity the vendee under a contract of purchase is the owner of the property; hence the exemption of "the interest in such real property" is effective to allow the completion of title. We can give this contention no weight.

The equitable doctrine above referred to is sometimes applied, but only to the payments made on the purchase price; the full equitable title matures only upon the full payment of such price. Montgomery v. Meyerstein, supra. This doctrine would not allow the completion of the contracts before us, as about one-third only of the purchase price had been paid on the effective date of the act. Moreover, this equitable doctrine has often been held inapplicable in the construction of statutes conferring or withholding rights in real property. Belieu v. Powers, 54 Cal. App. 244, 201 P. 620; Allen v. Wilson, 178 Cal. 674, 174 P. 661. But the whole contention of respondent is based upon a misconstruction of the language of this proviso. For we construe the meaning to be as though it read as follows: An exemption for "real property acquired in satisfaction of any lien upon such property or upon any interest therein." This construction would allow the foreclosure of mortgages and other liens held by the alien, and in so doing would concede to him the right to acquire the property if necessary with the restriction that he must dispose of same within two years after so acquiring it. Still again this question is settled contrary to respondent's contention by the holding in Mott v. Cline, supra, where it is stated that there is general language which necessarily implies an intention to prevent an "executory contract from ripening into a fee simple." It is also stated "It was the purpose of the act to cut off instantaneously the right to thereafter acquire the fee." It is true that the executory contract there under consideration was a lease with an option to purchase. Nevertheless, it was an executory contract based upon a valuable consideration and every reason for applying the doctrine to that contract exists with respect to the contract before us.

It may be that respondent is not in pari delicto with appellant as to matters occurring subsequent to December 9, 1920. If this indeed be true, an accounting as to such matters may be had to ascertain if the value of the use and occupation of this property by appellant is greater than the payments and benefits received from it and, if so, respondent would be entitled to have such excess credited on its obligation to appellant arising out of payments made and other legal benefits received from it that are properly referable to said contract and antedate December 9, 1920.

[9] The question of rescission and the rules governing this subject are not, strictly speaking, involved here, as the rights of the parties are not determined by these rules. Civil Code, § 3050, governs the situation and provides as follows:

"One who pays to the owner any part of the price of real property, under an agreement for the sale thereof, has a special lien upon the property, independent of possession, for such part of the amount paid as he may be entitled to recover back, in case of a failure of consideration." Montgomery v. Meyerstein, supra.

Although not entitled to the lien, the vendee may, even when in default, have judgment for the purchase money paid if the consideration for the contract has, without his fault, failed. Merrill v. Merrill, 103 Cal. 287, 35 P. 768, 37 P. 392; Wilson v. Smith, 69 Cal. App. 211, 213, 230 P. 963; Haile v. Smith, 113 Cal. 656, 664, 45 P. 872.

It is likewise unnecessary to extend this discussion by a consideration of the claim that appellant has estopped itself to resist a forfeiture under the contract by its subsequent conduct. The rule we have invoked is one of public policy which is not controlled by the subsequent conduct of the parties. To give ear to this plea would be to admit life in a contract during the period we have declared it to be illegal for it to operate.

The judgment is reversed with directions to the court below to proceed in said cause in a manner not inconsistent with the holding herein made.

On Petition for Rehearing.

WASTE, C. J. Appellant has filed a petition for a rehearing, in which it renews the contention, heretofore made, that: "Construed as contended for by the defendant, section 10 of the Alien Land Law 1920 (St. 1921, p. lxxxiii) would violate article 1, § 10, and article 14 of the Amendments to the Constitution of the United States." This contention has had due consideration and the petition for a rehearing is denied.

CALIFORNIA DELTA FARMS, Inc. (a Corporation), Plaintiff and Cross-Defendant, Respondent, v. CHINESE AMERICAN FARMS, Inc. (a Corporation), Defendant and Cross-Complainant, Appellant. (Sac. 3987.)

Supreme Court of California. May 29, 1929.

In Bank.

Appeal by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court of San Joaquin County; George F. Buck, Judge, in an action for forfeiture of contract for purchase of real property. Reversed.

Adopting opinion in 268 P. 1055. See, also, 255 P. 1097.

A. B. Bianchi, Manson & Allan, Albert H. Elliot, and Bianchi & Hyman, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Nutter, Hancock & Rutherford and A. P. Hayne, all of Stockton, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. In this cause a rehearing was granted and argument and additional briefs from both sides followed. After careful reconsideration of the issues, we are satisfied with the opinion of the court in bank, written by Mr. Justice PRESTON, and hereby readopt the same as the opinion of this court herein as follows, to wit:

"Appellant correctly states the question presented on this appeal as follows: 'This is an appeal taken from an order denying the motion of appellant to set aside and vacate the judgment, and for the entry of another and different judgment on the findings made, upon the ground that the conclusions of law were incorrect, erroneous and not consistent with or supported by the findings of fact.'

"The appeal is ruled by the case of California Delta Farms, Inc., v. Chinese American Farms, Inc. (Sac. No. 4148) 278 P. 227, this day decided, to which reference is hereby made. This is true because the facts upon which the determination in that case was made appear from the findings of fact. This motion, being based upon the same findings, the conclusion reached must of necessity be the same. It is unnecessary to order or give another judgment as the reversal in the main cause will necessitate a consideration by the court below of some issues made by the answer and cross-complaint which could not be fully disposed of under the findings of fact as made."

The order is reversed.

DOOL et al. v. FIRST NAT. BANK OF CAL-

Supreme Court of California. June 6, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 3, 1929.

1. Equity ☞66—Court held empowered to require reimbursement for advances under void trust deed after incompetent mortgagor regained reason as condition of quieting title (Civ. Code, § 38).

Where decedent was mentally incompetent within Civ. Code, § 38, when he executed deed of trust and delivered it to bank, but bank, at decedent's request, after recovery of his reason, and at request of decedent's executors after his death, advanced moneys in good faith in reliance on validity of trust deed, trial court had power to require executors to reimburse bank for money so advanced as condition to quieting executors' title to realty covered by trust deed, in application of maxim that "he who seeks equity must do equity."

2. Equity ☞66—Plaintiff's moral obligation to pay, notwithstanding legal insufficiency of defendant's remedy, underlies rule that one seeking equity must do equity.

The controlling principle underlying the equitable maxim that "he who seeks equity must do equity" is the moral obligation of plaintiff to pay, notwithstanding the legal insufficiency of defendant's remedy.

3. Equity ☞66—That defendant's claim is barred by lapse of time does not render it unavailable in enforcing rule that one seeking equity must do equity.

That defendant's claim against plaintiff is barred by lapse of time does not render such claim unavailable to defendant in seeking to apply maxim that "he who seeks equity must do equity."

4. Pleading ☞409(4)—No pleading of maxim that one seeking equity must do equity is required, where plaintiff's pleading or proof discloses plaintiff's inequitable position.

No pleading setting up maxim that "he who seeks equity must do equity" is required on part of defendant seeking reimbursement, where plaintiff's pleading or proof discloses plaintiff's inequitable position.

5. Insane persons ☞67—Court had power to provide for sale of property to satisfy requirement of reimbursement of defendant made as condition of canceling trust deed.

Where trial court determined that defendant bank was entitled to reimbursement for advances made by it in reliance on validity of deed of trust as condition to canceling trust deed which it found void because executed by incompetent person, it had power to provide for sale of property covered by trust deed to satisfy requirement of reimbursement, if such requirement was not complied with within a reasonable time.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; A. C. Finney, Judge.

Action by Donald Dool and another, as executors of the last will and testament of Edward Dool, deceased, against the First National Bank of Calexico and others. From an adverse judgment, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

C. Sherman Anderson, Frank L. Muhleman, and Muhleman, Anderson & Palmer, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Ault & MacKinnon, of Calexico, and Clyde R. Burr, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal by the plaintiffs on the judgment roll alone from a conditional judgment in an action to set aside certain promissory notes and a trust deed and to quiet the title of the plaintiffs as executors of the will of Edward Dool, deceased, in and to certain real property in the county of Imperial, of the alleged approximate value of $278,500.

It was alleged in the complaint, in the first cause of action, that Edward Dool, on March 4, 1925, and for a long time prior thereto, was the owner of said real property; that on said date he was indebted to the defendant bank in sums not exceeding $25,000 and was reputed to be indebted to one H. H. Peterson in the sum of $2,012.58, and to one Mauldin & Co. in the sum of $7,620.55; that on said 4th day of March, 1925, said Edward Dool suffered a stroke of paralysis, seriously affecting his mind and body; that on the 27th day of March, 1925, the defendant bank procured the signature of said Edward Dool to a certain purported deed of trust and to four certain purported promissory notes, to wit, two notes for $28,561.34 and $4,000, respectively, payable to the defendant bank, one note for $2,012.58, payable to said H. H. Peterson, and one note for $7,620.55, payable to Mauldin & Co., which trust deed included and embraced, among other properties, the real property described in paragraph III of the complaint; that from the date of said stroke of paralysis, to and including the 27th day of March, 1925, and for a long time thereafter, said Edward Dool was not able to understand or comprehend the nature, extent, effect, or purpose of the instruments signed by him on March 27th, being entirely without understanding by reason of such illness, and that said trust deed and notes were and are void; that, pursuant to the power granted by the purported trust deed, the defendant bank had declared the whole amount evidenced by said notes to be due and payable for breach of the obligations contained in the trust deed; and that the trustees thereunder had published notice that said real property would be sold on February 17, 1928, pursuant to the terms of the trust deed.

In the second cause of action it was further alleged that the defendant bank, in addition to the amounts specified in said promissory notes, claims certain amounts by way of advancements made on the strength of said purported trust deed for interest, taxes, etc., in the sum of $32,462.25, which amounts actually owing are uncertain and unliquidated, and that, for the purpose of ascertaining the amounts actually owing from the estate of Edward Dool to the defendant bank, it is necessary that an accounting be had between the estate and the defendant bank. A third cause of action alleged that the purported trust deed was void for uncertainty in the designation of the beneficiaries thereunder. A fourth count was a cause of action in the ordinary form to quiet title. The plaintiffs prayed that said notes and trust deed be declared void, that the defendants be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, and that the title of the plaintiffs in and to said property be quieted, and that, if said purported notes and trust deed be found by the court to be valid, an order be made requiring an accounting to determine the exact amount due and for a temporary injunction pending the trial of the action.

A demurrer to the third cause of action was sustained. The plaintiffs declined to amend that cause of action, and the defendants answered the remaining three counts. The question of the mental capacity of the decedent was submitted to a jury, which returned a verdict on April 4, 1928, finding that, at the time Edward Dool signed said notes and trust deed, he was incapable of understanding the nature, purpose, or effect of said instruments. Following the verdict, the parties stipulated, subject to the objection of the plaintiffs, that the same was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial in the light of the verdict, that the amounts laid out, expended, and advanced by the defendant bank by way of taxes, assessments, and interest on prior incumbrances, chargeable against certain of said real property, between June 8, 1925, and January 3, 1928, less credits, totaled the sum of $34,427.14. The action was commenced on February 15, 1928.

The court made its findings, wherein it adopted the verdict of the jury, and found that, at the time the alleged notes and trust deed were signed, the decedent was entirely unable, by reason of his illness, to comprehend the nature, purport, or effect of those instruments, and concluded that the same were and are of no effect. The court further found, with certain exceptions not necessary to be noted, that the title to the real property described in the trust deed was in Edward Dool on March 4, 1925, and the possession thereof in the plaintiffs, as executors, subject to the will of the decedent; that shortly after the execution of said notes and trust deed said Edward Dool became so improved in his health that from the 28th day of April, 1925, to the date of his death, he was able to transact and carry on and understand the ordinary duties and incidents of his business; that between the dates last aforesaid he allowed and induced the defendant bank, and since that time and until the commencement of this action the plaintiffs, as executors of the will of the decedent, allowed and induced the defendant bank, to lay out and expend from time to time certain sums of money, the amounts of which, and the purposes for which, the same were expended are set forth at length in the findings, showing the same to have been expended for taxes, assessments, interest on prior incumbrances, etc., chargeable against the property in question and in the sum of $34,427.14; that each of the items aggregating said sum was laid out and expended by the defendant bank in good faith and in reliance upon the validity of said trust deed, and with the inducement and knowledge of Edward Dool during his lifetime and of plaintiff executors after his death, and that each item and the whole thereof so expended benefited the property described in paragraph III of the complaint, and has redounded to the benefit of the plaintiffs in this action.

As conclusions of law, the court decided that the defendant bank was entitled to be reimbursed for the advances made by it in the payment of taxes and in the protection of said property against prior liens to the extent of $34,427.14, with interest at the legal rate from the date of each payment, prior to the taking effect of any relief or judgment granted to the plaintiffs; that upon such reimbursement the plaintiffs would be entitled to a judgment that said notes and trust deed are void and of no effect, and, further, that upon such reimbursement the plaintiffs would be entitled to judgment quieting their title as against all claims of the defendants or any of them. The court further decided that, if the plaintiffs failed to make such reimbursement within a reasonable time, the defendant might apply to the court for the ascertainment of the amount due at the time of such application, and obtain an order directing that all of the property described in paragraph III of the complaint be sold at public auction by the county sheriff to satisfy the amounts found to be due the defendant bank, such sale to be made in the manner and form and with all of the incidents of a sale of real property under execution, as provided in part 2, title 9, c. 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure.

On the foregoing findings and conclusions of law, the court entered judgment in accordance therewith. The defendants have separately appealed from the judgment, in so far as it declares said notes and trust deed to be null and void, but the record on that appeal has not been perfected, and we are therefore not now called upon to consider the merits of that appeal.

[1] In support of the plaintiffs' appeal herein, it is first contended that it was beyond the power of the court to require reimbursement of moneys paid out by the defendant bank, for the reason that said notes and trust deed were found to be void because the person who signed the same was entirely without understanding, as contemplated by section 38 of the Civil Code. See Ripperdan v. Weldy, 149 Cal. 667, 673, 87 P. 276; Jacks v. Estee, 139 Cal. 507, 73 P. 247. The defendants rely on the well-known maxim of equity that "he who seeks equity must do equity." Counsel for neither side have cited any precedent directly in point as applied to the unusual facts of this case. Reliance is placed by defendants' counsel upon numerous cases declaring the general equitable principle which underlies the requirement of reimbursement, and by analogy argue their applicability to the case at bar. For example, the case of Booth v. Hoskins, 75 Cal. 271, 17 P. 225, and the many subsequent cases to the same effect, are cited wherein it has become the settled law of this state that, in an action by a mortgagor to quiet his title against an outlawed mortgage, the court may require as a condition to the relief sought that the plaintiff first pay the amount of the mortgage debt. Our attention is also directed to the line of cases commencing with Weber v. San Francisco, 1 Cal. 455, and cases of similar import such as Couts v. Cornell, 147 Cal. 560, 82 P. 194, 109 Am. St. Rep. 168, and Holland v. Hotchkiss, 162 Cal. 366, 123 P. 258, L. R. A. 1915C, 492, holding that, where a property owner seeks to quiet his title against the purchaser of a tax deed, the equitable relief will not be granted, except upon condition that the property owner reimburse the purchaser in the amounts expended by the latter in pursuit of the title. The defendants also fortify their position by reference to 1 Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence (4th Ed.) §§ 385 and 388, where the maxim that "he who seeks equity must do equity" is discussed, and to the text of California Jurisprudence (vol. 10, pp. 508-511), where the same subject is elaborated upon with supporting authorities in this state. It is there stated: "One of the most familiar maxims of equity, which, however, has not been declared by the Civil Code, is that he who seeks equity must do equity. This maxim means 'that whatever be the nature of the controversy between two definite parties, and whatever be the nature of the remedy demanded, the court will not confer its equitable relief upon the party seeking its interposition and aid, unless he has acknowledged and conceded, or will admit and provide for, all the equitable rights, claims and demands justly belonging to the adverse party, and growing out of or necessarily involved in the subject matter of the controversy.' The rule that he who seeks equity must do equity is applied because of the broad principle that equity is peculiarly a form of conscience, and it will not give relief which will enable a party to escape payment of all of a sum of money where it can perceive that in justice he should pay a part, unless he is ready to pay, and accompanies his demand with an offer to pay, the part which is just. The particular kind of equitable relief applied for is immaterial. Under this principle no one will be permitted to hold that which he has secured from another under a contract whose force he is seeking to destroy while it is still executory, unless he can show that there are equitable circumstances in the case justifying him in doing so."

[2] The controlling principle underlying the well-established rule is the moral obligation of the plaintiff to pay, notwithstanding the legal insufficiency of the defendant's remedy. As applied to the present appeal, it appears that the defendant bank, at the request of the decedent after the recovery of his reason, and at the request of the plaintiffs after his death, advanced certain moneys in good faith and in full reliance upon the validity of the trust deed and the provision therein securing the repayment of advances for the benefit of the property described therein. It cannot be questioned that upon such payment a moral obligation arose to repay the same. So far as the decedent was concerned, a legal obligation also arose to repay the moneys so advanced at his request and for his benefit, and assumpsit would undoubtedly have been an appropriate remedy if invoked during his lifetime. It must be remembered that we are now considering the obligations flowing from transactions between the defendant bank and a person restored to reason and fully capable of incurring the obligations. We are not now concerned with the fate of the notes embraced within the trust deed nor with the validity of the trust deed itself as affecting the title to the real property in question. But we are bound to consider that, at the time the defendant bank was dealing with Edward Dool in his right mind with reference to advances for the benefit of the property, the trust deed was an executed writing, duly recorded, unimpeached and valid on its face, of which the decedent, while sane, must be presumed to have had notice, and with reference to which both parties acted. Clearly, Edward Dool, in his lifetime, could not have quieted his title against the bank which had enriched his property at his request without subjecting himself to the requirement of reimbursement. This would be so even assuming that in his lifetime he might have obtained a judgment setting aside the notes and trust deed on the ground of want of mental capacity to execute them. In that event, equity would be concerned with protecting him against his void act and deed, but a court of equity would have been feeble indeed if it could not have prevented him from employing this instrument as a means to induce the payment of money by the bank for his benefit with no obligation of reimbursement.

[3, 4] And we think the plaintiff executors are in no better position. It is true they act in a representative capacity as trustees for the beneficiaries under the will. Thompson v. Wood, 115 Cal. 301, 47 P. 50; 11 Cal. Jur., p. 212. The devisees in the present case are the successors in interest of the testator, and are not in the position of purchasers within the doctrine of Faxon v. All Persons, 166 Cal. 707, 137 P. 919, L. R. A. 1916B, 1209. We deem it to have been entirely within the province of the trial court to consider it unconscionable to permit the plaintiffs to have their title quieted without the reimbursement of the advances made by the defendant bank at the request of the plaintiffs and their testator and for the benefit of the property the title to which is sought to be quieted. The plaintiffs insist that the defendant bank should have filed a claim against the estate. It may be assumed that the bank successfully could have pressed a timely claim against the estate. By the lapse of time such remedy has been barred, but the obligation has not been extinguished. It is the affirmative action of the plaintiffs in seeking the equitable relief, and not the legal infirmity of the defendant's remedy, that is the determinative factor. No pleading to that effect on the part of the defendant seeking reimbursement is required where the pleading on behalf of the plaintiff or the proof discloses the inequitable position of the plaintiffs. A court of equity may, and frequently does, refuse to entertain a party's application for relief where the facts disclose that the party seeking the relief must do, or offer to do, equity before the court in good conscience may grant him the relief sought. Likewise, if the facts proved disclose that a court should not grant the equitable relief sought without requiring that the party seeking the relief do equity, it is of no material consequence that the other party has misconceived his rights or omitted to add a prayer for relief on his own behalf.

[5] The plaintiffs further contend that the court was without power to provide for a sale of the property to satisfy the requirement of reimbursement in the event that the same be not complied with within a reasonable time. We find no merit in the contention. This order was but a means employed to carry the court's order for reimbursement into effect. It was more favorable to the plaintiffs than the usual conditional order that, if the reimbursement be not made within the specified time, judgment will be entered for the party entitled to the reimbursement.

It is also contended that the court committed prejudicial error in sustaining the demurrer to the third cause of action. The deed of trust specified the "First National Bank of Calexico, et al." as the "beneficiary." The body of the instrument plainly discloses the beneficiaries referred to as "et al." to wit, H.

H. Peterson and Mauldin & Co. The beneficiaries were thus made certain, and we find no fatal defect in the trust deed in this regard.

The judgment is affirmed.

Supreme Court of California. May 31, 1929.

1. Dedication ⚡46, 64—Land dedicated to specific purpose must not be diverted to any other purpose, but dedication must be construed with reference to primary object.

Land which has been dedicated to definite and specific purpose must be used in conformity with terms of dedication, and not diverted to any other purpose or use, but dedication must be understood and construed with reference to its primary object.

2. Dedication ⚡58—Dedicator is presumed to have intended use according to usages known at time and those justified by change of conditions.

Dedicator is presumed to have intended property to be used in such way by public as will be most convenient and comfortable and according to not only proprieties and usages known at time of dedication, but also to those justified by lapse of time and change of conditions.

3. Dedication ⚡58—Municipality held authorized to improve canal areas as surface streets, where canals were intended primarily as highways.

Municipality held authorized to improve canal areas as surface streets as against contention that land dedicated to specific purpose cannot be devoted to any other use, where canals were intended to serve primarily as highways, but were used as well for recreational purposes.

4. Constitutional law ⚡93(1)—Lot owners had no special vested interest in canals under which they could prevent improvement of canal areas as surface streets.

Where city's legislative body declared that public convenience and necessity required that canals be abandoned and transformed into surface streets, owners of lots held not to have special vested interest in canals under which they could prevent proposed improvement or of which they could be divested only by eminent domain proceedings.

5. Navigable waters ⚡35—That storm drain was to be constructed on tidelands was not fatal to legality of proceedings for improvement of canal areas as surface streets.

That storm drain was to be constructed on tidelands held not fatal to legality of proceedings for improvement of canal areas as surface streets, since municipalities have right to extend necessary public improvements on to tide lands lying within their corporate boundaries, especially where United States government gave consent to construction of proposed storm drain.

Application by R. A. Wattson for a writ of mandate prayed to be directed to Arthur Eldridge and others, as members of and constituting the Board of Public Works of the City of Los Angeles, to compel them to execute a certain contract for street improvements. Writ granted.

Superseding opinion, 272 P. 1095.

Arthur M. Ellis, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Hewitt, McCormick & Crump, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., and Herman Mohr, and William H. Neal, Deputy City Attys., and E. R. Young, all of Los Angeles, amici curiæ.

PER CURIAM. This proceeding had its inception in the District Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division 2, wherein petitioner sought the issuance of a writ of mandate to compel the respondents, as members of and constituting the board of public works of the city of Los Angeles, to execute a contract, duly awarded to petitioner under public bid, for the filling in and improving as surface streets certain areas or parcels of land theretofore used and employed as canals or artificial waterways. A prior proceeding instituted by the city of Venice was involved in Schultz v. City of Venice, 200 Cal. 50, 251 P. 913, but, because of the technical defects in the record on appeal in that case, the determination therein announced will not be deemed binding in the present proceeding. Before the return date of the alternative writ issued by the District Court of Appeal herein, the parties stipulated as to certain facts material to the issues now presented, and agreed upon the appointment, thereafter duly ordered, of a commissioner who was to receive evidence and report to the court his findings upon certain other material matters as to which the parties were unable to reach an understanding. In due time Mr. James H. Howard was appointed as such commissioner. Following a rather extended hearing, the commissioner made and filed with the District Court of Appeal his findings of fact and report, wherein he concluded, in substance, that the respondent board of public works was mistaken in its belief that the city of Los Angeles could not rightfully and properly fill in and improve as public streets all those certain strips or parcels of land designated in the ordinance of intention and theretofore used as canals. The commissioner's conclusion as to the propriety of the proposed improvement was based on his finding "that said canals have been continuously used by the public as public waterways for all purposes of public ways for more than twenty years prior to the passage of the ordinance of intention * * * namely since about the year 1905, and the same constitute and are public streets in the city of Los Angeles." Having reached a conclusion opposed to that of the commissioner, the District Court of Appeal declined to make the writ peremptory. A brief reference to the unique historical background of the lands with which we are herein dealing will materially assist in the solution of the principal question presented which has to do with the propriety of a proceeding instituted under the Street Improvement Act of 1911 (St. 1911, p. 730), and looking to the filling in and improving as surface streets certain areas theretofore used for canal purposes.

In the year 1905 the Abbot Kinney Company, a corporation, conceived the idea of creating a city to be known as "Venice of America," having a system of waterways and canals resembling those of the Old World city. It thereupon set about reclaiming a tract of marshland lying along the coast line in the county of Los Angeles. The lands so reclaimed were subdivided and laid out in lots and blocks. Intercommunicating canals converging into an artificial lagoon and connected with the adjacent ocean ran through the tract. A map designating these lands as "Venice of America" tract was filed with the county recorded of the county of Los Angeles. There appeared on this map in the areas designated as canals the words "Not to be dedicated." The banks of the canals were cemented, and strips of land adjacent thereto were planted with trees and shrubs and otherwise ornamented. In due time, the lots into which the tract had been divided were sold largely to residential buyers, who thereafter built and occupied residences thereon. On May 11, 1909, the Abbot Kinney Company conveyed to the city of Venice for sidewalks and parkways certain strips of land, approximately twelve feet in width, along each side of the several canals. Thereafter, and on May 20, 1912, it transferred and conveyed to said city, with but one exception, all of those certain areas or "lots" theretofore designated and used as canals. This latter instrument provides that "the premises herein conveyed shall be used by said second party and its successors solely and only for permanent waterways, and canals, free to the public forever." Subsequently, and on March 10, 1925, the Abbott Kinney Company executed and delivered to the same grantee a deed purporting to convey "for public street purposes" the identical canal areas theretofore conveyed "solely and only for permanent waterways and canals." The respondents have urged throughout that this latter deed was and is ineffective for any purpose, for the reason that the Abbot Kinney Company had by its 1912 deed completely divested itself of any interest it might theretofore have had in said canal areas. This conclusion of the respondents would seem to be unimpeachable, for, as declared in Slavich v. Hamilton, 201 Cal. 299, 306, 257 P. 60, 63, "if the dedication of the property * * * was complete in the first instance, the property thereby became public property, and the owners lost all control over it. If the dedication was complete by their acts, whether express or implied, it was thereafter irrevocable by them, and the effect of such dedication cannot be qualified by any act or declaration thereafter made on their part. The property dedicated has become public property, impressed with the use for which it was dedicated." In our subsequent treatment of the subject we will therefore regard the dedication of these canal areas to the public use to have been complete and final as of the year 1912. At this point it should be stated that in the month of November, 1925, the city of Venice consolidated with the city of Los Angeles.

Among other things, the parties have stipulated "That at all times from the construction and opening of said canals in the Venice of America tract by the Abbot Kinney Company in the spring of 1905 until the conveyance of the same to the city of Venice in the month of May, 1912, the said company was in the possession of and exercised dominion over said canals, waterways and appurtenances, including bridges over the same, stairways, and landings, and over the walks and parkways along the sides, and banks thereof. That the side of said canals were lined with concrete walks or banks, as were also said bridges, said stairways and landings. That said Abbot Kinney Company at all times during said period maintained said canals, waterways and appurtenances at its own cost and expense, and employed persons who attended to the care, upkeep, superintendence and management of said canals, waterways and appurtenances.

"That during all of said time said canals, waterways and appurtenances were so kept and maintained open to the free use and enjoyment of the public generally and by the owners and occupants of lots and premises in said Venice of America tract and were so used and enjoyed openly and continuously and without interference or hindrance for boating, swimming, bathing and aquatic sports, amusement and recreation, and the said Abbot Kinney Company maintained and operated and the public used gondolas, canoes and other water craft in said canals and waterways for transportation along the same for the purpose of public pleasure and convenience and for the rental or use of which a charge was made.

"That upon the conveyance of said canals and waterways to the city of Venice, on or about the 20th day of May, 1912, the said city of Venice took possession thereof and the appurtenances pertaining thereto, and exercised dominion and control over the same in like manner as had theretofore been done by the said Abbot Kinney Company. That the said city of Venice at all times until its consolidation with the city of Los Angeles in the month of November, 1925, operated and maintained said canals and waterways at public cost and expense and out of the public funds of said city, and employed persons to, and who did superintend the operation of said canals and waterways and attend to the upkeep and maintenance thereof and appurtenances thereto, including said parkways and walkways along the banks or margins thereof. That at all times from the conveyance of said canals and waterways to the said city of Venice, as aforesaid, to the consolidation of said city with the city of Los Angeles, said canals, waterways and appurtenances were open to the free use of and were used by the public generally and by the owners and occupants of premises in said Venice of America tract openly and without interruption or interference for boating, bathing and swimming, and for purposes of pleasure and recreation, and also for transportation of household goods and supplies. That said canals and waterways were also used for transportation of passengers for hire in launches, the operators of which paid licenses to the city of Venice."

[1-3] In support of their position that the municipality is without authority to "divert" these canal areas to surface streets, the respondents rely upon the universally accepted rule of law that land which has been dedicated to a definite and specific purpose must be used in conformity with the terms of the dedication, and not diverted to any other purpose or use. Harter v. San Jose, 141 Cal. 659, 75 P. 344; Archer v. Salinas City, 93 Cal. 43, 51, 28 P. 839, 16 L. R. A. 145. With this rule we have no quarrel. However a dedication must be understood and construed with reference to its primary object and purpose. Godfrey v. City of Alton, 12 Ill. 29, 52 Am. Dec. 476. In Hall v. Fairchild-Gilmore-Wilton Co., 66 Cal. App. 615, 624, 227 P. 649, 653, it is declared that "nothing is improper which conduces to that object." The real question always is, therefore, whether the use in a particular case, and for a designated purpose, is consistent or inconsistent with such primary object. Whether or not a particular use amounts to a diversion from that for which the dedication was made depends on the circumstances of the dedication and the intention of the party making it. It has been held that such use is authorized as is fairly within the terms of the dedication and reasonably serves to fit the property for enjoyment by the public in the manner contemplated. Spires v. Los Angeles, 150 Cal. 64, 68, 87 P. 1026. In other words, the dedicator is presumed to have intended the property to be used in such way by the public as will be most convenient and comfortable and according to not only the proprieties and usages known at the time of the dedication, but also to those justified by lapse of time and change of conditions.

While the several intercommunicating canals constructed in and through "Venice of America" were used as well for recreational purposes, they must of necessity, and because of the peculiar plan and construction of said city, be held to have been intended by the builder of that city to serve primarily as highways over which persons resident therein and the public generally might pass. In Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Minneapolis, 232 U. S. 430, 442, 34 S. Ct. 400, 403 (58 L. Ed. 671), the court concludes that an artificial waterway or canal "is none the less a public highway, established to afford an appropriate place of public passage," and further along in its opinion quotes with approval the following: "The way sought to be established,' * * * 'a canal or waterway, with walks along each side' was 'clearly a public way, subject to the rules governing public ways.'" There cannot, therefore, be any question but that a canal is a highway of a peculiar kind. 9 Cor. Jur. 1125, § 1. The dedication of a highway to public use authorizes any ordinary use for highway purposes. With changing conditions of travel and use a city has the right to adapt and appropriate its highways from time to time to such uses as in its judgment would be most conducive to the public good, and the courts should be slow to interfere with the exercise of this discretion. Jones v. City of Houston (Tex. Civ. App.) 188 S. W. 688, 689.

In our opinion, it would be most unreasonable to conclude that the Abbot Kinney Company by its dedication of the canal areas "for permanent waterways and canals free to the public forever" intended thereby to indelibly and irrevocably impress upon these lands a trust solely for canal purposes. A liberal interpretation, and one more conducive to the public good, which the dedicator is presumed to have had in mind when making the dedication, warrants the conclusion that it was merely intended by the employment of the quoted language to secure to the public generally some manner or means of ingress and egress. When these canals were originally acquired by the city of Venice from the Abbot Kinney Company, it may not have been actually contemplated by any of the parties to the acquisition and grant that they would be used for surface highways or streets, yet it may properly be said to have been within the legal contemplation of all that they were to be used for all purposes by which the object of their creation—as public highways or thoroughfares—could be promoted. It cannot reasonably be supposed that the dedicator intended otherwise than that they should respond to whatever demands, new improvements, and increased facilities might make upon them, so only that such demands must always be consistent with their character and purpose as public highways. In our opinion, the filling in and improving of these canal areas as surface thoroughfares constitutes but a new adaptation of their original dedication to the advancement of public convenience—a more suitable and more economical enjoyment of them by the public as highways. The contemplated improvements would rather increase than diminish their fitness and convenience as public highways. We conclude, therefore, that the improvement of the canal areas as surface streets is fairly within the scope of the powers which it was reasonably contemplated the municipal authorities might exercise from time to time during the years subsequent to the original dedication for public purposes.

[4] It is contended by the respondents that the owners of lots in the Venice of America tract have a special vested interest in the canals and waterways of which they can only be divested by proceedings in eminent domain. It is difficult to conclude what interest has been vested in these lot owners which might be subjected to monetary appraisal. These canals are artificial, and have been artificially filled with sea water. Their construction had nothing to do with a natural water course. There is a well-defined distinction between the rights of property owners abutting on an artificially constructed canal built to carry the waters of a natural water course and the rights of those abutting on an artificial canal constructed to carry an artificial supply of water. Whatever might be the rights of the former, it is well established that the latter do not, merely by reason of their location geographically, acquire the right to have the artificial canal maintained and the flow of water therein continued. See Murchie v. Gates, 78 Me. 300, 4 A. 698, 700; 1 Wiel on Water Rights, 56. If the lot owners possess the asserted right, it is a right to require the canals maintained and filled with water to such an extent as to render them of some beneficial use as waterways. The asserted right would necessarily imply an obligation on the part of some agency, public or private, to continue perpetually such maintenance and supply. Such a right would ordinarily be founded in contract, express or implied. Here we find none. The Abbot Kinney Company did not contract to do so when it laid out the tract and sold the lots. Nor do we find such a contractual obligation on the part of the city as to such lot owners. Finally, the legislative body of the city has declared that the public convenience and necessity require that the canals be abandoned and, as highways, be transformed into streets for the uses with which public highways are ordinarily improved, and we conclude that the abutting property owners have not such rights as may be successfully interposed to prevent the proposed improvement.

[5] Nor do we find any particular merit in the contention touching asserted irregularities in the proceedings looking to the performance of the proposed work. In accordance with the requirements of the statute (Stats. 1923, p. 106), the ordinance of intention states in general terms the character of the work and the location of the proposed improvement, and refers to the plans and specifications for a more detailed description thereof. That a storm drain is to be constructed on tidelands is not, in our opinion, fatal to the legality of the proceedings, for the authorities recognize the right of municipalities to extend necessary public improvements on to tidelands lying within their corporate boundaries. Since the institution of this proceeding, the United States government has given its consent to the construction of the proposed storm drain.

Let a peremptory writ of mandate issue as prayed.

RITTER v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 23, 1929.

Divorce ⚭312—Trial court cannot change custody of minor children pending appeal from interlocutory divorce decree containing order as to their custody.

Where interlocutory divorce decree contains order as to care, custody, and control of parties' minor children, trial court cannot act in such matter pending appeal therefrom, but any change of custody pending such appeal must be made through juvenile court or by some other separate proceeding.

Application by Mabel A. Ritter for a writ of prohibition to the Superior Court in and for the County of Los Angeles. Alternative writ made peremptory.

Brooks Gifford and William E. Fox, both of Pasadena, for petitioner.

James R. Jaffray, of Los Angeles, and John T. Houser, for respondent.

YORK, J. An affidavit was filed setting forth certain matters alleged to have occurred since the 20th day of June, 1928, and since entry of an interlocutory decree of divorce, in which interlocutory decree the custody of three minor children had been fixed and determined. It appears that the trial court issued an order directing the plaintiff and petitioner herein to show cause why the custody of said minors should not be changed, and that that hearing is now pending in the superior court and is the matter towards which the writ is directed.

The trial court made an order as to the custody of the children, first, on May 23, 1928, and thereafter, on the 30th day of June, 1928, an interlocutory decree of divorce was entered in said action, which decree in terms recited the same conditions as to the custody of the children as the order of May 23, 1928; that thereafter the defendant filed notice of appeal from said interlocutory decree, and from the whole thereof, on September 19, 1928.

The contention between the parties upon this hearing is as to whether or not said notice of appeal stays the hands of the trial court in said action, the respondent court contending that there is no appeal from the order made and entered on the 23d day of May, 1928, and that that order is still in full force and effect and subject to modification by the trial court.

We are of the opinion that by reason of the fact that the interlocutory decree contained an order as to the care, custody, and control of the children, and as the appeal from that judgment has been perfected, during the pendency of the appeal the trial court may not act in said matter. If there be any change of conditions, which for the welfare of the children requires a change of custody pending appeal, such change of custody (while the appeal is pending) will have to be made through either the juvenile court or by some other and separate proceeding other than the divorce action between the parties. Vosburg v. Vosburg, 137 Cal. 493, 70 P. 473; Ex parte Queirolo, 119 Cal. 635, 51 P. 956: " * * * The effect of the appeal in instances of this character is to remove the subject matter of the adjudication from the jurisdiction of the court below pending the appeal, and suspend the power of that court to enforce its order or judgment until the appeal is determined."

It is therefore ordered that the alternative writ be made peremptory.

JENSEN, Director of Department of Institutions, v. McCULLOUGH, County Treasurer.
(Civ. 6427.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 29, 1929.

Mandamus ⚭182—Supreme Court may recall peremptory writ of mandate on uncontested motion to limit application to individuals named in petition.

Peremptory mandate may be recalled on uncontested motion for correction to confine its operation to individuals named in petition.

Original mandamus by Earl E. Jensen, Director of the Department of Institutions of the State of California, against C. F. McCullough, as Treasurer of San Benito County, Cal. On motion to recall peremptory writ of mandate (271 P. 568) for correction. Motion granted.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and R. L. Chamberlain and Chas. A. Wetmore, Jr., Deputy Attys. Gen., for petitioner.

Wyckoff & Gardner, of Watsonville, and A. M. Runnels, of Hollister, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The respondent moves that the peremptory writ of mandate heretofore issued herein be recalled for the purpose of correction.

The writ was issued pursuant to the judgment in favor of the petitioner ordering a peremptory writ as prayed in the petition. Jensen v. McCullough (Cal. App.) 271 P. 568. The cause was determined upon the demurrer to the petition, and the issues were therefore confined to the allegations of the petition. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Welch, 202 Cal. 312, 314, 260 P. 545. The issues raised by the petition related to the failure of the respondent to remit to the state the amounts found due from the county of San Benito to the state of California for the care of four defective children committed to the Sonoma State Home. Though the petition prayed for general relief, and the proceeding was conceded to be a test case to determine the constitutionality and application of the state statute requiring the county to remit to the state payment for the care of defective children generally, the petitioner now does not contest the application for a correction of the peremptory writ so as to confine its operation to the individuals named in the petition.

The motion to correct the peremptory writ is therefore granted, and a corrected writ, reading as follows, is ordered served forthwith upon respondent:

"Peremptory Writ of Mandate.

"The People of the State of California to C. F. McCullough, as Treasurer of the County of San Benito, State of California, respondent above named:

"You are hereby commanded and required to pay to the State Treasurer of the State of California, the sum of Three Hundred ($300) Dollars, on account of the commitments of the inmates named in the petition on file herein from the County of San Benito to the Sonoma State Home for the period from December 1, 1926, to May 1, 1927; and you are further commanded and required to pay to said State Treasurer the sum of Four Hundred and Sixty ($460) Dollars, on account of the commitments of the inmates named in the petition filed herein from the County of San Benito to the Sonoma State Home for the period of May 1, 1927, to December 1, 1927; and you are required and commanded to make such payments at the time of the next settlement of the County Treasurer of San Benito County with the State of California pursuant to section 3866, Political Code, of the State of California; and we do also command that you make due return to us before this court how you have executed this writ within twenty (20) days after the date of service hereof.

"Witness the Honorable Joseph S. Koford, Presiding Justice of the District Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, Division Two, at the court room thereof in the City and County of San Francisco in said State, and the seal of said Court. Dated nunc pro tunc as of the 27th day of September, 1928.

"By the order of said Court: "

"Clerk of the District Court of Appeal, State of California, in and for the First Appellate District."

HENRY COWELL LIME & CEMENT CO.
v. MITCHELL et al. (Civ. 6111.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. May 22, 1929.

Execution ☞288—In action to recover value of property sold at sheriff's sale, evidence did not sustain finding that plaintiff was not owner thereof.

In action to recover value of personal property, which plaintiff claimed under assignment, but which was sold at sheriff's sale under judgment against assignor's lessor, evidence held insufficient to sustain finding that plaintiff was not owner of property or entitled to its possession.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Charles R. Barnard, Judge.

Action by the Henry Cowell Lime & Cement Company against Jap E. Mitchell and others. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

F. L. Hatch, of San Francisco, and Light & Lane, of Glendale, for appellant.

U. Grant Hayden, of Fresno, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. Action to recover the value of certain personal property alleged to belong to plaintiff, which was sold at sheriff's sale. The property so sold is claimed to be of the value of $6,674.16. Plaintiff acquired the property by assignment from one W. W. Taft, as hereinafter set forth. Defendant Mitchell by separate answer denied that plaintiff owned the property, or that it was of the value alleged in the complaint, or had a greater value than $1,540. As a separate defense he further alleged that it consisted of certain concrete building blocks and was purchased by him at sheriff's sale; the same having been seized by virtue of a writ of attachment in an action brought against the Fresno Glazed Cement Pipe Company. Defendant Grummett, by separate answer, also denied that the property was of the value alleged, and further denied that plaintiff was the owner thereof or entitled to its possession. The court found plaintiff not to be the owner of the property, and judgment was in favor of the defendant.

It is claimed in support of the appeal that there is no evidence in the record to sustain the findings. The history of the case, as disclosed by the evidence, shows that in February, 1917, one W. W. Taft leased from the Fresno Glazed Cement Pipe Company, a corporation, its plant for the manufacture of cement pipe for irrigation purposes. Taft entered into possession under the lease and manufactured a quantity of pipe, which he kept on hand in the yard of the premises. In the same year the Riverside Portland Cement Company, a creditor of the Fresno Glazed Cement Pipe Company, the lessor, attached the plant and all material, raw and manufactured, in Taft's possession. Taft replevined the property in an action against the sheriff, giving the usual bond and retaking possession. This action was finally determined in the year 1921. Meantime Taft, while in possession of the property, sold out in 1917 all of the pipe so attached in said action.

The findings in the case above referred to show that Taft's lease was void in fraud of creditors and the property seized was held to be the property of the Fresno Glazed Cement Pipe Company. Taft thereafter continued in possession of the plant and manufactured certain pipe, buying and paying for the needed material, and also paying for the necessary labor to manufacture it. While thus employed, respondent John Grummett had obtained a judgment against the Fresno Glazed Pipe Company, and he caused an execution to issue thereon, commanding the sheriff to levy upon the property of the cement company to satisfy the judgment. Under this writ the sheriff levied upon a quantity of material at the plant and the pipe manufactured by Taft during the year 1921, and advertised it for sale. Taft thereupon served a third party claim upon the sheriff. At the time this notice was served, the pipe on hand had been struck off to respondent herein, Jap E. Mitchell. The remaining property was turned over to Taft on his third party claim. Taft assigned his interest to the plaintiff herein, Henry Cowell Life & Cement Company, and this action was brought by such company for the conversion of the pipe sold under the Grummett execution.

The trial court found, in effect, that the execution sale was legal in all respects; that

Taft stood by and permitted the sale to be made; that he was not entitled to the possession of the property sold and was not the owner thereof. A reading of the record shows that the conclusion of the trial court was based upon the mistaken theory that the pipe sold was the property involved in the case of Riverside Portland Cement Company v. Fresno Glazed Cement Pipe Company, and which had been repossessed by Taft in his action against the sheriff, as above set forth. There is no evidence in the record to sustain this finding, or that the Fresno Glazed Cement Pipe Company had any interest in the property sold under the Grummett judgment. On the contrary, the only evidence upon the subject shows that the pipe repossessed by Taft in the Riverside Portland Cement Company action was disposed of by Taft and that the property here involved was subsequently manufactured by him at his own expense.

The evidence without conflict supports plaintiff's allegations as to its ownership of the property. This being so, it follows that the judgment must be reversed.

It is so ordered.

CHEESEMAN v. CHEESEMAN. (Civ. 3784.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 4, 1929.

1. Witnesses $\S$ 40(1)—Law fixes no minimum age for receiving testimony of child, though it must be accepted with caution.

While testimony of child of tender years is to be accepted with great caution, the policy of the law no longer fixes a minimum age at which it will be received.

2. Divorce $\S$ 303(3)—Finding of licentious conduct, authorizing modification of divorce decree to deprive father of right to visit infant daughter, held supported by evidence.

Finding of licentious conduct of father towards his infant daughter, authorizing modification of divorce decree to deprive him of right to visit her, held supported by the evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fletcher Bowron, Judge.

Rose C. Cheeseman was granted divorce from Evans R. Cheeseman. From an order modifying the decree, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Perry F. Backus, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Knight & Reynolds and John Perry Wood, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from an order modifying a final decree of divorce so as to deprive the father of the right to visit or associate with his infant daughter on account of his immoral conduct and baneful influence over the child.

[1] In March, 1926, plaintiff was granted a final decree of divorce from the defendant on the ground of willful desertion, and she was awarded the custody of their only infant child Margaret, subject to the usual order permitting the father to visit the child at any and all reasonable times and places and to take her out with him twice a week between the hours of 3 and 7 o'clock p. m. On May 4, 1927, an order to show cause was issued, to determine why said decree should not be modified so as to absolutely prohibit the father from "seeing, visiting or communicating" with his daughter, on account of his licentious conduct toward the child. This citation was heard upon affidavits and oral testimony adduced. The application was bitterly contested. The transcript of testimony consists of 250 pages. After a careful examination of the child, Margaret, who was 6½ years of age, as to her qualifications for mental understanding and intelligence, by stipulation she was cautiously interrogated by the judge of the court and critically cross-examined by counsel for the appellant. Every reasonable precaution seems to have been exercised to guard against improper testimony. While the evidence of a child of such tender years should be accepted with great caution, the policy of the law no longer fixes a minimum age at which it will be received. 28 R. C. L. 463, § 50. This witness possessed at least ordinary intelligence; she was attending the B second grade at school, and her evidence is convincing of licentious conduct on the part of appellant toward the child, which is most reprehensible and appalling, and which acts are punishable by the provisions of sections 288 and 288a of the Penal Code of California.

At the conclusion of the evidence the court adopted findings and modified the final decree of divorce and awarded the sole and exclusive custody of the child to plaintiff, restraining and prohibiting the defendant from visiting or associating with the child at any time or place. In substance the court found that plaintiff is a fit and suitable person to have the care and custody of the minor child; but, upon the contrary, that the defendant was frequently guilty of vulgar, lewd, and lascivious conduct toward the child, which acts were specifically enumerated, and that he is an immoral person unfit to associate with his infant daughter, and that his contact with her would be highly detrimental and injurious to her character and welfare.

[2] The appellant contends that the findings are not supported by the evidence. In an elaborate brief the appellant's chief argument is that the story of the child is unbelievable and is the result of inducement on the part of the mother and others. After a critical examination, however, this court is unable to say that the story of the child bears any evidence of falsity. Without being unduly led in the course of her examination, the child exhibited a knowledge of the details of lascivious affairs which could scarcely be taught to a child or so accurately recited by means of mere tutoring. Other witnesses corroborate the truthfulness of the child's story by the relating of certain material circumstances.

Ordinarily the weight and sufficiency of testimony must be left with the trial judge. We see no reason for departing from that rule in the present case. The findings are amply supported by the evidence, and we are of the opinion that the child was qualified to testify and that her evidence was credible. No errors in the trial of the case are charged, except as to certain hearsay statements of the child which were made to a nurse, which objection was subsequently waived by counsel for the defendant when he said: "Very well, I will withdraw the objection at the present time." The objection was not renewed.

The judgment is affirmed.

MERCANTILE INV. CO. v. HOW et ux.
(Civ. 3758.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 28, 1929.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 989—Appellate court inquires only whether there is substantial evidence supporting findings attacked as insufficiently supported by evidence.

When findings are attacked for insufficiency of evidence to support them, power of District Court of Appeal begins and ends with inquiry whether there is substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which of itself will support findings of trial court.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 931 (1)—Appellate court assumes trial court resolved conflict in testimony for prevailing party, on appeal from findings attacked as unsupported by evidence.

Where findings are attacked for insufficiency of evidence to support them and testimony is in conflict on any material point, District Court of Appeal must assume that trial court resolved conflict in favor of prevailing party.

3. Vendor and purchaser $\S$ 44, 341 (3)—Finding that purchaser had lien for money paid less value of occupancy and that vendor's authorized agents induced purchase by false representations held supported by evidence.

In action to quiet title to realty in which defendants claiming interest in land consisting of lien for purchase money filed cross-complaint to recover part payments, evidence was sufficient to support finding that defendants were entitled to lien for money paid less reasonable value of property while defendants occupied it, and that defendants were induced to enter into contract for purchase of property by false representations of plaintiff's agents authorized to negotiate sale, accept money from purchasers, and conclude sales.

4. Brokers ⇨96—Real estate broker, generally, is not authorized to collect purchase price, and owner is not answerable to third party for money paid broker.

Real estate broker's authority to negotiate sale, generally, does not carry with it express or implied authority to collect, as agent for owner, money on account of purchase price, and owner is not answerable to third party who has deposited with broker part or whole of purchase price.

5. Brokers ⇨96—Contract providing owner shall keep representative in broker's office to take charge of money taken in by broker contemplated collection of money from purchasers by broker.

Contract between owner and real estate broker appointing broker to negotiate sale of lots, and directing broker to keep books and records and to permit owner to keep representative in broker's office to receive money for owner which might come into broker's office, showed owner contemplated that broker would not only negotiate sales of lots but also collect money from purchasers and conclude sales.

6. Brokers ⇨96—Vendor authorizing broker to sell land and knowing of broker's sales and receipts of money from purchasers could not claim ignorance of broker's operations.

In suit to quiet title in which defendants counterclaimed for part of purchase price paid broker negotiating sale of property for owner, evidence that owner placed broker in charge of subdividing and selling property, placed representative in broker's office to look after its interest, and knew that broker was selling property and receiving payments from purchasers showed that operations of broker were so closely related to owner, and were so public and notorious, that officers of owner, as reasonable men, could not be heard to say they were ignorant of broker's operations.

7. Brokers ⇨103—Owner receiving and retaining money paid broker thereby ratified contract and acts of broker.

Where owner received and retained money paid by purchasers of land to brokers, who were authorized by owner to sell land, owner thereby ratified contract and acts of broker in receiving and retaining money.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Douglas Edmonds, Judge.

Action by the Mercantile Investment Company against T. J. V. How and wife, in which defendants filed a counterclaim. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Paul Barksdale D'Orr and A. L. Abrahams, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Keeler & French, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PRESTON, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff and appellant Mercantile Investment Company, a corporation, brought this action to quiet title to a tract of land situate in the town of "Hollydale," Los Angeles county. An answer was filed by the defendants and respondents T. J. V. How and Mary E. How, his wife, in which they alleged that they had an interest in said real property consisting of a lien thereon for the sum of $1,163.60, which sum they had paid to appellant on account of the purchase price of said property. The answer further alleged that the contract theretofore entered into between respondents and appellant had been rescinded by respondents on the ground of fraud.

Respondents also filed a cross-complaint in which they alleged that on March 5, 1924, appellant, through its agents, H. H. Townsend & Co., made a contract in writing with respondents to sell, and respondents had agreed to purchase, the real property in question for $6,500; that prior to the making of said contract, appellant, through its said agents, made certain false and fraudulent representations to them for the purpose of inducing them to purchase said property, and said false representations did induce them to enter into the contract of purchase.

It was also alleged in the cross-complaint that various payments, amounting to $1,163.60, were made to appellant by respondents on account of the purchase of said property before the true facts were discovered.

Appellant filed an answer to said cross-complaint, specifically denying all of the allegations thereof.

The case was tried by the court without a jury, and the court found that appellant was the owner of the real estate in question, but that respondents were entitled to a lien thereon for the amount of money they had paid, less the reasonable rental value of the property while respondents occupied it, or, a lien for the sum of $469.37; and judgment was entered accordingly.

From this judgment Mercantile Investment Company prosecutes this appeal.

At the trial it was conceded that appellant was the owner of the real property in question, and the case was tried upon the issues made by the cross-complaint and the answer thereto. The court found, among other things, that appellant, through its agents H. H. Townsend & Co., with intent to deceive and defraud respondents, and to induce them to enter into said contract of purchase, did falsely represent and state to respondents that the Keiner Cotton Manufacturing Company owned 20,000 square feet of land in "Hollydale," and would immediately commence the construction and erection of a large factory for the manufacture of cotton goods; that in truth and in fact, said Keiner Cotton Manufacturing Company did not own 20,000 square feet of land or any land in Hollydale, and were not going to immediately, or at all, commence the construction and erection of a large or any factory for the manufacture of cotton goods or at all; that said statements and representations were false and said appellant knew at the time said statements were made that the same were false; that appellant, also through its agents, at the same time and for the same purpose, falsely represented and stated that plans were being perfected for the erection by Lundius-Eccleston Motors Corporation, in Hollydale, of its first unit of a plant to cost $2,000,000 and to cover 10 acres, and which was to be used for the purpose of manufacturing automobiles by said company, and that said motor corporation was bringing its mechanics and workmen from the East and would immediately construct 100 houses to be used as homes for said mechanics and working men. The court found that these statements were absolutely false and known to be false by appellant and made for the purpose of inducing respondents to purchase said property. Many other similar false statements and representations were found by the court to have been made by appellant through its agents for the purpose of inducing respondents to enter into said contract of purchase.

It is conceded that said statements and representations were made by H. H. Townsend & Co., to respondents, and that they were all false and known to Townsend & Co., when made, to be false. It is also apparently conceded by appellant that the price agreed to be paid by respondents for the property in question was far in excess of its real value.

Appellant contends "there is no evidence whatever that H. H. Townsend & Co. was either the actual or ostensible agent of appellant." This is the sole contention made on this appeal.

[1, 2] When the findings are attacked for insufficiency of the evidence to support them, our power begins and ends with an inquiry whether there is substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which in and of itself will support the findings of the trial court. If on any material point the testimony is in conflict, we must assume that the trial court resolved the conflict in favor of the prevailing party. Treadwell v. Nickel, 194 Cal. 243, 228 P. 25; Gjurich v. Fieg, 164 Cal. 429, 129 P. 464, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 111. Therefore, we will simply epitomize only enough of the record to show whether or not the findings and judgment of the trial court have substantial support in the evidence.

Appellant was the owner of a tract of land in Los Angeles county called "Hollydale," which included the land in question. H. H. Townsend, doing business as "H. H. Townsend & Co.," had charge of the disposal of the lots in the tract under a written contract which provided in part as follows: "Townsend agrees to keep in a manner prescribed by the company (appellant) a complete set of books and records truly and correctly portraying each and every transaction had by him in connection with the improving, subdividing and sale of said property, and to permit the company, at its own expense, to keep in his office a representative who shall at all times have access to said records and books, and who shall receive for the company all moneys, checks, notes, contracts and other things of value which may come into the office of said Townsend & Co. by, through or in connection with the sale of the property or any part or parcel thereof; it being understood and agreed that all moneys received are and shall be the sole and exclusive property of the company. * * * The company (appellant) agrees that out of the moneys received by it, whether the same be first or deferred payments, 50 per cent. shall be set aside for and paid to Townsend; settlements to be made on Tuesday of each week for all moneys received during the previous week. * * *

This contract was offered in evidence in the trial court and marked Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 1, but for some reason no copy of it is found anywhere in the record on appeal. We are therefore unable to determine its full terms; the above-quoted portions thereof were taken from respondents' brief. Appellant makes no mention or reference to this contract.

The method adopted by H. H. Townsend & Co. in selling these lots included signs posted on the premises with various and alluring inscriptions, which were calculated to attract the unwary; for example: "Hollydale Home and Industrial City—the Baby City—Watch me Grow. H. H. Townsend & Co."

There were also signs showing factories coming to "Hollydale," listed as "L. & E. Motor Company," "Keiner Cotton Manufacturing Company," "University Specialty Manufacturing Company," "Aunt Betty Produce Company," and others. The name of H. H. Townsend & Co. appeared on all these signs; the name of appellant, Mercantile Investment Company, the owner, did not appear on any of the signs.

Respondents, driving by the tract on or about March 2, 1924, and seeing the signs and improvements on the land, visited the "auditorium," situated on the tract, upon which was the sign: "Hollydale. H. H. Townsend & Co." There they met a salesman named Lindsley, who invited them to remain for lunch and listen to a lecture on the desirability of purchasing lots in "Hollydale." This, respondents did; then Lindsley showed them over the tract and the next evening visited respondents at their home. A day or two later Lindsley conducted respondents to the office of H. H. Townsend & Co. in Los Angeles. There H. H. Townsend informed them that he was the agent of appellant and that he and appellant were really partners. Respondents agreed to purchase the property in question for $6,500, and paid to Townsend a deposit of $250, subject to a satisfactory contract being prepared, a receipt being given to them for said sum, which receipt was signed by H. H. Townsend & Co.

Subsequently a sale and purchase contract was prepared in the name of H. H. Townsend & Co., as sellers, and respondents, as purchasers, and respondents were at that time told that the reason for making the contract in the name of H. H. Townsend & Co., and not appellant, was that H. H. Townsend & Co. was the agent for appellant and that when the contract was fulfilled a deed would be issued to respondents by appellant. The total cash payment called for by the contract was $1,000, which respondents paid. The balance was to be paid at the rate of $50 per month, with interest at 7 per cent. per annum. Respondents paid various installments under said contract, amounting to a total sum of $1,163.60 paid on account of the purchase price of said property.

On April 5, 1924, respondents sent a check made payable to H. H. Townsend & Co. for $82.09. This check was cashed and contains the following indorsements on the back thereof: "H. H. Townsend & Company, Angus Davis," and below that "Pay to the Order of the Long Beach Branch, Security Trust & Savings Bank, Long Beach, California, Mercantile Investment Company."

On or about May 5, 1924, respondents made another check for $81.80, payable to H. H. Townsend & Co., but before it was delivered, W. O. Campbell, who was the field manager for appellant, called upon respondents and requested that they give the check to him, which was done, and a receipt was issued by Campbell as follows:

"Long Beach, Calif., May 5, '24.

"Received of T. J. V. How check $81.80 as payment on Lot 31—Blk 50—Hollydale. Payable to H. H. Townsend & Co.

"Mercantile Inv. Co.,

"By W. O. Campbell."

Thereafter, and on June 5, 1924, respondents received the following letter, to wit:

"Los Angeles, Calif., June 5, '24.

"Mr. & Mrs. T. J. V. How, R. R. 1—Box 663, Hynes, Calif. I am returning herewith your check of $81.51 as payment and interest on your property at Hollydale, asking you to hold same until notified otherwise.

"Yours truly, Mercantile Inv. Co.,

"By W. O. Campbell."

H. H. Townsend disappeared, and after the receipt of this communication from appellant, no further payments were made by respondents.

Mr. E. A. Parkford, the president of the appellant corporation, was called as a witness for respondents, and testified that during the greater period of the subdivision exploitations of Hollydale, he was looking after its affairs as executive officer, and between 1923 and 1924 he was on the tract once or twice a week at times and away for three or four or five months at a time, and during the occasion of his visits to Hollydale during the latter part of 1923 and the first five or six months of 1924, he saw the signs of H. H. Townsend & Co. on the property; that he knew the method used by Townsend in advertising and selling the property; and that his company was the owner of the property in question and that he was familiar with the terms of the contract between appellant and Townsend.

The court also found that appellant received all of the $1,163.60 paid to H. H. Townsend & Co. by respondents. Appellant does not question this finding.

[3] From all these facts and circumstances it is difficult to perceive how the trial court could have reached any other conclusion than that H. H. Townsend & Co. were the agents of appellant, clothed with authority not only to negotiate the sale of lots in "Hollydale," but also to accept money from the purchasers and conclude the sales.

[4] We are not unmindful of the well-settled rule of law that a real estate broker's authority to negotiate a sale does not carry with it any express or implied authority to collect as agent for the owner money on account of purchase price, and the owner is not answerable to a third party who has deposited with the broker part or the whole of the purchase price. Hicks v. Wilson, 197 Cal. 269, 240 P. 289; Gold v. Phelan, 58 Cal. App. 472, 208 P. 1001; Schnier v. Percival, 83 Cal. App. 470, 256 P. 1109.

[5] In the instant case, however, the contract between appellant and H. H. Townsend & Co. goes further than merely appointing H. H. Townsend & Co. as brokers to negotiate the sale of lots in "Hollydale"; said contract directs H. H. Townsend & Co. to keep a complete set of books and records truly and correctly portraying each and every transaction had in connection with the improvement, subdividing or sale of said property, and to permit appellant to keep in Townsend's office a representative who shall at all times have access to said records and books, and who shall receive for appellant all moneys, checks, notes, contracts, and other things of value which may come into the office of said Townsend, by, through, or in connection with the sale of said property or any part thereof. Said contract further provided: "It being understood and agreed that all moneys received are and shall be the sole and exclusive property of the company (appellant). * * *

Appellant certainly by this contract contemplated and expected that H. H. Townsend & Co. would not only negotiate sales of lots in "Hollydale," but that H. H. Townsend & Co. would also collect money from purchasers and conclude sales for and in behalf of appellant. Otherwise there would have been no necessity for the provisions in the contract that appellant's representative be on hand to take charge of the money and keep a check on Townsend's operations.

[6] Irrespective of the terms of the written contract between appellant and H. H. Townsend & Co., it seems inconceivable, under all the facts and circumstances appearing in evidence, that appellant would be entirely ignorant of negotiations, sales, contracts, and collections made by Townsend & Co. Appellant owned the tract of land, placed Townsend & Co. in charge of the subdividing, improvement, and sale thereof; placed their own representative in Townsend's office to look after their interest. Townsend placed his signs all over the property. The president of appellant corporation visited the land on numerous occasions and saw signs on the property and knew that Townsend was making sales and receiving payments, and knew the method used by Townsend in making sales, such as having lectures made in the "auditorium" on the land, etc.

[7] The operations of Townsend & Co. were so closely related to appellant, and were so public and notorious, that the officers of appellant, as reasonable men, cannot be heard to say that they were ignorant of them. Mechem on Agency, §§ 265, 266, 405; Ballard v. Nye, 138 Cal. 588, 72 P. 156; Schnier v. Percival, supra. No doubt exists, under the evidence, that H. H. Townsend & Co. had original authority from appellant to make the contract with respondents. Furthermore, if any doubt existed under the evidence as to the original authority of H. H. Townsend & Co. to make the contract with respondents and receive the money from them, appellant has ratified the contract and acts of H. H. Townsend & Co. by receiving and retaining the money paid by respondents.

It follows from what has been said that we are of the opinion that the finding that H. H. Townsend & Co. were the agents of appellant in the transaction with respondents finds substantial support in the evidence, and that the judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by F. B. Morrell against Andrew Caldow and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Alvin Gerlack, of San Francisco, and Ingle Carpenter, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John L. McNab, of San Francisco, for respondents.

KNIGHT, J. Defendants were stockholders in a corporation which, on October 16, 1922, executed and delivered to a payee therein named eight promissory notes in the sum of $1,000 each. In due course these notes were indorsed to plaintiff. The corporation became defunct, and plaintiff thereupon commenced this action to recover from these defendants as such stockholders their proportionate share of the indebtedness created by said notes. Judgment was given in favor of defendants, and plaintiff has appealed.

[1, 2] As frequently held, the liability of each stockholder in a corporation is to be measured by the proportion which the amount of his stock bears to the whole of the subscribed capital stock of the corporation (Thomas v. Wentworth Hotel Co., 158 Cal. 275, 110 P. 942, 139 Am. St. Rep. 120); and in an action to enforce the liability of the stockholders, it is incumbent upon the plaintiff therein to prove the whole amount of the outstanding subscribed stock on the date the indebtedness was incurred, so as to enable the court to determine the proportionate liability of each stockholder (Knowles v. Sandercock, 107 Cal. 629, 40 P. 1047). In the present case the trial court found that the total subscribed stock was not 542 shares, as alleged in the complaint, and further found that "no competent evidence was admitted at the trial showing such number of subscribed and outstanding shares" at the time said notes were executed, and that consequently "the court had before it no evidence from which it could find the number of such subscribed and outstanding shares at the time alleged by plaintiff." The sole question presented by this appeal is whether, as appellant contends, the evidence adduced at the trial is legally sufficient to warrant this court in nullifying said finding.

[3-5] It appears that at the time of the general breakup of the corporation's affairs the records which the law requires a corporation shall keep with reference to its capital stock were lost, and consequently plaintiff was obliged to resort to other evidence to prove the amount of the outstanding subscribed stock at the time said indebtedness was incurred. In this regard it was sought to have admitted in evidence the entries made in a book kept by said corporation, which covered various transactions and accounts of this and other corporations; but according to the testimony of the former secretary of said corporation, who was the only witness called to identify and explain said book, "the moneys of all these corporations were hodge podged together and all kept in one account"; and the witness further testified that said book was known to him to be incorrect, was not full and complete, and did not purport to set forth a correct account of the outstanding stock. The trial court, therefore, ruled that the book was not competent to prove the fact at issue. Plaintiff then tried to introduce in evidence a so-called financial statement issued by said corporation under its corporate seal purporting to show the assets and liabilities of said corporation as of November 15, 1922, but said statement was rejected by the court because the essential fact to be proved was the number of shares of outstanding stock on October 16, 1922, the date of the execution and entry of said notes, and it is evident that said statement was valueless for such purpose. Plaintiff also made effort to introduce the testimony of a former auditor of the state corporation department as to his recollections of said corporation's affairs. But such audit related to a period nearly a year subsequent to the date on which plaintiff was required to fix the whole number of outstanding shares, and for that reason the court ruled that the evidence was not competent. We are of the opinion that there was no error in the rulings of the trial court excluding the evidence above mentioned, and, having been excluded, nothing was established thereby.

[6] At the trial, during an interchange between court and counsel, and in response to a suggestion by the court that defendants contended that the number of outstanding shares of stock was nearly 700, the attorney for defendants replied that "they figured up nearer 800." Plaintiff contends that the foregoing statement amounted to an admission that the number of outstanding shares was not in excess of 800, and that such statement was binding upon the defendants. We cannot agree to such construction. There is nothing in the statement itself to justify such construction, and after reading that portion of the record of which the statement forms a part, it is at once apparent that the statement was not made as or intended to be a stipulation of fact, nor as a formal admission on behalf of defendants.

[7] Nor are we able to sustain plaintiff's remaining point that defendants' answers admitted that 542 shares of stock were subscribed on the date of the execution of said notes. With reference thereto the complaint alleged upon information and belief that at the time said notes were executed and delivered "the total number of shares of capital stock of said Motion Picture Utility Corporation subscribed and outstanding was 542 shares. * * * The form of denial of said allegation contained in the answers was as follows: "Deny that at the time the notes alleged in the complaint were executed or delivered, or at the time the alleged indebtedness evidenced thereby was contracted or arose, or was incurred, the total number of shares of the capital stock of Motion Picture Utility Corporation subscribed and outstanding, or subscribed or outstanding, was 542 shares, or any number of shares less than said number of 542. But these defendants allege on information or belief that the number of shares subscribed and outstanding at said time in said Motion Picture Utility Corporation was greatly in excess of 542 shares. * * * It is apparent without discussion, we think, that such denial was legally sufficient to raise the issue. The form of denial used in the answers in the cases cited and relied upon by appellant were materially different from the one in the case at bar, and consequently we do not deem those cases in point.

In view of the foregoing state of the record, an interference with the trial court's finding above mentioned would be clearly unwarranted.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Miller, Judge.

Action by E. A. Test, Inc., against Charles S. Mabrey, J. L. Flanagan, and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and named defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Robert H. Schwab, of Sacramento, for appellants.

Woodward, Briggs & Blewett, of Stockton, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. Plaintiff had judgment against the appellants upon a promissory note executed by the appellants and indorsed to the plaintiff by R. J. Heeney, which note is in the words and figures following, to wit:

"$2,000.00 Stockton, Cal. January 27, 1927.

"Twelve months * * * after date, without grace, we, or either of us, promise to pay to Richard J. Heeney or order, at Stockton, California, the sum of Two Thousand Dollars, payable only in gold coin of the government of the United States, for value received, with interest thereon in like gold coin at the rate of seven per cent. per annum from date until paid; interest payable quarterly and if not so paid as it becomes due to be added to the principal and become a part thereof and bear interest at the same rate, but if default be made in the payment of the interest as above provided, then this note shall immediately become due at the option of the holder thereof; also to pay all legal expenses and attorney's fees which may be incurred in the collection of this note.

"J. L. Flanagan.

"Chas. B. Mabrey.

"Indorsed: R. J. Heeney."

From this judgment, the defendants Mabrey and Flanagan appeal.

[1] The answer of the appellants consists, first, of denials upon information and belief, and then, as a further answer, alleges as follows: "That heretofore, under and by agreement entered into between said defendants and said defendant R. J. Heeney, said Heeney agreed to surrender said promissory note sued upon in this action and cancel the same." There is no allegation in the answer of any defect or illegality in the note, or that the plaintiffs had any knowledge of the agreement just mentioned. The record shows that during the month of July, 1927, the defendant R. J. Heeney, purchased an automobile from the plaintiff for the sum of $1,940.50, and as the principal consideration for the purchase thereof indorsed and delivered to the plaintiff the promissory note herein set forth. The date of the note and its indorsement to the plaintiff show that it was indorsed and delivered to the plaintiff a number of months prior to its maturity. A reading of the note shows that it is negotiable in form. The court found, upon conflicting testimony, that the plaintiff had no knowledge of any agreement between the appellants and R. J. Heeney for the cancellation of the note in question. While, as we have stated, there was no pleading on the part of the appellants alleging any illegality, want of consideration, or other defect in the note in question, the trial court, over the objection of the plaintiff, allowed the appellants to prove that the appellant and R. J. Heeney had had some dealings in relation to the transfer and delivery of title to crypts in a certain mausoleum, and that in consideration of such transfer the note was to be delivered up to the appellants by the defendant Heeney and canceled. The court found, upon sufficient testimony to support its finding, that the plaintiff had no knowledge of this transaction. Upon this appeal the appellants cite the case of Union Collection Co. v. Buckman, 150 Cal. 159, 88 P. 708, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 568, 119 Am. St. Rep. 164, 11 Ann. Cas. 609, in which case it is said: "It is also well settled that even in the case of negotiable paper, where an action is brought by a subsequent holder, when it is shown that the same was obtained from the maker by fraud or duress, or that the consideration therefor was illegal, a prima facie case of notice to such holder is made out, and the burden of proving that he took without notice before maturity and for value is thrown upon him." Nothing of that kind appears in this case. The note does not appear to have been executed on account of any fraud, duress, or illegal consideration. The infirmity, if any, in the note, so far as the makers and the original holder thereof are concerned, arose from subsequent transactions. The court found, as we have stated, upon conflicting testimony, that the plaintiff had no knowledge thereof at the time of the acceptance of the note, and that the plaintiff received said note for value and in due course of business.

[2] While the appellants raised the question of the indorsement of the note, the note itself bears the indorsement, and the testimony in the record establishes such fact. The record in this case supports the findings of the court necessary to support a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, as required by subdivisions 3 and 4 of section 3133 of the Civil Code, to wit, that the plaintiff took it in good faith and for value; that at the time it was negotiated to the plaintiff, the plaintiff had no notice of any infirmity or defect in the title of the person negotiating it. And likewise, under the provisions of section 3140 of the Civil Code which says: "Every holder is deemed prima facie to be a holder in due course; but when it is shown that the title of any person who has negotiated the instrument was defective, the burden is on the holder to prove that he or some person under whom he claims acquired the title as holder in due course." This burden, the court found, was successfully carried by the plaintiff, and as there is testimony sufficient to support such finding, it is binding here.

As further supporting the judgment in this case, we will cite the case of Carver v. San Joaquin Cigar Co., 16 Cal. App. 761, 118 P. 92, and the authorities cited on page 769 (118 P. 95).

The findings in this case being supported by the testimony, it follows that the judgment should be and the same is hereby affirmed.

1. Criminal law ☞578—Statute relating to setting and continuing cases does not apply to postponements which trial court orders because court is otherwise engaged (Pen. Code, § 1050, as added by St. 1927, p. 1036).

Pen. Code, § 1050, as added by St. 1927, p. 1036, relating to setting criminal cases for trial not later than 30 days after entry of plea and relating to continuances, does not apply to postponements which trial court orders because court is otherwise engaged.

2. Criminal law ☞351(2)—Evidence regarding defendant's answers to officer's questions after defendant had denied story told by prosecuting witness held properly admitted (Pen. Code, § 288).

In prosecution for violation of Pen. Code, § 288, relating to lascivious acts on body of child, testimony of police officer regarding questions asked defendant and defendant's answers after he had stated to officer that story told by prosecuting witness was not true held properly admitted.

3. Criminal law ☞1159(3)—Jury's verdict of guilty, based on conflicting evidence, was binding on reviewing court (Pen. Code, § 288).

In prosecution for violation of Pen. Code, § 288, where facts showed attempt to commit rape or a violation of section 288, depending on defendant's intent, and evidence showing defendant's intention was conflicting, jury's verdict of guilty of violation of section 288 was binding on court of review.

4. Criminal law ☞772(3)—Instruction referring to facts charged in information held sufficient without reciting all facts alleged.

Instruction distinctly referring to facts charged in information held sufficient without reciting all facts alleged in information.

5. Criminal law ☞1038(1)—Defendant cannot for first time on appeal present point that court did not give instruction on alibi.

Defendant cannot for first time on appeal present point that trial court did not give instruction regarding his defense of alibi.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Homer R. Spence, Judge.

Antone F. Jori was convicted of violating Pen. Code, § 288, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Ezra Cox, of Oakland, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and William F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the State.

STURTEVANT, J. The district attorney filed an information against the defendant charging him with having committed a felony. Pen. Code, § 288. The defendant entered a plea of not guilty, and a trial was had before the court sitting with a jury. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, the defendant made a motion for a new trial, the motion was denied, and judgment was entered on the verdict. The defendant has appealed from the order and from the judgment.

[1] The defendant complains that certain continuances were "granted" in violation of the provisions of section 1050 of the Penal Code (as added by St. 1927, p. 1036). The defendant entered his plea on January 21, 1929. On that date the cause was set for trial on February 6th; on that date the trial was put over to February 11th; on the 8th day of February the date of the trial was further put over until the 25th day of February; and on that date it was put over until the next day, the 26th, and at that time the trial commenced. At no time, did the prosecution ask for a continuance, and no continuance was "granted." The record shows facts from which it can be inferred that the trial court was busy in the trial of other criminal cases during all business hours from January 21 to February 25, 1929, both dates inclusive. The record does not show to the contrary but that each postponement was ordered by the court of its own motion. The language of section 1050 of the Penal Code contains nothing applicable to postponements which the trial court orders because the court is otherwise engaged. That section is addressed to continuances asked by one of the parties.

The prosecuting witness was five years of age. The defendant contends that the trial court erred in allowing her to testify. The Attorney General asserts that the trial court did not err, and he cites People v. Reyes, 194 Cal. 650, 229 P. 947. It is closely in point. The defendant cites, and relies on, People v. Delaney, 52 Cal. App. 765, 199 P. 896. In that case the voir dire examination was conducted by the trial judge. It was very brief and did not develop the facts showing competency or incompetency under Code of Civil Procedure, § 1880, subd. 2. Permission was denied the defendant's counsel to further develop those facts. In the instant case the defendant's counsel was not limited. We have read the voir dire examination and all of the testimony of the witness. We cannot say the court erred in allowing the prosecuting witness to be heard as a witness.

[2] The witness Thornbury, a police officer, testified that he made the arrest, took the defendant to the interview room, and there stated to the defendant the story told by the prosecuting witness. He further testified that the defendant stated that the story was not true. Over the objection of the defendant the witness was allowed to state certain questions which he thereupon proceeded to ask the defendant and to relate the defendant's answers. The defendant now claims that the objections should have been sustained. The contention is not well founded. A denial of the truth of the child's story in no way precluded an inquiry as to the defendant's remembrance of the facts.

[3] The defendant claims that the evidence showed the commission of the crime of rape or an assault to commit rape, but did not tend to prove an offense under Penal Code, § 288. He makes the attack by claiming the evidence was insufficient and by claiming a variance. It was stipulated that the crime of rape was not committed. The facts showed an attempt to commit rape or a violation of the provisions of section 288, Penal Code, depending on the intent. The evidence showing intent was conflicting. As its verdict was against the defendant, the jury believed those facts showing that the intent was to violate the provisions of section 288 of the Penal Code. Under these circumstances the verdict of the jury is binding in a court of review whether it is contended that the evidence is insufficient or that there was a variance.

[4] The trial court gave an instruction which appears in the transcript, page 125, lines 4 to 13. The defendant asserts that the instruction was erroneous because it did not recite all the facts alleged in the information. It distinctly referred to the facts "charged in the information," and that was sufficient.

The court gave an instruction which appears on page 129 of the transcript, lines 5 to 11. The defendant contends that it was argumentative and should not have been given. The Attorney General replies that the instruction has been approved in this state. People v. Ramey, 70 Cal. App. 92, 94, 232 P. 724. The latter case was decided on the authority of People v. Wolff, 182 Cal. 728, 739, 190 P. 22. Although not directly in point, the case last cited is determinative.

[5] The defendant complains because the trial court did not give an instruction regarding his defense of alibi. The defendant did not request an instruction on the subject, and he may not now present the point for the first time.

We find no error in the record. The judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. OSAKI et al. (No. 1079.)★

Rehearing Denied June 15, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court June 27, 1929.

1. Aliens ⇨17—Proof of leasing of land by Japanese in and of itself establishes no offense (Alien Land Law).

Alienage is an essential element or ingredient of the offense of violating the provisions of the Alien Land Law (St. 1921, p. lxxxiii, as amended), and proof of the leasing of lands by Japanese in and of itself establishes no offense whatever.

2. Aliens ⇨10—Constitutional law ⇨249, 311—Law requiring one to prove citizenship held denial of due process and equal protection (Alien Land Law, §§ 9a, 9b, as added by St. 1927, p. 881; Code Civ. Proc. § 1981, and § 1983, as added by St. 1927, p. 434; Const. Cal. art. 1, § 13; Const. U. S. Amend. 14).

Alien Land Law, §§ 9a and 9b, as added by St. 1927, p. 881, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1983, as added by St. 1927, p. 434, placing the burden of proving citizenship on defendant, held in violation of Const. Cal. art. 1, § 13, and Const. U. S. Amend. 14, as a denial of due process and equal protection and contrary to Code Civ. Proc. § 1981, placing burden of proof on party holding affirmative of issue.

3. Criminal law ⇨306—There must be reasonable and rational connection between fact proved and fact presumed.

In order to authorize prima facie presumption, there must be a reasonable and rational connection between the fact proved and the fact presumed.

4. Aliens ⇨10—Law providing that proof of membership in race ineligible to citizenship creates prima facie presumption of ineligibility held void as authorizing arbitrary conclusion (Alien Land Law, § 9b, as added by St. 1927, p. 881).

Alien Land Law, § 9b, as added by St. 1927, p. 881, providing that proof that defendant is a member of race ineligible to citizenship creates a prima facie presumption of ineligibility to citizenship, held void as authorizing arbitrary conclusion without any reasonable or rational connection between the fact proved and the fact presumed.

5. Aliens ⇨17—Evidence held insufficient to prove nationality or ineligibility to citizenship as to one defendant charged with violating land laws (Alien Land Law).

Evidence, in prosecution under the Alien Land Law (St. 1921, p. lxxxiii, as amended), for violating the provisions thereof, held insufficient as to one defendant to prove nationality or that he was ineligible to citizenship.

6. Criminal law ⇨761(2)—Instruction in prosecution for violating land laws did not assume that defendant named therein was alien ineligible to citizenship (Alien Land Law).

Instruction requested by defendants, in prosecution for violating the provisions of the Alien

Land Law (St. 1921, p. lxxxiii, as amended), requiring the showing of conspiracy between defendants, did not assume as a fact and instruct the jury as a fact that defendant named therein was an alien ineligible to citizenship.

7. Criminal law ⇨1186(4)—Constitutional provision providing that reversal will not result from errors in procedure does not apply in case of denial of fundamental right (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Const. art. 6, § 4½, relating to reversal for errors in matter of procedure, unless resulting in a miscarriage of justice, does not apply, where defendant has been denied a fundamental right.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

K. Osaki and another were convicted of violating the provisions of the Alien Land Law, and they appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Lloyd E. Hewitt, of Yuba City, W. P. Rich, of Marysville, and Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, of San Francisco, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PLUMMER, J. The defendants were convicted upon an indictment charging them in six separate counts of violating the provisions of the Alien Land Law (Stats. 1921, p. lxxxiii). Convictions were had upon five of the six counts set out in the indictment. Upon this appeal from the judgment in said cause the appellants challenge the constitutionality of sections 9a and 9b of the Alien Land Law as amended by an act of the Legislature, approved May 16, 1927, Statutes of 1927, p. 881, and also section 1983 of the Code of Civil Procedure as added in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 434).

Section 9a of the Alien Land Law, as amended, places the burden of proving citizenship upon a defendant when the information alleges the alienage and ineligibility to citizenship of such defendant, and the proof introduced establishes the acquisition, possession, enjoyment, use, cultivation, etc., of real estate. Section 9b of the act, in addition to placing the burden of proving citizenship upon such a defendant, provides that, when the information, complaint, or indictment alleges alienage and ineligibility to citizenship, and there is proof of the acquisition, possession, use, etc., of real estate, and further proof that the defendant is a member of a race ineligible to citizenship under the naturalization laws of the United States, such proof shall create a prima facie presumption of ineligibility to citizenship of such defendant. Section 1983 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as added in 1927, so far as this case is concerned, is substantially the same as section 9b of the Alien Land Law as amended in 1927. Based upon the provisions of section 9a of the Alien Land Law above referred to, the trial court gave to the jury, at the request of the plaintiff, instructions numbered 10 and 17. These instructions are as follows:

"Plaintiff's Instruction No. 10.

"It is alleged in the indictment that the defendant Osaki is an alien ineligible to citizenship and that pursuant to the conspiracy alleged in the indictment did acquire, possess, enjoy, use, cultivate and occupy real property described therein and an interest therein, in a manner and to an extent otherwise and for purposes otherwise than prescribed by any treaty existing between the nation and country of which said alien is a citizen and subject.

"I therefore instruct you that if and when the people have established that the defendants did conspire to so acquire, possess, enjoy, use, cultivate and occupy such real property, then the burden is upon the defendants to establish the fact that the defendant Osaki was a citizen of the United States, or a person eligible to become a citizen of the United States."

"Plaintiff's Instruction No. 17.

"The burden of proof is upon the prosecution. In this case, however, under the pleadings, the prosecution is not required to prove that the defendant Osaki is eligible to citizenship in the United States. But on the contrary that burden is upon the defendants. And if the defendants have failed to show that he is a citizen or is eligible to become a citizen, then you will find that he is not a citizen and is ineligible to become one."

The appellants insist that the sections of the Alien Land Law upon which the foregoing instructions were based are violative of sections 10, 13, and 16 of article 1 of the Constitution of the state of California, and also violative of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

[1] In every prosecution of the kind with which we are dealing, there are three elements to be established; i. e., first, the defendant must be an alien; second, the defendant must be an alien ineligible to citizenship under the naturalization laws of the United States; and, third, the acquisition and use of the character of real estate prohibited by the Alien Land Law. That alienage is an essential element or ingredient of the offense, such as is charged in the indictment before us, is established beyond controversy by the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of People v. Quarez, 196 Cal. 404, 238 P. 363. The mere occupancy of land by a Japanese, as shown by the reasoning in the Quarez Case, constitutes no offense. In that case the charge was that of carrying a concealed weapon by an alien, where the court held, as we have said, the fact of alienage was an essential element of the offense, and, unless established, no crime was proven. Or, to use the language quoted in the Quarez Case: "It follows that it is as necessary to the proof of a violation of the statute that the defendant be shown to belong to the proscribed class as it is that he committed the forbidden act. This fact being one essential element of the crime, it constitutes a part of the corpus delicti and must be proved as such. The corpus delicti consists of the elements of the crime." And, as further said in the same opinion, the rule of convenience which excuses the prosecution from proving a negative does not apply when the fact constituting the negative is a part of the corpus delicti. Or, to use the language found in 8 R. C. L. 172: "As a general rule, when the offense is grounded on a negative, or when that negative is an essential element of the crime, the burden is on the state to prove it, for in criminal cases the law requires that the state shall prove all the essential facts entering into the description of the crime," etc. We think it unnecessary to cite authorities to support the maxim "that the burden of proof never shifts from the prosecution to prove all the facts necessary to establish the crime charged," and, where the necessary facts are not proven, there can be no burden to shift. The sections of the Alien Land Law under consideration bear no resemblance to the cases founded upon exceptions in laws regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors and other like injurious substances. Such laws make it a crime for any one to sell the prohibited substance, and then contain an exception clause permitting one to sell under a prescribed license. In such instances the corpus delicti is established when the proof of sale is introduced. Here, proof of the leasing of land by a Japanese in and of itself establishes no offense whatever.

[2] We have been cited to no authorities supporting the principle sought to be injected into the Alien Land Law by the two sections under consideration, that a charge in an indictment or information takes the place of proof. That such an act is an attempt to deny to a certain class of persons the due process of law accorded by section 13 of article 1 of the State Constitution and the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States seems to us incontrovertible. Section 1981 of the Code of Civil Procedure places the burden of proof upon the party holding the affirmative of an issue, and upon the party who would be defeated, if no evidence were given on either side. Such is the rule as to all other cases. To deny the application of that principle of law in cases such as the one at bar would be to violate the constitutional guaranties as to due process and equal protection.

[3, 4] As to section 9b of the Alien Land Law as enacted in 1927, little need be said in addition to what we have already set forth. The law is well settled that there must be a rational connection between the fact proven and the fact presumed, and, unless such is the case, that portion of section 9b relative to establishing the presumption of ineligibility to citizenship is void. That there is no such rational connection between proof that one of the defendants in this case is ineligible to citizenship by reason of being a member of the Japanese race is shown by the fact that his codefendant, K. Yoshioka, also a Japanese, is an American citizen. We need only to call attention to what is common knowledge to everyone familiar with everyday facts, that there are hundreds of Japanese in the United States who are now citizens, and this by reason of the constitutional provision that all persons born, etc., in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens. While the respective parties have cited a considerable number of authorities touching upon the questions here considered, we think what we have stated is so obvious that citation of other cases is unnecessary. Attention, however, may be called to the fact that in Cockrill v. People of California, 268 U. S. 258, 45 S. Ct. 490, 69 L. Ed. 944; People v. Cockrill, 62 Cal. App. 22, 216 P. 78, chiefly relied upon by the respondent to sustain section 9b, supra, alienage was not involved. The Cockrill Case turned upon the presumption that one who pays the purchase price for land without anything further appearing may reasonably be held to have a beneficial interest therein. This presumption, as a principle of law, has been adhered to almost from time immemorial. It is founded upon the experience of mankind that ordinarily one does not pay the purchase price for a tract of land, unless he is intending to acquire an interest therein. We may further add that none of the cases cited depart from the rule above stated that there must be a reasonable and rational connection between the fact proved and the fact presumed. There can be no arbitrary application of the principle here involved.

Appellants' brief calls our attention to the fact that there are now over 20,000 Japanese born in the United States, and within the confines of this country. All of these people are spoken of as "Japanese," which again demonstrates that to presume from such a statement that they are ineligible to citizenship is an arbitrary conclusion, and directly contrary to the facts.

[5] Appellants call our attention to the fact that not one word of testimony was introduced by the prosecution to prove the nationality of Osaki, or to prove that he was ineligible to citizenship. We have searched the record from cover to cover, and fail to find any testimony in relation thereto. All that does appear is contained in three isolated references brought out on cross-examination, which do not refer to nationality or citizenship. We set them forth: "Q. You knew, of course, he was a Japanese when you did so?

A. Yes, I knew he was a Japanese. Q. (Cross-examination of another witness): Is Osaki the only Japanese you saw there at that time? A. No, I saw a number of Japanese there, but he is the only one I talked to." And in the cross-examination of another witness, this question and answer appears: "Q. Did you see any other Japanese except Osaki there at the time? A. No." Upon these questions and answers the respondent rests its case so far as the proof is concerned, in supplying the necessary testimony to prove the corpus delicti of the crime charged. Appellants reply that the common expression of "Japanese" proves absolutely nothing as to whether the person referred to is or is not a citizen of the United States or a person eligible to citizenship. And in this particular we are reminded that without exception the average person will speak of the foreign-born and the native-born Japanese in the same manner. They are all denominated "Japanese"; and for a witness to state that he talked to a "Japanese" means absolutely nothing more than that whether foreign-born or native-born, he calls him a "Japanese."

We do not need to cite the cases referred to by appellants wherein native-born Chinese and Japanese are spoken of as "Chinese and Japanese" by our own courts and, as well, by the courts of the United States. It is such a common expression that the statement of the fact is all that is necessary to carry conviction of its truth.

[6] Respondent further relies upon instruction No. 21 given by the trial court to the jury at the request of appellants, and argues that, in the request for such instruction, the appellants admitted all that was necessary to supply the lack of proof as to the corpus delicti in the first instance. If the respondent's construction is correct as to instruction No. 21, then the trial court directly and explicitly violated section 19 of article 6 of the Constitution, which forbids a trial court from charging a jury as to a matter of fact, much less assuming and stating as a fact something which nowhere appears in the testimony. The instruction referred to is as follows:

"Before you can find either of the defendants in this action guilty of a conspiracy to violate the Alien Land Law, under any of the counts named in the indictment, it must appear from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt, and to a moral certainty, that some agreement was made or some understanding had by and between the defendant Yoshioka, who is admitted to be an American citizen, and the defendant Osaki, who is an alien ineligible to citizenship, under and by which they conspired together to secure leases of agricultural or farming land and property, or an interest therein, to the end that the defendant Osaki might acquire, control, possess and enjoy some interest in the agricultural lands mentioned in the indictment and unless you find from the evidence that such an agreement was made or such an understanding existed between them, you should find each of the defendants not guilty."

While upon first reading it would seem that the trial court did apparently assume, as a fact, and instruct the jury as a fact, that Osaki was an alien ineligible to citizenship, we think, upon further consideration, that the court did not intend to do so, and that the purpose of the request was not to induce the court so to do. The purpose of the instruction and the intent which we gather from it was to inform the jury that they must be satisfied from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty, that there was some agreement between Yoshioka and Osaki, an alien ineligible to citizenship, to secure leases, etc.; that it was necessary to be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that Osaki was an alien ineligible to citizenship; and that the agreement between them was for the purpose of securing the beneficial use of land to Osaki as an alien ineligible to citizenship. That this construction is correct is borne out by other instructions given by the trial court to the jury. As an illustration, we may cite the concluding words of instruction No. 12. After reciting certain facts necessary to constitute the offense charged, the court said: "Then they are guilty of a conspiracy to violate the Alien Land Law as charged in each and all the counts of the indictment in regard to which you make such finding, provided you find that Osaki is not a citizen."

[7] Finally, respondent insists that, under section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, the order and judgment of the trial court should be upheld. No case has been called to our attention where this provision of the Constitution has been held to apply where a defendant has been denied a fundamental right. On the contrary, it has been explicitly held that section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution does not apply where a defendant has been denied a fundamental right. People v. Carmichael, 198 Cal. 534, 246 P. 62; People v. Wismer, 58 Cal. App. 679, 209 P. 259; People v. O'Connor, 81 Cal. App. 506, 254 P. 630.

It is apparent from what we have said that it is not a question of error on the part of the trial court in the admission of evidence, or as to a matter of pleading, but a case where the jury is told that a defendant can be convicted where the prosecution has failed to prove the corpus delicti of the offense charged, unless the defendant establishes his innocence. Any such construction of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution of this state would render it violative of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States as a denial of due process of law; that is, convicting a defendant upon a mere charge contained in the information or indictment, and thus denying such defendant the due process of law guaranteed to him.

The order and judgment of the trial court are reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

HANSON et al. v. CHOYNSKI et al.*

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 7, 1929.

1. Corporations Ⓒ619—Evidence in suit against alleged trustees of defunct corporation sustained finding that defendant was not director (St. 1907, p. 746, § 10a).

In suit to impress trust upon sum claimed to have been received by defendants as directors of defunct corporation, dissolved for nonpayment of license taxes under St. 1907, p. 746, § 10a, evidence held sufficient to support finding of trial court that defendant acting as dummy director at time of organization of company and in whose place another was elected, was not a director of the corporation at time of its dissolution, and therefore not liable as trustee.

2. Estoppel Ⓒ110—Defendants were not estopped to deny status as directors of defunct corporation, where issue was not pleaded and injury to creditors not claimed.

In suit by creditors to hold defendants as trustees of corporation on ground that they were directors at time corporation's charter was forfeited, no question of estoppel arose, where that issue was not pleaded and no injury to creditors was claimed to have resulted from defendants' conduct.

3. Corporations Ⓒ619—Defendant did not by holding himself out as trustee of defunct corporation become liable as de facto trustee, where there was full quota of de jure directors.

Fact that one who acted as dummy director for corporation at time of its organization held himself out in certain transactions with creditors as director or trustee of defunct corporation did not render him a de facto trustee within statute making directors or managers in office trustees of defunct corporation, where at time of dissolution and at other times in issue full number of directors were actually "directors in office."

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Suit by E. J. Hanson and others against Herbert Choynski and others, as trustees for Olson's Market, Inc., a defunct corporation. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Vogelsang & Brown and Bert Schlesinger, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

I. M. Golden and Sidney Rhein, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiffs sued the defendants to impress a trust upon the sum of $1,598 alleged to have been received and held by them as trustees under the claim that they were the directors of Olson's Market, Inc., at the time of its dissolution as a corporation for nonpayment of license taxes under the provisions of section 10a of the act of 1907 (Stats. 1907, p. 746). The defendant Olson was not served with process, and no proceedings were had against him. The cause was tried before the court and resulted in a judgment for the two other defendants. The plaintiffs have appealed on typewritten transcripts. It is obvious that no case was made against the defendant Hawkinson, and he does not appear on this appeal.

[1] The gravamen of the case on appeal is whether the respondent Choynski was a director of the corporation at the time of its dissolution by forfeiture of its charter on November 30, 1907. The cause was tried before with this respondent as the sole defendant. It resulted in a judgment in his favor which was reversed on appeal. Hanson v. Choynski, 180 Cal. 275, 180 P. 816. The complaint was amended, bringing in the other defendants and alleging that the three were the "duly elected, qualified and acting directors and trustees in office of said corporation" at the time of its dissolution. On the second trial it was found that the respondent Choynski had not been a director of said corporation since 1905.

The evidence had at the second trial is that the respondent merely acted as a "dummy" director at the time of the organization of the company in 1905, but that another had been elected in his stead and the respondent had not served or acted as such at any time thereafter. Appellants now concede that material evidence first introduced at the second trial supports the finding that respondent was not a "de jure" director at the time of dissolution, but they argue that the trial court should have found that he was a "de facto" director because of certain acts which they endeavored to prove. Briefly, the position of appellants is that the original articles of incorporation named respondent as one of the three directors, and that the creditors were entitled to presume that he continued as such; that respondent was present at one or two meetings of the board; that he held himself out as a director in dealing with some of the creditors; and that, in a certificate to a copy of a resolution of the board, dated September 25, 1907, respondent was noted as one of the three then acting directors. In support of the finding respondent points to positive testimony that he held no share of stock in the corporation, attended the first meeting of directors for organization only, had another elected as a director in his stead, and that the recitation in the certificate erroneously included his name for that of his brother, E. W. Choynski. Under this state of the record it must be clear that the trial court had evidence before it supporting the finding, and this closes the question on appeal.

[2, 3] The argument is made that, notwithstanding this situation, the respondent must be held to be a trustee "de facto" because he permitted himself to be held out as such in certain transactions with the creditors of the corporation. No question of estoppel arises, as that issue was not pleaded, and no injury to the creditors is claimed to have resulted, but assuming the facts relied on by appellants to have been proved, and disregarding the question of conflict in the evidence, we are convinced that appellants can get no comfort from the situation. The statute under which appellants sue declares that the "directors or managers in office" are deemed to be trustees upon dissolution of the corporation. The undisputed evidence here disclosed that three other persons were the "de jure" and acting directors of the corporation at the times in issue. By the terms of the statute these three persons became statutory trustees of the corporation and stockholders and, as such, were the legal owners of the corporate assets. Manifestly, an outsider could not substitute himself as such trustee by any act of his own when the full number of the directors were actually "directors in office" at the time of dissolution. Thus the statute itself expressly precludes the claim that the respondent, by any act of his own, could have become a "statutory trustee."

Judgment affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 28, 1929.

Judgment ⇨161—Action for conversion should not be decided on defects in answer averring that defendant never claimed ownership or control except as trustee.

Action for conversion of corporate stock should be decided on merits, rather than on alleged defects in defendant's deposition and answer, insufficiency of which was first raised on appeal, where it averred that defendant never claimed ownership of stock, nor right to control or hold it, except under trust agreement with plaintiff and others.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. Walter Hanby, Judge.

Action by John Salsberry against C. C. Julian. From an order setting aside a default judgment, plaintiff appeals. Former opinion (277 P. 518) amended, and order affirmed.

Culbert L. Olson, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

David H. Cannon, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. On petition for rehearing.

It is ordered that the opinion filed in this case on May 3, 1929, be amended so as to read as follows:

Appeal from an order setting aside a default judgment rendered and entered in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant. Substantially the same questions are raised on this appeal as are raised in Salsberry v. Julian (2d Civ. No. 6215) 277 P. 516, and for the reasons stated therein and in this opinion, the order setting aside the judgment is affirmed.

In this case appellant further contends that the answer and deposition of defendant do not show a meritorious defense in this respect, that the alleged trust was invalid by reason of uncertainty. This is an action for the conversion of corporate stock. The answer specifically denies that plaintiff made demand for the stock as alleged in the complaint and denies that defendant has wrongfully deprived the plaintiff of any of the stock of plaintiff, and denies that defendant converted any of plaintiff's stock. By way of affirmative defense, the answer alleges that the defendant is holding the said stock belonging to the plaintiff as one of the trustees under the terms of a certain agreement made and entered into between the plaintiff, the defendant, Jacob Berger, and Edward Staunton, wherein it was agreed that said parties would pool their stock with a trustee until such time as it was agreed between said parties that said stock might be released from said pool; that Edward Staunton and the defendant were, with the consent and at the request and suggestion of plaintiff, appointed trustees to hold the said stock until such time as said parties should unanimously agree to release said stock from the custody of the trustees to the respective owners thereof. The answer further avers: "That the defendant has never, nor does he now claim, the ownership of the 205,000 shares of stock so deposited, as aforesaid, by the plaintiff with the defendant; nor has the defendant in the past nor does he now claim the right to control or hold said stock except under and by virtue of the agreement heretofore entered into between the plaintiff, the defendant, Jacob Berger and Edward Staunton." Appellant contends that where the answer and the deposition of defendant establishes the fact that defendant has not a meritorious defense to the action and acknowledges an invalid trust as an excuse for the conversion complained of, and where the amount of the judgment is shown to be correct, even if a satisfactory showing of excusable neglect has been made, this court should reverse the action of the trial court in setting aside the default judgment. The insufficiency of the answer is raised for the first time on appeal. In view of all the circumstances in this case, including the fact that the answer avers that defendant has never claimed the ownership of said stock nor the right to control or hold said stock, except under and by virtue of said agreement, we think the case should be decided upon the merits rather than upon the alleged defects in the answer and the deposition of defendant.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

BROWN v. DE WARD & SONS et al.
(Civ. 5394.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 29, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1024(4) — Refusal to vacate judgment on conflicting affidavits as to stipulation permitting delay in filing answer held conclusive.

Decision of trial court denying motion to vacate judgment held final, where there was a direct conflict in affidavits concerning existence of stipulation permitting postponement of filing of demurrer or answer until after hearing motion for change of venue.

2. Appeal and error ⇨935(1) — On appeal from order refusing to vacate judgment, it must be presumed trial court found stipulation for delay concerning which affidavits were conflicting did not exist.

On appeal from order denying motion to vacate judgment, it must be presumed that trial court found stipulation postponing time for demurrer or answer, which was contested and on which defendant based claim for relief, never existed.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Chas. L. Allison, Judge.

Action by J. L. Brown against De Ward & Sons and others. From an order denying defendants' motion to vacate a default judgment in plaintiff's favor, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Crouch & Sanders, of San Diego, for appellants.

Le Roy B. Lorenz, of San Bernardino, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. This appeal is one from an order denying a motion to vacate a default judgment. The motion was supported by affidavits claiming an oral telephonic stipulation between counsel to the effect that no demurrer or answer need be filed pending the hearing of a motion for change of venue to be made by the defendants; that notwithstanding such stipulation and before hearing upon the last-named motion, plaintiff's attorney caused default to be entered. A counter affidavit was filed, in which plaintiff's attorney denied having made any stipulation other than that defendants have two days and until the end of that week in which to serve and file their answer. The affidavits of defendants further recite certain facts concerning the conduct of counsel for the plaintiff, to the effect that on the day after default had been taken and on the day the hearing of the motion for change of venue was to be heard, counsel for both sides appeared in open court and agreed that the hearing upon said motion be continued until the following day, no reference being made by plaintiff's attorney to the fact that he had entered the default. This and another alleged incident of the same character could only be considered as corroborative of the defendants' affidavits to the effect that the stipulation claimed by them was actually made.

[1, 2] We have, then, a direct conflict concerning the stipulation. The situation is such that the decision of the trial court will be upheld, even though if the matter were one presented de novo here we might be inclined to rule otherwise. The action of the superior court, and its decision as to which affidavits contained the truth, are conclusive. Patterson v. Keeney, 165 Cal. 465, 132 P. 1043, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 232.

We find nothing in the decisions cited by appellants which is in conflict with this well-recognized principle. In nearly all of the cases to which reference is made in their brief, an oral stipulation was conceded or found by the court to have existed. In none of them where an order denying a motion to set aside a default was refused and the judgment set aside does it appear that there was any finding against the existence of a stipulation upon which the moving party relied. The only case, in which the language employed might seem at all inharmonious with the general rule that the decision of the trial court on disputed matters of fact is conclusive, is Savings Bank of Santa Rosa v. Schell, 142 Cal. 505, 76 P. 250. However, a careful examination of that decision discloses that it was found below that the parties against whom the default was taken had requested a third party, an attorney, to procure an extension of time from the plaintiff's counsel. The go-between attorney reported to defendant's counsel that he had secured the extension of time. Under these circumstances the Supreme Court ruled that the default should have been granted, because it was clear that the defendant's counsel had reason to believe and did believe that the stipulation extending time had been given. In the case at bar it must be presumed from the fact that the lower court denied the motion that it found the nonexistence of a stipulation, and if so there was no ground for the defendants' attorney to have been misled or to have had reason to believe that he was protected thereby.

The order is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. MARSHALL. (Cr. 1779.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 29, 1929.

1. Criminal law ⇨300—Evidence of insanity is inadmissible on plea of not guilty (Pen. Code, § 1019; § 1016, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1148, § 1; § 1020 as amended by St. 1927, p. 1149, § 3; § 1026, as added by St. 1927, p. 1149, § 4).

Evidence of insanity is not admissible on plea of not guilty, since question of insanity is not then in issue under Pen. Code, § 1019; § 1016, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1148, § 1; § 1020, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1149, § 3; § 1026, as added by St. 1927, p. 1149, § 4.

2. Criminal law ⇨623—Where trial of defendant's sanity is severed from trial on plea of not guilty, court must take evidence of sanity before pronouncing sentence (Pen. Code, § 1019; § 1016, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1148, § 1; § 1020, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1149, § 3; § 1026, as added by St. 1927, p. 1149, § 4).

Where trial on issue of defendant's sanity is severed from that presented by plea of not guilty under Pen. Code, § 1019; § 1016, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1148, § 1; § 1020, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1149, § 3; § 1026, as added by St. 1927, p. 1149, § 4, court may not pronounce sentence without taking evidence on issue of sanity.

3. Criminal law ⚡623—Defendant's failure to refer to separate plea of insanity at trial, or to object to dismissal of jury, or imposition of sentence, did not permit trial court to sentence him without jury trial on insanity (Pen. Code, § 1019; § 1016, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1148, § 1; § 1020 as amended by St. 1927, p. 1149, § 3; § 1026, as added by St. 1927, p. 1149, § 4).

Trial court held without jurisdiction to sentence defendant, without jury trial on issue of insanity, as presented by separate plea of insanity, under Pen. Code, § 1019; § 1016, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1148, § 1; § 1020, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1149, § 3; § 1023, as added by St. 1927, p. 1149, § 4, though defendant throughout trial made no reference to remaining plea, and made no objection to dismissal of jury or continuance of date of sentence, and did not object to sentence.

4. Criminal law ⚡48—Insanity is complete defense to criminal charge.

Insanity is complete defense to criminal charge, and act committed by insane person, though otherwise unlawful, is not criminal.

5. Criminal law ⚡599—Correction of typographical error in information by amendment changing date from 1928 to 1927 was not prejudicial error, where no continuance was requested on that ground (Pen. Code, § 1008, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1040).

Where information filed on September 7, 1928, erroneously charged commission of offense as of November 22, 1928, instead of 1927, correction of typographical error by amendment to make date 1927 held not prejudicial error, under Pen. Code, § 1008, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1040, permitting information to be amended at any stage of proceedings, unless substantial rights of defendant are prejudiced, where no continuance was requested.

6. Criminal law ⚡713—District attorney's argument accounting for absence of check apparently mentioned in argument for defendant did not involve misconduct.

District attorney's argument accounting for absence of certain check, apparently mentioned in argument for defendant, held not to amount to misconduct warranting reversal.

7. Criminal law ⚡855(7)—Bailiff's indication to jurors, when asked, of place where they would be quartered in event of disagreement, and permitting another ballot before retiring, held not coercion to obtain conviction.

Where bailiff, when asked, merely indicated to jury place where they would be quartered for the night, in event of disagreement, and later told jury, upon request from juror, they had time for one more ballot before retiring, there was no exercise of coercion to obtain conviction such as would justify reversal.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Eugene Daney, Jr., Judge.

J. W. Marshall was convicted of grand theft, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Edward J. Kelly, of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and William F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CRAIG, J. By information of the district attorney of San Diego county, appellant was charged with having committed the crime of grand theft, in that he unlawfully and feloniously took from one U. L. Voris personal property consisting of $550, lawful money of the United States, and it was therein further charged that he had twice previously been convicted of a felony. He pleaded not guilty of grand theft, and not guilty thereof by reason of insanity, and denied the two prior convictions, though the latter were thereafter admitted, and, after a trial by jury, he was found guilty of grand theft as charged. Thereupon the jury were discharged, and three days later, and on January 17, 1929, the date fixed by the court for pronouncing sentence, a motion for a new trial was presented, which, on motion of the defendant, was set for hearing on January 19th. On the date last mentioned the hearing upon said motion was again continued until January 26th, at which time it was denied, and the defendant was sentenced to the state prison for the term prescribed by law, and remanded to the custody of the sheriff. The principal grounds of appeal are errors alleged to have occurred during the trial, and that he was not duly convicted of the crime charged against him.

It is first urged as a ground for reversal that the trial court had no authority to sentence the defendant without a jury trial upon the issue of sanity, as presented by his separate plea, under the provisions of section 1016 et seq. of the Penal Code. It is contended on the part of the people that appellant is not in a position to advance objection, because throughout the trial he made no reference to the remaining plea, and made no objection to the dismissal of the jury, or the continuance of the date of sentence, and that he did not attempt to show any cause why judgment should not be pronounced, other than to present a motion for new trial, and that, when sentenced, he made no objection thereto. The Penal Code provides five kinds of pleas to an indictment or information, including "not guilty," and "not guilty by reason of insanity." If the defendant does not plead guilty, he may enter these two simultaneously or either separately. The plea of not guilty puts in issue every material allegation of the people's pleading, and upon such plea matters pertaining to a defense other than a former judgment of guilt or acquittal, once in jeopardy, and insanity, may be given in evidence. Pen. Code, §§ 1016 (as amended by St. 1927, p. 1148, § 1), 1019, 1020 (as amended by St. 1927, p. 1149, § 3). Section 1026 (as added by St. 1927, p. 1149, § 4) further provides:

"When a defendant pleads not guilty by reason of insanity, and also joins with it another plea or pleas, he shall first be tried as if he had entered such other plea or pleas only, and in such trial he shall be conclusively presumed to have been sane at the time the offense is alleged to have been committed. If the jury shall find the defendant guilty, * * * then the question whether the defendant was sane or insane at the time the offense was committed shall be promptly tried. * * * In such trial the jury shall return a verdict either that the defendant was sane at the time the offense was committed or that he was insane at the time the offense was committed. If the verdict or finding be that the defendant was sane at the time the offense was committed, the court shall sentence the defendant as provided by law. If the verdict * * * be that the defendant was insane at the time the offense was committed, the court unless it shall appear to the court that the defendant has fully recovered his sanity shall direct that the defendant be confined in the state hospital for the criminal insane; * * * if, however, it shall appear to the court that the defendant has fully recovered his sanity such defendant shall be remanded to the custody of the sheriff until his sanity shall have been finally determined in the manner prescribed by law. * * *"

Hence, in the event of dual pleas, followed by a conviction, the nature of the judgment is wholly dependent upon the verdict or finding of the jury as to the sanity of the accused. If found to have been sane when the offense was committed, sentence shall be pronounced as though no plea of insanity had been interposed. If the verdict or finding be that he was insane when he committed the offense, the court shall direct that he be confined in a state hospital, or remand him to the custody of the sheriff for further appropriate proceedings, accordingly as it shall judicially determine from his present condition at the time of trial.

[1, 2] Upon the plea of not guilty, no evidence of insanity is admissible. The question of insanity is not then in issue. People v. Leong Fook (Cal. Sup.) 273 P. 779. Where a trial upon the issue of sanity is severed from that presented upon a plea of not guilty, to pronounce sentence without taking evidence upon the former would be as clearly without the jurisdiction of the court as if, before any evidence had been introduced at the time of hearing upon the latter, the proceeding were to be abruptly halted and sentence imposed.

[3, 4] The fact that the defendant did not object to such a proceeding would no more confer jurisdiction in one instance than in the other. Besides, it must be borne in mind that it is the policy of the law to safeguard the interests of the insane, and to that end to require the ascertainment of the fact that a person charged with crime was sane at the time of its commission. Where that issue is raised, before any penalty which might be imposed for a violation of the law can be so imposed, it is inconsistent with such a policy and with such principle that one whose sanity is in question can be held to have waived the right to have that issue tried and determined by failure to object to any action or proceeding until his sanity shall have been determined, and while that issue is still pending. It must be borne in mind that insanity is a complete defense to a criminal charge; that an act committed by an insane person, though otherwise unlawful, is not criminal; and that the law regards such a person as innocent even though he may otherwise have transgressed in a most serious manner. If insane, even though he be convicted, he may by proof of insanity thus establish his innocence. We think it is clearly the intent of the Legislature in enacting section 1026 of the Penal Code to require a trial upon the issue of insanity either jointly with that upon the plea of not guilty, where both are interposed, or by separate hearings upon each issue, but which jointly constitute but one trial. Where a plea of insanity is interposed as well as one of not guilty, notwithstanding a verdict of guilty upon the issue presented by the latter plea, until it shall have been determined that at the time of the commission of the offense the defendant was sane, the verdict is not complete, nor is he found guilty for all purposes, but only upon condition that it be further decided that he was sane.

The ruling in People v. Strickler, 167 Cal. 627, 140 P. 270, argued in both briefs, is easily distinguishable from this one. It appeared that the defendant pleaded guilty after a former plea of not guilty, previous acquittal, and once in jeopardy, and asked for probation. It was not there denied that the defendant was possessed of his normal faculties, and it was expressly held that by petitioning for a conditional liberty he waived the special pleas.

[5] It is next contended that the court erred in permitting the correction of a typographical error in the information by amendment. Although the information was filed on September 7, 1928, it erroneously charged the commission of the offense as of "the 22nd day of November, A. D., nineteen hundred and twenty-eight." The "eight" was stricken out, and the word "seven" substituted therefor, after the jury were sworn, and before any evidence had been offered. Section 1008 of the Penal Code (as amended by St. 1927, p. 1040) provides that an information may be amended at any stage of the proceedings, unless the substantial rights of the defendant would be prejudiced thereby, in which event a reasonable continuance may be granted. No continuance was requested by appellant upon that ground, nor do we think the slight alteration under the circumstances in any manner prejudiced the rights of the defendant.

[6, 7] The only remaining points presented consist of argument that the information insufficiently stated the offense attempted to be charged; that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct; and that the deputy sheriff in charge of the jury used coercion to obtain a conviction. There is no merit in either of these assertions. The sufficiency of the pleading was not questioned by demurrer, and in that regard the argument presented only goes to its certainty. The district attorney merely accounted for the absence of a certain check apparently mentioned in argument for the defendant, and the bailiff did no more than indicate to the jury, when asked, the place where they would be quartered for the night, in the event of a disagreement, and later, upon request of an unknown member of the jury that they be permitted to do so, told them that they had time for one more ballot before retiring. In this latter respect, it is stated that the jury stood eleven to one until the ballot last mentioned, whereupon a unanimous verdict of guilty was voted. The bailiff testified however, that he "merely sanctioned whatever they wanted to do," and that there was no other conversation.

The judgment is reversed, and the case remanded for trial upon the issue presented by the special plea.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. T. Price, Judge.

Action by the Hammond Lumber Company against the Richardson Building & Engineering Company, Incorporated, and others. From a judgment denying plaintiff relief against the sureties, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

R. L. Horton, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Stephens & Stephens and G. C. DeGarmo, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. This action was brought to recover on a contractor's bond, given pursuant to the provisions of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for materials furnished by the plaintiff to the defendant Richardson Building & Engineering Company, the contractor. The plaintiff was given judgment against the contractor, but was denied any relief against the sureties on the bond. The plaintiff has appealed from the judgment. The only defense of the sureties which need be considered is stated in the findings of the court, as follows:

"That on the 26th day of December, 1923, said defendant Richardson Building and Engineering Co. Inc., as contractor, was indebted to said plaintiff for and on account of building materials furnished by said plaintiff to said Richardson Building and Engineering Co. Inc., for use in various buildings theretofore constructed by said contractor, including the materials furnished by said plaintiff for use in the building described in plaintiff's complaint; that to evidence said entire indebtedness said Richardson Building and Engineering Co. Inc., did on the 26th day of December, 1923, execute to said plaintiff and said plaintiff did accept and receive from said Richardson Building and Engineering Co. Inc., a promissory note for the sum of $23,192.82 payable on or before 90 days after date thereof, with interest at the rate of seven per cent per annum; and said note by its terms provided that the execution and acceptance of said note constituted evidence of said debt as a stated account.

"That said note was secured by the assignment to said plaintiff of certain securities belonging to said contractor; and since said time said note and securities have been and are now retained by and are in the possession of said plaintiff.

"That prior to the 26th day of December, 1923, the indebtedness referred to in plaintiff's complaint and sued on in this action was an ordinary book account and the same was and had been payable on or before the 28th day of September, 1923; that subsequent to the execution of said note there was a novation of indebtedness sued on herein and said book account was closed, discharged and liquidated and the same was, subsequent to the 26th day of December, 1923, merged into and became and was an account stated, which account stated included debts other than the one herein sued on.

"That at the time of the execution of said note, it was agreed between said plaintiff and said contractor that five per cent should be added to said book account of $4,756.03, making a total of $5,003.40, as alleged in plaintiff's complaint, and said sum of $5,003.40 became and was made a part of said promissory note hereinbefore referred to and described.

"That the extension of time given by said plaintiff to said contractor for the payment of said original debt, under and by virtue of the execution of said note, and the substitution of said new account for said original book account, as aforesaid, were given and made by the parties thereto, without the knowledge or consent of the defendant sureties, or either of them; that said defendant sureties did not at any time assume, promise or agree to pay said account stated or said note or any part thereof."

Appellant contends that neither the promissory note nor the securities referred to in the findings were ever delivered or accepted. The evidence shows that the promissory note was duly signed and given into the possession of the plaintiff. The note recites: "This note is secured by the collateral listed below." Below the signatures to the note is enumerated a list of securities, consisting of the capital stocks of two corporations, with the statement that they were pledged to the plaintiff as collateral security for the payment of the note, and authorizing the sale thereof upon default in payment of the note. This statement is also signed by the defendant corporation. Certificates of the pledged capital stock of one corporation were delivered with the note. The stock in the other corporation had not been issued. Burt Richardson, who is the owner of the defendant corporation, had entered into an agreement to purchase such stock in the other corporation and had been given a receipt for the amount paid therefor, stating that the stock would be delivered to him when issued under authority of the corporation commissioner. He indorsed on the receipt and signed an agreement to deliver the stock to the plaintiff "when, and only when, permission has been received from the corporation commissioner." He then delivered the receipt to the plaintiff as a part of the pledge to secure payment of the note.

[1] Witnesses for the plaintiff testified that the note and pledge were taken subject to the approval of the plaintiff. One of these witnesses testified: "I told him (Richardson) that it (the note) was not accepted, and that we would merely hold it pending such time as the security could be put in proper shape." This testimony, however, was denied by witnesses for the defendant, who testified that the note and the securities were delivered and accepted unconditionally. The note was given December 26, 1923, and the complaint herein was not filed until May 6, 1925. At the trial the plaintiff was unable to give any satisfactory explanation of what had become of the note and the securities, and Richardson testified that they had never been returned to him. The finding of the court that the note and the securities were delivered, therefore, is fully supported by the evidence. Whether or not the attempted pledge of the capital stock which had not been issued was of any validity appears to be immaterial as between the plaintiff and the sureties. The promissory note recites: "This note is not given or accepted as payment of said amount due said payee, but as evidence of said debt as a stated account only, and neither the giving or accepting of this note, with or without security, shall be held to waive payee's right to enforce any mechanic's lien or other lien, to which it would otherwise be entitled."

[2, 3] Whatever may be the effect of this provision, it in no manner affects the other provision of the note which fixed the time of payment of the indebtedness then due at 90 days after the date of the note. Appellant seems to concede that it is the general rule that where the creditor grants the debtor an extension of time without the consent of the surety, the latter is released; but it contends that this rule "has no application to a bond that is given for the payment of labor and materials," citing Los Angeles Stone Co. v. National Surety Co., 178 Cal. 247, 173 P. 79, and other cases. Those cases are not in point. They merely hold that a surety's obligation in such a case to persons furnishing labor and materials is not released by an extension of time by the owner to the contractor or by a change in the terms of the contract to which such persons are not parties. In such a case the laborer or the materialman is the creditor, and it is not he, but the owner, who has extended the time or agreed to the change. But in this case the creditor, the one furnishing the materials, extended the time, and no reason appears for not applying the general rule. The judgment is affirmed.

In action for injuries sustained in crossing collision, instruction on amount of care required by one who finds himself suddenly in great peril through no fault of his own should not have been given, where there was no evidence that plaintiff discovered his peril until after the collision.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; M. S. Sayre, Judge.

Action by John Stephenson against the Northwestern Pacific Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Eells & Orrick, Orrick, Palmer & Dahlquist, and R. W. Palmer, all of San Francisco, and Geary & Geary, of Santa Rosa, for appellant.

F. de Journal, Philip Conley, and Conley, Conley & Conley, all of Fresno, and W. F. Cowan, of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. [1] Respondent recovered a verdict and judgment against appellant for $25,000 for personal injuries inflicted upon him by appellant's locomotive and train when it collided with his automobile at the Matheson street crossing in the city of Healdsburg. Appellant claims upon this appeal that the conduct of the respondent was negligent, barring his recovery, despite negligence of the appellant.

The crossing is about one-fourth mile north of the depot. The train left the depot at 4:50 p. m. February 4, 1925, and proceeded north towards the said crossing, where the collision occurred a few minutes later. The railroad track crosses Matheson street curving on a large radius, the inside of the curve being to the east. About 28 feet east of the track and south of Matheson street is a large packing house extending over 200 feet along the railroad right of way and about 125 feet along Matheson street. Respondent had parked his automobile on Matheson street at the north end of this packing house near the railroad track, but where the building blocked his view of the track south towards the depot. He went inside the building upon business for about 5 or 10 minutes. Then he came out and entered his automobile alone. He said, in substance: I could see the railroad track. I looked up and down it. I did not hear any train or see anything, so I started the automobile slowly, and I looked again and there was a little grade, a little dip there (in the street), and I started slowly across the track in low gear at not over five or six miles per hour and just all of a sudden there was a flash; that's all I saw. After looking from a point opposite the corner of the packing house I did not look any more because I had already looked. Respondent was never aware of the presence of the train until it struck him. He testified that he heard no bell, whistle, or noise. The positive testimony of witnesses that the locomotive gave several short warning blasts of the whistle immediately following the regular crossing whistle of two long and two short blasts and that the bell was constantly ringing is deserving of mention, although the plaintiff and other witnesses testified negatively, having heard no bell or whistle. The point from which respondent last looked for a train prior to the collision was about opposite the corner of the packing house, which corner was the last obstruction to a clear view down the track in the direction from which the train came. At this point his vision down the track would be greatly increased or diminished by advancing towards the track or retreating from it a few feet. He estimated that when he last looked he could see down the track about 100 feet. The permanent objects on the ground there show that, after passing the corner of the packing house, one could see down the track in excess of 400 feet. During the time the last 20 or 25 feet was traversed by respondent just prior to the collision, the engine must have been plainly visible to him if he had looked. Had he seen the danger he could have stopped in safety because traveling in low gear at a slow rate of speed in an automobile in good condition. A train at 40 miles an hour would travel not over 200 feet, while a motorist travels 25 feet at 5 miles per hour.

Counsel points to the curving track as an excuse for respondent's failure to see, but the curve was not sharp enough to conceal the train behind the packing house if the train was close enough to reach the automobile at the most favorable speeds found in the testimony. The engine was visible, therefore, despite the curve in the track, even assuming the train was coming at the speed of forty miles an hour. A 14-year-old boy was the only witness who testified to such high speed. He estimated it at 30 to 40 miles per hour. None of the numerous other witnesses on this point estimated the speed of the train in excess of 14 miles per hour.

Counsel for respondent also assigns poor visibility as an excuse for failure to see the train, but the evidence does not show this. The collision occurred between 4:50 and 5 p. m. February 4, 1925, which was about one-half hour before sunset. It was a cloudy and stormy day but not raining at the time. No witness testified that it was dark. The plaintiff himself testified the light conditions were pretty good, and that by "pretty good" he meant "not dark or anything." The rough condition of the street surface where it approaches and crosses the railroad tracks is also assigned as an excuse. The respondent did not testify that his attention was diverted by the surface of the street, nor does the testimony indicate that the condition of the street was such as to require marked or more than ordinary attention.

While there are conflicts in the evidence regarding other facts, such conflicts are not upon subjects which could alter the foundation upon which appellant lays its plea of contributory negligence. There seems to be no escape from the conclusion that respondent was negligent in failing to observe the approach of the train under the circumstances. The facts are not distinguishable in principle from the cases relied upon by appellant holding such conduct to be contributory negligence as a matter of law. Griffin v. San Pedro, I. & S. L. R. R. Co., 170 Cal. 772, 151 P. 282, L. R. A. 1916A, 842; Murray v. Southern Pacific Co., 177 Cal. 1, 169 P. 675; Eddlemon v. Southern Pacific Co., 41 Cal. App. 340, 182 P. 811; Thompson v. Southern Pacific Co., 31 Cal. App. 567, 161 P. 21; Baltimore & Ohio Ry. Co. v. Goodman, 275 U. S. 66, 48 S. Ct. 24, 72 L. Ed. 167, 56 A. L. R. 645.

The authorities relied upon by respondent in which contributory negligence was held to be a question for the jury show much greater precautions taken by the one injured than in the instant case. They are: Levings v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 178 Cal. 231, 173 P. 87; Walker v. Southern Pacific Co., 38 Cal. App. 377, 176 P. 175; McDonald v. Southern Pacific Co., 71 Cal. App. 656, 236 P. 172; Badostain v. Pac. Electric Ry. Co., 83 Cal. App. 290, 256 P. 576.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment appealed from should be reversed. Two other points should be mentioned.

[2] By the complaint the appellant was charged with negligence in failing to maintain a warning device at the crossing, and that issue went to the jury. Over objection of appellant evidence was admitted that at several other street crossings in Healdsburg such devices were maintained by the appellant. The evidence should have been excluded. What was done by the appellant at other crossings which may or may not have resembled this one was immaterial. Bailey v. New Haven & Northampton Co., 107 Mass. 496; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Johnson, 191 Ind. 479, 133 N. E. 732.

[3] The court's instructions upon the amount of care required of one who finds himself suddenly in great peril through no fault of his own should not have been given. There was no evidence that respondent discovered his great peril until after the collision.

The judgment is reversed.

2. Justices of the peace ⇨2—Township justice court is not abolished by establishment of police court in city whose boundaries are same as those of township (Const. art. 11, §§ 8, 8½).

Under Const. art. 11, §§ 8, 8½, the establishment by charter of city police court does not abolish justice of peace court of township coterminous with city boundaries, nor affect jurisdiction of such court; the provisions of section 8½ that, where municipal court has been established in any city, there shall be no other court inferior to the superior court in said city, not being intended to apply to justice's court of township in which city was located.

In the matter of the application of Manuel Romero for writ of habeas corpus, directed to the Sheriff of the County of Contra Costa. Writ denied.

Thomas M. Carlson and Robert Collins, both of Richmond, for petitioner.

T. H. De Lap, of Richmond, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. Petitioner seeks his release from imprisonment by means of a writ of habeas corpus. He alleges that he is unlawfully imprisoned and illegally restrained of his liberty by the sheriff of the county of Contra Costa. The return of the sheriff shows that he holds and retains in his custody the body of the petitioner under and by virtue of an order of commitment of the justice's court of the fifteenth judicial township of said county of Contra Costa issued in the case of the People of the State of California v. Manuel Romero, and that said order of commitment was issued upon a judgment of said court, adjudging said petitioner to be guilty of a misdemeanor, to wit, disturbing the peace.

The ground upon which the petitioner bases his claim that his imprisonment is illegal is set forth by proper and sufficient allegations in said petition. This ground as thus stated is that said justice's court is not, and at the times the proceedings against petitioner were pending therein, which resulted in his conviction and imprisonment, was not, a legally constituted court, and therefore that all such proceedings, including the issuance of the commitment under which he is now held by said sheriff, are illegal and void.

The facts upon which this claim is made as they appear from the record before us are that the Fifteenth judicial township of the county of Contra Costa is situated in the city of Richmond, and that the boundaries of said township and of said city are identical and coterminous; that said city of Richmond in the year 1909 under the powers granted it by the Constitution of the state adopted a charter for the government of its municipal offices; that by the terms of said charter

Ex parte ROMERO. (Cr. 3221.)

Supreme Court of California. June 5, 1929.

1. Justices of the peace ⇨32—Township justice court is different and distinct from justice court of city having same boundaries as township (Code Civ. Proc. § 103; Pol. Code, § 4015).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 103, and Pol. Code, § 4015, the township justice of the peace court is entirely different and distinct from city justice of the peace court, notwithstanding the boundaries of the city and township are identical.

there was established in said city a police court known as the "Police Court of the City of Richmond," and that by the terms of said charter "within the city limits said court shall have concurrent and coordinate jurisdiction with township justices' courts in all matters and things in which said justices' courts now or may hereafter have jurisdiction; and the judge of said police court shall have as aforesaid like authority, power and jurisdiction as the justices of said justices' courts." This power to frame their own charters was given to cities of the state by sections 8 and 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution. Section 8½ authorized a city to establish a police court by means of a charter, and, at the time said city of Richmond adopted its charter, merely authorized cities to provide in their charters "for the constitution, regulation, government, and jurisdiction of police courts, and for the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the judges of such courts shall be elected or appointed, and for the qualifications and compensation of said judges and of their clerks and attaches." In 1914 said section 8½ was amended so as to authorize cities by their charters to establish police courts and also municipal courts, and in its amended form this section further provided that "in any city or any city and county, when such municipal court has been established, there shall be no other court inferior to the superior court."

The petitioner now contends that by this provision of the constitution the justice's court existing and acting in said Fifteenth judicial township of said county of Contra Costa at the date of the adoption of said constitutional amendment has been abolished, and that at the time the proceedings were pending against petitioner, in which said commitment was purported to have been issued, there was no such court as the justice's court of the Fifteenth township of said county.

This contention is based entirely upon the decision in the case of Robertson v. Langford (Cal. App.) 273 P. 150, rendered December 13, 1928. That case arose in the city of San Jose, which city had adopted a charter which provided for a police court with "all of the powers, authority and jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, that are now or may hereafter be conferred by law upon justices of the peace. * * *". The charter of the city of San Jose was adopted under the power granted to cities of this state having a population of more than 3,500 by sections 8 and 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution of the state to frame charters for their own government. At the time of the adoption of its charter by the city of San Jose, said section 8½ of article 11 contained the foregoing provision providing that: "In any city or any city and county, when such municipal court has been established, there shall be no other court inferior to the superior court. * * *"

It was the view of the court rendering the decision in Robertson v. Langford, supra, that the so-called police court provided for in the charter of said city of San Jose was in legal effect a municipal court in the sense in which said term "municipal court" was used in the above-quoted provision of said section 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution, and that, as there had thus been established by said charter a municipal court in said city of San Jose, there could not be in said city any other court inferior to the superior court. Accordingly, it was held that by the adoption of said charter, which in effect provided for a municipal court in said city, the justice's court, which prior thereto had existed in said city, ceased to exist and was by the express declaration of the Constitution, as contained in section 8½ of article 11 thereof, abolished and superseded by said municipal court.

The question presented in the present proceeding differs from that decided in the case of Robertson v. Langford, supra, in at least one most material respect. In that case, as we have seen, it was decided that a city justice's court had been abolished by the establishment of a municipal court in said city in pursuance of the power granted by said constitutional provision. In the present proceeding petitioner contends not that a city justice's court but that a township justice's court has been abolished by the enactment of said constitutional provision.

[1] Justices' courts for both townships and cities are provided for in section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure. By the first paragraph of said section it is provided that: "There shall be at least one justice's court in each of the townships of the state, for which one justice of the peace must be elected." By the second paragraph of said section it is further provided: "In every city [of certain designated classes to one of which the city of Richmond belongs] there must be one justice of the peace, to be elected in like manner, by the electors of such cities." By section 4015 of the Political Code the board of supervisors of each county are authorized and directed to divide their respective counties into townships for the purpose of electing justices of the peace and constables. It will thus be seen from the scheme of government adopted by the legislature that justices' courts in townships are entirely different and distinct from justices' courts in cities, and that in all cities of the state where this general law applies, and which belong to one of the classes enumerated in section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure, these courts exist side by side with justices' courts of the township of which said city is a part. The city justice's court is an office of the city, and the justice thereof is elected by the electors of said city. The township justice's court is a township office, and the incumbent of said office is elected by the electors of said township. The fact that the city is a part of the township or constitutes the whole of the township does not make the justice's court of the township a justice's court of the city. In such a case they each retain their separate and distinct entity. This was held in the recent case of Platnauer v. Board of Supervisors, 65 Cal. App. 666, 668, 225 P. 12, 14, where the court had under review the question of the status of the justice's court of the city of Sacramento, and, in determining that question, said: "From the foregoing it clearly appears that the offices of township justice of the peace and city justice of the peace are distinct entities, though having certain jurisdiction in common. The fact that Sacramento township and the city of Sacramento embrace the same territory is a mere incident. In other counties a city of the same class may constitute a part only of a judicial township."

[2] In the light of the foregoing well-established principles we will now consider the provision of the Constitution which the petitioner contends abolishes the justice's court of the Fifteenth judicial township of said county. It reads, as we have already seen, as follows: "In any city or any city and county, when such municipal court has been established, there shall be no other court inferior to the superior court." Paraphrasing this provision of the Constitution, it would read: "Where such municipal court has been established in any city or in any city and county, there shall be no other court inferior to the superior court in said city or in said city and county." Manifestly this reference in the Constitution is to inferior courts in the city, or city and county in which the municipal courts have been established, and was not intended to apply to the justice's court of the township in which said city may be situated, or of which said city may be a part. As we have seen, these two courts are two entirely different and distinct entities, and a reference to one cannot by any reasonable construction of the language used be held to have been intended to include or refer to the other. We therefore conclude that the justice's court of said township 15 was not abolished by the provision of the Constitution above quoted, even assuming that the police court theretofore established in the city of Richmond was vested with all the powers and jurisdiction of a municipal court.

These views render it unnecessary for us to decide whether the provision of the Constitution herein considered is retroactive and therefore applies to a city which had at the date of the adoption of said constitutional amendment provided in its charter for courts vested with the jurisdiction of municipal courts. In this case it makes no difference in so far as the charter of the city of Richmond is concerned whether it was enacted prior or subsequent to the adoption of said constitutional amendment. Even if adopted after the enactment of said amendment and while it was in full force and effect, neither said amendment nor said charter provision, providing for a police court, would in any way affect or impair the validity of the justice's court of said township.

The writ is denied, and the prisoner is remanded to the custody of the sheriff of said county of Contra Costa.

STATE BAR OF CALIFORNIA v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY. (L.A. 11141.)★

Rehearing Denied June 27, 1929.

1. Statutes $\S$ 80(4)—Constitutional provision forbidding creation of corporations by special act applies only to private corporations (Const. art. 12, $\S$ 1).

Provision of Const. art. 12, $\S$ 1, to effect that corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special act, applies only to private corporations.

2. Municipal corporations $\S$ 3—Law providing that all corporations other than those formed or organized for government were private did not limit later legislation creating public corporation (Civ. Code, $\S$ 284).

Civ. Code, $\S$ 284, providing that all corporations other than those formed or organized for government of a portion of the state constitute private corporations, being purely of statutory origin, does not constitute a limitation on later legislation to create public corporations for other purposes.

3. Statutes $\S$ 80(1)—Statute regulating practice of law was not unconstitutional as attempt to create private corporation by special act (State Bar Act; Const. art. 12, $\S$ 1).

Regulation of the practice of law as contemplated by the State Bar Act (St. 1927, p. 38) is not such a matter of purely private concern as to constitute an attempt to provide for the formation of a private corporation, in violation of Const. art. 12, $\S$ 1, relating to the creation of corporations by special act.

4. Statutes ☞81—Statute regulating practice of law was not "local or special law" within constitutional provision relating thereto (State Bar Act; Const. art. 4, § 25, subd. 19).

State Bar Act (St. 1927, p. 38), regulating the practice of law, held not to constitute a local or special law within the meaning of Const. art. 4, § 25, subd. 19, forbidding the Legislature to pass local or special laws granting to any corporation, association, or individual any special or exclusive right, privilege, or immunity.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Local Law.]

5. Attorney and client ☞31—Judge of court of record was not, during continuance in office, subject to jurisdiction, control, and processes conferred on state bar association (State Bar Act; Const. art. 6, § 22; art. 4, §§ 17, 18).

Under Const. art. 6, § 22, providing that no judge of the court of record shall practice law during his continuance in office, such judicial officers were not during continuance in office subject to jurisdiction, control, and processes conferred on the state bar association and their governing body or other officers by virtue of the State Bar Act (St. 1927, p. 38), which is limited to those members of the legal profession who were engaged in, and were or are entitled to be engaged in, the practice of law, particularly in view of remedy provided by Const. art. 4, §§ 17, 18, in case of judge's misconduct in office.

6. Witnesses ☞21—Witness cannot be required to give testimony in matter over which court has no jurisdiction or in which appearance and testimony are neither pertinent nor material.

Witness before court or any other inquisitorial tribunal or committee cannot be required to be sworn or to give his testimony either in any matter for which court or other body has not jurisdiction or in any matter to the inquiry in which the appearance and testimony of the witness are neither pertinent nor material.

Original application for writ of mandate by the State Bar of California prayed to be directed to the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Hon. Marshall F. McComb, Judge thereof. Writ denied.

Eustace Cullinan and Maurice E. Harrison, both of San Francisco, and Victor E. Shaw and Kenyon F. Lee, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Oscar Lawler, of Los Angeles, John Francis Neylan, of San Francisco, and John M. Hall and Alexander T. Sokolow, both of Los Angeles (Oscar Lawler and John M. Hall, both of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

Rex B. Goodcell, W. Joseph Ford, Paul W. Schenck and Rex Hardy, all of Los Angeles, amici curiæ.

RICHARDS, J. The application herein was for a writ of mandate directing the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles and honorable Marshall F. McComb, a judge thereof, to require Carlos S. Hardy, then and still also a judge of said superior court, to be sworn and testify before a certain body designated in said application as "a special committee" pursuant to the provisions of section 26 of the "State Bar Act" (St. 1927, p. 38), appointed by that certain organization known as "The State Bar of California," and directed by the terms of its appointment "to take evidence and make findings on behalf of the Board in the matter of the conduct of Carlos S. Hardy, a judge of the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles, in connection with the payment to said Carlos S. Hardy * * * of the sum of twenty-five hundred dollars ($2,500.00) or thereabouts on or about August 12, 1926 and all matters relating thereto." The application presented and filed herein does not set forth, other than as above stated, the particular conduct of the respondent Carlos S. Hardy which was being made the subject of investigation by the aforesaid committee, but it sufficiently appears from the record herein that the matter relative to which the investigation undertaken by said committee was being conducted was that of the alleged acceptance by said respondent Hardy of the aforesaid money for legal services rendered to the persons named in said application while a judge of said superior court. It is set forth in the application herein that said special committee fixed a time and place of meeting for the purpose of conducting its hearings in the course of its said investigation, and that the respondent Carlos S. Hardy, being notified thereof, was present at said time and place, and was thereupon asked to be sworn and testify in said matter, but, upon the advice of his counsel, refused to be sworn or to give his testimony before the committee; and that thereupon, and acting under and in accordance with section 34 of said "State Bar Act," the committee reported to the respondent superior court of said county the refusal of said Carlos S. Hardy to be sworn or to testify before said committee as above set forth, and asked that said respondent court issue an attachment in the usual form, and having for its purpose the bringing of said Carlos S. Hardy before said court in order that he might be punished for contempt conformably to the aforesaid section of said act; that said respondent court accordingly made and issued its order requiring the said Carlos S. Hardy to appear before Hon. Marshall F. McComb, a judge of said court, at a certain time and place, then and there to show cause, if any he had, why he should not be adjudged guilty of contempt of said special committee of the state bar of California by refusing to be sworn and testify before it at the time and place and in the matter aforesaid; that said

Carlos S. Hardy appeared before said court and the judge thereof responsive to said order, and presented a demurrer to the petition of the committee, based upon the ground that "said petition does not set forth sufficient facts to vest this Honorable Court with jurisdiction of the subject matter in said petition stated"; that, upon the hearing had upon said demurrer, the respondent court and the said judge thereof sustained the same, and in so doing adjudged that upon July 29, 1927, the effective date of said State Bar Act, said Carlos S. Hardy was and still is a duly elected, qualified, and acting judge of the superior court of the state of California in and for the county of Los Angeles, and therefore and for that reason was and is not a member of the "State Bar of California"; and that therefore said petitioner and its said special committee did not have jurisdiction over the person of said Carlos S. Hardy or of the subject-matter aforesaid, and that respondent by reason thereof was without jurisdiction to punish said Carlos S. Hardy for contempt under the provisions of the State Bar Act. Thereupon the application for an alternative writ of mandate was filed herein, and, such writ having been issued and a return having been made thereto and a hearing had thereon, the matter as to whether such writ be made permanent is now before this court for decision.

[1, 2] The so-called "State Bar Act" was adopted by the Legislature and approved by the Governor of California on March 31, 1927, and became effective on July 29, 1927. Stats. 1927, p. 38. In the title of the act it is stated to be "An act to create a public corporation to be known as 'The State Bar of California.'" It is insisted by certain counsel for said Carlos S. Hardy, who have appeared as amici curiæ and have presented briefs herein in opposition to this application, that the writ of mandate should not be made permanent herein, for the reason that the State Bar Act is unconstitutional upon the several grounds set forth in the briefs of counsel so appearing. The question thus presented stands upon the threshold of this discussion. It is contended by counsel thus appearing in opposition to the issuance of such writ that the State Bar Act is unconstitutional, as in violation of article 12, § 1, of the state Constitution, which provides that "Corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special act." If, however, "The State Bar of California" is, as it was stated in the title and also in the body of the State Bar Act to be, "a public corporation," it would seem that the foregoing provision of the Constitution would not have application, for the reason that said provision thereof has been held by this court to refer only to private corporations. Napa State Hospital v. Dasso, 153 Cal. 698, 703, 96 P. 355, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 643, 15 Ann. Cas. 910.

It is however, insisted by said counsel that, notwithstanding the designation of "The State Bar of California" as a public corporation to be formed under the provisions of said act, it is not and cannot be, or be formed as, such public corporation, for the reason that it is not brought by the terms of said act within the definition of a public corporation as set forth in section 284 of the Civil Code as follows: "Corporations are either public or private. Public corporations are formed or organized for the government of a portion of the state; all other corporations are private." It is to be noted in considering this contention that the Constitution does not attempt to define the several sorts of corporations which may be formed by or in accordance with legislative action, but that the foregoing definition of what shall constitute public, as distinguished from private, corporations is purely of statutory origin. This being so, it must be clear that the provisions of the Civil Code above quoted could not be held to constitute a limitation upon later legislation to create public corporations for other purposes than those relating to "the government of a portion of the state." It is a fact within general knowledge that the state Legislature has, upon not a few occasions since the adoption both of our present Constitution and of the foregoing section of the Civil Code, provided for the creation of various kinds of public corporations or associations which did not have for their function or purpose the "government of a portion of the state." Such, for example, was Reclamation District No. 551, which was organized under certain laws enacted by the Legislature for the expressed purpose of the reclamation of certain swamp and overflowed lands. In upholding these laws relating to its creation, this court held that the districts to be formed thereunder, while public corporations, were neither municipal corporations, nor were they to be held to belong to either of the classes of corporations defined by section 284 of the Civil Code. People v. Reclamation Dist. No. 551, 117 Cal. 114, 48 P. 1016. The same ruling was made in the case of People v. Levee Dist. No. 6, 131 Cal. 30, 63 P. 676, and in the case of In re Madera Irr. Dist., 92 Cal. 296, 28 P. 272, 14 L. R. A. 755, 27 Am. St. Rep. 106, wherein this court, in sustaining the validity of the Wright Act (Stats. 1887, p. 29) declared: "That the legislature is vested with the whole of the legislative power of the state, and that it has authority to deal with any subject within the scope of civil government, except in so far as it is restrained by the provisions of the Constitution, and that it is the sole tribunal to determine as well the expediency as the details of all legislation within its power, are principles so familiar as hardly to need mention. The declaration in article IV, section 1, of the Constitution: 'The legislative power of this state shall be vested in a senate and assembly, which shall be designated the legislature of the state of California,"—comprehends the exercise of all the sovereign authority of the state in matters which are properly the subject of legislation; and it is incumbent upon anyone who will challenge an act of the legislature as being invalid to show, either that such act is without the province of legislation, or that the particular subject-matter of that act has been by the Constitution, either by express provision or by necessary implication, withdrawn by the people from the consideration of the legislature. The presumption which attends every act of the legislature is, that it is within its power; and he who would except it from the power must point out the particular provision of the Constitution by which the exception is made, or demonstrate that it is palpably excluded from any consideration whatever by that body." See, also, Melvin v. State, 121 Cal. 16, 53 P. 416; People v. San Joaquin Valley Assn., 151 Cal. 797, 91 P. 740.

[3,4] It is further, however, urged by said counsel that, notwithstanding the express declaration embodied in the title and also in the body of the State Bar Act that the corporation to be formed and to function thereunder is to be a public corporation, it cannot be held to be other than a private corporation, in view of its membership, its functions, the purposes of its creation, and, finally, its independence of public regulation and control. Dealing with these objections in the order of their statement, it is a matter of public history and general knowledge that the profession and practice of the law embraces in its membership probably the largest, and certainly the most influential, body of individuals, having a definite and common objective, of any similar professional association of citizens of this or of any other of the commonwealths of our common country. This body of our citizenry known to the laws of this state as "attorneys and counselors at law" form an integral and indispensable unit in our system of administering justice which has come down to us under the name of Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence, and without the constant presence and contacts of which courts could not function nor the orderly administration of justice go on. Attorneys and counselors at law have long been known as "officers of the court," and as such they have for centuries been required to undergo certain courses of preparation and to assume certain solemn obligations relative to their training, character, and conduct as such; and these not only with respect to their relation to the courts, but also with regard to their relation to the public at large. Thus it is that the profession and practice of the law, while in a limited sense a matter of private choice and concern in so far as it relates to its emoluments, is essentially and more largely a matter of public interest and concern, not only from the viewpoint of its relation to the administration of civil and criminal law, but also from that of the contacts of its membership with the constituent membership of society at large, whose interest it is to be safeguarded against the ignorances or evil dispositions of those who may be masquerading beneath the cloak of the legal and supposedly learned and upright profession. It is to be noted also that from the body of the legal profession it is required, by both the Constitution and statutory law of this and most other states, the justices and judges of all courts of record and of certain other subordinate tribunals must be chosen. It is for each and all of these reasons that the membership, character and conduct of those entering and engaging in the legal profession have long been regarded as the proper subject of legislative regulation and control; and it has never heretofore been considered, so far as we have been made aware, that, at least in this commonwealth, the exercise of a reasonable degree of regulation and control over the profession and practice of the law, constituted an intrusion into the domain of our state organization constitutionally assigned to the judicial department thereof. From almost the inception of our state government statutory provision has been made for the admission, disbarment, suspension, or disciplining of members of the legal profession. Stats. 1851, p. 48. It is not necessary herein to review the changes which have occurred in the course of our statutory regulations in this regard, nor even to consider in detail the various tribunals and administrative bodies to which from time to time these regulatory functions have been assigned, since the purpose of this branch of our inquiry has been attained when we arrive at the conclusion, as we do, from the foregoing considerations that the profession and practice of the law is not such a matter of purely private concern that the effort on the part of the Legislature to put the regulation thereof into the organized form contemplated by the State Bar Act is to be regarded and held as an attempt to provide for the formation of a private corporation.

It is, however, further insisted by counsel appearing as amici curiæ herein that the State Bar Act is violative of article 4, § 25, subd. 19 of the state Constitution, which forbids the Legislature to pass local or special laws "granting to any corporation, association, or individual any special or exclusive right, privilege, or immunity." The answer to this objection is contained within the very terms of the foregoing constitutional inhibition when applied to the act in question, since it would seem to be apparent that the act cannot be regarded as a local or special law. It is true that in the title or body of the act it is not expressly stated in so many words to be a general law, but it is not necessary so to be, if from the content of the act itself it appears that it applies to all of the class of persons with respect to which it purports to legislate, and that as to such classification it is apparently based upon a reasonable distinction. It requires but a cursory glance at the provisions of the State Bar Act to determine that it has inclusive application to each and every member of the legal profession within the state of California who is actively engaged and entitled to engage in the practice of the law, and that it purports to regulate the admission, conduct, and continuance in the practice of the law of this certain and well-recognized professional class of the body politic coming within the precise limitations of said act, as these will presently be more particularly set forth and defined. In support of their foregoing contention, we are cited by said counsel to certain decisions of the Supreme Court of the state of Idaho, holding a certain State Bar Act adopted a number of years ago, and later sought to be amended by the Legislature of that state, to be for certain reasons therein stated a private corporation created by special laws. It will suffice here to say that we do not approve of either the reasoning or conclusions of these Idaho cases, and decline to adopt or follow them.

[5] As to the final contention of said counsel that the State Bar Act here in question is as to certain of its provisions in violation of article 1, § 21, of the state Constitution, which, among the "Declarations of Rights" in said article enumerated, states: "Nor shall any citizen, or class of citizens, be granted privileges or immunities which, upon the same terms, shall not be granted to all citizens," we do not deem a discussion of this phase of the State Bar Act to be germane to the issues involved in this special proceeding for reasons which clearly appear when, having determined, as we now do, that said act is otherwise constitutional, we turn to a consideration of the particular provisions of the act with respect to their applicability to the precise issue before us in the instant case. The title of said State Bar Act purports to set forth that the purpose of the act in making provision for the creation of the state bar of California is "to provide for its organization, government, membership and powers, to regulate the practice of law, and to provide penalties for violations of said act." In the body of the act it is provided in section 3 thereof that "the first members of the State Bar shall be all persons now entitled to practice law in this state." By the terms of section 7 thereof it is provided that "after the organization of The State Bar, as herein provided, all persons who are admitted to practice in accordance with the provisions of this act shall become by that fact members of The State Bar."

By the provisions of sections 4, 5, 6, and 8 thereof members of the state bar are classified as "active" and "inactive" members thereof, but with the classification as to inactive members we have no present concern.

That it was the "active" members of the legal profession in California which it was the manifest purpose of said act to organize into a "State Bar" sufficiently appears, not only in the title of the act, which expressly states its purpose to be "to regulate the practice of law," but also from the body of the act itself, as will appear from the following further extracts from its numerous subdivisions: Section 3 thereof provides that the first members of the state bar shall be "all persons now entitled to practice law in this state." Section 12 thereof provides that the first members of the governing board of said state bar to be appointed immediately upon the act becoming effective shall be selected "from among those qualified for active membership in The State Bar." Section 15 of the act provides that in the subsequent election or elections of members of the board of governors "only active members of The State Bar * * * shall be entitled to vote" for the governor or governors from their respective districts. Section 30 of the act provides for the appointment by the board of governors of such administrative committees as it may deem advisable. "Such committees shall be composed of active members of The State Bar." And, finally, by the provisions of section 47 of the act, "No person shall practice law in this state subsequent to the first meeting of The State Bar unless he shall be an active member thereof as hereinbefore defined."

When we turn to those sections of the State Bar Act which purport to invest the board of governors, or its administrative committees, with governmental functions and disciplinary powers, we find that these uniformly and expressly have relation to the practice of the law. Section 24 thereof contains the grant of power to said board to determine the qualifications "for admission to practice law in this state," with frequent iteration of the foregoing phrase; while section 26 of the act embraces those disciplinary powers which are to be exercised through the disbarment, suspension, removal, or reinstatement of those persons who, while actively engaged in the practice of the law, have brought themselves within the terms of said section of the act; while section 49 thereof provides that "any person who, not being an active member of The State Bar, or who after he has been disbarred or while suspended from membership in The State Bar, as by this act provided, shall practice law, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor."

From a consideration of the foregoing terms and intendments of the State Bar Act it would seem to be fairly deducible that the act, as to its scope, purposes, and conferred powers was intended by the framers thereof to be limited to those members of the legal profession who were engaged, and were and are entitled to be engaged, in the practice of law. The term "practice of law" has been defined in occasional cases, but perhaps as concrete and inclusive a definition as any is that contained in the case of Eley v. Miller, 7 Ind. App. 529, 34 N. E. 836, wherein the court says: "As the term is generally understood, the practice of the law is the doing or performing services in a court of justice, in any matter pending therein throughout its various stages, and in conformity to the adopted rules of procedure. But in a larger sense it includes legal advice and counsel, and the preparation of legal instruments and contracts by which legal rights are secured, although such matter may or may not be pending in a court." With the foregoing statement, and with this definition in mind, we arrive at the consideration of the immediate issue before us. The record herein discloses that both at the time of the taking effect of the State Bar Act and at the dates which the particular investigation out of the sequences of which the instant application arose was initiated by the board of bar governors of the state bar of California Carlos S. Hardy was, and for some years prior thereof had been, a duly admitted and qualified attorney and counselor at law within the state of California. It further, however, appeared that during said time he was also one of the number of superior judges, duly elected, qualified, and functioning as such in and as a part of the superior court of Los Angeles county. Being such, he was subject to each and all of the constitutional provisions which have application to that particular constitutional court of record and to the judges thereof. Among these provisions is that to be found in article 6, § 22, of the Constitution, which provides as follows: "No judge of a court of record shall practice law in any court of this state during his continuance in office."

Under the foregoing definition of the phrase "Practice law," it must be held to have been intended by the framers of this provision of the Constitution that its inhibition should be inclusive enough to embrace each and all of those professional activities which are included within said definition, since otherwise the obvious purpose of imposing this particular inhibition upon those occupying judicial positions would, or at least could, be subverted. The foregoing provision of the Constitution is to be considered in connection with the immediately following provision thereof, which reads: "No person shall be eligible to the office of a justice of the supreme court, or of a district court of appeal, or of a judge of a superior court, or of a municipal court, unless he shall have been admitted to practice before the Supreme Court of the state for a period of at least five years immediately preceding his election or appointment to such office."

When so read in connection with the phraseology of the State Bar Act, to which we have above directed attention, it would seem to be sufficiently clear that the term "eligible" and the term "entitled," as used in these several provisions of the law, have each a distinctive meaning; and that as to each of these terms they should be given such application to the first of the foregoing provisions of the Constitution as to import the meaning that no person, however eligible to practice law in this state, shall be entitled so to do while he occupies the office of a justice or judge of a court of record and during the period of his continuance in such office. The effect of such an interpretation of said constitutional provision would logically be that whatever right an attorney and counselor at law might have been invested with by virtue of his admission to practice, and whatever might be his eligibility so to do, was to be so far held in suspension during his incumbency in any such judicial office that he would not be entitled to the exercise of such right during such time.

Such interpretation, aside from the soundness of its reason, has authority for its support in the case of In re Silkman, 88 App. Div. 102, 84 N. Y. S. 1025, as to whether a surrogate in the state of New York and in counties thereof having a population in excess of 120,000 was entitled to practice law, in the face of a constitutional provision which declared that no surrogate in any such county should practice as an attorney or counselor in any court of record in said state. The court held that the petitioner, Silkman, was upon taking such office "suspended from practice as effectively as he could possibly be by any order of this court." In the later case of In re Strahl, 201 App. Div. 729, 195 N. Y. S. 385, it was held by the same court with reference to a justice of the municipal court that "Under the laws of this state the right to practice law by one holding such a judicial office as the respondent is suspended during his incumbency." It was similarly so decided by the Supreme Court of Florida in the case of Perry v. Bush, 46 Fla. 242, 35 So. 225. We are cited to no authority conflicting with the views expressed in these decisions.

If, therefore, we are correct in the conclusion that under the provisions of article 6, § 22, of the state Constitution, no person holding judicial office in a court of record in this state is entitled to practice law during his continuance in such office, it would seem to follow irresistibly that the provisions of the State Bar Act relating to those over whom the regulatory jurisdiction and power of the public corporation created thereunder are to be exercised cannot be held to extend to those persons who, however regularly admitted thereto, and however otherwise eligible to engage in the practice of the law, are not entitled to actively engage in such practice during their incumbency in any judicial office which comes within the inhibition of said article and section of the state Constitution. This conclusion is abundantly supported and strengthened when we come to consider the consequences which would legally follow the violation of the foregoing provision of the state Constitution. An attorney and counselor at law who may be the incumbent of a judicial office, by essaying to practice law, does not by so doing violate any particular principle of legal ethics to which our attention has been directed. This is shown by the fact that the occupants of judicial positions in the courts of this state not of record, who are otherwise eligible so to do, may and in most instances do, practice law without any suggestion that in so doing they are violating either former or existing laws defining and regulating the ethical practices of the legal profession. The offense of a judge of a court of record who violates the foregoing provision of the Constitution is not an offense against his profession, but against his office. It amounts, if proven, to such misconduct in office as would subject him to impeachment or to such other procedure to accomplish his removal from office as the laws provide, but it does not, and should not, put him in peril of proceedings which would destroy his eligibility to practice his profession or remove him from his membership therein, for the obvious reason that so to do would be to permit the accomplishment by indirection of his disqualification to hold, and hence necessarily his removal from his office, for which the Constitution in sections 17 and 18 of article 4 thereof has provided a direct, if not an exclusive, mode of procedure.

An apt and well-reasoned line of authority upon this precise question is that supplied by the case of Falloon v. Clark, 61 Kan. 121, 58 P. 990, wherein the Supreme Court of Kansas determined that "wherever the constitution has created an office and fixed its term, and has also declared upon what grounds and in what mode an incumbent of such office may be removed before the expiration of his term, it is beyond the power of the legislature to remove such officer or suspend him from office for any other reason or in any other mode than the constitution itself has furnished." The said court rests its authority for this conclusion upon Lowe v. Com., 3 Mete. (Ky.) 237, and Throop, Pub. Off., § 341, which latter authority states the foregoing doctrine to be well settled, and cites in support thereof the cases of State v. Wiltz, 11 La. Ann. 439; State v. McNeely, 24 La. Ann. 19; Brown v. Grover, 6 Bush. (Ky.) 1; Page v. Hardin, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 648; and Mechem, Pub. Off., § 457. There would seem to exist many reasons, rooted in public policy, why this public and, it may well be said, powerful corporation, considering its membership and the relation thereof to the administration of justice through the judicial arm of the state government, should not lightly be held to be invested with the power and authority over judicial officers which in the instant case it has sought to exercise. Whether or not in any instance the board of governors of said body, or any committee thereof, may be held to be possessed of power to execute such a roving commission as that upon which the committee of said board relied as the basis of its effort to invoke the jurisdiction of the respondent court, or upon which the petitioner in this immediate proceeding seeks to found its claim of right to the issuance of a writ of mandate, we do not need to inquire, for the all-sufficient reason that the record herein discloses that the order of said board of governors creating such committee definitely stated and defined the precise matter with regard to which the committee was invested with power to function. By reference to such order it appears that the committee was appointed "pursuant to the provisions of section 26 of the State Bar Act, to take evidence and make findings on behalf of the board in the matter of the conduct of Carlos S. Hardy, a judge of the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles." The remaining portion of said order further confines the inquisitorial power of the committee to the particular matter of an alleged receipt of money from certain persons while occupying his aforesaid office. By reference to said section 26 of said act it will be seen that it has relation solely to the disbarment, suspension, discipline, and reinstatement of members of the state bar. Whether or not the aforesaid order would have sufficed to serve as a complaint against a member of the state bar, and whether or not the proceedings of said committee and the findings based thereon would have been a sufficient basis for an order of disbarment, suspension, or reproof under the terms of said section of the act, we do not need to determine, since upon the very face of said order it appears to constitute a direction to said committee to undertake a proceeding against one who, as we have already seen, cannot be brought within the terms of said section or within the inquisitorial powers which said committee is sought by said order to be invested.

[6] It is, however, argued by the petitioner herein that the only capacity in which Carlos S. Hardy was sought to be subjected to the jurisdiction of said committee was in that of a witness before it, and in that capacity he may not be heard to question his duty to be sworn or his obligation to testify. This argument is specious, but is wholly lacking in legal support, since under long and well settled authority a witness before a court or any other inquisitorial tribunal or committee cannot be required to be sworn or to give his testimony, either in any matter over which such court or other body has not jurisdiction or in any matter to the inquiry in which the appearance and testimony of the witness are neither pertinent nor material. When we look to the proceeding before the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles, which is the respondent herein, and which was a proceeding having for its purpose the issuance of a citation directing said Carlos S. Hardy to appear and show cause in and before said court why he should not be adjudged guilty of, and be punished for, contempt, we not only fail to find that there was any affirmative showing that the matters concerning which the said Carlos S. Hardy in his capacity of such witness was required to be sworn or to testify were such as would render his testimony material and pertinent; but, on the contrary, it affirmatively appeared upon the face of said proceedings that the precise matter which said committee had been constituted to investigate, and which it was so proceeding to do, was one over which the committee had no jurisdiction. And, when we look further to the application for an alternative writ of mandate presented herein, we discover the same precise infirmities upon the very face and content of said application. These defects affirmatively appearing in the proceedings before both of these tribunals would have sufficed in and of themselves to have justified the said superior court in its order sustaining the respondent's demurrer to said petition and to also justify this court in refusing to make permanent said writ. We have preferred, however, to put our decision of this matter upon the broader grounds covered by the main considerations embraced in this opinion, and we summarize our conclusion thereby reached herein as follows:

First. The State Bar Act, approved on March 31, 1927, and effective on July 29, 1927, is constitutional.

Second. The provisions thereof provide for the formation of a public corporation embracing in its membership such persons as were entitled to practice law in this state at the effective date of said act, and also such persons as should thereafter become entitled to practice law in this state as provided by law.

Third. The duly elected and qualified judges of the courts of record in this state who were such at the time said act became effective, and who have since become and are such judicial officers, were and are not, under the inhibition of section 22 of article 6 of the state Constitution, entitled to practice law in this state during their and each of their continuance in office, and hence under the express provisions of said State Bar Act have not become, and during said period are not, members of the state bar of California, and hence are not subject to the jurisdiction, control, and processes conferred upon said corporation and the governing board or other officers thereof by the scope and provisions of said act.

Fourth. The said Carlos S. Hardy, affirmatively appearing to have been a duly elected, qualified, and acting judge of the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles at the date said act became effective, and at all times since said date, and hence not having at any of said times become or been a member of said corporation, was not, by virtue of the acts or conduct attributed to him by the order or action of the board of governors of said corporation or its committee as hereinabove set forth, subject to the jurisdiction or processes of the said board of governors of said corporation, or of any committee thereof, so as to be required to do the acts for his failure or refusal so to do he was sought to be adjudged guilty of contempt and to be punished therefor before the said respondent court; and,

Fifth. And, finally, as a result of the foregoing conclusions, that the petitioner herein is not entitled to the issuance of a permanent writ of mandate herein.

It is therefore ordered that such writ be, and the same is hereby, denied.

PEOPLE v. DISTRICT COURT OF APPEAL,
SECOND APPELLATE DISTRICT, DIVI-SION 2 et al. (L. A. 11205.)

Supreme Court of California. June 17, 1929.

Prohibition ☞13—Prohibition to prevent District Court of Appeal staying conviction judgment was denied, where question became moot by affirmance of judgment.

Where, after submission of application for writ of prohibition or review to prevent District Court of Appeal from staying operation of judgment of conviction, case to which application related was heard and determined in said court, and petition for hearing in Supreme Court was denied, writ was denied as relating to question which had become moot.

In Bank.

Original proceeding for writ of prohibition or review by the People against the District Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division 2, and others, to prevent said court from staying the operation of a judgment. Denied.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Buron Fitts, Dist. Atty., and Tracy Chatfield Becker, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Thos. P. White and A. P. G. Steffes, both of Los Angeles (Vincent C. Hickson, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondents.

PER CURIAM. In this matter an application by the Attorney General for a writ of prohibition or review was presented and submitted to this court at a time when the case of the People of the State of California v. Marco Albori, to which said application related, was still pending and undetermined in the District Court of Appeal in and for the Second Appellate District, Division 2. Since the submission of said application, however, the case of People v. Albori, 275 P. 1017, has been heard and determined in said court, and the judgment of conviction of the defendant therein has been affirmed; the decision of said court having been filed on March 14, 1929. A petition for hearing in this court was filed on April 5, 1929, and denied on April 11, 1929. The decision of the District Court of Appeal having thus become final, it follows that the order of said court staying the operation of the judgment appealed from, which was sought to be made the subject of review in the instant proceeding, having fully subserved its purpose, there is no longer any matter pending in said District Court of Appeal to which the issuance of a writ by this court could be given application. The question presented for our consideration in the instant proceeding has thus become moot, and for that reason only the petition for a writ of prohibition or review herein is denied.

WILSON v. SUPERIOR COURT OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA, IN AND FOR MONTEREY COUNTY, et al.

Supreme Court of California. June 17, 1929.

1. Exceptions, bill of $\S$ 51—Court's action in refusing to settle bill of exceptions and dismissing proceedings held not abuse of discretion in view of plaintiff's delay.

Trial judge held not to have abused discretion in refusing to settle bill of exceptions and dismissing proceedings, where proposed amendments thereto were served on plaintiff on May 29 and she did nothing prior to death of presiding judge on Sept. 30th to bring matter to his attention, and period of inaction continued for an additional period of nearly three months after death of presiding judge.

2. Exceptions, bill of $\S$ 50—Moving party in settling bill of exceptions must proceed with diligence.

Where plaintiff was moving party in settling bill of exceptions, it was incumbent on her to proceed with diligence.

3. Exceptions, bill of $\S$ 51—Determination as to due diligence in causing bill of exceptions to be settled is conclusive, absent abuse of discretion.

Whether a party has exercised due diligence in causing a bill of exceptions to be settled is so largely a matter of discretion with the trial judge that, when no abuse of such discretion appears, his determination is conclusive.

4. Exceptions, bill of $\S$ 53(3)—Trial judge's discretion properly exercised in refusing to settle bill of exceptions held not controllable by mandamus.

Discretion of trial judge properly exercised in refusing to settle bill of exceptions cannot be controlled by mandamus.

In Bank.

Petition by Helen Cooke Wilson for writ of mandate directed to the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Monterey, and Hon. Henry G. Jorgenson, Judge thereof, to compel respondent judge to settle a bill of exceptions and motion by defendant to dismiss petitioner's appeal for failure to perfect record. Writ denied, and appeal dismissed.

Roger Marchetti, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Melvin & Sullivan and Ward Sullivan, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

SHENK, J. Two matters are before us in this cause. The first is an application on the part of the plaintiff for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent judge to settle a bill of exceptions, and the second is a motion by the defendant to dismiss the plaintiff's appeal for failure to perfect a record on appeal.

The action is one for divorce, for an order setting aside a property settlement agreement, and for the custody of minor children. The complaint was filed on February 8, 1927, and the cause was tried and submitted for decision on the 30th day of the following August. On January 26, 1928, the court granted the plaintiff an interlocutory decree of divorce, but by its judgment then rendered refused to set aside the property settlement agreement. On March 8th the plaintiff's motion for a new trial was denied, and on March 19th she filed her notice of appeal. On March 30th the appellant served and on April 2d filed her proposed bill of exceptions. On May 29, 1928, the defendant served on the plaintiff, and on May 31st filed proposed amendments to the proposed bill.

During all of the times hereinbefore mentioned Hon. Fred A. Treat was the judge of the superior court in and for Monterey county who tried said cause and rendered judgment therein. On September 30, 1928, Judge Treat suffered injuries in an automobile accident resulting in his death. On October 29, 1928, the respondent judge was appointed as Judge Treat's successor in office. On December 22, 1928, the appellant served and later filed a notice of motion to have the bill of exceptions settled. On December 28th the respondents filed a notice of opposition to the settlement of the bill and served and filed a notice of motion to dismiss the proposed bill. On January 18, 1929, the respondent court entered its order denying the plaintiff's motion to settle the proposed bill and granting the defendant's motion to dismiss the proceeding on the ground that the plaintiff had not proceeded with due diligence. On April 3d the court denied the plaintiff's motion, made under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that she be relieved "from her default in failing to have properly settled," etc., her proposed bill of exceptions. The plaintiff now seeks to compel the respondent judge to settle said bill.

[1-4] We find no abuse of discretion in the refusal of the respondent judge to settle the bill of exceptions and in dismissing the proceeding. The plaintiff was the moving party, and it was incumbent on her to proceed with diligence. Galbraith v. Lowe, 142 Cal. 295, 75 P. 831. After the proposed amendments were served upon her on May 29th she did nothing prior to the death of Judge Treat on September 30th to bring the matter to the attention of the trial judge. This period of inaction of four months is unexcused. In fact, it continued for an additional period of nearly three months when on December 22d the plaintiff first took steps to bring the matter of the settlement of the bill of exceptions to the attention of the respondent judge.

Whether a party has exercised due diligence in causing a bill of exceptions to be settled is so largely a matter of discretion with the trial judge that when no abuse of such discretion appears his determination is conclusive. Miller v. American Central Insurance Co., 2 Cal. App. 271, 274, 83 P. 289. This discretion, properly exercised, cannot be controlled by mandamus. See Stonesifer v. Armstrong, 86 Cal. 594, 25 P. 50; 2 Cal. Jur. p. 570; 16 Cal. Jur. p. 812.

The peremptory writ is denied, and the appeal is dismissed.

BOWLES v. STANLEY et al. (L. A. 9931.)

Supreme Court of California. June 17, 1929.

Automobiles ☞244(6)—Verdict against driver whose truck hit curb and struck pedestrian, after driver attempted to avoid collision with another truck, held sustained.

In action for injuries sustained by pedestrian on sidewalk, struck when truck hit curb and overturned, verdict in plaintiff's favor against truck driver and his employer held sustained by evidence showing truck was driven to curb in effort to avoid collision with another truck at intersection.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edward T. Bishop, Judge.

Action by Emily J. Bowles against Don Stanley and August Kwasigroch and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants named appeal. Affirmed.

W. I. Gilbert, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Schweitzer & Hutton, of Los Angeles, for respondent Bowles.

H. T. Morrow and Henry L. Knoop, both of Los Angeles, for other respondents.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal from the judgment on a verdict for $7,500 in favor of the plaintiff in an action for damages for personal injuries.

On December 4, 1925, at about 4 o'clock p. m., the plaintiff was walking on the sidewalk near the corner of Second and Oxford streets in the city of Los Angeles. At the same time the defendant Don Stanley was driving a grocery delivery truck in the service of his employer, August Kwasigroch, proceeding southerly on Oxford street toward its intersection with Second street. Coincidentally the defendant Ahl was driving a plumber's truck in the service of his employers, Carroll & Barry, proceeding easterly on Second street toward Oxford. At the intersection a collision of the two cars became imminent, and both drivers endeavored to avoid it. In the attempt, the defendant Stanley's car hit the curb, overturned, struck the plaintiff while she was on the sidewalk, and caused the serious injuries for which redress is sought in this action. The plaintiff sued both drivers and their employers as joint tort-feasors. The jury returned a verdict against the appealing defendants, Stanley and Kwasigroch, and in favor of the other defendants.

It is unnecessary to recount further the circumstances of the accident. It is not contended that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. At the trial it was the endeavor of one set of defendants to show that they were not responsible for the accident, which, if proved, would throw the liability on the other set of defendants. It is sufficient to say that the evidence was sufficient to support the verdict against the appealing defendants.

Nor is it required that specific mention be made of the numerous contentions of the appellants. They constitute criticism of instructions given and refused and alleged erroneous rulings of the trial court. Each point has been examined, and in none of them do we find sufficient of substance to require or justify a reversal.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

DAVIS v. RENTON. (Civ. 6820.)★

Rehearing Denied June 28, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 29, 1929.

1. Automobiles ⇨245(72)—Pedestrian held not contributorily negligent as matter of law in failing to maintain continuous lookout to left for approaching vehicles while crossing street.

Pedestrian crossing street, who looked for approaching traffic before she left curb, held not contributorily negligent as matter of law with respect to injuries sustained in automobile accident because of failure to maintain continuous lookout to left as she entered intersection.

2. Automobiles ⇨217(1)—Pedestrian in crossing street must exercise ordinary care with reference to time, place and circumstances.

Pedestrian crossing street is bound to exercise ordinary care with reference to time, place, and circumstances.

3. Appeal and error ⇨1004(3)—Trial court's ruling on excessiveness of damage is conclusive if supported by substantial evidence, unless facts suggest at first blush passion or prejudice of jury (Code Civ. Proc. § 657, subds. 1, 5).

Ruling of trial court on question whether damages are excessive at time question is presented on motion for new trial under Code Civ. Proc. § 657, subds. 1, 5, may not be disturbed by an appellate court if there is any substantial evidence to support the finding of the trial court, unless the facts suggest at first blush passion or prejudice on the part of the jury.

4. Damages ⇨130(3)—$5,000 for fracture of thumb and concussion of brain in automobile accident, not shown to have caused dizziness of which plaintiff complained, held excessive.

$5,000 damages to woman suffering concussion of brain in automobile accident with recurrent dizziness and loss of memory and fracture of outer joint of left thumb and bruises held excessive as suggesting passion or prejudice of jury, where it did not appear that the dizziness was a result of the brain concussion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Homer R. Spence, Judge.

Action by Minnie Davis against Helen Renton. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

J. Hampton Hoge, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Ford, Johnson & Bourquin, of San Francisco, Jesse E. Nichols, of Oakland, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant to recover a judgment for damages arising out of a collision with an automobile. The defendant answered and a trial was had in the trial court before the court sitting with a jury. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $5,000; the defendant made a motion for a new trial; the motion was denied; and she has appealed from the judgment based on the verdict under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[1, 2] The accident occurred in Oakland on the 29th day of September, 1927. The plaintiff was in the act of walking from the southwest corner of Fifty-First street and Telegraph avenue easterly across Telegraph avenue. The defendant approached from Berkeley driving south on the west side of Telegraph avenue. The collision occurred near the westerly rail of the double street railroad track. Just before she left the curb the plaintiff looked north on Telegraph avenue for approaching traffic. She saw two cars and she waited until they passed. She testified that she then stepped into the street, and when she was midway between the curb and the rail she looked again and saw two automobiles approaching from the north. She estimated the distance at 150 feet. She continued forward to the rail and at that time looked again and saw the defendant's car about 15 feet to the plaintiff's left. She saw the car swerve as though it were going to pass behind her and she was then in the act of advancing when she was hit. Neither on direct examination or cross-examination did she claim to have looked north from the time she stood on the sidewalk until the accident happened. The defendant calls this evidence to our attention and asserts that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. In this behalf she argues that it was the duty of the plaintiff to be continually looking in the direction from which traffic might be approaching. The plaintiff was bound to exercise ordinary care. Ordinary care has reference to time, place, and circumstances. There is nothing in the record before us showing that this plaintiff should, at the time and place of this particular accident, have been looking continually to the north as she entered Telegraph avenue.

[3] The defendant makes the further contention that the verdict of the jury fixing the damages in the sum of $5,000 was excessive. If a jury is corrupt, its verdict may be attacked before the trial court by a motion for a new trial. That attack is provided for by the statute. Code Civ. Proc. § 657, subd. 1. If the jury acts through passion, or prejudice, its verdict may be attacked at the same time in the same manner. Code Civ. Proc. § 657, subd. 5. The ruling of the trial court on those questions, like the ruling of the trial court on any other question of fact, may not be disturbed by an appellate court if there is any substantial evidence to support the ruling of the trial court; or, as it has been expressed, unless "the facts are such as to suggest, at first blush, passion, prejudice, or corruption on the part of the jury." Morris v. Standard Oil Co., 188 Cal. 468, 473, 205 P. 1073, 1075.

[4] Before we can say what appears at first blush in the instant case the facts must be stated. As it is possible that the jury believed one witness and did not believe another, it is necessary to state the facts as claimed by the plaintiff. The facts testified to by her and some of her witnesses were as follows: When she collided with the defendant's automobile the plaintiff fell and in falling struck the left side of her head and face with such force as to cause a lump on the left side of her forehead. She scratched her nose on the outside and furthermore her nose bled from the inside at the time of the accident, some during that evening, and some the next morning. She suffered a concussion of the brain which caused a momentary unconsciousness. The plaintiff has suffered from dizziness and loss of memory. The dizziness has recurred from time to time since the accident. It was not so pronounced at the date of the trial, about seven months after the date of the accident. The record discloses some loss of memory, but that element of plaintiff's claim is very slightly developed. The plaintiff suffered a fracture of the outer joint of the left thumb. The fracture responded to treatment, but as the fracture extended into the joint there is a loss of motion of about 50 per cent. There was testimony to the effect that the injury to the thumb might become permanent and might become more fixed. As the plaintiff fell to the street she hit on her left side. The skin was not broken, but she suffered external bruises on her shoulder, arm, hip, thigh, knee, and below the knee. The bruises on the knee were somewhat extensive. In falling there was such a wrenching of the left leg that some of the ligaments were strained and some of the blood vessels fractured. The plaintiff was taken at once to the Emergency Hospital. There her thumb was set and bandaged and some of the bruises on the left leg were bandaged. Later in the day she was taken home and the next day her physician called. On another day he called again. In four or five days the plaintiff left her home and called at her physician's office. On another day she called again. In about three weeks the bandages about the thumb were removed. The dizziness above mentioned was quite continuous for about three months. Since that time occasionally it returns when the plaintiff goes to get up and causes her to stand still for a short time until it passes away. At first the injury to the thumb was very painful. At the time of the trial the thumb did not pain the plaintiff, but the plaintiff could not do the things that she could do before. In this regard she said that she could not wash and wring out clothes. The evidence developed in the trial court did not disclose that the plaintiff makes her living by washing, or that she is a housewife and does the family washing. The plaintiff's evidence did not disclose that the dizziness mentioned was the result of the concussion above mentioned, but the evidence of the defendant was directly to the point that it was not. Under all of these circumstances we have no hesitancy in saying that the verdict suggests "at first blush passion, prejudice or corruption on the part of the jury."

There is no necessity for again trying any of the issues except the issue of damages. The evidence does not indicate any necessity for further investigation of the other issues in the court below.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded to the lower court for a new trial solely upon the issue of the amount of the damages, with directions to that court, upon the settlement of that issue, to render judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the amount so found. The defendant will recover her costs on this appeal.

BARNETT v. ATCHISON, T. & S. F. RY. CO.
et al., and three other cases. (Civ. 6573.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 6, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 3, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 5, 1929.

1. Railroads ⇨327(2)—Persons in automobile deliberately backing into known danger, without stopping, looking, or listening, held contributorily negligent.

In action for damages resulting from collision between automobile and train at crossing, undisputed evidence that persons riding in automobile deliberately backed into place of known danger, utterly heedless of bells and whistles sounded by train, and without slightest effort to stop, look, or listen for approaching trains, together with evidence that persons in automobile stopping when they approached tracks could have seen train and heard signals, demanded holding that persons in automobile were guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law.

2. Railroads ⇨327(1)—Doctrine that persons must stop, look, and listen for approaching trains applies to motorist.

Doctrine that railroad track is in itself signal of danger, and that any one attempting to cross track must stop, look, and listen for approaching trains, applies to driver of motor vehicle as well as to driver of horse-drawn vehicle or to foot passenger.

3. Railroads $\S$ 327(7)—Motorist is not excused from stopping to determine whether railroad tracks may be safely crossed because noise of motor vehicle prevents hearing of warning signals.

That noise of motor vehicle approaching railroad tracks may often prevent hearing of warning bells or whistles does not excuse motorist from stopping, if necessary, to ascertain if tracks may be safely crossed.

4. Evidence $\S$ 553(4)—Question to engineer as to distance within which he could stop train not incorporating facts held objectionable as assuming facts not in evidence (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 2055).

In action to recover damages from collision between automobile and train at crossing, hypothetical question to engineer called as witness under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 2055, as to distance within which he could stop train he was driving, was objectionable as assuming facts not in evidence, where there was no attempt to prove that engineer was expert on facts concerning which he was questioned, and there was no attempt to incorporate question, facts, and circumstances on which witness was asked to express opinion.

5. Evidence $\S$ 568(5)—Statement by engineer not expert nor questioned as to facts that he could stop train within 120 feet held not basis for claiming engineer had last clear chance.

Where engineer of train colliding with automobile at crossing was not shown to be expert on facts concerning which he was questioned, and there was no attempt to incorporate, in question as to distance within which he could stop train, facts and circumstances on which engineer was asked to express opinion, answer of engineer that he could stop train within 120 feet could form no basis for claim that engineer had last clear chance to prevent accident.

6. Evidence $\S$ 553(4)—Opinion of witness on assumed facts, differing from facts proved, has no probative force.

Opinion of witness on assumed facts, differing from those shown by evidence, cannot be given any probative force, and, when such opinion is given in answer to question which does not take facts proved into consideration, it is without value as evidence.

7. Railroads $\S$ 338—Engineer having right to assume automobile would cross safely or stop, attempting to stop train within distance insufficient to avoid collision held not negligent under doctrine of last clear chance.

Where engineer of train colliding with automobile at crossing did not realize that occupants of automobile failed to heed his warning signals, and were in danger until train was 75 feet from point of collision, and engineer then did everything possible to stop train, and there was no negligence in engineer's not trying to stop train earlier, when he had right to assume that automobile would cross safely or stop before reaching point of danger, and engineer testified that he could stop train within distance of 120 feet, doctrine of last clear chance was not applicable to charge engineer with negligence in not attempting to stop train earlier, since evidence showed occupants of automobile, and not engineer, had last clear chance to avoid injury.

Appeals from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; H. V. Alvarado, Judge.

Separate actions by Willis Orton Barnett, a minor, by Lela Barnett, his guardian ad litem, and another, against the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company and others, and by Smith Casner, Laverne Hallmark, a minor, by Zula Hallmark, her guardian ad litem, and another, and by Hollace Taylor, a minor, by Joseph Taylor, his guardian ad litem, against same defendants, consolidated for trial. From judgments for plaintiffs in each case, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; CURTIS and LANGDON, JJ., voting for a hearing.

E. W. Camp, Robert Brennan, Platt Kent, and Leo E. Sievert, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Philip M. Carey, of Oakland, and J. E. Rodgers, A. F. Bray, and Mortimer B. Veale, all of Martinez, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. These four actions were consolidated by stipulation and tried together at the same time. The plaintiffs sued for damages resulting from a collision with an overland train operated by the defendant and an automobile driven by Raymond Hallmark near the town of Antioch. The verdicts were returned in favor of Lela Barnett and her infant child in the sum of $10,000; in favor of Smith Casner in the sum of $5,000; in favor of Zula Hallmark and her two minor children in the sum of $15,000; and in favor of Hollace Taylor in the sum of $6,000. The defendant has appealed from each of the judgments upon typewritten transcripts.

The accident occurred at about 6 o'clock a. m. on June 28, 1925, at a crossing over the main transcontinental line of the defendant corporation approaching the city of Antioch along the southern bank of the San Joaquin river. This crossing was along an unimproved extension of B street, through the private property of the Antioch Lumber Yard, which was used as an approach to an old wharf belonging to the company, but abandoned some time prior to the accident. Five young men, Taylor, Casner, Barnett, Hallmark, and Parks, had crossed over the railroad tracks and on to this wharf a short time prior to the accident riding in a Star touring automobile which was driven by Hallmark. Parks was seated on the driver's right in the front seat; Casner, Taylor, and Barnett were seated in the rear seat. When they reached the wharf, Parks alighted and secured a sack of minnows which he placed in the tonneau of the automobile, and Hallmark thereupon backed the automobile off the wharf over the same course they had just followed. While they were thus approaching the railroad track, Hallmark was looking to the left and rear of the automobile while the three men in the back seat had their heads down and were examining the minnows in the sack placed on the floor of the machine. At that time an overland train operated by the defendant corporation approached from the east, or to the right of the backing automobile. It was seen by Parks, who called to his companions to jump. He jumped free from the machine, and was uninjured. Hallmark, Casner, and Barnett were all killed as a result of the impact, while Taylor suffered serious injury.

The uncontradicted evidence was that the automobile was backing across the track at the rate of about five miles per hour; that the train was approaching at the rate of between 25 and 35 miles per hour; that the engineer had blown what is called the station whistle at a point some six or seven hundred feet from the crossing as he approached it; that the automatic bell on the engine was sounding continuously, and that, when the engineer noticed the automobile backing towards the track, he sounded four sharp warning whistles; that the automobile was then approximately 15 feet from the north rail of the track; and that when the engine was approximately 75 feet from the crossing, the engineer, seeing that the driver of the machine failed to stop, applied the emergency and air brakes, and released sand upon the rails for the purpose of bringing the train to a stop.

The uncontradicted evidence is that all five of those riding in the automobile were familiar with the conditions surrounding the crossing; had passed over it at other times; that they knew the frequency of trains upon that track; and that they backed on to the crossing on this occasion without a single precaution for their safety. A small shed had been erected close to the wharf which obstructed the vision of those in the automobile so that until they reached a point about 18 feet from the north rail of the track they were unable to see a train approaching from the east. Notwithstanding this fact, they did not stop, look, or listen for approaching trains at any period of their journey from the wharf to the railroad track. Hollace Taylor, the only member of the party who gave testimony on the subject, testified that from the point where they left the wharf to the point of collision they were backing approximately 100 feet; that they did not stop at any time until they reached the track; that there were no side curtains on the machine to obstruct their view; that he and his two companions on the back seat were examining the minnows during this whole time, and that, until Parks called from the front seat to jump, he had not noticed the train approaching; that at that time the train was about 150 or 175 feet from the crossing.

When this witness had fixed the train at that point, one of his counsel volunteered the statement that he saw it before that, and, after the court had taken a noon recess, the witness was again called to the stand. This witness then testified that he first saw the train about 500 or 600 feet from the crossing. Another witness testified that he was standing at a point about 45 feet from the point of collision; that he heard the whistle of the train some 2 miles away; that he saw the automobile on the wharf, and saw it backing towards the railroad crossing as he saw and heard the train coming down the track. He called to the people in the automobile, and noticed Parks, who sat in the front seat on the driver's right, turn and speak to the driver. The automobile was then about 10 feet from the track. The automobile, however, continued to back toward the crossing, and, as the train approached, it "whistled a lot of whistles."

Numerous other witnesses testified to the continuous ringing of the bell, to the sounding of whistles, and to the rumbling of the train, which was heard for some three minutes prior to the collision. The engineer of the train testified that, after he had sounded the long station whistle, and when within 150 or 200 feet of the crossing, he for the first time noticed the automobile backing towards the track; that he then sounded four sharp warning whistles, and, when he saw that the driver of the machine failed to heed the warning, but continued on to the track, he applied all his brakes, and released sand upon the tracks for the purpose of bringing the train to a stop. The train, however, did not stop until the engine had proceeded about 1,000 feet beyond the crossing, and this is explained in the testimony of the engineer and others that, as the automobile was struck, oil and gas were spilled upon the rails; that the wheels of the engines immediately locked and skidded, thus preventing the engineer bringing the train to a stop within a reasonable distance. At this point it is well to note that, when the engineer was called as a witness for the plaintiffs under section 2055, Code of Civil Procedure, he was asked within what distance he could stop a train such as he was driving at the time. He answered within 120 feet. The plaintiffs rely strongly upon this testimony in support of their theory of the last clear chance doctrine, while the defendant quite properly suggests that it is not competent evidence, as the engineer was not qualified as an expert, and was not shown to have had any experience in trying to stop a train of the length such as he was driving at the time of the accident traveling at the speed testified to.

[1-3] The undisputed evidence is that the five men in the automobile deliberately backed into a place of known danger utterly heedless of the warning bells and whistles, and without the slightest effort to stop or to look or to listen for approaching trains. This evidence unmistakably demands a holding that they were all guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. It must be conceded that, if they had stopped when they passed the corner of the shed, a distance of 18 feet from the railroad track, and had looked, they would have seen the approaching train, as from that point they had a clear vision of the track for a distance of approximately one-half a mile. It must also be conceded that, if they had stopped at that point, or even closer to the track while still in a position of safety, they would have heard the whistle or bells or the rumble of the approaching train or the warning cries of the witness who stood near the point of collision. The age-old doctrine that a railroad track is in itself a signal of danger, and that any one attempting to cross the track must stop, look, and listen for approaching trains, applies to the driver of a motor vehicle as well as to the driver of a horse-drawn vehicle or to a foot passenger. The fact that the noise of a motor vehicle may often prevent the hearing of warning bells or whistles does not excuse the motorist from stopping, if this is necessary to ascertain whether the track may be safely crossed.

This duty of the driver who attempts to cross a railroad track is well expressed by Mr. Justice Holmes in Baltimore & Ohio R. Co. v. Goodman, 275 U. S. 66, 69, 48 S. Ct. 24, 25 (72 L. Ed. 167, 56 A. L. R. 645), where he says: "When a man goes upon a railroad track he knows that he goes to a place where he will be killed if a train comes upon him before he is clear of the track. He knows that he must stop for the train, not the train stop for him. In such circumstances it seems to us that if a driver cannot be sure otherwise whether a train is dangerously near he must stop and get out of his vehicle, although obviously he will not often be required to do more than to stop and look. It seems to us that if he relies upon not hearing the train or any signal and takes no further precaution he does so at his own risk."

The same principle is announced in Young v. Southern Pacific Co., 189 Cal. 746, 754, 210 P. 259, 262, where the court says: "The law presumes that a person possessing normal faculties of sight and hearing must have seen and heard that which was within the range of his sight and hearing. Absent-mindedness or forgetfulness will not suffice as an excuse for the neglect of a person about to cross a railroad track to look and listen for a possible approaching train. And a person who attempts, regardless of warnings, to cross in front of a moving train, even though he be apparently in a condition of mental abstraction and consequently indifferent to the peril of his situation, is nevertheless negligent." The foregoing passage is quoted with approval in Billig v. Southern Pacific Co., 192 Cal. 357, 363, 219 P. 992, 995, where many other authorities to the same purport are cited.

In Giannini v. Southern Pacific Co. (Cal. App.) 276 P. 618, evidence of contributory negligence far less convincing than what we have here was held to constitute contributory negligence as a matter of law within the rule of Green v. Southern Cal. R. Co., 138 Cal. 1, 70 P. 926; Griffin v. San Pedro, etc., R. Co., 170 Cal. 772, 151 P. 282, L. R. A. 1916A, 842; Murray v. Southern Pacific Co., 177 Cal. 1, 169 P. 675; Billig v. Southern Pacific Co., supra, and other cases cited.

Relying upon plaintiffs' evidence, the defendant moved for a nonsuit upon the ground, among others, of contributory negligence as a matter of law. The motion was denied. It should have been granted. The evidence thereafter received as a part of defendants' case and in rebuttal on the part of plaintiffs did not aid plaintiff's case in any respect. If anything, it clearly emphasized the contributory negligence of these parties and the lack of negligence on the part of the defendants. The issue of contributory negligence should therefore have been taken from the jury by the trial judge upon an instruction that the evidence disclosed contributory negligence as a matter of law. Because the evidence on this issue was all one way, the judgments must be reversed, but, as the cases must be returned for a new trial, we deem it proper to discuss one other point raised by the appellants, and that is the application of the doctrine of the last clear chance.

[4-6] This issue was raised by the respondents upon the theory that, even though the occupants of the car were guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, nevertheless the respondents were entitled to recover because the engineer could have, with the exercise of ordinary care, avoided the collision. The only evidence upon which this claim is based is the unsupported testimony of the engineer, when, in answer to a hypothetical question addressed to him by respondents, he said that he could stop the train within a distance of 120 feet. The question was objected to by the appellants upon the ground that it was incompetent and improper because it assumed facts not in evidence. The objection should have been sustained, but, though the answer was permitted, it does not form any basis for the claim that the appellants had a last clear chance to prevent the accident. There had been no attempt to prove that the engineer was an expert upon the facts concerning which he was interrogated, and there was no attempt to incorporate in the question the facts and circumstances upon which the witness was asked to express an opinion. The opinion of a witness upon assumed facts differing from those shown by the evidence cannot be given any probative force (Estate of Purcell, 164 Cal. 300, 308, 128 P. 932), and, when such opinion is given in answer to a question which does not take the facts proved into consideration, it is without value as evidence.

[7] But, assuming that the jury could have considered the conjecture of this witness as to within what distance he could stop a train of this character, this wholly fails to prove the issue of last clear chance. The undisputed evidence is that, as the train left the trestle some 287 feet east of the collision, the automobile was still backing towards the railroad track; that, when the engine was about 150 feet from the point of collision, the engineer sounded four sharp blasts of the whistle as a warning; that, when the engine had reached a point about 75 feet east of the point of collision, the engineer for the first time realized that those in the automobile had not heeded his warning signals, and for the first time realized that they were in a place of danger. The evidence then is that at that time the engineer applied his brakes and did everything possible under the circumstances to avoid the injury. There is no word of testimony which tends to prove, or from which any fair inference can be drawn, that from the time the engineer realized that those in the automobile were unable to escape from their place of danger he failed to do anything which ordinary care and prudence would dictate to avoid the injury. If we are to believe the corrected testimony of the witness Taylor that, when the rear of the automobile was near the right-hand rail, he looked up and saw the train approaching 650 feet distant, that the motor of the vehicle was still running, and that he did not jump because he assumed that the automobile had ample time to get out of the way of the train, it cannot be said that the engineer failed to exercise ordinary care in not applying his brakes at that point, because he, too, had the right to assume that the automobile would either cross safely over the track or that it would stop before reaching the point of danger.

As said in Basham v. Southern Pacific Co., 176 Cal. 320, 324, 168 P. 359, 360: "When a person is approaching a place of danger, and all the warnings of the danger have been given that reasonable care requires, those in charge of the dangerous engine, seeing him thus acting, are not obliged to presume, and it cannot be said that they act unreasonably in not presuming, that the person will continue his approach until he gets into the very place of danger, when it is obvious that he could at any time, with the least care, stop and avoid it." Billig v. Southern Pacific Co., 192 Cal. 357, 363, 219 P. 992, 995.

It is in the testimony of this same witness Taylor that, after the automobile stopped in the middle of the railroad tracks with its motor still running, he saw its driver, Hallmark, switching the clutch, and that, when the engine was still within 200 feet of the point of collision, he still assumed that Hallmark would get the automobile out of danger. It is also in the evidence that at the speed at which the train was approaching those in the automobile would have had time to jump to safety when the automobile stalled upon the track. From the fact that they did not do so, it is fair to assume that they still believed they had ample time to cross the tracks and escape from injury. To charge the engineer of the train with negligence in not having applied his brakes before that time would, therefore, be carrying the doctrine of last clear chance beyond the limits of the decisions. This view is well expressed in Bagwill v. Pac. Elec. R. R. Co. (Cal. App.) 265 P. 517, and quoted with approval in Giannini v. Southern Pacific Co. (Cal. App.) 276 P. 618, as follows: "There seems still to be some misconception of this doctrine of last clear chance. It was not devised as a last resort to fasten liability on defendants. Like the body of the law of negligence, to which the doctrine is appended, the test remains as that of ordinary care under all of the circumstances. The law in many of its workings indicates great charity and solicitude for individual rights. It says to a negligent plaintiff that in spite of his lack of caution he will be protected against wanton, wilful or avoidable harm. But, on the other hand, it penalizes no innocent person. We are not to tear down the facts of a case and rebuild the same so that, by a trimming-down and tight-fitting operation, something can be constructed upon which may fasten the claim of last clear chance. The words mean exactly as they indicate, namely, last clear chance, not possible chance. The Supreme Court has not left us to speculate on the application of the doctrine (Palmer v. Tschudy, 191 Cal. 696 [218 P. 36]; Young v. Southern Pacific Co., 182 Cal. 369 [190 P. 36]; Wallis v. Southern Pacific Co., 184 Cal. 662 [195 P. 408, 15 A. L. R. 117]; Gainer v. United Railroads of San Francisco, 58 Cal. App. 459 [208 P. 1013])."

The facts in evidence in Basham v. Southern Pacific Co., supra, are almost identical with the situation in this case, except that a horse-drawn vehicle rather than a motor vehicle was involved in the collision. We might paraphrase the language of that decision appearing on page 329 of 176 Cal. (168 P. 362) as follows: "The bell of the engine was continuously ringing. The moving train itself must have made considerable noise. The automobile was proceeding at a slow speed under the control of Hallmark. He could have come to a standstill in a second. Under all these circumstances it would be extremely unreasonable for any one to suppose he was unaware of the approaching train, and did not intend to stop before reaching the track, as he could easily have done, and as is the frequent custom. When the engineer began to entertain a fear that those in the automobile were inattentive he at once used every effort to stop the train. It cannot be said that either he did realize the danger sooner, or that, in reason, with his knowledge he had cause to realize it sooner. Hence the last clear chance doctrine never came into operation."

Upon the reasoning in the Basham Case, and upon the authority of Wallis v. Southern Pacific Co., 184 Cal. 662, 673, 195 P. 408, 15 A. L. R. 117, we are satisfied that the trial judge erroneously instructed the jury that the doctrine of last clear chance applied in this case; in fact, the evidence clearly demonstrates that the last clear chance to avoid the injury was with those whom the respondents represent and not with the appellants. The error in submitting this issue to the jury requires a reversal of the judgments, notwithstanding any other errors claimed.

For the reasons given, the judgments and each of them are reversed.⁴

KILBRIDE v. SWAFFORD et al. (Civ. 6815.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 5, 1929.

1. Damages $\S$ 141—Complaint alleging that plaintiff sustained great physical shock, damages to automobile, and physical injuries as result of defendant's negligent operation of automobile held sufficient.

Complaint alleging that as result of defendant's negligent operation of automobile causing defendant's car and plaintiff's car to come into violent contact, plaintiff sustaining great physical shock and damage to his automobile, in addition to physical injuries, held sufficient.

2. Automobiles $\S$ 238(8)—Complaint alleging that defendant operated automobile in such a negligent manner as to cause violent contact with plaintiff's automobile injuring plaintiff, held sufficient.

Complaint alleging that defendant was operating his automobile "in such a careless and negligent manner as to cause same to come into violent contact with the automobile that plaintiff was driving, damaging his automobile and injuring plaintiff," and that as result of defendant's carelessness plaintiff sustained injuries, held sufficient to present issue of negligence and proximate cause as against claim that insufficient facts were alleged.

3. Negligence $\S$ 119(2)—Proximate cause is properly in issue where complaint alleges injury was suffered because of defendant's negligent act.

When it is pleaded that plaintiff suffered injury because of negligent act of defendant, element of proximate cause is properly put in issue in action for injuries.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 1039(4)—Defendant was not prejudiced if complaint for injuries was insufficient, where court found collision was caused simply by defendant's careless operation of car and awarded \$500 damages.

If complaint in action for injuries sustained in collision of automobiles was insufficient, such insufficiency was not prejudicial and did not warrant reversal where case was fairly tried and court sitting without jury found that collision was caused simply by defendant's negligent operation of car, and where trial court awarded only $500 damages for shock, fractured rib, and contusions of hip; there being no surprise.

5. Appeal and error $\S$ 1039(2)—Sufficiency of complaint becomes less important where defendant is not taken by surprise by issues raised at trial.

Where defendant is not taken by surprise because of any issue not raised in the complaint, matter of the sufficiency of the pleading becomes less important.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John J. Allen, Judge.

Action by Robert Kilbride against Charles Swafford and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Swafford appeals. Affirmed.

Frank V. Cornish and Cornish & Cornish, all of Berkeley, for appellant.

William T. O'Reilly, of Honolulu, Hawaii, and James H. Eva and George W. Lupton, Jr., both of Oakland, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued for damages for injuries resulting from an automobile collision. The cause was tried before the court sitting without a jury. The trial court awarded plaintiff judgment in the sum of $500, and the defendant Swafford appeals upon the judgment roll alone.

The complaint alleged that "while plaintiff was driving a Ford roadster in a northerly direction over and along the east side of Shattuck avenue at or near the point where the said Shattuck avenue intersects Alcatraz avenue * * * at the same time and place the defendants * * * were operating a certain other automobile in an easterly direction on Alcatraz avenue in such a careless and negligent manner as to cause same to come into violent contact with the automobile that plaintiff was driving, damaging his automobile and injuring plaintiff." It was further alleged that "as a result of the defendants' carelessness * * * plaintiff sustained a great physical shock, fracture of two ribs on the left side, contusions, and wrenching of the right hip and a sprain of the back." Special damages were also alleged, and the complaint closed with a prayer for both general and special damages in the sum of $10,215.

[1] On this appeal the judgment is attacked upon the sole ground that the complaint failed to state a cause of action. The argument is that the pleading is insufficient because it does not state facts showing how the respondent suffered physical injuries merely by the contact of the two cars. But the complaint alleged that as a result of the negligent operation of the car by the appellant which caused the two cars to come into violent contact the respondent sustained "a great physical shock" and damages to his automobile in addition to the physical injuries complained of. This was sufficient to support the cause for some damages at least, because it cannot be said that personal contact with appellants' machine was necessary to cause a shock to respondent.

[2, 3] It is also argued that the complaint is insufficient because it does not state facts which show the damage to have been proximately caused by the negligent acts of the defendants. Smith v. Buttner, 90 Cal. 95, 27 P. 29, and similar cases are cited to the point. It would serve no purpose to discuss the cases cited, each one of which rests on the peculiar wording of the pleading involved. The complaint under attack is almost identical in wording to that considered in Wiley v. Cole, 52 Cal. App. 617, 199 P. 550, where the court said: "It clearly appears from the allegation that defendants were operating their automobile in a negligent manner, and that by reason of such negligence their automobile collided with that of plaintiff and thereby caused the injury." Here the complaint alleged that the appellant was operating his automobile "in such a careless and negligent manner, as to cause same to come into violent contact with the automobile that plaintiff was driving, damaging his automobile and injuring plaintiff as hereinafter set forth." The "acts" which were alleged to have been negligently done were the careless operation of the automobile which caused the contact with respondent's machine. It is conceivable that in these automobile cases the act of carelessly driving a car into another is the only act of negligence that can be truthfully alleged. If the plaintiff relies upon the fact that the defendant was driving at an excessive speed, or on the wrong side of the road, or in violation of some traffic regulation these are facts constituting negligence which may be pleaded, but where a collision is caused merely by one carelessly driving a car into another that is the act of negligence to be alleged. When it is pleaded that the plaintiff suffered injury because of such negligent act the element of proximate cause is properly put in issue.

[4, 5] But if the pleading here has been too liberally construed we are satisfied that the appellant has suffered no prejudice. There is no complaint that the cause was not fairly tried. The court, sitting without a jury, found that the collision was caused simply by appellants' careless and negligent operation of his car by which he caused his car to come into contact with respondent's car, and that such negligence was the direct and proximate cause of the injury. Thus, the appellant was not taken by surprise because of any issue not raised in the complaint. In such a case the matter of pleading becomes less important. Stein v. United R. of S. F., 159 Cal. 368, 370,

The rule is particularly applicable here where the trial court awarded the respondent but $500 in damages on a finding that he had suffered a great physical and mental shock, a fracture of a rib, and contusions of the hip. The judgment appears to be a fair and reasonable one under the circumstances.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. FALLAI. (Cr. 1528.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 5, 1929.

1. Robbery ☞17(1)—Information charging that defendant robbed another was sufficient, regardless of amendment (Pen. Code, § 1008, and §§ 951, 952, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1043).

Information for robbery charging that defendant committed a felony, in that on certain date at named place he robbed another, was legally sufficient within Pen. Code, §§ 951, 952, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1043, so that question of right to amendment under section 1008 was immaterial; the word "robbed" having a fixed and defined meaning as used in the administration of criminal laws.

2. Robbery ☞24(1)—Evidence held to sustain conviction for second degree robbery.

Evidence in prosecution for robbery held sufficient to sustain conviction for robbery in the second degree.

3. Criminal law ☞358—Testimony defendant was in state on date prior to robbery held not erroneous, in view of his testimony on alibi.

Where defendant testified in his own behalf that he was outside of state at time of robbery and for a considerable period prior thereto, the admission of testimony in rebuttal to effect that defendant was within state at a time shortly before robbery was not erroneous.

4. Criminal law ☞351(2)—Admitting testimony as to defendant's conduct and conversations had with him and in his presence at time of arrest held not erroneous.

In prosecution for robbery, admission of testimony by detective relative to defendant's conduct and conversations had with him and in his presence at time of his arrest held not erroneous.

5. Criminal law ☞1144(16)—Jury will be presumed to have followed court's instruction to disregard remarks of district attorney assigned as misconduct.

Jury will be presumed to have followed court's instructions to disregard remarks of district attorney in commenting on testimony which were assigned as misconduct.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Fred V. Wood, Judge.

Humbert Fallai was convicted of robbery in the second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

William F. Herron, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Lionel Browne, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

KNIGHT, J. Appellant, having been convicted of robbery in the second degree, has appealed from the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial. One of the several grounds urged for reversal is that the trial court erred in allowing the information to be amended at the commencement of the trial.

Before amendment the information read as follows: " * * * Humbert Fallai is accused by the District Attorney of the said County of Alameda * * * of the crime of felony, to wit, robbery, in that on or about the 4th day of March, A. D. 1928, at the said County of Alameda, State of California, he robbed John J. Fitzgerald of one gold watch and chain, one revolver, one pair of handcuffs and $14 more or less, lawful money of the United States, and the said Humbert Fallai was then and there armed with a deadly weapon." (Italics ours.) Appellant did not demur to the information, but at the commencement of the trial, and after the district attorney had finished his opening statement to the jury, objected to any evidence being received, and asked that the action be dismissed upon the ground that the information did not charge a public offense. The particular objection made was that, because of the use of the word "robbed" in the place of the technical language of the code defining the crime of robbery, the information entirely failed to state a public offense. In ruling upon the objection the trial court indicated that in the absence of a demurrer the information was probably legally sufficient, but stated that the word "robbed" was merely the expression of an opinion and that therefore the information should be amended. Whereupon, pursuant to the authority granted by section 1008 of the Penal Code, the information was amended by striking out the word "robbed" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Willfully, unlawfully and feloniously and by means of force and fear, and against the will of one John J. Fitzgerald, did take, steal and carry away from the person and immediate presence of the said John J. Fitzgerald," the personal property hereinabove described, etc.

[1] Appellant now contends that the amendment was one of substance and not of form, and therefore was violative of appellant's constitutional rights; and that, if said section 1008 be construed as permitting such an amendment it is, to that extent, unconstitutional. Respondent takes the position that prior to the amendment the information was legally sufficient to meet the requirements of the present statute, and that consequently the questions as to the form of the amendment and the constitutionality of the code section permitting the same are immaterial. We are of the opinion that respondent's position must be sustained. The short form of information authorized by the 1927 amendment to section 951 of the Penal Code is as follows: "[Title of the Court]. The district attorney of the County of — hereby accuses A. B. of a felony (or misdemeanor), to-wit: (giving the name of the crime, as murder, burglary, etc.), in that on or about" a certain date (stating it) "in the county of —, State of California, he (here insert statement of act or omission, as for example, 'murdered C. D.')" (St. 1927, p. 1043); and in connection therewith section 952, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1043, of the said Code provides that in charging an offense the information shall be sufficient if it contains in substance a statement that the accused has committed some public offense therein specified, that such statement may be made in ordinary and concise language without any technical averments, and may be in the words of the enactment describing the offense or in any words sufficient to give the accused notice of the offense of which he is charged. The code (Pen. Code, § 211) defines robbery to be "the felonious taking of personal property in the possession of another, from his person or immediate presence, and against his will, accomplished by means of force or fear;" and in its relation to the law the word "robbed" is defined by Webster to mean: "To take personal property in the possession of another from his person or his presence feloniously and against his will by violence or by putting him in fear." It would appear, therefore, in view of the foregoing definitions, that the word "robbed" as it is used in the administration of the criminal laws has a fixed and well-defined meaning, and, that being so, it would be wholly unreasonable to hold, we think, that appellant did not know what was intended when he was charged with having "robbed John J. Fitzgerald of one gold watch" and the other personal property above mentioned. As said in People v. Campbell (Cal. App.) 265 P. 364: "Much of the time of the courts has been consumed in the consideration of technical objections to pleadings in criminal cases; yet it is probable that few judges are able to recall a single case in which the defendant was actually in the slightest doubt as to the crime with which he was charged. Modern legislation is endeavoring to cut the inextricable Gordian knot by which the trial of criminal cases has been so long fettered, and the courts ought not to thwart that laudable effort by an adherence to mere technical precedents which regard form rather than substance." In the case of People v. Lopez, 90 Cal. 569, 27 P. 427, the meaning of the word "steal" as used in the charging part of an information was called into question, and the court said: "The word 'steal,' as here used, has, as will be hereafter shown, a fixed and well-defined meaning, and is, perhaps, in its common, every-day use and general acceptance, as well understood as any word in the English language. * * * To therefore contend that the defendant, who must be presumed to be a person of common understanding, did not know what was intended when he was charged by the information with stealing another man's horse, is simply preposterous." It would seem that the language just quoted applies with equal force to the word "robbed" as here used. Appellant points out that aside from the criminal law, for instance in the Scriptures and in the works of certain famous authors from which he quotes, the word "robbed" is used without criminal signification; but the answer to the argument appellant makes in that behalf is that we are here dealing with its meaning only in the legal sense.

[2] The sufficiency of the evidence is also challenged. The main facts established by the prosecution which support the verdict were as follows: Fitzgerald, a police officer, while walking home from a theatre about 9:30 o'clock at night, being at the time off duty and dressed in civilian clothes, was "held up" and robbed by two men on Thirty-Sixth street, Oakland. According to Fitzgerald's testimony, the men approached in an automobile (which afterwards proved to be stolen) and when close to him they turned suddenly toward the curb and stopped. One of them alighted and pointing a pistol at him commanded him to throw up his hands. The robber then placed the muzzle of the pistol against Fitzgerald's body and called to his companion to relieve Fitzgerald of his valuables. The second robber then got out of the automobile and while emptying Fitzgerald's pockets was recognized by Fitzgerald as being a frequenter of a dance hall located in the district patrolled by Fitzgerald, and whom he afterwards identified as appellant. After relieving Fitzgerald of his valuables he was told to "beat it up the street," but instead he followed the robbers to the automobile, asking for the return of his spectacles; and in doing so was able to observe them further and to obtain the number of the license plate on their automobile. A few days later Fitzgerald was shown pictures of two men, one of whom was appellant, and he immediately identified him as being the robber who had rifled his pockets. The pictures were left with Fitzgerald and kept in his possession for several months thereafter. The robbery occurred on March 4, 1928, and the following June appellant was arrested in San Francisco. Within a day or two thereafter, and while no one else was present except police officers, Fitzgerald identified appellant as being one of the robbers, and positive identification was again made at the trial.

Appellant's defense was an alibi. He claimed that on the day of the robbery he was in Northern Mexico, en route to El Paso, Tex., and that on the day following he registered at a hotel in El Paso under the name of Rupert De Morcerf, a name assumed by him in the theatrical business. In corroboration of his testimony appellant produced a page from the hotel register showing that some person had registered under that name at that hotel on the day following the robbery. The hotel was conducted by a Mrs. Bandy, whose deposition was taken and read in evidence. She identified a picture of appellant as being the person she had known as Rupert De Morcerf and as the person who registered at her hotel on the day mentioned under that name. Appellant further testified that he was accompanied on the trip to El Paso by a man named Hernandez, that the latter registered at the same hotel on the same day, and at appellant's request had written a letter to appellant's mother, who lived in San Francisco. Appellant testified that he had seen Hernandez mail the letter, and such a letter was produced at the trial, the San Francisco post-mark thereon being dated March 7, 1928. In rebuttal, the prosecution introduced the testimony of a handwriting expert to the effect that the signature on the hotel register was not in the handwriting of appellant.

It is apparent from the foregoing that there is a sharp conflict in the evidence as to appellant's participation in the robbery; therefore the question of whether Fitzgerald was correct in his identification of appellant as being one of the robbers, or whether the evidence adduced in support of appellant's asserted alibi should be believed, was clearly one of fact for the determination of the jury, and it having accepted and acted upon the former, which is not inherently improbable, we are not permitted, under the well-established rule, to interfere with its conclusion.

[3] Subject to appellant's objections the prosecution was allowed to offer in rebuttal the testimony of a Mr. Beacher and his wife to the effect that appellant was at their home in Oakland about 8 o'clock at night on February 24, 1928. We find no error in the rulings relating to the admission of this testimony for the reason that appellant claimed while testifying in his own behalf that he was outside of the state of California, not only at the time of the robbery, but for a considerable period prior thereto. In this regard he testified on direct examination that he left El Paso, Tex., for San Luis Potosi, Mexico, on February 25th, and on cross-examination he testified, without objection, that he had been in El Paso, Tex., two or three days before going to San Luis Potosi. This, of course, would have been a physical impossibility, if, as the Beachers testified, he was in Oakland on the night of February 24, 1928.

[4] Nor do we find any error in allowing Detective Van Matre to testify as to appellant's conduct and the conversations had with him and in his presence at the time of his arrest in San Francisco. People v. Sprague, 52 Cal. App. 363, 198 P. 820; People v. Sampo, 17 Cal. App. 135, 118 P. 957. It was for the jury to say whether or not at that time appellant knew that the crime had been committed and that he was accused of having committed it. People v. Shelest, 62 Cal. App. 213, 216 P. 389; People v. Piscitella (Cal. App.) 266 P. 349.

[5] During his closing argument to the jury, in commenting upon the testimony of Mrs. Bandy, the district attorney stated in substance that, since her testimony was given in the form of a deposition, it did "not carry the sanctity that it would if she were here testifying in person." The remarks of the district attorney were assigned as misconduct, and the jury was promptly instructed to disregard them, which was the equivalent, we think, of stating to the jury that the assertion of the district attorney was not the law; and it is to be presumed that the jury followed the court's instructions.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

MEYER v. STATE LAND SETTLEMENT BOARD. (Civ. 3813.)★

Rehearing Denied July 6, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 5, 1929.

States 191(2)—Venue 13—Action for diverting water against state land settlement board held maintainable where subject was situated; board not being department of state government (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Acts 7923, 8008; St. 1927, p. 942; Code Civ. Proc. § 392, subd. 1).

State land settlement board, created by St. 1917, p. 1566 (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 8008), to establish and maintain industry and encourage agriculture and reward patriotism of soldiers and sailors, affairs of which are managed by department of agriculture, with certain reservations, under authority of St. 1927, p. 942, held not a department of state government under St. 1893, p. 57 (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 7928), authorizing suits against state and regulating procedure therein, and section 4, providing for change of venue to county of Sacramento in all such cases, and therefore action against the board for diverting water necessary for irrigation purposes could be maintained in county in which subject of action was situated under Code Civ. Proc. § 392, subd. 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; J. O. Moncur, Judge.

Action by A. H. Meyer against the State Land Settlement Board. From an order denying motion for change of venue, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Frank English and Charles A. Wetmore, Jr., Deputy Attys. Gen., and Bond & Deirup, of Chico, for appellant. Ware & Ware, of Chico, for respondent.

THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from an order denying defendant's motion for a change of place of trial.

The complaint alleges that the plaintiff purchase from the defendant corporation a small tract of land in Butte county, together with the water rights appurtenant thereto, consisting of a quantity of water conveyed upon the land of plaintiff from Butte creek by means of ditches; that the plaintiff relied upon this water supply to irrigate the nursery stock and crops which he produced on the premises; that subsequently the defendant changed the location of the main ditch adjacent to plaintiff's northerly property line, and closed the outlets therefrom with a single exception, with the result that the plaintiff was thereafter unable to secure an adequate supply of water. The complaint then prayed for damages and the issuance of a mandatory injunction requiring the defendant to restore the former system of ditches and outlets. The defendant is a body corporate, which was created by an act of the Legislature "to provide employment and rural homes for soldiers, sailors, and marines * * * who have served with the armed forces of the United States in * * * wars; * * * and * * * to demonstrate the value of adequate capital and organized direction in subdividing and preparing agricultural land for settlement." A board of managers was created, and large appropriations of money were made from time to time to carry out the purposes of the act. Stats. of Cal. 1917, p. 1566, Act 8008, 2 Deering's Gen. Laws 1923. Subsequently the department of agriculture of the state of California was given the management of the affairs of the state land settlement board, with certain limited reservations. Stats. of Cal. 1927, p. 942.

A demurrer and motion for change of place of trial to Sacramento county were filed by the defendant. The motion was denied, and the defendant appealed.

The Attorney General maintains that the state land settlement board, a corporation, is virtually a department of the state government, and that it has a right to a transfer of the place of trial to the county of Sacramento, under the provisions of an act "to authorize suits against the state, and regulating the procedure therein." Stats. of Cal. 1893, p. 57, Act 7928, 2 Deering's Gen. Laws 1923. This act provides in part: "All persons who have, or shall hereafter have, claims on contract or for negligence against the state not allowed by the state board of examiners, are hereby authorized, * * * to bring suit thereon against the state in any of the courts of this state. * * * Sec. 4. * * * It shall be the duty of the attorney-general to defend all such suits; and upon his written demand, made at or before the time of answering, the place of trial of any such suit must be changed to the county of Sacramento."

Unless this statute authorizes a transfer to Sacramento county of any case based upon contract or negligence against any auxiliary department of the state government, whether such department exercises necessary governmental functions or not, then section 392 of the Code of Civil Procedure will govern in determining the county in which the present case is entitled to be tried. This section provides in part: "Actions for the following causes must be tried in the county in which the subject of the action, or some part thereof, is situated, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial, as provided in this code: 1. For the recovery of real property, or of an estate or interest therein, or for the determination in any form, of such right or interest, and for injuries to real property."

It must be conceded that the diverting of water necessary for irrigation purposes, which is appurtenant to real property, is an injury thereto.

It seems quite evident that the purposes for which the Legislature enacted the state land settlement board, laudable as they may have been, were not to maintain a necessary function of state government, but, rather, to establish and maintain an industry to encourage agriculture and reward the patriotism and service of soldiers and sailors. This is a departure from necessary governmental functions, in the operation of which the sovereign power of the state may not claim the application of the ordinary rules of law governing her liability or procedure with respect to the usual governmental institutions. It is well said in Carmichael v. Riley, 56 Cal. App. at page 412, 205 P. 479: "The state in all its contracts and dealings with individuals must be adjudged and abide by the rules which govern in determining the rights of private citizens contracting and dealing with each other. There is not one law for the sovereign, and another for the subject. But when the sovereign engages in business and the conduct of business enterprises and contracts with individuals, whenever the contract in any form comes before the courts the rights and obligations of the contracting parties must be adjusted upon the same principle as if both contracting parties were private persons. Both stand upon equality before the law, and the sovereign is merged in the dealer, contractor, and suitor.' * * *

It will be noted that the foregoing act under which the appellant claims the right to a transfer of the present case to Sacramento county authorizes the Attorney General to appear and defend the interest of the state, and to procure the transfer of the case to Sacramento county, only in litigation upon "claims on contract or for negligence * * * not allowed by the state board of examiners." It seems quite apparent that the Legislature intended to distinguish between such "claims (based) on contracts or negligence" which are proper for the state board of examiners to pass upon, and such as come within the jurisdiction of auxiliary corporate or quasi corporate boards, such as those which represent school districts, reclamation districts, and similar bodies politic created, not for governmental purposes, but for the welfare of the people in matters which are individual in their application rather than governmental. The mere fact that such corporate or quasi corporate political institutions are adjuncts or agencies of the state does not authorize the Attorney General to represent them or demand the transfer to Sacramento county of cases pending against them. This might result in great inconvenience and hardship to the remote individual litigant. It would be granting unwarranted privileges to the sovereign state.

If the state land settlement board is entitled to this transfer, and to demand the abrogation of the application of section 392 of the Code of Civil Procedure in the present case, we are unable to see why the same claim may not be reasonably made in similar litigation against a school district, a reclamation district, or any one of the many similar auxiliary municipal or political agencies of the state. It is argued that there is a distinction between these organizations, in that such agencies as school and reclamation districts are local and limited in their territory, while the jurisdiction of the state land settlement board extends to the remote limits of the state. But the mere territorial size of a district furnishes no logical or reasonable cause for distinction. It is the character of the institution and the enterprise involved which must determine its status and legal rights. If this corporate agency were a necessary governmental institution of the state, then we are of the opinion that the act above referred to, which authorizes certain suits against the state, and provides for the procedure of trial, would control the determination as to the proper place of trial. In the present action, however, the purposes and functions of the state land settlement board are clearly not governmental in their nature, and therefore the usual provisions of the Code with respect to venue must control in determining the proper place of trial.

The order is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. LICALSI. (Cr. 1788.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. June 6, 1929.

Larceny $\hookrightarrow$ 59—Evidence relative to value of stolen property held insufficient to sustain conviction for grand theft (Pen. Code, § 487).

In prosecution, under Pen. Code, § 487, for grand theft, evidence relative to value of stolen property held insufficient to sustain conviction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William T. Aggeler, Judge.

Joseph Licalsi was convicted of grand theft, and he appeals. Reversed.

Joseph M. Wapner, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and W. R. Augustine, of San Francisco, for the People.

HOUSER, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction of the crime of grand theft and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

By the information it was charged that defendant stole a diamond ring, of the value of $500. Appellant presents the point that, before defendant could be convicted of grand theft, the burden devolved on the prosecution to prove that the value of the ring exceeded the sum of $200. Section 487, Pen. Code. With reference thereto, in substance, the evidence showed that the ring was set in platinum and weighed 1.35 carats. The only evidence as to the value of the ring was introduced over the objection of defendant, and was that a "white solitary diamond ring in the parlance of a jeweler almost perfect, by weight 1.35 carats," was of the value of "approximately $500," but there was no evidence either that the diamond in question was "white" or that it was "almost perfect." On the other hand, before answering the question as to the value of the ring, the witness on value gave the following testimony:

"Q. Mr. Murray, do you think that you could determine the value of a ring without seeing it? A. Well, if I am given the facts of the stone, I would know about what the value would be.

"Q. Yes; but those facts would have to coincide with the jeweler's terms, the character of the stone, the way it was cut, and whether or not it was perfect or imperfect. All those things enter into consideration in your determination of the value, don't they? A. Certainly.

"Q. And without that you could not be in a position to make any positive statement, or even give an opinion as to the value; isn't that correct? A. I could not give the value of the stone, unless I could see it. Of course not."

As hereinbefore stated, the only evidence relating to the description of the ring was as to its setting and its weight; not a word as to the color of the diamond, its character as a stone, its cutting, or any of its possible imperfections. Nor was the ring exhibited to the witness. In such circumstances, manifestly it would be impossible for any one to fix its value. For aught that appears in the evidence, the ring may have been practically worthless. By the provisions of section 487 of the Penal Code, before a defendant may be convicted of grand theft, it becomes necessary to establish the fact that "the property taken is of a value exceeding two hundred dollars." Although the evidence may have been sufficient to sustain a verdict of petty theft (section 488, Pen. Code), "this court has neither the constitutional nor statutory authority to modify or interfere with the verdict of the jury in any respect (People v. Nagy, 199 Cal. 235, 239, 248 P. 906, 908).

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are reversed.

McWHORTER v. McWHORTER. (Civ. 3786.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 4, 1929.

1. Deeds $\hookrightarrow$ 31—Deed to grantees as to husband and wife as joint tenants held valid, though female grantee was not wife of male grantee and assumed his name without warrant.

Deed running to "Michael McWho. and Hattie McWhorter, his wife, as joint tenants," held good and valid conveyance, where identity of female grantee was not questioned, though her name was assumed without warrant and she was not in fact the wife of the male grantee.

2. Deeds $\hookrightarrow$ 31—Grant to actual person under fictitious or assumed name is valid.

Grant to an actual person by a fictitious or assumed name, by which he is known and passes or which he has assumed for the occasion, is valid.

3. Joint tenancy $\hookrightarrow$ 8—Where parties acquired and used property as joint tenants, their mutual rights were not affected by question of existence of common-law marriage between them (Civ. Code, § 683).

Where man and woman living together acquired, held, and used real and personal property as joint tenants under Civ. Code, § 683, on account of parties having contributed equal share to purchase of goods, question whether there was a common-law marriage was immaterial as regards the character of property or relative rights of ownership.

4. Joint tenancy ☞8—One of joint tenants in sole possession held not liable to other joint tenant in partition suit for other's share of rental value.

Where one of joint tenants living together as husband and wife retained exclusive possession of dwelling house after separation and premises were not leased or rented, it was error, in action for partition, to award the other joint tenant judgment for her share of rental value of premises.

5. Tenancy in common ☞28(1)—Tenant in common may not recover from cotenant rent for cotenant's occupancy or share of profits derived by cotenant's labor.

One tenant in common may not maintain action against his cotenant, who is in sole possession of property, to recover rent for cotenant's occupancy or for profits derived from property by means of cotenant's labor, though action in which recovery is sought is one for accounting or partition.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; F. C. Valentine, Judge.

Action by Hattie McWhorter against Michael McWhorter. From the decree, defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Samuel J. Crawford, of Ocean Park, for appellant.

Fogel & Beman, of Los Angeles, and R. S. Harrington, of Sawtelle, for respondent.

THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a decree partitioning real and personal property between joint tenants.

While the plaintiff and defendant were living together as husband and wife without the consummation of a marriage, they acquired by their joint efforts the real and personal property involved in this suit. March 16, 1921, for a valuable consideration two lots in Los Angeles, Cal., were conveyed to the parties to this action "as joint tenants." A dwelling house was afterwards constructed on these lots, and the cost of the house and lots was paid for out of the joint earnings of the grantees. The ordinary articles of household furniture and equipment were also acquired and jointly used by them in the same manner, a list of which is enumerated in the decree. Dissensions arose between them, and they separated November 1, 1925. Upon the trial a judgment of partition was rendered and entered decreeing that each of the parties was entitled to an undivided one-half interest in both the real and the personal property, which was ordered to be sold and the proceeds to be distributed accordingly.

The chief contention of the appellant is that the evidence fails to support the findings of the court to the effect that the plaintiff lived and cohabited with the defendant "in good faith" believing that their relationship was equivalent to what has been termed a common-law marriage. There is a conflict of evidence in that regard, and much of the trial was devoted to this issue.

[1-3] We are of the opinion that it is entirely immaterial, so far as the determination of this appeal is concerned, whether they lived together in good faith as husband and wife, or otherwise. The evidence is ample to support the finding that they acquired and held the property as joint tenants. The deed to the real property expressly conveyed it to them as joint tenants. It is true that the deed did run to "Michael McWhorter and Hattie McWhorter, his wife, as joint tenants," and that plaintiff was not in fact the lawful wife of the defendant, nor was her name really McWhorter. The term "his wife," which was used in the deed, was merely descriptive and surplusage. The identity of the grantee Hattie McWhorter not being questioned, although the name was assumed without warrant, it was nevertheless a good and valid conveyance. In 9 Cal. Jur. 127, § 30, it is said: "A grant to an actual person, by a fictitious or assumed name by which he is known and passes, or which he has assumed for the occasion, is valid." Emery v. Kipp, 154 Cal. 83, 97 P. 17, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 983, 129 Am. St. Rep. 141, 16 Ann. Cas. 792; Knaugh v. Baender, 84 Cal. App. 142, 148, 257 P. 606. Both the real and the personal property which is involved in the present action were acquired, held, and used by the respective parties as joint tenants. "A joint interest is one owned by several persons in equal shares, by a title created by a single will or transfer, when expressly declared in the will or transfer to be a joint tenancy. * * *" Section 683, Civ. Code. The plaintiff was in possession of the household goods as completely as was the defendant, and the evidence amply shows that she contributed an equal share to the purchase of the goods. The question of the validity of the marriage in no way affects the character of the property or the relative rights of ownership.

[4, 5] After a separation of the parties, the defendant retained the exclusive possession of the dwelling house for a brief period of time. Subject to the objection on the part of the defendant that the evidence was incompetent, it was stipulated that the rental value of the premises was $35 a month. The court also awarded plaintiff judgment for $245 as her share of the rental value of the premises while defendant occupied the property exclusively. This allowance was erroneous. It is a recognized rule that one tenant may not maintain an action against his cotenant who is in sole possession of the property to recover rent for the cotenant's occupancy of the property, or for profits derived from the property by means of the occupant's own labor. 7 Cal. Jur. 350, §§ 18, 19; 2 Tiffany on Landlord and Tenant, 1879, § 312; 27 A. L. R. 199; Plass v. Plass, 122 Cal. 3, 11, 54 P. 372; Pico v. Columbet, 12 Cal. 414, 419, 73 Am. Dec. 550. Not even in an equitable action for accounting may one tenant maintain an action against his cotenant in the exclusive possession of the property for rents or the profits of his own labor. Howard v. Throckmorton, 59 Cal. 79, 89. The same rule will prevail in an action for partition between cotenants. There is an exception to the general rule, however. One tenant may maintain an action requiring his cotenant to account for rents collected from their property from third persons to whom the property is leased. There is no reason why the foregoing rule applicable to cotenants should not also govern the relationship of joint tenancy. In the cases of Goodenow v. Ewer, 16 Cal. 461, 76 Am. Dec. 540, and Ballerino v. Ballerino, 147 Cal. 544, 82 P. 199, relied upon by respondent, the only question involved was the right of one tenant to compel his cotenant who was in possession of the property to account for the rent which was collected from third persons to whom the property was leased. In the present case the premises were not leased or rented, but, upon the contrary, were occupied by the defendant alone as his domicile. He was therefore not liable to the plaintiff for its rental value while he used it for his benefit alone.

The judgment is modified by striking therefrom the award to plaintiff of $245 as rental value of the property. As so modified the judgment is affirmed.

BUSCH v. BUSCH. (Civ. 6708.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. May 29, 1929.

1. Divorce ⇨213, 225—Orders for temporary alimony, suit money, and attorneys' fees held not erroneous because wife possessed independent means not substantially productive of income.

Orders for payment of temporary alimony, suit money, and attorneys' fees held not erroneous because of wife's possession of independent means, where her property was not substantially income producing.

2. Divorce ⇨215—Allowance of $1,000 per month temporary alimony held not excessive.

Allowance of $1,000 per month temporary alimony held not excessive, in view of circumstances of parties and standard of living.

3. Divorce ⇨214(4)—Evidence that husband's income for particular year would be materially reduced held not to preclude court in fixing temporary alimony from considering previous year's income.

In fixing temporary alimony, evidence that husband's income for particular year had been materially reduced held not to preclude court's consideration of income for previous year.

4. Divorce ⇨227(2)—$7,500 attorneys' fees in divorce action held not excessive allowance.

Allowance of $7,500 attorneys' fees in divorce action held not excessive.

5. Divorce ⇨286—Error in permitting hypothetical questions to be answered in ascertaining reasonable attorneys' fees to be allowed plaintiff in divorce action held not prejudicial.

Error in permitting hypothetical questions to be asked and answered in ascertaining reasonable value of attorneys' fees to be allowed plaintiff in divorce action held not prejudicial; technical rules of evidence being inapplicable to determination of issue.

6. Divorce ⇨209—Where allowance of substantial monthly sum pendente lite is made, additional lump sum allowance as future alimony is not warranted.

Purpose of allowance to wife pendente lite is to enable her to live properly and prosecute or defend divorce action from time order is made, and lump sum allowance as additional future alimony is not justified, where substantial monthly allowance is made.

7. Divorce ⇨214(3)—Lump sum allowance in addition to substantial temporary alimony held not justified by evidence.

Where wife was awarded substantial monthly temporary alimony pendente lite, additional lump sum allowance for purpose not stated held not warranted by evidence that wife had incurred indebtedness, in absence of showing that payment of such debt was necessary to enable wife to prosecute action.

8. Divorce ⇨209—Allowance to wife of sum to pay debts pendente lite held not warranted unless necessary to prosecute action or defense (Civ. Code, § 137).

That wife has incurred debts is not sufficient to authorize pendente lite award of amount of such debts as for necessary expenses under Civ. Code, § 137, unless payment of such debts is necessary to enable wife to prosecute action or defense.

9. Divorce ⇨222—Allowance of $1,000 suit money held unwarranted, where trial was only five days off and no showing of necessity was made.

Allowance of $1,000 suit money held unwarranted, where trial of divorce action was only five days away when order was made; there being no showing of necessity.

10. Divorce ⇨182—Allowance to wife of $1,500 counsel fees and $200 costs in resisting appeal held not unreasonable.

Allowance of $1,500 counsel fees and $200 costs to wife to resist appeal of husband, in which voluminous briefs were filed, held not unreasonable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fletcher Bowron, Judge.

Divorce action by Ruth Gordon Busch against A. Hays Busch. From orders requiring payment of alimony, attorney's fees, and suit money, defendant appeals. Orders modified, and, as modified, affirmed.

Young & Young and Dockweiler, Dockweiler & Finch, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Flint & MacKay, Frank P. Flint, and William R. Flint, all of Los Angeles (Franklin W. Peck, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice pro tem. In an action for divorce, plaintiff and respondent procured an order on March 11, 1927, that defendant and appellant pay her $1,000 per month temporary alimony, $1,000 suit money, $7,500 attorneys' fees, and $3,600; the purpose of this $3,600 payment not being stated in the order. Notice of appeal from this order was filed March 17, 1927. Thereafter on April 21, 1927, respondent secured a further order that appellant pay her $1,500 counsel fees and $200 suit money to enable her to resist the appeal from the prior order. From this second order appellant also appeals. The two appeals have been presented together.

[1] Appellant's claim that these orders were erroneous because it appeared that respondent had sufficient means of her own to enable her to support herself and prosecute the action may be briefly disposed of. Respondent's property consisted of the home in which she was living with its furnishings, an automobile, personal jewelry, and a few shares of stock. The income from the stock was shown to be about $8 per year and none of the other property was income producing. "Where the wife is the owner of nonincome-producing property, the law does not require her to have recourse to her own resources first, or to impair the capital of her separate estate." Farrar v. Farrar, 45 Cal. App. 584, 586, 188 P. 289, 290.

[2] It is argued that the allowance of $1,000 per month was excessive, first, because it was not necessary to sustain the wife and child in the manner in which they had been accustomed to live; and, secondly, because it was in excess of appellant's reasonable ability to pay. It was shown that while the parties were living together appellant allowed respondent an aggregate of $850 per month for household expenses, clothes, and the support of the minor child. In addition appellant paid many expenses of the household himself. We are satisfied that the evidence justified the trial court in its informal finding that these additional expenditures averaged from $450 to $600 per month. This showing was ample to support the implied finding that $1,000 per month would be necessary to support wife and child in their accustomed manner. While appellant testified that their living on this scale had been against his repeated protests, there was no showing that during the several years they lived together their scale of living had been at any time reduced.

[3] On the second ground it was admitted by appellant that his separate property had a minimum value of $278,000 and respondent's counsel offered to prove that its value was at least $700,000. This offer was objected to by counsel for appellant on the ground that it was in the interest of time to exclude such proof and the proof was not permitted to be made. Appellant produced evidence to show that his income for the particular year would be materially reduced from the income that he had received in the previous year, and that by reason thereof $400 per month would be the maximum amount that he could pay for the support of his wife and child. The court, however, was entitled to take into consideration the previous year's income and was not bound by appellant's estimate, necessarily speculative and possibly colored, of his future income; and appellant admitted receiving a salary of $1,000 per month in addition to his income from investments. It is also to be noted that the order was made on March 11th and the divorce suit was set for trial and tried on March 16th, five days later. Under these circumstances and upon the showing made the court was justified in allowing the wife temporary alimony to enable her to maintain her accustomed standard of living for the very short period which would intervene before the matter could be fully examined into and determined at the formal trial.

[4] While the allowance of $7,500 for counsel fees is perhaps more than we would have allowed under the same circumstances, in view of the very wide discretion vested in the trial court, we are not prepared to disturb it. The complaint charged many acts of cruelty and a number of acts of adultery. The answer not only put in issue the voluminous complaint, but set up an affirmative defense of conspiracy between respondent and her father to entrap appellant into actual or apparent adulteries. The amount to be allowed respondent as permanent alimony was seriously disputed, as were the value of appellant's property and his earnings and ability to pay. "The amount to be allowed by the court is as much within its discretion as is the power to make the allowance, and in neither case will the appellate court set aside its action unless this discretion has been abused; and we do not think abuse of discretion has been shown in the present case." Yoree v. Yoree, 1 Cal. App. 152, 156, 81 P. 1023, 1025. The evidence was uncontradicted that respondent had neither paid nor agreed to pay her attorneys nor received credit from them for their services to be rendered in the trial of the action.

[5] Appellant complains of a hypothetical question asked two expert witnesses as to the value of the services thereafter to be performed by respondent's attorneys on the ground that the question assumed facts not in evidence. In the main the facts assumed were correct and the error, if any, was in our opinion not prejudicial. "In taking the evidence for the purpose of finding the amount of the allowance the court is not trying an issue in the case, but is seeking for information as the basis of its order, and is not bound by the technical rules of evidence applicable to controversies between contesting litigants." Yoree v. Yoree, supra; Rose v. Rose, 109 Cal. 544, 42 P. 452. "And no testimony was necessary to determine what the amount of the fee should be. The court could determine from its own experience, and from the facts and circumstances of the case, as they appeared to it from the pleadings and other papers and proceedings, what was a reasonable fee." Peyre v. Peyre, 79 Cal. 336, 339, 340, 21 P. 838, 839.

[6, 7] The allowance of $3,600 was recited in the order prepared by respondent's counsel to be "back alimony from and including the month of July, 1926, to and including the month of February, 1927." The words in quotation marks were stricken out before the order was signed, so that we are left to speculation to determine on what theory this sum was allowed. It is elementary that the purpose of an allowance to a wife pendente lite is to enable her to properly live and prosecute or defend the action from the time the order is made. As additional future alimony this lump sum allowance would be unreasonable and unjustified in view of the allowance of $1,000 per month for that purpose. It is sought to be justified as an allowance to permit the wife to repay advances made to her by her father. It is true that in Reed v. Reed, 40 Cal. App. 102, 106, 107, 180 P. 43, 45, the court said: "If the application for alimony is not made until some months after the commencement of the action, and if, in the meantime, the wife has managed to exist only by borrowing money * * * it is manifest that, to place her in such a situation that in the future she may be enabled to live upon the allowance provided to be paid for her future support * * * provision ought likewise to be made for her past expenses * * * otherwise she would be compelled to pay out of the allowance for her future support the money she had previously borrowed." We do not think that the evidence in this case brings it within the rule just quoted. Respondent testified that her father had advanced her $800 per month for her support from the date of her separation; that she had no agreement with him to repay this sum, but intended to do so. The father likewise testified that there was no agreement to repay him, but that he "considered" these amounts as a loan and so marked them on his check stub. During the same period it appears that the father gave respondent $800 to take one trip and $2,000 to take another. These latter amounts were admitted to be gifts and not loans.

Specifically as to the $800 per month advance by him to respondent for living expenses the father testified:

"Q. Then, if your daughter doesn't get any allowance or any more property from Mr. Busch, you intend she shall reimburse you for the money you advanced her? A. I haven't made any arrangement whatsoever for the repayment of it, simply marked it on the stub."

And respondent testified: "Q. Well, does that intention (to repay the father) vest by virtue of an understanding, or is that a voluntary idea of your own? A. A voluntary idea of my own."

It is plain that this so-called loan did not constitute such a debt, if it was in fact a debt at all in legal contemplation, as was required to be paid in order to enable the wife to properly live pendente lite or prosecute her action. We have no doubt that the rule announced in Tremper v. Tremper, 39 Cal. App. 62, 67, 177 P. 868, 870, is applicable here: "An award of temporary alimony should be made to cover the current needs of the wife and should not be allowed to take the place of a final decree disposing of the property rights."

[8] "The fact that the wife has incurred debts is not sufficient to authorize an award for necessary expenses (Loveren v. Loveren, 100 Cal. 493, 35 P. 87); but the further fact must appear that the payment of such debts is necessary to enable the wife to further prosecute her action or defense."

The order does not show that the allowance of $3,600 was made for that or any purpose, but, even if we are entitled to assume that it was made to enable respondent to repay her father in part for his advances, we do not think that it was "money necessary to enable the wife to support herself and her children" within the meaning of section 137 of the Civil Code.

[9] As to the $1,000 allowed for suit money there was no showing whatever to support its allowance. The trial was only five days off when the order was made. Respondent points to no evidence of any particular contemplated expenses. In the absence of a showing of its necessity this allowance was an abuse of discretion.

[10] The order allowing $1,500 counsel fees and $200 for costs to resist the first appeal cannot be held unreasonable. Appellant filed an opening brief of 72 pages and an appendix of 128. Respondent's brief was 63 pages long and the appendix thereto 131. Ex post facto, therefore, it appears that the trial court did not overestimate the value of the labor and the cost involved in opposing the appeal.

The order of March 11, 1927, is modified by striking therefrom the allowance of $3,600 and of $1,000 suit money. The order of April 21, 1927, is affirmed. Each party to pay his own costs of appeal.

LETTEAU v. DUMAS et ux. (Civ. 3775.)★

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing June 28, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 25, 1929.

1. Vendor and purchaser ⇨39—Contract to sell lots described according to unrecorded map is void (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 4574, § 8).

Contract to sell lots described only by reference to an unrecorded map, contrary to provisions of St. 1907, p. 290 (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 4574, § 8), is void.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⇨334(1) — Where purchasers paid money under void land contract, but vendor applied payment on subsequent valid contracts and purchasers defaulted, they could not recover payment (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 4574, § 8).

Where purchasers paid money to vendor under unilateral instrument offering to purchase lots described by reference to unrecorded map so that contract was void under St. 1907, p. 290 (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 4574, § 8), but vendor and purchaser later executed eight separate valid contracts for sale of such lots after map had been recorded and vendor applied sum paid on such contracts and purchasers defaulted under latter contracts, they could not recover sum paid, since they could not complain if vendor credited money belonging to them on valid contract.

3. Vendor and purchaser ⇨337—If void land contract was coupled with later contracts so as to taint them, they were all void and could furnish no means of attaching lien for amount purchasers paid (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 4574, § 8).

If first land contract describing lots by reference to unrecorded map, contrary to provision of St. 1907, p. 290 (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 4574, § 8), was inseparably coupled with later contracts so as to taint them with its infirmity, they would all be void and would furnish no means of attaching lien upon vendor's land, in suit to quiet title, for amount purchasers paid.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James F. Chambers, Judge.

Action to quiet title by George H. Letteau against Vern Dumas and wife. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; LANGDON, J., voting for a hearing.

THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in a suit to quiet title.

The plaintiff is the owner of the eight lots described in the complaint, which are a part of tract 7603 of the city of Los Angeles. November 5, 1923, the defendants prepared and sent to the plaintiff a written communication in the form of a tentative agreement or offer to buy these eight lots upon specified terms for the sum of $28,500. This agreement was accompanied by $7,050 as part payment. The document described them with reference to an unrecorded map. So far as the record shows, the plaintiff had nothing to do with the preparation of this instrument, which appears to have been voluntarily prepared and signed by the defendants alone, and was addressed to the plaintiff, who received and retained the money. This written offer to purchase the lots was, however, indorsed by one H. R. Cowan, as follows: "The undersigned hereby accepts the deposit above mentioned, subject to all the conditions contained in the foregoing application. H. R. Cowan, By R. A. Scott." This was not a contract binding the plaintiff to sell these lots. It was a mere conditional offer on the part of the defendants to buy the lots. Subsequently, on December 27, 1923, the map of said tract was duly recorded. Thereafter, on January 14, 1924, eight independent contracts for the sale of the lots were executed by the respective parties. The purchase prices of these lots ranged from $3,500 to $3,750 each, aggregating the sum of $28,500, which was the same amount specified in the former agreement. The payments credited on the purchase prices of the lots in the last-mentioned contracts ranged from $700 to $1,200 each, and aggregated some $7,600, a sum slightly in excess of the amount remaining in the hands of plaintiff. Each contract specified the times and amounts of subsequent payments. The first installments due and payable under these agreements were sums of $700 to $850 on each contract, some of which were due May 5, 1924, and others were due October 5, 1924. None of these subsequent installments were paid. The only money which was paid by the defendants on any of these contracts after their execution was a total sum amounting to less than $500 which was paid for taxes and interest. The defendants were in default. It was stipulated that no further payments were made upon these contracts. Except for the fact that the aggregate final selling price of these eight lots was the same figure mentioned in the original agreement, and that the total sum credited on account of the purchase price was approximately the amount of defendants' money which was in the hands of plaintiff, the two transactions were separate and distinct. The record does not show that the plaintiff even acquiesced in the first proposal. None of these latter contracts made reference to the former document. Each of them described the lot to which it applied by reference to the recorded map of the tract. Each contract specified the terms of sale in detail, setting out the sale price, the amount credited on account, and the amounts and dates of the deferred payments, together with the rate of interest thereon. Each contract provided for a termination of the agreement and a forfeiture of all money paid thereunder in the event of a breach of any covenant or failure to meet payments as stipulated. Time was made the essence of these contracts. That provision read: "It is expressly understood and agreed that time is of the essence of this agreement, and in the event of the failure of the buyer to comply with any or all of the terms or conditions hereof in the manner and within the time herein specified, the same shall become null and void as fully as if it had never been made, and the seller shall be released from all obligations in law or equity to convey said premises, and the buyer shall forfeit all right thereto and to all moneys theretofore paid under this agreement."

It was stipulated that on December 10, 1924, the defendants consulted an attorney, who advised them that the original offer to purchase lots dated November 5, 1923, and also the contracts for the purchase of the lots dated January 14, 1924, were executed in violation of law and void, and that the defendants, therefore, refused to and made no further payments thereon.

This suit to quiet title was filed September 1, 1926. Answering the complaint, the defendants admitted that plaintiff held the legal title to the lots, but set up the facts of the transaction, alleging that the first agreement to buy the lots was made describing the lots with reference to an unrecorded map, which was, therefore, void, and that the subsequent contracts were coupled with and an inseparable part of the first document and are, therefore, tainted by the same infirmity and were also void.

This was the view taken by the trial court, which adopted findings accordingly but refusing to quiet title in the plaintiff upon any terms, in spite of the fact that it was specifically found that the plaintiff was the owner of the property. The court further rendered judgment in favor of the defendants creating a lien upon the property for the repayment of the money advanced by the defendants upon the purchase price of the lots, together with interest and taxes amounting to $7,505.71. The plaintiff appealed.

lots described only by reference to an unrecorded map, contrary to the provisions of the statutes of California of 1907, p. 290 (Act 4574 of Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, § 8), is void. Smith v. Bach, 183 Cal. 259, 191 P. 14; Smith v. Bach, 54 Cal. App. 236, 201 P. 611; White v. Jacobs (Cal. Sup.) 267 P. 1087; Hartzell v. Doolittle (Cal. Sup.) 269 P. 527; Krause v. Marine T. & S. Bank (Cal. App.) 270 P. 246. While the contract to sell land described only by reference to an unrecorded map is void and may, therefore, not be specifically enforced, the last-cited authorities hold that one who has paid money under such a void contract may maintain an action to recover it.

[2] In the present case, however, while it must be conceded that the first document was void and unenforceable, and that the defendants might have then maintained an action to recover this money, it was the defendants themselves who drew and executed this first document and now seek to take advantage of their own violation of the law. As the situation then existed, because the first instrument was void, the result was that the plaintiff held in his possession $7,050 belonging to the defendants, which was subject to recovery in a proper proceeding. A map of the tract was subsequently duly filed pursuant to law, and the parties then formally entered into eight separate valid contracts for the sale of the lots, each of which was unambiguous and full and complete in itself. No reference was made in any of these contracts to a former agreement. The first was void and could not be relied upon to procure the making or enforcement of the latter. There is no legal or essential connection between the first agreement and the second group of contracts. If the plaintiff saw fit to credit the money belonging to the defendants which was in his possession, upon valid contracts to purchase lots subsequently executed by them, the defendants may not complain. The defendants will not be permitted to voluntarily tender to the plaintiff a unilateral instrument offering to purchase lots, which violates the statute by reference to an unrecorded map, and then use their own weapon to defeat subsequent valid contracts to buy the property which were executed in good faith and which contracts they have breached. This would be converting a wholesome statutory rule of law into an engine of fraud.

[3] Moreover, if it could be said that the first illegal document is inseparably coupled with the latter contracts so as to taint them with its infirmity, they would all become void and would then furnish no means of attaching a lien upon the land of plaintiff in a suit to quiet title. This is true, even though the defendants would be afforded a remedy under such circumstances for the recovery of money belonging to them, which was wrongfully withheld by the plaintiff.

It follows that the findings are not supported by the evidence so far as the judgment and lien for defendants are concerned.

The judgment is reversed, and the trial court is directed to enter judgment for the plaintiff as prayed for in the complaint.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from a judgment in a suit to quiet title.

This appeal presents the identical questions involved in the case of Letteau v. Dumas, Civil No. 3775, 278 P. 459, in which an opinion of this court was this day rendered and filed. These cases were consolidated for the purpose of trial, and the evidence of both cases is presented in the same transcript.

Upon the authority of Letteau v. Dumas, supra, the judgment is reversed, and the trial court is directed to enter judgment for the plaintiff as prayed in the complaint.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued in Contra Costa county for the conversion of personal property. The defendant Buck moved for a change of venue upon the ground that he was a resident of the city and county of San Francisco. The motion was denied, and this defendant has appealed on a typewritten transcript.

It is conceded that no one of the defendants was a resident of Contra Costa county and that the motion of defendant Buck should have been granted unless it is held that the cause of action is one for damages to personal property within the meaning of section 395, Code of Civil Procedure. Sections 392, 393, and 394 of this Code prescribe where certain classes of actions are to be tried. Section 395 provides: "In all other cases, the action must be tried in the county in which the defendants, or some of them, reside at the commencement of the action, or if it be an action for injury to person, or property, or for death from wrongful act, or negligence, in the county where the injury occurs, or the injury causing death occurs, or in the county in which the defendants or some of them reside at the commencement of the action." The portion of the section quoted reading "or if it be an action for injury to person," etc., was added by amendment of 1911 (St. 1911, p. 847). Section 28 of the same Code reads, "An injury to property consists in depriving its owner of the benefit of it, which is done by taking, withholding, deteriorating, or destroying it," and section 29 reads: "Every other injury is an injury to the person."

The respondent defends the order appealed from on the ground that a conversion of personal property is a "depriving its owner of the benefit of it" within the meaning of section 28, and that such an injury was contemplated by section 395. The appellant argues that the latter section relates solely to corporeal or physical injuries to person or property.

MASON v. BUCK et al. (Civ. 6446.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 29, 1929.

Venue ~~6~~—Conversion of personal property was not "injury" within law authorizing action in county wherein injury occurred (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 28, 29, 395).

Conversion of personal property was not an "injury" to property within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 395, authorizing action in county wherein injury occurs, regardless of the definitions of injury under sections 28 and 29, which do not control interpretation of section on venthe amendment to section 395. The action was one for false imprisonment in which it was contended that the forcible seizure, accusation, and arrest of plaintiff was an "injury to the person." But the Supreme Court held that the term was limited to "the wrongful or negligent act of another," and that "the specific terms indicate that the injuries to person within the contemplation of the legislature were those which cause physical injury or incapacity." Page 192 of 192 Cal. (219 P. 454). In the same case it was pointed out that the increasing number of bodily injuries and injuries to property caused by the use of motor vehicles was the suggestion for the amendment of 1911, and that there was nothing to indicate an intention of the Legislature to make such a radical change as that contended for. In Graham v. Mixon, 177 Cal. 88, 169 P. 1003, L. R. A. 1918F, 1023, an action for libel, the Supreme Court held that the definitions of injuries found in sections 28 and 29 did not control the interpretation of the section on venue, and that the expression "injury to person" should not be interpreted to mean every "invasion of personal rights."

The reasoning of these cases is equally applicable to actions relating to property. Sections 28 and 29 are merely general classifications of the right of action for injuries to person and property. Sections 392-395 relate to the place of trial of all civil actions. The specific intent is manifested in section 395 to make all these actions triable in the county where the defendant resides except as otherwise specified in these four sections. A conversion of personal property is not necessarily a taking or withholding it from another (Horton v. Jack, 126 Cal. 521, 526, 58 P. 1051); it includes any act of ownership or exercise of dominion in defiance of the rights of another (24 Cal. Jur. 1022). To hold that all such acts are an "injury" to property within the meaning of section 395 would nullify the provisions of that section which aim to grant a defendant the right of trial in the county of his residence. Generally speaking, an amendment to a statute is designed to add something to it or to limit its force, rather than to nullify its purpose, and judicial interpretation of an amendment should be made with that end in view, unless the intention to nullify is evident.

From our consideration of the purposes of the Code amendment as outlined in the decisions cited we are satisfied that the Legislature intended to except from the general provisions of section 395 only such actions for injury to person or property, caused by the wrongful act or negligence of another, where the cause of action arose from a "corporeal or physical" injury to the person or property, and that it was not intended to include every invasion of personal and property rights. As an action for conversion is not a corporeal injury to property within this meaning, it would follow that it should be tried in the county where the defendant resides within the general provisions of section 395.

The order is reversed.

JACKSON et al. v. MEINHARDT et al.
(Civ. 3772.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California. June 4, 1929.

1. Fraud ☞23—Purchaser may rely on vendor's statements respecting location and boundaries of lot, inspection of which will not refute them nor put reasonable person on inquiry.

Purchaser of lot may rely on owner's positive statements as to its location and relation of adjoining streets or other material objects, when inspection of premises will not refute false representations nor furnish evidence which would place reasonable person on inquiry, even if examination of recorded map would disclose true situation of lot and falsity of statements.

2. Fraud ☞31—Vendor and purchaser ☞37 (2)—One purchasing lot in unimproved tract, whereon streets are not laid out, in reliance on fraudulent statements that it is corner lot, may sue for damages or rescission without searching records.

When owner, with intent to deceive purchaser, falsely states that portion of unimproved tract, on which streets are not laid out nor designated, is corner lot bounded on two sides by public streets, and inspection of lot furnishes no evidence to contrary, purchaser relying on such representations to his damage may maintain action, based on fraud, for damages or rescission, without having searched records to ascertain true location and boundaries of lot.

3. Fraud ☞38—Vendee's assignees, suing for damages within seven months after discovering fraudulent representations as to location and boundaries of lot, held not guilty of laches.

Vendee's assignees, fulfilling exact terms of all covenants of contract and commencing action for damages for fraudulent representations as to location and boundaries of lot purchased within about seven months after discovering fraud, held not guilty of laches.

4. Fraud ☞38—Laches is ordinarily no defense to action for fraud, unless delayed beyond statutory limitation period.

Laches is not ordinarily a defense to an action for fraud, unless proceeding is delayed beyond the period prescribed by statute of limitations.

5. Contracts ☞270(2)—Fraud ☞38—Action to rescind contract for fraud must be promptly pursued, but action for damages may ordinarily be commenced any time within statutory limitation period after discovering fraud.

Cause of action to rescind contract for fraud must be promptly and diligently pursued, but action to recover damages therefor may ordinarily be commenced at any time within statutory period of limitations after discovery of fraud.

6. Fraud ☞9—Single material misrepresentation, knowingly made to induce purchase of land, authorizes recovery of damages.

A single material misrepresentation, knowingly made to induce one to purchase land, such as false statement that it is corner lot bounded by public streets, will afford ground for recovery of damages, though complaint contains defective allegations respecting some of alleged false representations.

7. Fraud ☞29—Vendees' assignees may sue for damages for vendors' fraudulent representations (Civ. Code, § 954).

Under Civ. Code, § 954, assignees of vendees' interest in contract of sale and lot therein described may sue for damages for vendors' fraudulent representations concerning location and boundaries of lot.

8. Fraud ☞46—Complaint alleging reliance of plaintiffs' assignors on defendant's fraudulent representations as to location and boundaries of lot purchased and damages to plaintiffs stated cause of action.

Complaint, alleging that plaintiffs' assignors were induced to purchase lot in reliance on defendant's false representations that it was a corner lot of stated length, abutting on two public streets, and that plaintiffs were damaged in amount of difference between actual and represented value of lot, held sufficient to state cause of action for damages.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge.

Action by George Jackson, C. W. Jackson, and others against George Meinhardt and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs C. W. Jackson and another appeal. Reversed, with directions.

Lon A. Brooks, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

John M. Fulton and R. M. Fulton, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment against plaintiffs for failure to amend a pleading after a general demurrer had been sustained to a third amended complaint. The suit was for fraud exercised in procuring a contract for the sale of a lot in Los Angeles, Cal.

The amended complaint, to which a general demurrer was sustained with leave to amend, set up an action for damages based upon fraudulent representations regarding the location and boundaries of a lot which the assignors of plaintiffs were thereby induced to purchase.

The complaint alleged in substance that on November 14, 1924, the defendants who owned the land involved in this action, together with the tract surrounding it, executed a contract to sell the lot to George and Clara Jackson for $1,200, payable in installments of $25 a month until the purchase price was fully paid, with 7 per cent. interest per annum on all deferred payments. The property was described as the "East 40 feet of the West 120 feet of the South 101 feet of lot One, Tract 1750, as per map recorded in Book 20, page 157 of Maps," in the county of Los Angeles, Cal.; that on February 7, 1925, for a valuable consideration, the above-named vendees sold and assigned to plaintiffs all their interest in said contract, together with the lot therein described; that upon the purchase of said contract the assignors informed plaintiffs that at the time of the original execution of the contract the defendants represented to them that (1) said land was a corner lot, (2) that a 20-foot public street adjoined the lot on the east, (3) that the lot abutted on a 50-foot street on the south, and (4) that defendants measured the lot in the presence of said assignors and pointed out the northern boundary thereof, stating that the lot extended 101 feet southerly from said point of commencement. The complaint further alleged that the defendants also personally made the foregoing representations to the plaintiffs while actually upon said premises, on February 7, 1925, and acquiesced in their purchase of the contract; that both the original vendees and plaintiffs were strangers in the vicinity and were ignorant as to the actual location of the lot or its dimensions or adjoining streets; that the streets did not appear laid out upon the tract; that neither the original purchasers nor the plaintiffs "had any means of investigation" and made no independent inquiry or examination as to the truth of said representations, and that they each believed them to be true, and relying upon them were thereby induced to purchase the lot when they would not have otherwise done so; that each of said representations was false, as the defendants well knew, and was made to deceive and defraud the purchasers; that in truth the lot was not a corner lot and it did not abut upon a street on either side, or at all, but was entirely surrounded on all sides by other lots, and that it did not commence at the point designated on the ground by the defendants, but did begin 25 feet southerly therefrom; that the plaintiffs did not discover these facts or that the defendants' representations were false until May, 1926; that at the time of such discovery plaintiffs had paid the total sum of $450 on the purchase price, $348.50 of which was credited to the principal and the balance was applied to the account of interest; that subsequently the plaintiffs continued to make the payments due upon the contract and fulfilled upon their part all the covenants thereof; that the actual value of said lot situated as it was represented to be, by the defendants, was $2,500, but that it was worth not more than $100 located as in fact it was, adjacent to no street at all; and that plaintiffs were thereby damaged in the sum of $2,400, for which amount they prayed judgment. The suit was commenced December 14, 1926.

It is claimed that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient upon which to maintain an action for fraud for the reasons that the recorded map of the tract of land involved was constructive notice of the position of the lot conveyed and of the true location of the streets in that vicinity, and that the purchasers forfeited their remedy by their negligence in failing to examine the public records; that they were guilty of laches; that the assignees of a chose in action could not maintain a suit for fraud; that reliance upon the alleged false statements was defectively pleaded; and that no sufficient allegation of damages appears.

[1, 2] A prospective purchaser of land may rely upon the owner's positive statements with respect to its location and the relation of adjoining streets or other material objects, when an inspection of the premises will not refute the false representations nor furnish evidence which would place a reasonable person upon inquiry, even if the examination of a recorded map would disclose the true situation of the lot and the falsity of the statements. When the owner of land with intent to deceive a purchaser falsely states that a portion of an unimproved tract, upon which the streets are not laid out or designated upon the ground, is a corner lot and that it is bounded on two sides by public streets, and an inspection of the property furnishes no evidence to the contrary, and the purchaser relying upon such representations buys the lot and is damaged thereby, he may maintain an action based upon fraud, either for damages or rescission. Under such circumstances the purchaser is not required to search the records to ascertain the true location and boundaries of the lot. In 46 C. J. 545, §§ 29 and 30, it is said: "He who practices bad faith ought not to be permitted to invoke the doctrine of constructive or imputed notice to aid his wrongdoing." 12 R. C. L. 347, § 101. In the case of Lynch v. Palmer, 237 Mass. 150, 129 N. E. 374, 33 A. L. R. 842, wherein the facts were quite similar to the case at bar, the defendant falsely informed the plaintiff that he owned lot 89 on Grove street in Medford, Mass., and that it would always remain open as a street, and that lot 88, which was the subject of the proposed sale, was a corner lot. An inspection of the map or plat of Medford would have disclosed the falsity of these statements. No inspection appears to have been made. Many authorities were cited in support of the proposition, and the court said: "If the defendant represented that he was the owner of lot 89, that he was reserving it for a street, and that lot 88 was to be a corner lot, the jury could find that such representations were false and fraudulent and related to material facts; and if the plaintiff relied upon them and thereby was induced to purchase lot 88, as she testified, the defendant would be liable for the fraud and deceit practiced upon her." The entire trend of authorities appears to uphold the foregoing principle. 33 A. L. R. 917, note, § 24. In 26 C. J. 1197, § 101, it is said: "Although they were matters of record, redress could be had for misrepresentations or concealment with respect to boundaries or location."

To the same effect it is said in 12 R. C. L. 383, § 134: "Some courts (hold) * * * that where the vendee has no knowledge of the facts he has an absolute right to rely on representations as to location made by the vendor, and that he is not bound to make inquiry as to the truth of the facts so stated even though the vendor does not by any artifice prevent him from making inquiry in reference to the true location, which he has present means of ascertaining."

In Peardon v. Markley, 50 Cal. App. 257, 195 P. 70, where the vendor falsely represented to the purchaser of land that it included a designated spring, a judgment for rescission and damages was sustained. The court said: "His [the purchaser's] attention was not directed to any fact or circumstance inconsistent with the representations of the vendor. It is no excuse that the vendee by an independent investigation might have ascertained that the spring did not belong to the vendor and that it was not included in the deed of conveyance." 12 Cal. Jur. 758, § 34; Faull v. Johnson (Cal. App.) 270 P. 993.

[3-6] Under the circumstances of the present case the defendants may not urge the doctrine of laches as a defense to the alleged fraud, which was not discovered until May, 1926; the action having been commenced within about seven months thereafter. Laches is not ordinarily a defense to an action for fraud unless the proceeding is delayed beyond the period prescribed by the statute of limitations. 12 Cal. Jur. 797, § 59; Victor Oil Co. v. Drum, 184 Cal. 226, 193 P. 243; Montgomery v. McLaury, 143 Cal. 83, 76 P. 964; Estudillo v. Security Loan & Trust Co., 149 Cal. 556, 565, 87 P. 19; Simmons v. Briggs, 69 Cal. App. 447, 231 P. 604. Conduct on the part of the complainant subsequent to the discovery of the fraud, such as the renewal or extension of a mortgage, the execution of which is the basis of the fraud, the renewal of a lease, or the extension of the date of maturity of a note, which acts amount to a ratification or waiver of the wrong complained of, may bar an action for rescission or fraud. Tucker v. Beneke, 180 Cal. 588, 182 P. 299; Schmidt v. Mesmer, 116 Cal. 267, 48 P. 54; Monahan v. Watson, 61 Cal. App. 417, 214 P. 1001. No such change in the contractual relations of the parties occurred in the present case. No alterations or concessions were made or requested, but, upon the contrary, the plaintiffs proceeded to fulfill the exact terms of all the covenants of their contract, and are therefore not guilty of laches. Moreover, there is a distinction, in the application of the doctrine of laches between a cause for fraud sought to be maintained by means of an action of rescission and one which sounds in damages alone. In the former, the cause must be promptly and diligently pursued, while in the latter it may ordinarily be commenced at any time after the discovery of the fraud within the statutory period of limitations. 12 Cal. Jur. 796, § 59. Even though the complaint may contain defective allegations respecting some of the alleged false representations, a single material misrepresentation knowingly made to induce one to purchase land under circumstances similar to those presented in the present case, such as the statement that the lot was a corner lot and was bounded by public streets, will afford grounds for relief. Del Vecchio v. Savelli, 10 Cal. App. 79, 101 P. 32.

[7] Finally, the respondent asserts that this right of action for alleged fraud does not survive the assignment of the contract to plaintiffs. We are not in accord with this contention. Section 954 of the Civil Code has modified the common-law rule with respect to the assigning of a chose in action, and the statute now authorizes the maintenance of a suit for damages to real or personal property on the ground of fraud, on the part of an assignee of the original vendee. 3 Cal. Jur. 254, § 15; Morris v. Standard Oil Co., 200 Cal. 210, 252 P. 605.

[8] The complaint sufficiently alleges a reliance upon the fraudulent representations, as well as that damages were sustained thereby. We are of the opinion that a cause of action is adequately stated.

The judgment is reversed. The trial court is directed to overrule the demurrer and permit the defendants to answer.

MELLO v. TULARE COUNTY. (Civ. 5553.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 31, 1929.

Counties ⇨213—One giving check for prisoner's release from jail cannot sue county for amount without presenting statement of claim to board of supervisors (Pol. Code, § 4003, and § 4041, subd. 12; Pen. Code, § 1302).

One obtaining release of prisoner from jail by giving check could not maintain action against county for amount thereof without first presenting statement of claim to board of supervisors, with request that it be allowed and ordered paid, under Pol. Code, § 4003, and section 4041, subd. 12, even if claim were valid under Pen. Code, § 1302.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; K. Van Zante, Judge.

Action by F. R. Mello against the County of Tulare. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Dwight E. Jackson, of Tulare (Arthur H. Jackson, of Huntington Park, of counsel), for appellant.

Leroy McCormick, Dist. Atty., and Leslie A. Cleary, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Visalia, for respondent.

CONREY P. J. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment entered in favor of defendant, pursuant to an order sustaining demurrer to the second amended complaint without leave to amend.

According to the complaint, one Crieghton was in custody of a constable by reason of his nonpayment of a fine of $500 which had been imposed upon him with the alternative of imprisonment until the fine be paid. Crieghton, by means of certain misrepresentations concerning his ownership of property, etc., induced the plaintiff to deliver him a check payable to Crieghton for the sum of $500. The stated purpose of Crieghton was to avoid going to jail that night, and he promised that he himself would pay the fine next day. Plaintiff informed Crieghton and the constable that he had not sufficient funds in the bank to pay the check, and instructed them to hold the check until noon of the next day. The constable so informed Kendrick, the justice of the peace, "before noon" of said next day. Nevertheless Crieghton was released from custody on the day when the check was given. The complaint does not state whether or not Crieghton paid his fine or was ever rearrested. On said next day, which was April 21, 1926, the justice of the peace threatened to arrest the plaintiff for wrongfully drawing his check on the bank, knowing that he had not sufficient funds to meet the same, and, under duress of said threat, plaintiff deposited additional funds in the bank, and the amount of the check was paid by the bank to the justice of the peace, who thereafter deposited in the county treasury of Tulare county the money thus obtained by him from the plaintiff.

There was no allegation in the complaint that any demand for repayment to him of said money was ever made by plaintiff, or any claim presented to the board of supervisors of Tulare county.

Plaintiff alleged that the check so given by him was to be "as a bond to release said Crieghton." Since it is admitted that the release of the prisoner was so obtained, and no facts are alleged to show that the implied conditions of the bail thus given were ever complied with, as required by law, it is difficult to see how the plaintiff can be held to have had any valid claim upon the money. Pen. Code, § 1302; Mundell v. Wells, 181 Cal. 398, 184 P. 666, 7 A. L. R. 383.

Even if the plaintiff had a valid claim, he has no right to maintain this action without first presenting to the board of supervisors a statement of his claim requesting that the same be allowed and ordered paid. Pol. Code, § 4003, and section 4041, subd. 12; Colusa County v. Glenn County, 117 Cal. 434, 49 P. 457.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. WILKERSON. (Cr. 1775.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 23, 1929.

1. Infants ⇨20—Information held insufficient to charge offense of contributing to delinquency of minor (Juvenile Court Law, § 21, and § 1, subd. 11).

Information alleging defendant, a negro, encouraged minor, a white girl 18 years old, to evade probation officer, hide away from her parents, and go to Mexico to marry defendant, held insufficient to charge offense of contributing to delinquency of minor under Juvenile Court Law, § 1, subd. 11 (St. 1915, p. 1226), and § 21 (St. 1915, p. 1246).

2. Infants ⇨20—In prosecution for contributing to delinquency of minor, evidence held insufficient to sustain conviction (Juvenile Court Law, § 21, and § 1, subd. 11).

In prosecution under Juvenile Court Law, § 1, subd. 11 (St. 1915, p. 1226), and section 21 (St. 1915, p. 1246), for contributing to delinquency of minor, evidence showing defendant, a colored man, at earnest solicitation of minor, an 18 year old white girl, took her to Mexico to get married, which marriage was prohibited by Civ. Code, §§ 60, 69, but legal in Mexico, held insufficient to sustain conviction.

3. Jury ⇨28(4)—Waiver of jury trial in criminal case must be manifested by consent of both parties, expressed in open court by defendant and counsel (Const. art. 1, § 7, as amended in 1928).

Under provisions of Const. art. 1, § 7, as amended in 1928, waiver of jury trial must be manifested by consent of both parties, expressed in open court; statement by attorney for defendant that "we desire to waive jury and ask that case be tried by court" being insufficient.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Squire Granville Wilkerson was convicted of contributing to the delinquency of a minor, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Willedd Andrews, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and John D. Richer, of Los Angeles, for the People.

HOUSER, J. On conviction of the offense commonly known as that of contributing to the delinquency of a minor, defendant was sentenced to a term of 18 months in the county jail. He appeals from the judgment.

Subdivision 11 of section 1 of the Juvenile Court Law (Stats. 1915, p. 1225, as variously amended) contains the provision that it shall apply to one "who is leading, or from any cause is in danger of leading, an idle, dissolute, lewd or immoral life"; and by section 21 of the same act, among other things, it is provided that "any person who shall commit any act or omit the performance of any duty, which act or omission causes or tends to cause or encourage any person under the age of twenty-one years to come within the provisions" of the statute, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

The information under which defendant was prosecuted charged that:

He "did wilfully and unlawfully commit acts and omit duties hereinafter more particularly set forth, to-wit: That the said defendant Squire Granville Wilkerson did wilfully and unlawfully encourage and allow one Virginia Myers to evade the officers and to hide away from her parents and her probation officer and the police, and to go to Tia Juana to marry the said Squire Granville Wilkerson, a colored man, contrary to the law of California, the said Virginia Myers being a white girl, and a ward of the court and under the age of twenty-one years of age, to-wit, of the age of eighteen years; the said Squire Granville Wilkerson having been warned to stay away from the girl by her father and her probation officer, and the juvenile police.

"All of which wilful and unlawful acts and course of conduct on the part of the said defendant Squire Granville Wilkerson, as aforesaid did thereby then and there manifestly tend to and did encourage, cause and contribute to the said Virginia Myers becoming and remaining such a person as is described in section 1 of said Juvenile Court Law, to-wit: A person under twenty-one years of age who is leading, or is in danger, from any cause, of leading an idle, lewd, dissolute and immoral life."

An examination of such information discloses the fact that the several alleged acts of defendant, through and by which he is charged with contributing "to the said Virginia Myers becoming and remaining * * * a person who is leading, or is in danger * * * of leading an idle, lewd, dissolute and immoral life," are that he did wilfully and unlawfully encourage and allow the

"ward (1) to evade the officers and hide away from her parents, her probation officer and the police; and (2) to go to Tia Juana to marry the said Squire Granville Wilkerson, a colored man, * * * the said Virginia Myers being a white girl, * * * having been warned to stay away from the girl by her father, her probation officer and the juvenile police."

The information contains no allegation in explanation of the reason why the girl was "a ward of the court," or as to the nature of the guardianship of which she was the subject. For aught that appears, she may have been a "ward" by reason of her insanity, or her feeble-mindedness; or because of her non-age and consequent legal inability to administer her property interests; or, by inference only, because of some moral or other delinquency, possibly she may have been a ward of the juvenile court. If within the last-named category, the information is silent as to whether by order of the court she was detained in custody of the juvenile court officer, or had been released therefrom; and if the latter condition prevailed, what terms and conditions, if any, had been prescribed by the court in connection therewith. Considering only that she was a "ward of the court * * * of the age of eighteen years," it was her right, if she chose to do so, to "evade the officers" or to "hide away from her parents"; in fact, if unconditionally a ward of the juvenile court, it is manifest that the parents of the girl were legally entitled to no control over her. Being a white woman, according to our statutes it would have been unlawful for her to have married a negro in this state (sections 60 and 69, Civ. Code); but it is not here suggested or intimated that any legal obstacle prevented the consummation of a marriage between the girl and defendant in the republic of Mexico, even though, as alleged in the information, defendant was "warned to stay away from the girl by her father and her probation officer and the juvenile police." Parenthetically, it may be observed that just what proper place such an allegation as that to which reference has just been had would have in the information, or what legal purpose was expected or hoped to be subserved thereby, is not clear.

[1, 2] In the premises, it is manifest that if, based on the allegations contained in the information, no legal restrictions were placed upon the conduct of Virginia Myers with reference to the particulars noted therein, and to which reference has been had, it would not be unlawful for defendant to encourage her to do those things. Nor is it readily discernible how such acts could possibly have caused the "ward" to lead an idle, a dissolute, a lewd, or an immoral life. But even conceding the possibility that in a proper pleading any of such acts would or might have such a tendency, the record contains not even the slightest evidence that defendant committed any of the acts of which he is charged. From the transcript of the record it appears that, following the disappearance of the girl from her home, defendant was informed that the parents of the girl and the probation officers were endeavoring to locate her, and that with such assumed knowledge, at the earnest solicitation of the girl, defendant took her to Tia Juana, Mexico, and there married her; which act, in itself, was of no different legal consequence than though the marriage of the parties (if lawful) had occurred at any place within the county of Los Angeles. But even if such act on the part of defendant could be construed as illegal, it is impossible by any stretch of the imagination to classify it as immoral, or as having a tendency to reduce the girl to the state of an idle, a lewd, or a dissolute person. Theoretically, at least, even in this day and generation, the law regards marriage favorably and with some degree of reverence and sanctity. Nor was any evidence introduced or offered on the trial of the action by which the patent and vital defects in the information might have been remedied. The most that appeared in the evidence against defendant was that Virginia Myers, "a ward of the court," of the age of 18 years, living with her parents, disappeared from her home on a certain date; that thereupon a warrant was issued for her arrest, of which defendant had cognizance and promised to aid the several officers in locating her whereabouts; notwithstanding which he took her to Tia Juana and there was legally married to her. Although on this appeal it is not contended by respondent that, because defendant was a colored man, the offense of which he was charged became the more flagrant or heinous, the fact that he is a negro is emphasized in the information and was dwelt upon in the evidence. However, as stated by the judge of the trial court at the conclusion of the trial, "the marriage is just an incident, the color of these people is just an incident; it would not make any difference whether one was black and one white, or whether both were white or both black."

[3] It appears that when the case was called for trial, the attorney for defendant made the statement that "we desire to waive a jury and ask that the case be tried by the court." Defendant personally made no such request. Thereupon, the case went to trial by the court sitting without a jury. Although the point is not here raised by appellant, it is apparent that under the provisions of section 7 of article 1 of the Constitution, as amended in 1928, the waiver of a jury trial must be manifested by "the consent of both parties, expressed in open court by the defendant and his counsel." People v. Garcia (Cal. App.) 277 P. 747.

As the record is entirely wanting and insufficient either for the purpose of stating the commission of a public offense, or supplying the evidence necessary to support a verdict even on a legal charge, it is ordered that the judgment be and it is reversed and the cause remanded to the superior court for such further proceedings as may be consistent with this opinion.

MADDUX v. MORA et al. (Civ. 5374.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 29, 1929.

Appeal and error ⇨65—Judgment of superior court on appeal from judgment of justice court in contract action is final, from which there is no appeal (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 112, 974, 980; Const. art. 6, § 5).

Under Const. art. 6, § 5, conferring appellate jurisdiction on superior courts in cases prescribed by law, and under Code Civ. Proc. § 112, giving justices' courts jurisdiction of contract actions for recovery of sums less than $300, and under sections 974 and 980 permitting appeals to superior court and trial de novo, the judgment of the superior court on trial de novo from justice court in such cases is final, from which there is no appeal to Supreme Court or to District Court of Appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; Wm. H. Ellis, Judge.

Action by M. C. Maddux against Joe Mora and another. Judgment for plaintiff on appeal from judgment in justice court, and the defendant named appeals. Appeal dismissed.

J. L. Granttham and Frank C. Scherrer, both of Riverside, for appellant.

Best & Best, of Riverside, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. The respondent instituted the above-entitled action in Perris township, Riverside county, for the recovery of $106.50, which by amendment to the complaint was subsequently increased to $162.49, together with $100 attorney's fees, interest and costs, upon a contract alleged to have been intended to be performed, was partially performed, and breached, in said township, between residents of Imperial county. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and an appeal was taken to the superior court of Riverside county, wherein judgment was again rendered in favor of the plaintiff, after trial de novo. From the latter judgment the defendant Joe Mora appealed to this court.

Section 5, art. 6, of the Constitution, confers appellate jurisdiction upon superior courts in their respective counties in such cases as may be prescribed by law. The civil jurisdiction of justices' courts embraces all cases in actions arising on contract for the recovery of sums, exclusive of interest, not amounting to $300. Code Civ. Proc. § 112. Any party dissatisfied with a judgment rendered in a justice's court may appeal to the superior court of the county in which the action was first tried, and the same may be therein tried anew, in all respects, as other trials in the superior court. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 974, 980. In such cases the judgment of the superior court is final, and there is no appeal therefrom to the Supreme Court or to the district court of appeal. O'Meara v. Hables, 163 Cal. 240, 124 P. 1003.

Since the attempted appeal in this case is obviously without foundation, this court being without jurisdiction to consider it, the same is dismissed.

THOMSON et al. v. MORTGAGE INV. CO. et al. (Civ. 6712.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. May 29, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨854(5)—Respondents may show dismissal was justified for any reason, where record does not show one point only was considered by trial court.

Where there is nothing on face of record to show that only point considered by trial court in ordering dismissal was right of minority stockholders to sue on behalf of corporation, the respondents have right to show that action of trial court was justified for any reason.

2. Appeal and error ⇨948—Denial of leave to further amend cannot be held abuse of discretion without request for filing of amended complaint.

Where record on appeal does not affirmatively show request for filing of an amended complaint, an abuse of discretion cannot be imputed to lower court in denying leave to further amend.

3. Corporations ⇨210—Stockholders suing on behalf of corporation and stockholders are mere nominal plaintiffs.

Stockholders bringing suit on behalf of corporation and of stockholders are mere nominal plaintiffs, the corporation being the real party in interest, and any judgment recovered inuring to its benefit.

4. Contracts ⇨95(4)—Mortgagee's threats to foreclose after indebtedness became due was not coercion as to directors of mortgagor corporation.

Threats of mortgagee to foreclose after principal indebtedness had become due were justifiable, and did not constitute coercion in so far as certain agreements and execution of promissory note by directors of mortgagor corporation were concerned.

5. Usury ⇨11(4)—Complaint in stockholders' action to cancel incumbrances on corporate property on ground of usury did not state cause of action (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii).

Complaint in action by stockholders on behalf of the corporation to have certain incumbrances on corporate property declared invalid on account of usurious loans within St. 1919, p. lxxxiii, held insufficient to state a cause of action on such grounds.

6. Pleading ⇨18—Amended complaint in suit to cancel incumbrance on corporate property held, in reference to alleged usury, demurrable as ambiguous, uncertain, and unintelligible.

Language of amended complaint, seeking cancellation of incumbrance on corporate property on ground of usury, held, in reference to alleged usury, so ambiguous, uncertain, and unintelligible as to justify sustaining of demurrer.

7. Corporations ⇨202—Stockholders may sue on behalf of corporation only when acts of directors are ultra vires, illegal, fraudulent, or show willful neglect.

Actions may be instituted and maintained by stockholders in behalf of corporation only when acts of board of directors of corporation are either ultra vires, illegal, fraudulent, oppressive, or show willful neglect.

8. Corporations ⇨211(6)—Allegations of complaint as to wrongful or negligent acts of corporate directors were insufficient to establish right of stockholders to maintain action.

Allegations of complaint, in action by stockholders on behalf of corporation, in respect to wrongful or negligent acts of board of directors, held insufficient to establish right to institute and maintain action.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Fleming, Judge.

Action by A. P. Thomson and another against the Mortgage Investment Company and others. Judgment of dismissal, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Kimball Fletcher, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Julius V. Patrosso, C. C. Mishler, and Earle M. Daniels, all of Los Angeles, for respondent Mortgage Inv. Co.

LUCAS, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment of dismissal following an order sustaining, without leave to amend, the demurrers of defendants Mortgage Investment Company and B. & H. Circuit, Inc., to plaintiffs' amended complaint.

Plaintiffs, stockholders in the defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., brought suit on behalf of said corporation and its stockholders, including themselves, seeking generally to establish the corporation's title to certain properties and to have certain incumbrances thereon declared invalid on account of alleged usurious loans. The amended complaint alleges that B. & H. Circuit, Inc., is the owner of and entitled to the possession of certain real property situate in the city of Los Angeles, and is also the holder of a leasehold interest in and entitled to the possession of certain other real property situate in said city; that upon the property alleged to be owned by said defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., there has been erected and maintained a certain building for theater purposes known as the Forum Theater; that prior to December 17, 1924, in building and equipping said theater defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., had incurred and was owing debts in excess of $600,000, and in addition was owing balances upon certain lease contracts for furnishings; that of such indebtedness approximately $522,500 was owing to defendant Mortgage Investment Company; and that $500,000 thereof was secured by a mortgage and three deeds of trust upon said real property. The balance of the indebtedness was unsecured.

It is alleged that when the loan aggregating said sum of $500,000 was made the defendant Mortgage Investment Company "extracted and deducted from the amount paid to defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., or for its benefit" certain bonuses in violation of the usury laws of the state of California; that notwithstanding the usurious character of said incumbrances defendant Mortgage Investment Company, prior to and upon December 17, 1924, "threatened to foreclose said mortgage and order sales under said trust deeds, well knowing that defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., was unable to pay the same, and by said threats coerced defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., to execute" an agreement dated December 17, 1924, between defendants B. & H. Circuit, Inc., and Mortgage Investment Company. By the terms of this agreement it was provided that defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., should allow defendant Mortgage Investment Company to take possession of all of its property; that its leasehold contracts for furnishings and equipment and its leaseholds on realty and insurance contracts should be conveyed to said defendant Mortgage Investment Company; and that said last-named defendant would accept said possession and conveyances, operate said theater, have a lien on all the property thereof for money paid on leasehold contracts, retain all its rights unimpaired under said mortgage and trust deeds, and that in the event defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., paid all amounts due under the terms of said mortgage and trust deeds and all further advancements of defendant Mortgage Investment Company, together with the stipulated interest, then defendant Mortgage Investment Company would reconvey to defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., all said real and personal property. In the event of foreclosure defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., was to be given an extension of time within which to redeem its property.

It is further alleged that by the terms of said agreement defendant Mortgage Investment Company was let into the possession of the real property of defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., and given the management of said theater as trustee for said last-named defendant and its creditors, obligating itself to operate the same in such manner as would build up a substantial and profitable business, and to redeliver said property to defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., upon October 22, 1925, unless said defendant Mortgage Investment Company sooner acquired superior rights by foreclosure, or unless defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., repaid its indebtedness prior to said date. The property above mentioned constituted the sole assets of the defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., and while in possession thereof and on January 21, 1925, defendant Mortgage Investment Company "by further threats to foreclose its encumbrances coerced defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., to enter into and execute" another agreement which is set out in full in plaintiff's complaint. This latter agreement provided a new plan for refinancing the affairs of defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., and provided for the execution of certain notes, mortgages, and deeds of trust, the last of which, a note for $400,000, payable to defendant Mortgage Investment Company bearing interest at 7 per cent. per annum, was to become due February 18, 1930.

It is further alleged in said amended complaint that the interest upon each of the several notes above referred to is payable quarterly, and that the principal sum upon none of them is yet due; that by the terms of said agreement defendant Mortgage Investment Company "exactd" from defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., an agreement to pay as a part of one of the trust deeds the sum of $25,000 as a brokerage fee; and that said agreement in this is contrary to the usury laws of California and violative of the duty owed by said defendant Mortgage Investment Company to defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., because of the fiduciary relationship existing between the two.

Allegation is further made that by the terms of said agreement the payment of the then existing indebtedness of defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., from the proceeds of the new incumbrances was to be handled through an escrow at the Security Trust & Savings Bank, and that defendant Mortgage Investment Company agreed upon the closing of said escrow to redeliver to defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., all the property taken possession of under the agreement of December 17, 1924; that said escrow was closed on or about June 26, 1925, but that said defendant Mortgage Investment Company nevertheless remained in possession of said property except for a period of time during which said properties were in the possession of receivers appointed in a suit brought by defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., against several of the defendants herein.

In said last-mentioned action defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., sought to restrain defendant Mortgage Investment Company from causing a foreclosure and sale under one of the trust deeds made and executed by virtue of the agreement of January 21, 1925, on the ground that the notes secured by said trust deed were usurious. The receivers in said action held possession of the properties of defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., from about February 8, 1926, to about September 4, 1926.

It is further alleged that at the time of the making of the contract of January 21, 1925, defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., had no money or property except the real property and theater hereinabove referred to and which was in the hands of the defendant Mortgage Investment Company as mortgagee in possession; that it had no income; that foreclosure was threatened by various holders of liens and incumbrances; that defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., was without funds to discharge the said liens and incumbrances, "although the said property was always of a value sufficient to defray all the debts, liens and incumbrances but that at that time it was impossible to sell said property for an amount sufficient to pay off the liens and incumbrances."

It is further alleged that on September 4, 1926, defendant Mortgage Investment Company claimed that a default in interest had occurred on certain notes executed in accordance with the provisions of the agreement of January 21, 1925, and thereupon the officers and directors of defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., or some of them, assented to the dissolving of the temporary restraining order forbidding the sale under the trust deed securing said last-mentioned notes, and to the immediate termination of the receivership in the suit hereinabove referred to, and to a dismissal of said suit, all to the great loss and damage of defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc.; that on or about the said last-mentioned date defendant Title Guarantee & Trust Company, trustees, sold all of the properties belonging to defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., pursuant to the terms of the last referred to trust deed; and that defendant Mortgage Investment Company purchased said properties at said sale and is now the purported owner thereof but without right to the title or possession thereof.

The defendant Producers' Distributing Corporation became a party to the agreement of January 21, 1925, agreeing to pay off certain of the debts of defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., to assist in adjusting and settling other claims, and to advance money to be used as working capital. As this corporate defendant was never served with summons and has never made appearance herein, the allegations concerning it are of no importance in so far as said corporation is concerned. Neither are they important as against the answering defendants, for no coercion is attempted to be shown by said corporation, and the allegations in reference to its exacting from defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., notes and trust deeds in violation of the usury laws of the state of California show neither culpability nor neglect on the part of the board of directors of said last-named corporation. In fact, an examination of the consideration for the said notes and trust deeds shows there was no usury practiced.

The final allegation of the amended complaint is to the effect that the two plaintiffs, Thomson and Fletcher, each demanded of the board of directors and officers of the defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., that they take proper and appropriate legal proceedings similar to the one ultimately brought by appellants, but that said board of directors and officers refused so to do and instead have actively aided the defendant Mortgage Investment Company in securing title to, and possession of, the properties of defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc.

Plaintiffs thereupon pray that all of the said indebtedness, notes, mortgages, and trust deeds be declared usurious in character and invalid; that the parties defendant be directed to make a complete accounting; that the amount of interest paid to any of the defendants be determined, and that defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., have judgment for three times the amount thereof; that a receiver be appointed of all of said property; that the sale by defendant Title Guarantee & Trust Company under one of the trust deeds be set aside; that defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., be declared the owner of said properties, and restored to the possession thereof; that all of the defendants be enjoined from proceeding in or causing any sale or foreclosure of any of said properties; and for general relief.

To this amended complaint the defendants Mortgage Investment Company and B. & H. Circuit, Inc. (respondents herein), filed separate demurrers on the grounds that the amended complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; that there is a misjoinder of causes of action and of parties defendant; and that the complaint is uncertain, ambiguous, and unintelligible in several particulars. These demurrers were sustained without leave to amend and a judgment of dismissal entered.

[1] In their opening brief appellants herein, plaintiffs below, assert that the only point urged in the trial court was that the plaintiffs, minority stockholders, have no right to sue. There is nothing on the face of the record, however, to show that this is the only point considered by the trial court, and this being true, the respondents are well within their rights in showing, if they can, that the trial court for any reason was justified in its action. Burke v. Maguire, 154 Cal. 456, 98 P. 21.

[2] The record upon appeal does not affirmatively show a request for the filing of an amended complaint; therefore there cannot be imputed to the lower court an abuse of discretion in denying plaintiffs' leave to further amend. Aalwyn v. Cobe, 168 Cal. 165, 142 P. 79; Robertson v. Burrell, 110 Cal. 568, at page 579, 42 P. 1086.

The only question, therefore, for this court to determine is whether or not the demurrers of the respondents were for any reason properly sustained.

Said demurrers were, in the opinion of the court, properly sustained for two reasons: First, because the amended complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action by appellants against either of said respondents on the ground of coercion or under the usury law of the state; and, second, because even if the facts alleged stated a cause of action on the part of B. & H. Circuit, Inc., for whose benefit appellants brought suit, the amended complaint does not state facts sufficient to authorize minority stockholders to prosecute such action.

[3] A stockholder in circumstances such as presented here is a mere nominal plaintiff, the corporation is the real party in interest, and any judgment recovered inures to its benefit. 6 Cal. Jur., p. 865.

Appellants herein accordingly attempted to state a cause of action for and on behalf of B. & H. Circuit, Inc., on the grounds that the directors of said corporation were coerced into entering into certain agreements and into executing certain promissory notes, which said promissory notes are void under the usury laws of California.

[4] In so far as the alleged coercion on the part of respondent Mortgage Investment Company is concerned, it is alleged that prior to and upon December 17, 1924, said respondent, to whom there was then and there owing upon a deed of trust the principal sum of $500,000, "threatened to foreclose said mortgage and order sales under said trust deeds, well knowing that defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., was unable to pay the same, and by such threats coerced defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., to execute" a certain agreement. Whether or not the original loan for $500,000 was, as alleged, usurious by reason of certain bonuses having been exacted, is immaterial because the principal sum being due at the time of the alleged threats, the said Mortgage Investment Company was in a position legally to enforce its claims as to said principal.

Under the Usury Law, Statutes 1919, p. lxxxiii, "no person, company, association or corporation shall directly or indirectly take or receive in money, goods or things in action, or in any other manner whatsoever, any greater sum or any greater value for the loan or forbearance of money, goods or things in action than at the rate of twelve dollars upon one hundred dollars for one year." Upon the violation of such inhibition the borrower may recover from the lender in an action at law treble the amount of the money so paid or value delivered in violation of said section, providing the action is brought within one year after payment or delivery; and the lender of money in violation of said inhibition is foreclosed from collecting the principal thereof until the full period of time for its payment has elapsed. The agreement is null and void as to interest only.

The principal sum of $500,000 in this case being wholly due at the time the respondent Mortgage Investment Company is alleged to have threatened to foreclose its mortgage and order sales under its trust deeds, the corporation was well within its rights in demanding its payment and in making the threats complained of. "Persuasion is not coercion; insistence upon one's legal rights is not undue influence and pertinacious zeal to secure the payment of a just debt is not fraudulent." Van Valkenburgh v. Oldham, 12 Cal. App. 572, at page 577, 108 P. 42, 44.

Further coercion on the part of said respondent Mortgage Investment Company is complained of in that on January 21, 1925, it "by further threats to foreclose its encumbrances coerced defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., to enter into and execute another agreement," namely, the agreement of January 21, 1925; but since under the agreement of December 17, 1924, said respondent corporation retained all its rights unimpaired under its original mortgage and trust deeds, it still had a right to foreclose its incumbrances, and therefore for the reasons above expressed its said threats were justifiable and did not constitute coercion.

[5] The only other attack made upon the validity of said agreements, and particularly upon the agreement of January 21, 1925, is that they call for usurious interest. In regard to this it is alleged that by the terms of said last-mentioned agreement respondent Mortgage Investment Company exacted from defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., an agreement to pay, as a part of the trust deeds securing the sum of $143,103.52, the sum of $25,000 as a brokerage fee, and that said agreement is therefore contrary to the usury laws of the state of California "and in defiance of the duty owed by said defendant Mortgage Investment Company to defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., because of the fiduciary relationship existing between defendant Mortgage Investment Company and defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc." Further allegations of the amended complaint, however, show a complete refinancing of the affairs of respondent B. & H. Circuit, Inc., the extension of time within which its indebtedness might be paid, including the extension of the time of payment of a sum of $400,000, for a period of five years, and the bringing into the affairs of the company the defendant Producers' Distributing Corporation with its agreement to advance additional substantial sums of money and to settle outstanding unsecured claims against the said respondent B. & H. Circuit, Inc.

The language of the agreement of January 21, 1925, in reference to the so-called "exaction" of the sum of $25,000 as a brokerage fee is as follows: "It is further understood and agreed that the party of the first part (B. & H. Circuit, Inc.) shall and will execute its promissory note in favor of the party of the second part (Mortgage Investment Company) in the sum of approximately $135,000, said $135,000 being made up of the following items: $100,000 being the balance of the indebtedness secured by mortgage and trust deeds in favor of the party of the second part hereinabove referred to; $25,000 thereof being brokerage fees agreed upon by first and second parties," etc.

It would appear from a reading of the said amended complaint that the brokerage fee referred to was not a fee exacted on account merely of the loan of $135,000, but on account of all of the services and forbearances on the part of said respondent Mortgage Investment Company.

In the case of Haines v. Commercial Mortgage Co., 200 Cal. at page 625, 255 P. 807 (53 A. L. R. 725), it is held that: "The maximum rate allowed for loans coming under the act is at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum for the full period of the loan, and that within such limit the parties may freely contract in respect thereto, if done in writing."

Considering the agreement of January 21, 1925, as a whole, the interest charged on all of the indebtedness of B. & H. Circuit, Inc., to Mortgage Investment Company under the new plan of financing, including the brokerage fee of $25,000, does not equal or exceed the maximum rate of 12 per cent. per annum for the full period of the loans, and, therefore cannot be held usurious.

[6] For the foregoing reasons we are of the opinion that the amended complaint did not state a cause of action on behalf of appellants' corporation, B. & H. Circuit, Inc. Furthermore, the language of said amended complaint in reference to the alleged usury is so ambiguous, uncertain, and unintelligible that the demurrers of the respective defendants could properly be sustained on those stated grounds.

[7] As to said amended complaint stating facts sufficient to entitle appellants (minority stockholders) to institute and maintain this action, even if the corporation itself had a cause of action, it is the law that such actions may be instituted and maintained by stockholders only when the acts of the board of directors of the corporation are either ultra vires, illegal, fraudulent, oppressive, or show willful neglect. Fletcher Cyclopedia of the Law of Private Corporations, § 4065; Hawes v. Oakland, 104 U. S. 450, 26 L. Ed. 827; United Copper Co. v. Amalgamated Copper

[8] The two allegations concerning the acts of the board of directors of respondent B. & H. Circuit, Inc., upon which appellants rely as showing wrongful or negligent acts, are: "The officers and directors of defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., or some of them, assented to the dissolving of the temporary restraining order forbidding a sale under the last mentioned trust deed and to the immediate and summary termination of the receivership in said suit and to dismiss said suit, to the great loss and damage of defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc.," and that after the demands by appellants of the board of trustees and officers of respondent B. & H. Circuit, Inc., "they take the proper and appropriate legal proceedings to have the usurious nature of all the said debts, notes and agreements determined, and said sale to defendant Mortgage Investment Company prevented and enjoined, and to prevent defendants from obtaining the present said wrongful position of advantage over defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., the board of directors and officers of defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc., have stood idly by and have refused and so still refuse to take any such procedure; but, on the other hand, have actively aided the defendant Mortgage Investment Company in securing its apparent wrongful title to, and possession of, the properties of defendant B. & H. Circuit, Inc.; and that said properties constitute all of the assets of said B. & H. Circuit, Inc."

In regard to the board of directors assenting to the dissolution of the temporary restraining order and the termination of the receivership, there is no showing or allegation that such action was either in excess of the authority of the board, fraudulent, or willfully neglectful; and as to the great loss and damage alleged, no showing is made as to what constituted such loss and damage, if any there was.

Concerning the other allegations in reference to the refusal of the officers of respondent B. & H. Circuit, Inc., to bring suit as demanded and that they actively aided respondent Mortgage Investment Company in securing its apparently wrongful title to the properties of the defendant, there is no allegation or showing that such acts were in any wise culpable. The words "apparent wrongful title" have no force in view of the other allegations of the amended complaint which show that the respondent Mortgage Investment Company was well within its rights in requiring the sale of said properties and in buying in the same under the terms of their trust deed.

Considering the amended complaint as a whole, it may well be concluded that the acts of the board of directors of respondent

B. & H. Circuit, Inc., in dismissing the action referred to therein and in not objecting to the sale of its properties under the trust deed of respondent Mortgage Investment Company, instead of being wrongful, constituted an economical and efficient way of terminating an apparently unsuccessful business venture without incurring further and additional liabilities.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

In re APPENFELDER'S ESTATE.

APPENFELDER v. SECURITY TRUST & SAVINGS BANK et al.

(Civ. 6412.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 7, 1929.

1. Constitutional law $\Leftrightarrow$ 70(1)—Court cannot add requirements to statute as to revocation of will (Civ. Code, § 1299).

Court cannot add to Civ. Code, § 1299, as to revocation of will by testator's marriage, any requirements not therein stated.

2. Wills $\Leftrightarrow$ 191—Will held not revoked by testator's marriage to devisee of interest in remainder, though not indicating that testator contemplated marriage to her (Civ. Code, § 1299).

Will devising interest in remainder to wife of testator's nephew held not revoked by her marriage to testator after divorce from nephew, under Civ. Code, § 1299, which does not require that will indicate testator's contemplation of marriage to person provided for therein.

3. Wills $\Leftrightarrow$ 296—Evidence that contestant, claiming revocation of will by her marriage to testator, was person to whom will devised interest in remainder, held admissible (Civ. Code, § 1299).

Testimony that one contesting will on ground that it was revoked by her marriage to testator, under Civ. Code, § 1299, was his nephew's wife, to whom will devised interest in remainder, when it was published, held admissible, not for purpose of construing will or rebutting presumption of revocation, but to show identity of contestant with person named in will.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Albert Lee Stephens, Judge.

Proceedings by the Security Trust & Savings Bank to probate the will of Charles Rudolph Appenfelter, deceased, in favor of Emma C. Appenfelter and others, contested by Katherine Louise Appenfelter. From an order admitting the will to probate, contestant appeals. Affirmed.

Clarke & Bowker, of Los Angeles, and James C. Hollingsworth, of Ventura, for appellant.

Arthur W. Eckman, Melvin T. Dunlavy, and Louis Thomsen, all of Los Angeles, for respondents Emma C. Appenfelder, Hugo William Appenfelder, and Fred A. Appenfelder.

Bert P. Woodward, of Glendale, for respondent Susan K. Appenfelder.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from an order admitting to probate the last will and testament, together with the codicil thereto, of Charles Rudolph Appenfelder, deceased. The decedent executed his will on August 24, 1924, and on March 2, 1926, made the codicil. By these instruments he bequeathed \$2,000 to his former wife (divorced at the time the will was published) and devised to her a life estate in certain real property situate in Glendale, Cal. Of the remainder over, $\frac{1}{8}$ was given to the appellant, Katherine Louise Appenfelder, described in the will as "my niece" but who at the time was in fact the wife of a nephew of the deceased. The balance of the remainder over was distributed among Emma C., Hugo William, and Fred Appenfelder. A like disposition was made of all the rest, residue, and remainder of the estate, i. e., $\frac{1}{8}$ to the appellant, $\frac{17}{40}$ to Emma C. Appenfelder, and $\frac{9}{40}$ each to Hugo William and Fred Appenfelder. On December 8, 1927, the deceased and appellant were married, she having been divorced from her former husband in the meantime. On March 19, 1928, Charles Rudolph Appenfelder died at Cheyenne, Wyo., being at the time a resident of Los Angeles county, Cal. The appellant filed a contest to the probate of the will on the ground that although married to decedent subsequent to the execution of the will no provision was made for her by marriage contract; no provision was made for her in the will; no intention was therein disclosed not to make provision for her, and hence under the provisions of section 1299 of the Civil Code the will was revoked. The section referred to reads as follows: "If, after making a will, the testator marries, and the wife survives the testator, the will is revoked, unless provision has been made for her by marriage contract, or unless she is provided for in the will, or in such way mentioned therein as to show an intention not to make such provision; and no other evidence to rebut the presumption of revocation must be received." In addition to her assertion that the will was revoked by the provisions we have just quoted, the appellant complains that the court erred when it permitted counsel for respondents on cross-examination to elicit from her lips the information that she was the wife of a nephew of the deceased until after the will and codicil were executed and that she knew of no other person named Katherine Louise Appenfelder.

[1] Turning to the first contention of appellant, we quote two significant sentences from her brief which illustrate the underlying thought of her argument. She says: "Throughout all the cases it appears that there must be evidence that the testator would have the event, that is, his marriage 'in contemplation,'" and, "It appears to us to be the declared law of California that in order to overcome the presumption of revocation by marriage it must appear that the party named was provided for 'as a wife' or as an 'intended wife,' and that there must be language in the will indicating an intention upon the part of testator to make such a provision." The crux of the matter may then be said to be whether the quoted section of the Code requires the will to provide for the individual or to provide for the person in the capacity of an intended spouse. In other words, must the will disclose that it was executed in contemplation of marriage or is the section satisfied if the person is actually provided for? We must confess that the question is most interesting and from a strictly academic basis would warrant a résumé of the authorities from the early English cases down to the present time. However, we are not here dealing with the doctrine of implied revocation inherited and reluctantly adopted by the common law from the ecclesiastical courts, but we are confronted with a statutory enactment relating to the revocation of wills under specified circumstances. Or as was said in Estate of Meyer, 44 Cal. App. 289, 186 P. 393, in speaking of the companion section of the Code which refers to issue, "We cannot read into section 1298 any exception which the legislature did not incorporate therein." In the same case the court observed "It" (the will) "was revoked, not by implication, but by positive statutory enactment. * * *" It must be patent that if no exception can be read into the section, that no requirements not therein stated may be added. If the doctrine of implied revocation cannot be applied in the one case, we cannot resort to it in the other. Our problem then is wholly a question of statutory construction. The cases of Ellis v. Darden, 86 Ga. 368, 12 S. E. 652, 11 L. R. A. 51, and Sutton v. Hancock, 115 Ga. 857, 42 S. E. 214, relied upon by the appellant, are not persuasive or of assistance for the reason that the controlling section of the Code of Georgia specifically provides that the provisions of the will shall have been in contemplation of the event of marriage or birth of issue as the case may be. Nor are Brown v. Scherrer, 5 Colo. App. 255, 38 P. 427, and In re Toepfer, 12 N. M. 372, 78 P. 53, 67 L. R. A. 315, helpful. Both cases were decided upon the doctrine of implied revocation, and in neither was the surviving spouse in any way mentioned. In fact, the real question in each case was whether marriage alone, without birth of issue, was sufficient, under the doctrine, to work a revocation by operation of law. On the other hand, the case of In re Adler's Estate, 52 Wash. 543, 100 P. 1019, involved a statutory enactment identical in all material respects with our own, and the comments of the Washington Supreme Court concerning its interpretation are very persuasive to our minds. The court says: "It will be seen by those who are inclined to follow the cases that our statute is a wide departure from the common law as well as the theories usually advanced to sustain that rule, and that it differs from the statutes of any other state, at least in so far as they have been construed in the decisions." The premise thus laid down is in its essence the same as that established in Estate of Meyer, supra, from which we have already quoted. The court then goes on to say:

"When the legislature has assumed to speak upon a given subject, courts must take its expression as it is; and, if it be certain in its terms, there is no reason for speculation as to its reasons or warrant for adding anything to meet a given case. The provisions of section 4598, Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St., are in the disjunctive. If [unless] a person shall have made a marriage settlement, or if [unless] the wife shall have been provided for, or if [unless] an intent not to make such provision is disclosed, the will is deemed revoked. It does not say that the provision must be made in contemplation of marriage. The only question open is whether the person who has become a proper object of the bounty of the testator is provided for. Nor will we take any concern of the amount of the provision. To bring ourselves within one of the several rules to which we have referred, we have no right to read into our statute the words 'unless it clearly appears,' or 'was made in contemplation of marriage.' It is conceded that parol evidence is incompetent to explain the will. This furnishes further reason to sustain our views. Taking the statute as it is, may we not say that, presuming that the testator did not, at the time of executing the will, have in mind the changed condition to be wrought by a subsequent marriage, upon the happening of that event, being mindful of his will, he was satisfied with the provision he had made for respondent? Under the common law and statutes in form different from our own, the law presumes a testator would have made another will, but under our statute the presumption should not follow, for the person in whose behalf the law was written is provided for, and the end of the law is fully accomplished. There is nothing in the will to show a counter intent. To hold otherwise it seems to us would be in effect to say that we should overturn this will because the legislature was not as fully provided for as in our judgment a wife should be, or has not received as much as she would have received under the statutes of descent. [Italics ours.] If we could do that, we might, in the interest of heirs in a given case, overturn the will because the person provided for had more than enough to meet the presumed duty of the testator. Said Chancellor Kent: 'It would be dangerous, and might lead to loose speculations, to give greater effect than the settled doctrine of the English law has already done, to the occurrence of new domestic duties. Every person is permitted to make his own will, at his discretion; and he may even disinherit his children, if he should be so inclined, whether they deserved, or not, such extreme chastisement. Every material addition to the property of a testator, or alteration in the circumstances of his family, varies his relations and duties, either in kind or degree, and might be made the ground of very plausible and pathetic claims upon the court for the application of this doctrine of a presumed revocation. Courts would be running the hazard of substituting their will for that of the testator.' (Brush v. Wilkins, [4 Johns Ch. 506] supra.)

"In thus disposing of this case, we can give effect to another most salutary rule. While we have said that in our judgment the grounds upon which wills are or may be revoked are statutory, it is also the rule that revocation of wills by implication of law are not favored. The reason for overturning a will must supplant every other consideration. Where wills have been held to be so revoked by implication, it was because of some reason so controlling that the presumption followed that the testator himself upon the happening of the event would not have published the document as his will. There is nothing in the will before us, and nothing is suggested in the statute, that would warrant the indulgence of this presumption on our part. * * * Our conclusion then is that the words, 'or unless she be provided for in the will,' being in the disjunctive and in no way qualified by the usual term 'in contemplation of marriage,' refer to a condition existing at the time of death, and not necessarily to an intended wife. A person being provided for may, by intermarriage with the testator, bring herself within the operation of the statute. If she be provided for in the will, as she is in the case at bar, she comes within our statute, as under the rules to which we have referred she would have fallen without it. Alfred Adler having made his will, and afterwards married, his wife surviving him, at least one of three things must appear: He must have made a marriage settlement, or she must be provided for in the will, or so mentioned as to indicate his intention not to make such provision. The statute must be construed to read as follows:

"If after making any will the testator shall marry and the wife shall be living at the time of the death of the testator, such will shall be deemed revoked * * * unless she be provided for in the will. * * * " Hannah Adler is provided for in the will, and is concluded by its terms."

[2] Had it been the intention of the Legislature to say that the provision of the will should indicate that the testator had in contemplation the event of marriage, it would have been a very simple process for it to have inserted a phrase to that effect after the clause "or unless she is provided for in the will." For example, it might have added immediately after the word "will" the following: "In such a manner as to indicate that the testator had in contemplation the event of marriage." We read the Estate of Kurtz, 190 Cal. 146, 210 P. 959, as indicating the same construction of our Code as we think it should bear. In that case the will contained a clause disinheriting all persons claiming to be heirs at law except those named in the instrument and giving to any person asserting any claim to the estate other than by the will the sum of $1. The day following the execution of the will the testator married and the Supreme Court held that the clause "any person whomsoever, who if I died intestate would be entitled to any part of my estate" included the surviving spouse, stating that it was not necessary to mention her by name, but was sufficient to include her "in the description of a class." We think the trial court was manifestly right in holding that there was no revocation.

[3] We now turn to the second argument of appellant, to the effect that the court erred in admitting testimony concerning the identity of the appellant. She argues that section 1299 is not concerned with the interpretation or construction of wills, and further that it provides that "no other evidence (other than the will) to rebut the presumption of revocation must be received." We do not understand that the testimony was received either for the purpose of construing the will or of rebutting the presumption of revocation. It related solely to the identity of the appellant whose name was identical with that in the will, and whose name was actually in the will. It was held in Estate of Kurtz, supra, that evidence of an engagement at the time the will was executed was admissible for the purpose of showing "who the maker of the will intended to include by the phrase 'any person whomsoever who, if I died intestate, would be entitled to any part of my estate,' a phrase which, if he had not been then engaged to marry the contestant, would be somewhat ambiguous, but which would be made certain by showing the fact of such engagement." So here the identity was established by showing that appellant was in fact the wife of a nephew at the time the will was published.

Order affirmed.

EAST BAY MUNICIPAL UTILITY DIST. v. KIEFFER et al. (two cases).★

SAME v. PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC CO. et al.

(Civ. Nos. 3480-3482.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 29, 1929.

Rehearing Denied June 26, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 25, 1929.

1. Eminent domain ⇨153—Holder of option is not entitled to compensation for lands under option taken or severance of such lands from lands owned by him.

Option to purchase land is not interest in land itself but mere right of election to accept or reject present offer within time fixed, and holder of such option is not entitled to any part of compensation to be paid for land nor to any damages by reason of severance of such lands from other lands owned by him.

2. Eminent domain ⇨209—Determination by court without jury as to whether defendant's several tracts of land constituted single parcel held not error, where evidence was not conflicting (Code Civ. Proc. § 1248, subd. 2).

Determination by court without presence of jury whether several tracts of land owned by defendant constituted single parcel within meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 1248, subd. 2, was not erroneous, where there was no conflicting evidence bearing on issue.

3. Eminent domain ⇨137—Where condemnation proceedings were tried within year of commencement, court properly ruled that tracts separated by lands held under option exercised during pendency of proceedings did not constitute "single parcel" (Code Civ. Proc. § 1249, and § 1248, subd. 2).

Where proceedings for condemnation of separate parcels of land were tried within year after commencement of proceeding, court properly ruled under Code Civ. Proc. § 1249, that defendant's tracts separated by lands which he held only under option at commencement of proceedings were separate tracts, not constituting single parcel under section 1248, subd. 2, notwithstanding he exercised option during pendency of proceedings.

4. Eminent domain ⇨320—Title acquired by plaintiff as against intervening rights of persons having actual or constructive notice of condemnation suits relates back to commencement of suits.

Title finally acquired by plaintiff in condemnation suits as against intervening rights of persons having actual or constructive notice of such suits relates back to commencement of such suits.

5. Eminent domain ⇨262(5)—Court's observation as to misleading purpose of defendant's attempt to introduce incompetent evidence held not prejudicial, in view of later admonition.

Court in eminent domain proceedings having determined on unconflicting evidence that defendant's lands did not constitute single parcel, remarks of court as to misleading purpose of defendant's insistence on attempting to prove to jury that lands constituted single parcel held not prejudicial, in view of court's admonition.

6. Evidence ⇨145—Evidence of current prices of water and electric energy held too remote on question of value of reservoir lands taken.

In eminent domain proceedings to condemn reservoir lands, evidence as to current price of water and electric energy held properly excluded as too remote on issue of market value of land taken.

7. Evidence ⇨502—Permitting cross-examination in proceedings to take land for reservoir purposes as to value of land with reservoir use eliminated held not error.

In eminent domain proceedings to take land for reservoir purposes, permitting cross-examination of defendant's witnesses as to market value of land with reservoir use eliminated held not erroneous.

8. Evidence ⇨558(8)—Cross-examination to test witness' knowledge and impeach opinions, as to other sales in vicinity and prices recently paid by defendant, was not erroneous.

In eminent domain proceedings, cross-examination of witnesses as to their knowledge of other sales of land in vicinity and of prices recently paid by defendant for lands taken was not erroneous for purpose of testing knowledge of witnesses and impeaching opinions as to value.

9. Eminent domain ⇨262(5)—Exclusion of testimony of value of condemned lands held not prejudicial, in view of numerous witnesses testifying on issue.

Exclusion of testimony of witness as to value of lands taken in eminent domain proceedings was not prejudicial, where 12 other witnesses testified on such issue, and testimony excluded would not have been of great weight.

10. Eminent domain ⇨262(5)—Exclusion of testimony as to obvious facts explanatory of cross-examination held not prejudicial.

In eminent domain proceedings, exclusion of testimony on redirect examination explanatory of witness' testimony as to market prices of land in another reservoir condemnation proceeding held not prejudicial, where testimony sought to be adduced was as to fact obvious to jury.

11. Eminent domain ⇨262(5)—Admission of water filings was not prejudicial, where substance of evidence was previously adduced without objection, and later defendant supplied list of filings and dates.

Admission of evidence of water filings in condemnation proceeding was not prejudicial, where most of facts shown by such filings were brought out without objection on cross-examination of appellant's witness, and on redirect examination appellant gave list of such filings and dates thereof.

12. Eminent domain ⇨202(1, 4)—On issue of value, defendant cannot show plaintiff's necessity to obtain water from particular source or special value to plaintiff of such supply.

In eminent domain proceedings to take land for water reservoir purposes, on issue of value of land defendant has no right to show plaintiff's necessity of obtaining supply of water from that particular source of special value to plaintiff of such supply.

13. Eminent domain ⇨202(4)—Exclusion of portions of engineer's report as to necessity and desirability of defendant's lands for reservoir purposes held not error.

Exclusion of portions of engineer's report showing desirability and necessity of defendant's lands for reservoir purposes held not error on issue of damages.

14. Eminent domain ⇨219—Permitting plaintiff to open and close was within discretion of trial court.

Permitting counsel for plaintiff in condemnation proceedings to open and close argument to jury was discretionary with trial court.

15. Appeal and error ⇨1060(1)—Limiting argument in condemnation proceedings to three hours held not prejudicial, in absence of objection or showing of injury.

Limitation of argument of counsel on each side to three hours held not prejudicial in eminent domain proceedings, in absence of any objection or showing of injury.

16. Eminent domain ⇨222(4)—Instruction as to "fair" value and price of lands held not misleading.

Instructions as to fair value and fair price of land to be taken held not misleading, in view of accurate definition of market value repeatedly given; word "fair" as so used meaning honest rather than average or middling.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Fair.]

17. Eminent domain ⇨222(4)—Instruction in condemnation proceedings not to consider defendant's claim of value of land to him held not erroneous as directing that his testimony be disregarded.

Instruction in eminent domain proceedings that in arriving at value of land jurors are not to consider what defendant claims it was worth to him held not erroneous as directing jury to disregard defendant's testimony.

18. Eminent domain ⇨222(4)—Instruction defining preponderance of evidence as not number of witnesses but evidence producing "conviction" in unprejudiced minds held not misleading.

In eminent domain proceedings, instruction that defendant is required to prove his side of issue by preponderance of evidence, and that by preponderance of evidence is meant not number of witnesses but that evidence which produces "conviction" in unprejudiced minds, held not erroneous or misleading, though academically inaccurate; word "conviction" in sense used meaning the state of being convinced, convincing by satisfactory proof.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Convicted; Conviction.]

19. Eminent domain $\S$ 262(5)—Refusal of instruction as to federal power license in ascertaining value of lands taken for reservoir purposes held not prejudicial, where jurors must have understood provisions.

In condemnation proceedings to acquire lands for water reservoir, where plaintiff's license was introduced in evidence, and certain articles thereof read to jury, and jury instructed that requirements of license might be considered in determining value of defendant's lands, refusal of instruction as to right of Federal Power Commission and plaintiff to modify or alter provisions of license was not prejudicial, in view of fact that jurors must have clearly understood provisions of article referred to without such instruction.

20. Eminent domain $\S$ 222(4)—Refusal of instruction as to commonplace facts to be considered in fixing value held not erroneous.

Refusal of instruction in eminent domain proceedings that jury, in testing opinions of witnesses who had considered other sales in arriving at market value, might consider whether parties to other sales knew and appreciated adaptability for useful purposes of property sold or purchased, was not erroneous, being statement of mere commonplace.

21. Trial $\S$ 260(5)—Refusal of instructions to consider plaintiff "competitor" of defendant, and "demand" for reservoir site in fixing value of land taken, held not erroneous, in view of other instructions.

In eminent domain proceedings to take lands for water purposes, refusal of instructions as to consideration by jury of defendant's status as competitor of plaintiff and as to demand for reservoir sites in general held not erroneous, in view of instruction given permitting jury to consider plaintiff as competitor for land sought to be condemned; word "demand" as used meaning desire to purchase commodity accompanied by means of payment, and word "competitor" meaning one who desires and endeavors to buy same property or in same market as another, and has means of payment.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second and Third Series, Competitor; First, Second, and Third Series, Demand.]

22. Evidence $\S$ 568(4)—Award held not unsupported because less than values fixed by defendant's witnesses and considerably larger than those fixed by plaintiff's witnesses.

That defendant's witnesses in eminent domain proceedings all testified to values greatly in excess of award of jury, which, in turn, was considerably larger than values fixed by plaintiff's witnesses, held not to show that award was inadequate and not supported by evidence.

Appeals from Superior Court, Amador County; C. P. Vicini, Judge.

Separate condemnation proceedings by the East Bay Municipal Utility District, a body corporate and politic of the state of California, against Stephen E. Kieffer and others, consolidated for trial. From adverse judgments, the defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

James F. Peck and F. J. Solinsky, both of San Francisco, T. A. Farrell, of Sacramento, Wm. G. Snyder, of Jackson, and Charles F. Rafferty, of San Francisco, for appellant.

T. P. Wittschen, of Oakland, T. G. Negrich and Ralph McGee, both of San Francisco, and L. W. Irving, of Oakland, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The defendant Kieffer, who will be referred to as the defendant, has appealed from the judgments in three separate proceedings in eminent domain. The three cases were consolidated for trial and tried together.

The plaintiff district includes within its boundaries the principal cities on the easterly shore of San Francisco bay. For the purpose of providing a water supply for these cities, the plaintiff selected a reservoir site, referred to by the parties as the Lancha Plana site, on the Mokelumne river, with the object of impounding the waters of that stream. Northerly and over a ridge from the Lancha Plana site is another reservoir site, referred to as the Arroyo Seco site. The plaintiff was granted a license by the Federal Power Commission to construct and operate its proposed dam and reservoir, and it acquired some of the lands in the reservoir site. Prior to the commencement of these suits, the defendant had acquired title to large areas of land in both the Lancha Plana and the Arroyo Seco sites and options to purchase other lands in both sites. He had also acquired title to all but a small parcel of a strip of land connecting the larger areas owned by him in the two reservoir sites; this small parcel being in the middle of the strip, and the title thereto being in Lee De Vries. At the time the first two suits were commenced, the defendant held a mere option to purchase this De Vries parcel. He thereafter allowed the option to expire, but it was subsequently renewed, and he acquired title from De Vries before the third suit was filed.

September 7, 1926, the complaint in the first suit was filed and summons issued. The lands sought to be condemned by that suit consist of 5,657.1 acres owned by the defendant and lying on the Mokelumne side of the ridge. On the same day, in like manner, the plaintiff commenced the second suit to condemn 360 acres of land immediately along the Mokelumne river, owned by the Pacific Gas & Electric Company, on which the defendant held an option to purchase, and to which he acquired title before the trial. After the commencement of the first two suits, the defendant acquired title to 1,248 acres of other lands on the Mokelumne side of the ridge, on which he held options when the first two suits were commenced, and on December 20, 1926, the plaintiff commenced the third proceeding, by which it sought to condemn those lands. Prior to that time, as stated the defendant had acquired title to the De Vries parcel of land, thereby consolidating all his holdings, except a small isolated parcel. The lands taken by the third suit, however, were entirely separated by those condemned in the first two proceedings from the other lands belonging to the defendant. The lands condemned in the three suits were not wholly within the reservoir site, but with two exceptions, included all of the defendant's contiguous lands; severance damages being thereby reduced to a minimum.

[1] The defendant in his answers claimed damages by reason of the severance of lands under option from lands owned by him which were taken. On motion of the plaintiff, the court struck out the allegations of the answers relating to such damages.

It may be conceded that an option to purchase land is property, but it does not constitute an interest in the land itself. "An option is not a transfer of property. No title is conveyed thereby. It is a mere right of election * * * to accept or reject a present offer within the time therein fixed." Ware v. Quigley, 176 Cal. 694, 698, 169 P. 377, 378; Ludy v. Zumwalt, 85 Cal. App. 119, 130, 259 P. 52. The holder of a mere option to purchase land being condemned is not entitled to any part of the compensation to be paid therefor. Russakov v. McCarthy Co. (Cal. Sup.) 275 P. 808; In re Water Front on Upper New York Bay, 246 N. Y. 1, 157 N. E. 911. The lands under option referred to in the allegations stricken out were not sought to be condemned by the plaintiff. If it be contended that the defendant's ownership of the options enhanced the value to him of the lands taken, the obvious answer is that the value thereof to him or to any person in his situation is immaterial; he being entitled only to the market value of such lands and not to any special value thereof to him by reason of his advantageous position. 10 Cal. Jur. 339; Oakland v. Pacific Coast Lumber & Mill Co., 171 Cal. 392, 399, 153 P. 705. Since the appellant had no interest in the lands under option, it is axiomatic that he was not entitled to damages by reason of their severance from his lands which were taken, if such taking may be termed a severance. Of course, if the lands under option had been held under a contract obligating the defendant to purchase them, a different rule would apply.

[2, 3] Over the defendant's objection, the trial court, without the presence of the jury, heard and determined the issue of whether or not the several tracts of land owned by the defendant constituted a single parcel within the meaning of section 1248, subd. 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure, relating to severance damages. Appellant contends that this issue should have been determined by the jury. It is unnecessary to decide what the general rule is, because in this case there is no conflict in the evidence bearing upon that issue, and it was therefore "essentially a question of law for the determination of the court." Oakland v. Pacific Coast Lumber & Mill Co., supra. The court found that the defendant's lands on the Arroyo Seco side of the ridge constituted a separate parcel from those which were taken. It follows from what has already been said that this finding is the only one that could be made from the evidence in so far as the first two proceedings are concerned. "For the purpose of assessing compensation and damages the right thereof shall be deemed to have accrued at the date of the issuance of summons and its actual value at that date shall be the measure of compensation for all property to be actually taken, and the basis of damages to the property not actually taken but injuriously affected, in all cases where such damages are allowed as provided in section 1248," if the case is tried within a year after the commencement of the proceeding. Code Civ. Proc. § 1249. These proceedings were tried within a year after the first two were commenced. At the time they were commenced, the De Vries parcel, on which the defendant held a mere option, divided his holdings into two separate parcels. Damages by reason of severance is limited to land which is contiguous to that taken. Oakland v. Pacific Coast Lumber & Mill Co., supra; City of Stockton v. Ellingwood (Cal. App.) 275 P. 228. In the Oakland Case there was an existing unity of use between the parcels of land in question, but no physical contiguity. In this case the unity of use asserted by the appellant is prospective and problematical only.

[4] Prior to the time the third proceeding was commenced, the defendant had acquired title to the De Vries parcel, thereby establishing physical contiguity between the two larger parcels. He contends that therefore he "has the right to have the question of severance damages, with reference to the last suit filed, determined just as though the first two suits had not been filed, except in so far as he would receive double allowance" by considering the facts of each case without reference to those of the others. However plausible this argument may seem at first blush, it will not bear analysis. At the time the first two suits were commenced, the defendant had not acquired title to the lands sought to be condemned by the third, and the latter lands were entirely separated by the lands involved in the first two suits from all other lands owned by the defendant. Had the first two suits been tried and title thereby acquired before the third one was commenced there would be no basis for appellant's contention that the lands taken by the third suit are a part of the same parcel as the Arroyo Seco lands. The fact that the third suit was commenced before the others were tried rather than thereafter can make no difference. The defendant had answered the complaints in the first two suits, and therefore must have had knowledge thereof prior to the time he acquired title to the lands condemned by the third. The title finally acquired by the plaintiff in the first two suits, as against intervening rights of persons having actual or constructive notice of such suits, relates back to the commencement thereof. Smith v. Jeffcoat, 196 Ala. 96, 71 So. 717; School District of Ogden v. Smith, 113 Ark. 530, 168 S. W. 1089; Currie v. Bangor & A. R. Co., 105 Me. 529, 75 A. 51; Dowie v. Chicago, W. & N. S. R. Co., 214 Ill. 49, 73 N. E. 354; 16 Cal. Jur. 652. The defendant's right to damages by reason of severance in the third suit is the same as if, at the time the first two proceedings were commenced, he had conveyed to the plaintiff the lands condemned in those suits.

[5] After the trial court had determined that the defendant's lands in the two reservoir sites did not constitute a single parcel, a jury was impaneled to determine the compensation to which the defendant is entitled. At the trial before the jury, the defendant again sought to introduce evidence to show that all his lands constituted a single parcel. After sustaining numerous objections to the introduction of such evidence, the court said: "I can see the purpose of it, and it is absolutely intended to hereafter mislead somebody." In the final instructions to the jury, the court said: "Remarks and arguments of counsel * * * and any remarks made by the court during such arguments * * * should be disregarded by you in arriving at your verdict." Without attempting to justify the remarks in question, the error of making them is not deemed sufficiently serious, in view of the instruction quoted, to require a reversal.

While the court refused to permit proof that the market value of the defendant's lands in the Arroyo Seco basin would be depreciated by the taking of the lands condemned, the defendant was permitted to introduce evidence tending to show that the availability of the Arroyo Seco basin as a reservoir site enhanced the market value of the lands taken; the evidence showing that, when the Lancha Plana reservoir is full, the surplus waters of the Mokelumne river can be readily diverted through the reservoir and across the ridge mentioned into the Arroyo Seco basin. In an effort to overcome the effect of such evidence, the plaintiff introduced its federal license, by the terms of which the plaintiff is required, at its own cost and expense, to construct and maintain a spillway for the purpose of diverting such surplus waters to any authorized user thereof in the Arroyo Seco basin.

[6] The defendant was permitted to show

the volume of water flowing in the Mokelumne river, the capacity of the Lancha Plana reservoir, and the capacity of a reservoir which could be constructed in the Arroyo Seco basin, the amount of electric power which could be developed, the irrigable lands in need of water, the cities and towns, including those in the plaintiff district, which could be supplied with water and power from such a combined reservoir system and the amount now consumed by them, the available use of the system as a means of flood control and of protecting the delta lands of the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers against salt water. The defendant was not permitted to show the present selling prices of water and power, the increase in the market value of the irrigable lands mentioned which would result from a "dependable water supply," the increase in value of delta lands which would be caused by holding back the salt water, and other evidence tending to show the returns to be received from the sale of water and electric power. The defendant sought to make such proof by his own witnesses and by cross-examining plaintiff's witnesses. In a proceeding to condemn a completed water and power system, in full operation, evidence of the character in question would have a direct bearing upon the value of the system.

The Supreme Court of this state has never said "that the value in use, as contradistinguished from the estimated value of a proposed problematical use, might not be given in terms of money, not as determinative of the question, but as being evidence of the ultimate fact which the jury is called upon to find, namely the market value." Oakland v. Pacific Coast Lumber & Mill Co., supra. But the relation between the value of land in a proposed reservoir and the current price of water and electric energy is too remote and conjectural to be of any reliable assistance to the jury in determining the market value of the land taken. Although the evidence rejected consisted of proof of past and present facts, the inference sought to be drawn therefrom is highly speculative. Speculative and conjectural calculations of prospective receipts and expenditures and consequent profits to be derived from a prospective enterprise not only throw no light on the issue of the market value of the land to be used in the enterprise, but operate to confuse and mislead the minds of the jurors. San Diego Land and Town Co. v. Neale, 88 Cal. 50, 61, 25 P. 977, 11 L. R. A. 604. "It is said in some cases that it is proper to consider every element of value which would be taken into consideration in a sale between private parties. But this needs some qualification, since remote and speculative reasons are often urged by the seller in support of the valuation claimed." Lewis on Eminent Domain (3d Ed.) § 706. In section 709 of the same work, by way of illustration, it is said: "It may be shown that land is suitable for raising cranberries, but it is not competent to go into the price of cranberries, the quantity which might be raised, and the like." It is well settled in this state that evidence of the character in question is inadmissible. City of Los Angeles v. Hughes, 202 Cal. 731, 734, 262 P. 737; City of Stockton v. Vote, 76 Cal. App. 369, 400, 244 P. 609; San Joaquin, etc., Canal & Irrigation Co. v. Stevinson, 63 Cal. App. 767, 769, 220 P. 427. The admission of evidence which leads to conjectural speculations is equally harmful, whether on cross-examination or direct.

[7] Appellant contends that the court erred in requiring his witnesses, on cross-examination, "to state the market value of the land with the reservoir use eliminated." Such testimony was, in effect, a statement of the value of the land for particular purposes. Great latitude is allowed in the cross-examination of witnesses who have testified to the market value of land. 10 Cal. Jur. 1028. In City of Stockton v. Ellingwood (Cal. App.) 275 P. 228, the following language is quoted from Tracy v. City of Mount Pleasant, 165 Iowa, 435, 146 N. W. 78: "Undoubtedly inquiry would be proper on cross-examination as to what purpose a witness thought the property available for and his notion of its market value for such purpose."

[8] For the purpose of testing the knowledge of such witnesses and impeaching their opinions as to values, the court permitted the plaintiff to ask them, on cross-examination, to state their knowledge of other sales of land in the vicinity and of prices recently paid by the defendant for the lands taken. This was not error. 10 Cal. Jur. 364. The court instructed the jury that such evidence "can only be considered by you as testing the opinions of witnesses who testified to the value of the lands sought to be condemned."

[9] The court refused to allow the witness Campini to give his opinion as to the market value of the land. His knowledge of market values of lands was not such as to give much weight to any opinion he might have stated, but it would not have been error to permit him to give it. However, the defendant produced twelve other witnesses, who gave their opinions as to the market value of the lands taken, ranging from $10,348,982.50 to $15,000,000, and their estimates of severance damages ranging from $210,000 to $1,680,000. In Vallejo, etc., R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 169 Cal. 545, 576, 147 P. 238, 252, in considering a similar ruling, the court said: "It does not appear that qualified witnesses on the subject were at all difficult to obtain. Before this witness was called the defendants had already called seven witnesses who had testified on the subject of value. Hence, even if the ruling had been clearly erroneous, we cannot say that it was sufficiently prejudicial to warrant a reversal."

of land in the Exchequer reservoir basin, and, in an effort to account for the low prices paid for such land, he testified that it was necessary to move a railroad from that basin at a cost of $5,000,000. In redirect examination he was asked why he included the $5,000,000 so expended in the cost of that reservoir. The court sustained the plaintiff's objection to the question. While the objection might well have been overruled, no prejudice was sustained by appellant by reason of the ruling made. The reason sought to be shown by the witness is perfectly obvious and one which every juror must have inferred from the facts already proved. It cannot be presumed that any juror was so lacking in intelligence as not to know that, other things being equal, a reservoir site which is free from obstructions is of greater value than one from which an obstruction must be removed at great expense.

[11] Appellant contends that it was error to admit in evidence "certain water filings of J. W. Preston et al." Most of the facts shown by these filings were brought out, without objection, on cross-examination of the defendant's witnesses long before the filings themselves were introduced. Subsequently, and before the filings were introduced, the defendant, on redirect examination, gave a list of the Preston filings and the dates thereof. Under the circumstances stated the appellant cannot be heard to complain of the introduction of the filings in evidence.

[12, 13] The defendant sought to show that, in a report made to the plaintiff by one of its engineers, it was stated that the district was without a reliable water supply "and none that can be relied upon to meet the natural growth of future years. * * * Industries have, consequently, sought other locations. * * * The time has come when it is imperatively necessary for the East Bay District to undertake, as quickly as possible, the provision of a large and generous water supply of a high degree of purity, and to end, once and for all, the danger of water famine that has been hanging like a millstone around its neck for the past generation, impeding the growth of the cities and threatening their very existence." The court sustained plaintiff's objection to such parts of the report and other similar statements therein, as well as other evidence to the same effect. Appellant was permitted, however, to introduce parts of the report stating that "the surplus supply has never been large, and the district has at times been on short rations. * * * The (Mokelumne) supply is the nearest of any of which the quality is satisfactory. * * * The designated source" is "the quickest, the cheapest, the purest, the safest, and the best supply available. We are of the opinion that a supply of 50 M. G. D. can be obtained from the Mokelumne river by the construction of the first unit of this project at a capital expenditure of about $39,000,000." It is urged that the evidence excluded tends "to show the state and condition of the 'market' for the lands in question, from the viewpoint of their availability for reservoir use."

[14] Granting that the appellant had the right to show that the cities in the plaintiff district, as well as other cities and communities, furnished an available market for the water which could be impounded in the reservoir in question, that fact was abundantly shown by the parts of the report admitted in evidence. Indeed, the most skeptical would not require further proof thereof than the willingness of the plaintiff to expend $39,000,000 to secure a supply of water from that source. The appellant did not have the right to show the plaintiff's necessity of obtaining a supply of water from that particular source or the special value to the plaintiff of such a supply. City of Stockton v. Vote, supra; City of Stockton v. Ellingwood (Cal. App.) 275 P. 228. Over the defendant's objection, the court permitted counsel for the plaintiff to open and close the argument to the jury. It was a matter within the discretion of the trial court. Mendocino County v. Peters, 2 Cal. App. 24, 29, 82 P. 1122; People v. Hickman (Cal. Sup.) 268 P. 909.

[15] It is contended that the court abused its discretion in limiting defendant's time to argue the case to a period of three hours. Admittedly, "the duration of an argument is a matter which rests largely in the discretion of the trial court." In this case there was but a single issue to be determined by the jury. Counsel for both parties consumed a part of the time allotted to them in the argument of matters which the jury had no right to consider. The material evidence bearing on the issue of value was not difficult to understand, and it cannot be held that the limitation was an abuse of discretion. Plaintiff's opening argument was completed at about the usual adjournment time in the evening, and the question arose as to the hour at which court should convene the next morning. Counsel who argued the case for the defendant said: "I would prefer nine, * * * because I want to get through before twelve. * * * It may not take that long." Appellant has not called attention to any objection in the record to the limit placed on the time for argument or to any request for further time. It does not appear that the defendant was prejudiced by such limitation.

The court gave the following instructions:

"I instruct you that the amount of the damage that should be awarded to the defendant Stephen E. Kieffer for the property sought to be condemned in these actions is the market value, which term 'market value' means the highest price, estimated in terms of money, which such property would have brought, * * * if exposed for sale in the open market, with a reasonable time within which to find a purchaser buying with a knowledge of all the uses and purposes for which said lands are adapted, and for which same were and are capable. * * * The question for you to consider is, if Stephen E. Kieffer had wanted to sell these properties in the condition they were in on the dates heretofore mentioned, what could he have obtained for the said properties on the market, having been allowed a reasonable time in which to find a purchaser buying with a knowledge of all the uses and purposes to which such properties were adapted and for which said properties were capable, from parties who wanted to buy and who would give the fair value for such properties.

"You are not to consider what the land was worth to the defendant Stephen E. Kieffer, the owner, for speculation or merely possible uses, nor what he claims it was worth to him. * * *

"The term 'market value' and the term 'actual value' as used in these cases and in these instructions means one and the same thing. It means the highest price in terms of money at which the properties in question could have been sold. * * * It contemplates a seller who is not forced to sell, but who is willing to sell at a fair price. It contemplates a buyer who is willing to buy at a fair price and desires to buy the kind of property in question, but is not forced to buy. It contemplates a buyer who buys with an accurate knowledge of all the characteristics of the property. * * * It does not contemplate an execution sale, or a foreclosure sale, or any other forced sale."

[16, 17] Appellant objects to the terms "fair value" and "fair price" as used in the foregoing instructions. It is apparent that the word "fair" as here used means "honest" rather than "average" or "middling." The jury could not have been misled by the use of such terms after the accurate definition of the term "market value" which the court repeatedly gave. Objection is also made to the statement that in arriving at the value of the land the jurors are not to consider what the defendant "claims it was worth to him." Appellant contends that this was in effect a direction to disregard the defendant's testimony as to the value of the land. The contention is manifestly without merit. What the defendant claims the property is worth "to him" or what it is actually worth "to him" is immaterial; he being entitled only to its market value, regardless of what it is worth "to him."

[18] The court instructed the jury that the defendant "is required to prove his side of the issue by a preponderance of the evidence. By preponderance of the evidence is meant not the number of witnesses testifying for either party, but that evidence which produces conviction in the unprejudiced minds of the jurors." No other definition of the term "preponderance of the evidence" was requested by either party or given by the court. The ordinary meaning of the word "conviction," in the sense here used, is the state of being convinced, and to convince is to satisfy by proof. To produce conviction in the mind is to satisfy the mind; the terms being synonymous. Instructions containing one or both of these terms have been considered in many cases. De La Torre v. Johnson (Cal. Sup.) 264 P. 485; Boa v. San Francisco-Oakland T. Rys., 182 Cal. 93, 187 P. 2; Estate of Ross, 179 Cal. 629, 178 P. 510; People v. Miller, 171 Cal. 649, 154 P. 468; Ergo v. Merced Falls Gas & Elec. Co., 161 Cal. 334, 119 P. 101, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 79; Gregoriv v. Northwestern Pac. R. Co. (Cal. App.) 273 P. 76; Harker v. Southern California Edison Co., 83 Cal. App. 204, 256 P. 848; Los Angeles City H. S. Dist. v. Schumann, 78 Cal. App. 353, 248 P. 737; Estate of Guilbert, 46 Cal. App. 55, 188 P. 807; Lawrence v. Goodwill, 44 Cal. App. 440, 186 P. 781.

In the Miller Case the defendant was on trial for murder, and his only defense was that he was insane at the time he killed the deceased. On the issue of insanity the court instructed the jury that "preponderance of the evidence means that degree of evidence which proves to a moral certainty, or, in other words, that degree of proof that produces conviction in an unprejudiced mind, regardless of the number of witnesses from whom it proceeds." The court, in that case, also gave the usual definition of "reasonable doubt." By reason of the similarity of language in the two instructions the jurors were probably misled into the belief that it devolved on the defendant to prove his alleged insanity beyond a reasonable doubt. In discussing a similar instruction in the Boa Case it is said: "It may well happen in some cases that an instruction in the form here given would necessarily be considered prejudicially misleading. This is especially apt to be true of an instruction regarding the burden of proving the defense of insanity in a criminal case where the other instructions concerning burden of proof are of course framed to impress upon the jury that guilt must be proved to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt." The other instructions in this case are not misleading as to the proof required of the defendant. The outstanding feature of the instruction complained of, and the one which doubtless most impressed the jury, is that the testimony of the greater number of witnesses does not necessarily constitute a preponderance of the evidence. They probably understood it to mean merely that they were not bound to decide in conformity with the declarations of any number of witnesses against more convincing evidence. Academically, the instruction is inaccurate, and it should not have been given, but it is highly improbable that the jurors were misled thereby. Appellant contends that many other instructions given by the court are erroneous, but a careful examination of them fails to substantiate the contention.

[19] Appellant complains of the court's refusal to give an instruction relating to the provisions of article 16 of the plaintiff's federal license. The license was introduced in evidence over the defendant's objection. Prior to its formal introduction, however, article 16 had been read before the jury, and much testimony as to the effect of its provisions had been given, all without objection. Articles 16 and 29 of the license read as follows:

"Article 16. The licensee shall construct said Lancha Plana dam, reservoir and spillways so that surplus waters in excess of amounts carried through its aqueduct to supply its municipal and domestic needs may be diverted northward from said reservoir to the Jackson creek watershed; and the licensee shall permit, without charge, any appropriator having specific authorization from the division of water rights, state of California, so to divert such surplus waters as may lawfully be diverted; provided, that the use of said dam and appurtenances by the licensee for the purpose of storing waters to be carried through its aqueduct shall be deemed to be the paramount use thereof and to be superior to their use for such diversion; that any one so diverting shall save the licensee harmless from any damage resulting therefrom; and that the licensee will not be required hereunder to permit such diversion unless the primary purpose thereof be for a beneficial use other than the generation of power."

"Article 29. With the written consent of the licensee, the commission may by order made under its seal, and after the public notice required by section 6 of the act, modify, alter, enlarge or omit, in so far as authorized by law, any one or more of the conditions or provisions of this license."

At the defendant's request the court instructed the jury: "In determining the market value of the lands sought to be condemned * * * you may * * * consider the requirements of the license issued by the federal power commission to plaintiff, * * * but in considering the same you will do so in the same manner that you would have considered such license had it been granted to some other person."

No other instruction was given in relation to such license. The instruction relating to article 16, which the appellant contends it was error to refuse, reads as follows:

"The defendants are not parties to the license issued to the plaintiff by the federal power commission and you are instructed that this license may be altered or modified without the consent of the defendants and without consulting the defendants by mutual agreement between the federal power commission and plaintiff, and that, too, without the consent of the defendants. This right of the federal power commission and the plaintiff to modify and alter the provisions of said license applies to the provisions of the license introduced in this case concerning the discharge of any water into the Jackson creek watershed from the Mokelumne river."

Article 29 was read before the jury, and its provisions were frequently referred to and discussed by the attorneys and the witnesses during the trial. While the instruction in question might well have been given, it seems clear that the jurors must have understood the provisions of article 29 without any instruction as to the meaning thereof.

[20] The court refused to instruct that in testing the opinions of witnesses who had considered other sales in arriving at the market value of the land taken the jurors might "consider whether the purchaser or whether the seller in such other sales knew and appreciated the adaptability for useful purposes of the property sold or purchased." The proposed instruction is but the statement of a mere commonplace which any juror would consider without being told to do so.

[21] The court refused to give a series of instructions requested by the defendant, containing in varying terms the propositions set forth in the first thereof, as follows:

"You are not to fix the market value of the lands sought to be condemned by the necessities of the plaintiff, but this does not mean that you cannot consider the plaintiff as a competitor for the reservoir site constituted by the use of the lands sought to be condemned and other lands. The demand for a site in which to store water for use generally may be considered by you, and among other such demands you may consider the demands of the East Bay Municipal Utility District as they existed at the date of and prior to the dates respectively of the issuance of the summons in the several cases."

At the defendant's request the court instructed the jury as follows:

"You are not to take into consideration the necessities of the plaintiff in fixing the market value of the property sought to be condemned; however, you may consider the plaintiff as a competitor for the land sought to be condemned at the time the respective summons were issued and prior thereto."

It is not readily perceived in what manner the jury could consider the plaintiff as a competitor for the land sought to be condemned without considering the demands of the plaintiff. The word "demand," as used in the instruction refused, means "a desire to purchase a commodity, accompanied by means of payment." The word "competitor," as used in the instruction given, may be defined as "one who desires and endeavors to buy the same property or, in the same market as another and has the means of payment." It thus appears that the proposition of law stated in the instruction given is, in substance, the same as that contained in the one refused. To instruct the jury to consider the "demands" of the plaintiff, without any definition of that term, would have tended to confuse rather than to clarify.

The appellant urges that many other proposed instructions should have been given. They have been carefully considered and compared with those given, and no error has been discovered in the rulings of the court in relation thereto.

[22] Appellant contends that the verdicts and the judgments are not supported by the evidence. In his brief it is said: "Defendant's witnesses testified to values ranging from $10,348,982.50 to $15,000,000. Plaintiff's witnesses testified to values ranging from $191,890 to $280,500." The jury fixed the value at the sum of $336,452.60, or, in round numbers, $46 an acre. It is not perceived in what respect the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict and judgment. It is true that the evidence would have supported a larger verdict, but the amount to be awarded, within the reasonable range of the evidence, was a question for the sole determination of the jury and the trial court. It cannot be held as a matter of law that the market value of the land is greater than was found by the jury.

The reporter's transcript covers more than 5,000 typewritten pages. The briefs, exclusive of the supplements containing the evidence relied on, contain over 900 pages. As is usual in a record of such length, some technical errors are to be found therein, but none of them appear to be prejudicial. To specifically discuss all the points raised by the appellant would extend this opinion to an unreasonable length. They have all been carefully examined, and it is not deemed that any of them not discussed herein have any merit. Neither is it believed that the errors pointed out in this opinion warrant a reversal.

The judgments are affirmed; appellant to recover costs of appeal.

In re HUNTER'S ESTATE.★DUNCAN v. OAKLAND BANK.

(Civ. 6686.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. May 29, 1929.

Rehearing Denied June 28, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 25, 1929.

- 1. Executors and administrators ⇨314(2)—
Statutory notice of proceeding for distribution gives court jurisdiction to determine rights of all persons to any portion of estate.

Proceeding for distribution of estate in probate is in nature of proceeding in rem, and by statutory notice whole world is called before court and court acquires jurisdiction over all persons for purpose of determining rights to any portion of estate.

- 2. Executors and administrators ⇨315(4, 6)—
Decree of distribution not appealed is final and can be vacated only on motion pursuant to statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Where no appeal is taken from decree of distribution, it becomes final and conclusive and can be set aside only on motion pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 473 and upon grounds therein specified.

- 3. Executors and administrators ⇨315(4, 6)—
Erroneous distribution of legacy is remediable by appeal without which decree is final, subject to be vacated only on motion within six months (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Claim of error in distribution of legacy is remediable by appeal from decree, and, in absence of appeal, decree is final and subject to be vacated only on motion made within six months after entry of decree under Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

- 4. Executors and administrators ⇨315(4)—
Proceedings to set aside decree of distribution filed within six months after decree, but not called to court's attention for more than three years, was barred by statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Where more than three years elapsed between date of filing application for relief from decree of distribution and date on which petitioner in open court orally requested that relief be granted, court under Code Civ. Proc. § 473 was powerless to set aside decree whatever the excuses for delay, since such excuses could not operate to suspend six months' limitation fixed by statute.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Joseph S. Koford, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Thomas W. Hunter, deceased, opposed by the Oakland Bank, as executor under the will of Thomas W. Hunter, deceased. Petition by A. D. Duncan, as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of William J. Danford, deceased, to set aside decree of final distribution in the estate of Thomas W. Hunter, deceased, was denied, and petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

Gavin McNab, Nat Schmulowitz, and A. Don Duncan, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

McKee, Tasheira & Wahrhaftig, of Oakland, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. This is an appeal by A. D. Duncan, as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of William J. Danford, deceased, from an order denying the petition of appellant's testator to set aside the decree of final distribution in the estate of Thomas W. Hunter, deceased, upon the ground that a legacy of $1,500, of which appellant's testator claimed to be the assignee, had been distributed to the wrong person.

The circumstances leading up to the denial of said petition were as follows: Thomas W. Hunter provided in his will for the payment to various persons of 10 cash legacies ranging in amounts from $250 to $1,500, and for the distribution of the residue of his estate to a residuary legatee. One of the legatees named therein was Anna M. Hunt, and the amount of her legacy was $1,500. On September 30, 1922, The Oakland Bank, a corporation, as executor of the said will, filed its final account and petitioned for final distribution of the estate, and on October 11, 1922, after due notice given and proceedings taken as provided by law, said final account was allowed and settled, and a decree of final distribution was granted distributing the estate in accordance with the provisions of the will. Shortly afterwards, in conformity with the terms of the decree, said legacies were paid to the legatees named in the will, and vouchers therefor were filed in the office of the county clerk. The time for appeal from the decree of final distribution expired on December 27, 1922, and no appeal was ever taken. More than five months after the rendition and entry of the decree of final distribution, and nearly three months after the time for appeal therefrom had expired, to wit, on March 17, 1923, Danford filed a petition to have said decree vacated and set aside in so far as it directed the payment of said legacy to Anna M. Hunt, upon the ground that approximately a year and a half prior to the rendition and entry of the decree he filed in the office of the county clerk with the papers of said estate a duly acknowledged assignment to him of Anna M. Hunt's legacy. Upon the filing of said petition a citation was issued and served upon the bank directing it and Anna M. Hunt to appear and show cause on March 28, 1923, why said petition should not be granted. On the day mentioned, however, the petition was not presented to the court, nor were any proceedings whatever had at that time in the matter of said estate; and thereafter the petition was allowed to lie dormant for more than two years, at the end of which time, to wit, in May, 1925, appellant was appointed special administrator of Danford's estate (the latter having died in October, 1923), and was substituted for Danford as the petitioner herein. Thereupon an alias citation was issued, and in July, 1925, was served on both the bank and Anna M. Hunt. August 5, 1925, was the date fixed for the hearing of the same, but on that day the matter was continued, and thereafter was continued from time to time until April 14, 1926, on which date the petition was presented to the court for the first time and heard; and on December 2, 1926, an order was entered denying the same. At the hearing of said petition, on April 14, 1926, it was shown that said assignment, although on file with the papers of said estate, was not brought to the attention of the court at the time the petition for final distribution was heard and granted, nor was there any claim made that the court had any knowledge of its existence until long after the rendition of said decree. With respect to the question of the bank's knowledge of the existence of said assignment, appellant offered in evidence at the hearing in April, 1926, an affidavit made by attorney Raine Ewell, in which it was averred that on April 12, 1921, he mailed a copy of said assignment to the bank, but in opposition to the averments of said affidavit the officials of the bank testified that no such document was ever received; and before the hearing was concluded appellant expressly disclaimed the existence of any fraud and, consequently, made no attempt to establish any such element. It was also shown that appellant had filed no request for notice of the probate proceedings, as is allowed by section 1380 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The substance of appellant's contention is that the petition filed by Danford to vacate the decree of final distribution "may be considered either as a proceeding taken pursuant to section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or as a motion to amend or vacate the judgment for entire validity or for irregularity by reason of error or mistake of fact appearing on the face of the record through inadvertence of the court or a party"; and in furtherance of his claim of right to attack said decree for irregularity he contends that the presence of the assignment among the records of the probate court prior to and at the time of the hearing of the petition for final distribution was sufficient to charge both the probate court and the executor with notice of the existence thereof; and that therefore, under section 1678 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the probate court was without jurisdiction to distribute the Hunt legacy to any person other than to Danford as such assignee; and that, having distributed the same to Anna M. Hunt, the decree in that respect is void.

[1, 2] The law is well settled, however, that a proceeding for the distribution of an estate in probate is in the nature of a proceeding in rem, the res being the estate which is in the hands of the executor under the control of the court, and which he brings before the court for the purpose of receiving directions as to its final disposition; and that by giving the notice directed by the statute the entire world is called before the court, and the court acquires jurisdiction over all persons for the purpose of determining their rights to any portion of the estate. William Hill Co. v. Lawler, 116 Cal. 359, 48 P. 323. And it is also well settled that, where no appeal is taken from a decree of distribution thus granted, it becomes final and conclusive and can be set aside only on motion made pursuant to section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure and upon the grounds therein specified. Estate of Tymms, 78 Cal. App. 79, 247 P. 1091; Estate of Nolan, 145 Cal. 559, 79 P. 428. In the Estate of Tymms, supra, as here, distribution was made to the wrong person, and in holding that appellants therein had not the right to attack the regularity of the decree after time for appeal had expired, the court said: "* * * It is argued [by respondents] that the order for final distribution, being an appealable order, became final and conclusive in the absence of an appeal after the time for an appeal therefrom had expired and that the only method of setting it aside was by motion based upon the grounds of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect within the terms of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That such is the rule there is of course no ground for argument. The section of the code expressly so provides and the language is so plain and unmistakable that no judicial interpretation is necessary." The same rule is applied to other appealable probate decrees and orders. Estate of Nolan, supra; Estate of Leonis, 138 Cal. 194, 71 P. 171.

[3] In the present case, as already shown, the prerequisite notices of the time and place of the hearing of the petition for final distribution were given in the manner and for the period prescribed by statute, and the decree so recites. The court was therefore clothed with full and complete jurisdiction to distribute said estate, and there is nothing appearing in the decree itself to show that it is irregular or erroneous. The attack appellant makes against its validity is, in substance, the same as the one made against the decree in the Estate of Tymms, supra. Therefore, in conformity with the decision in that case, it must be held here that appellant's attack amounts to no more than a claim of error in the distribution of a legacy which should have been taken advantage of by an appeal from the decree; and, since this was not done, the decree became final and conclusive, subject only to being set aside on the grounds specified in section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Estate of Tymms, supra; Estate of Nolan, supra.

Assuming, therefore, as appellant contends, that the petition herein may be treated also as an application, made under the authority of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to set aside the decree upon the grounds mentioned in said section, it is clear, in view of the authorities already cited, that unless he has complied with the legal requirements of said section, and made a sufficient showing thereunder, he was not entitled to any relief as the result of the proceeding instituted by said petition.

The section mentioned provides, among other things, that the court may "relieve a party or his legal representative from a judgment, order, or other proceeding taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect; provided, that application therefor be made within a reasonable time, but in no case exceeding six months after such judgment, order, or proceeding was taken." In construing the meaning of said section it has been held that the filing and service of the pleading to set aside the judgment, order, or other proceeding is not the making of the application therefor; and that, where said application is filed and served, and thereafter is continued from time to time, by the consent of the parties, beyond the statutory six months' period, during such period the party seeking the relief makes no oral request in open court to have the court grant the relief sought, the requirements of said code section are not complied with, and the court has no jurisdiction after such period to hear or grant the application. Colthurst v. Harris (Cal. App.) 275 P. 868 and authorities therein cited. In applying the foregoing rule in the case of Jones v. Superior Court, 78 Cal. App. 163, 248 P. 292 the court said: "To make an application is to make a motion. (Code Civ. Proc. § 1003.) To appear in court and announce one's readiness to make a motion is not the making of the motion any more than would be the service of notice that one will make a motion. That the latter procedure is insufficient is well established (Herrlich v. McDonald, 80 Cal. 472 [22 P. 299]; Thomas v. Superior Court, 6 Cal. App. 629 [92 P. 739]; Wheelock v. Superior Court, 67 Cal. App. 601 [227 P. 931] * * *). The only provision of law under which respondent Bryant might proceed is explicit in its requirement that one who would avail himself of its aid shall not merely direct the court's attention to his presence in court in the proceeding in which he is interested, but shall move for the particular relief desired, that is, orally request that the court take action as indicated in his notice. (People v. Ah Sam, 41 Cal. 645; Spencer v. Branham, 109 Cal. 336 [41 P. 1095].)" that more than three years elapsed between the date of filing of the application for the relief and the date on which the appellant, in open court, orally requested that the relief be granted; and consequently, under the rule of the cases cited, the court was powerless to grant the prayer of the petition even though the evidence so warranted. In his opening brief, and in explanation of the delay above mentioned, appellant states that on March 28, 1923, the day fixed for the hearing by the original citation "the matter did not appear on the calendar of the court"; and that thereafter, and up to the time of the issuance of the alias citation in July, 1925, the delay was caused by Danford's illness, with which he was stricken in 1923, by a contest to his will after his death, and an appeal to the Supreme Court; and that from July, 1925, until the date of the oral presentation of the application in April, 1926, "most of the continuances were on account of the fact that there was either no judge to hear the matter or the court was engaged with other matters." It is also asserted that at the time Danford filed said petition and for a considerable period thereafter he was acting as his own attorney. However, it is apparent that the cause of the three years' delay, whatever it may have been, could not operate to suspend the six months' limitation fixed by the statute; and therefore, the matters urged by appellant in explanation of such delay become immaterial.

The case of In re Yoder, 199 Cal. 699, 251 P. 205, upon which appellant relies, is not in point for the reason that the record there did not indicate that the petition was brought to the attention of the trial court prior to the expiration of the six months' limitation; and it was therefore presumed on appeal that the application was seasonably made. And in the other case emphasized by appellant, Brownell v. Superior Court, 157 Cal. 703, 109 P. 91, the facts show and the court on appeal held that the application was presented within the six months' period.

Aside from the two grounds above discussed, upon which we believe the order appealed from must be affirmed, we have examined the evidence set forth in the record relating to the merits of the application, and it may be stated that we find nothing therein which would justify the conclusion that in denying said application the trial court abused its discretion. The other points urged by appellant are either incidental to those already mentioned or do not possess sufficient force to call for discussion.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

IN RE MALLORY'S ESTATE.

NEIGHBOURS v. RITTENHOUSE et al.

(Civ. 6413.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 22, 1929.

1. Executors and administrators §504(6)—Evidence in opposition to executor's account is limited by exceptions presented.

The rule that evidence must be confined to the point at issue is applicable to the contest of an executor's account, contestants being limited by exceptions presented.

2. Fraud §50—Undue influence of person profiting by confidential relation is presumed, absent showing of independent advice.

Where one person profits by transaction with another over whom he had influence by reason of confidential relation, law presumes undue influence, in absence of showing of independent advice.

3. Contracts §99(1)—Injury through abuse of confidence must be proved to set aside transaction for undue influence.

Injury through abuse of confidence is essential element of rule that transactions with person in confidential relation are presumed to be result of undue influence, and it must be proved that relationship was used to obtain unfair advantage or that confidence was violated.

4. Attorney and client §166(1)—Contingent fee contract between attorney and client is not presumably due to undue influence, in absence of showing of injury.

Contingent fee contract between client and attorney, at time when relationship of attorney and client already existed, is not presumably result of undue influence, in absence of showing of damage resulting to client.

5. Attorney and client §143—Rule that attorney is limited to reasonable sum, without regard to contract for fees made during existence of relation of attorney and client, is not universally applicable.

The rule that, where relation of attorney and client already exists when contract is made concerning attorney's fees, the attorney is precluded from recovering more than reasonable sum without regard to attempted contract, is applicable only in special circumstances, as where special relations of confidence exist or where client had no other independent legal advice, or where attorney failed to make full disclosure or secured assurance of compensation greater than was previously agreed upon.

6. Executors and administrators §504(6)—Disallowance of claims for legal services on ground of undue influence held unwarranted, where sole exception to account was that claims were not owed at decedent's death.

Exceptions to executor's account, alleging invalidity of claims for legal services and that decedent did not owe same at time of death, held not to support disallowance of claim for undue influence of executor and attorney over decedent.

7. Attorney and client §76(2)—Rule that death of client terminates relationship of attorney and client is inapplicable in case of specific contract to conduct suit to final judgment on agreed fee for entire case.

The relation of attorney and client is terminated by client's death, but the rule does not apply to a special contract of employment to conduct suit to final judgment on agreed fee for entire case.

8. Executors and administrators §506(3)—Order disallowing as item of account claim of attorney under contingent fee contract, on ground that services had no value in excess of sum paid by decedent during lifetime, held unsupported by evidence.

Evidence that attorney's services under contingent fee contract benefited client's estate very materially, and that fee was fair and reasonable, held not to support finding disallowing claim shown in executor's account as paid, on ground that services had no value in excess of sum paid by decedent during her lifetime.

9. Executors and administrators §504(6)—Finding in accounting proceeding involving claim contest, predicated on undue influence, cannot be sustained, where exceptions raised no such opposition.

A finding in accounting proceedings involving claim contest, predicated on ground of undue influence, cannot be sustained, where exceptions raised no such ground of opposition.

10. Executors and administrators §104(3)—That executor kept estate funds in personal bank account held not to warrant charging him interest on same.

That executor kept funds of decedent's estate on deposit in his personal bank account held no ground for charging him with interest thereon, where balance of account at all times was in excess of amount due estate and no part of estate funds was ever used by executor.

11. Executors and administrators §501—Statute contemplating allowance on account of commissions before completion of administration should be liberally construed (Code Civ. Proc. § 1616, as amended in 1911).

Code Civ. Proc. § 1616, as amended in 1911, plainly contemplates allowance on account of executor's commissions before administration is completed, and, being remedial, should be liberally construed to effect purpose for which enacted.

12. Executors and administrators §501—Allowance of commissions before final accounting is ordinarily discretionary; denial of commissions in advance of final accounting will not be disturbed merely for erroneous ruling that claim was not substantiated by evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 1616, as amended in 1911).

The allowance of commissions before administration is completed, as permitted by Code Civ. Proc. § 1616, as amended in 1911, is ordinarily within discretion of trial court, the exercise of which will not be disturbed on appeal merely on showing that allowance was denied because of erroneous holding that claim was not substantiated by evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; H. Parker Wood, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Jennie Rittenhouse Mallory, sometimes known as Mrs. F. E. Mallory, deceased. Exceptions to the account of Burrel D. Neighbours, as executor of the estate of Jennie Rittenhouse Mallory, deceased, filed by Annette Rittenhouse and others, were sustained, and the executor appeals. Affirmed in part, and in part reversed.

F. A. Jeffers, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John Perry Wood and Paul Sandmeyer, both of Los Angeles, for respondent Annette Rittenhouse.

Haight & Mathes, and John Perry Wood, all of Los Angeles, for respondents Mary H. Rittenhouse, Eugene M. Rittenhouse, and Page A. Rittenhouse.

Everts, Ewing, Wild & Everts, of Fresno, and John Perry Wood, of Los Angeles, for respondents Frederick Eugene Mallory and Sue B. Schmitz.

YORK, J. The appellant, as executor of the estate of Jennie Rittenhouse Mallory, deceased, in the course of administration of her estate, made payment to himself of the sums of $1,000 and $5,514.75, upon verified claims which had been presented to and approved by the court, which sums the executor claimed were due him for services as attorney at law rendered by him under a contract with the decedent, a copy of which contract was appended to and formed a part of the claims as presented to the court.

The record on appeal shows that prior to April, 1923, the decedent was the widow of one Frederick Eugene Mallory and legatee under his will. Part of the assets of his estate was a block of 1,700 shares of Ohio Fuel Supply Company stock, the income and dividends from which he had devised to said widow for and during her life. During the early part of 1923 the Ohio Fuel Supply Company declared a 100 per cent. stock dividend, which was claimed by the widow as her individual property; but said claim was resisted by the heirs of the deceased husband. The widow consulted with the appellant here regarding her rights to the dividend, and entered into a contract with him on September 7, 1923, by which he was employed to act as counsel for her in the matter, and to assist and associate with the attorneys of the estate in said matter. The record further shows that appellant instituted proceedings in Erie county, Pa., during the lifetime of Mrs. Mallory, and that at the time of her death on April 7, 1924, the proceedings in Pennsylvania had not been finally determined. However, upon a later date, under the decree of that court, 1,032 shares of the stock were transferred to the estate of Mrs.

Mallory, at which time the market value thereof was \$35 $\frac{5}{8}$ per share or \$36,765. Under the contract, appellant was to receive \$2,500 retainer fee and 15 per cent. of the market value of the stock secured for Mrs. Mallory. Fifteen hundred dollars was paid during the lifetime of decedent, and the sums of \$1,000 and \$5,514.75 comprise the balance due under the contract.

After the death of Mrs. Mallory, appellant was appointed executor of her estate, and upon a hearing of first account current, various heirs of deceased filed written exceptions to the same, particularly to the two items noted, alleging that "decedent did not owe the same or any part thereof at the time of her death, and on the further ground that said claims and each of them are for alleged legal services rendered by said executor after the death of said decedent and the claims therefore are invalid." There was also an exception to the fact that the executor had not charged himself with interest for cash on hand during the time he had such cash on hand, and also an objection to allowance of commissions to him as executor of the estate.

Upon the issues presented by the written exceptions, the matter came on for trial before the probate court, at which time the executor, appellant here, was the only witness examined, with the exception of one of the attorneys for the contestants, who was the judge who approved the claims objected to, at the time they were presented to the court for approval.

At the end of the trial, the court settled the account current, disallowing the two contested items of $1,000 and $5,514.75, charging the executor with 7 per cent. interest on the cash he had on hand at various times and refusing to make any allowance "at this time" to said executor on fees or commissions. The court made voluminous findings of fact, and from the judgment based thereon the executor has appealed, alleging as error:

1. Refusal of the court to allow the executor credit for the two items of $1,000 and $5,514.75.

2. Charging him with interest to the amount of $1,004.92 which the court found was the interest that should be charged on the funds of said estate in the hands of the executor to April 8, 1927, which funds the court found were "commingled with the private funds of said executor."

3. Refusal of the court to make any allowance to said executor on fees or commissions due him by virtue of law as such executor.

Appellant's main contention is that the findings and decree of the court are not sustained by the evidence.

The findings with which we are concerned are as follows:

1. That on September 7, 1923, the date of the contract, and for several years prior thereto, the appellant was the personal attorney of the decedent, and that a confidential and fiduciary relation existed between them.

2. That decedent entered into said contract without any independent advice.

3. That the services to be performed by appellant under the purported contract were not completed during the lifetime of decedent nor prior to appointment of appellant as executor of said estate, nor at the time he presented the claims against the estate.

4. That a large and substantial portion of said services remained unperformed at the date of his appointment on May 7, 1924.

5. That the contract upon which said claims are based was obtained by undue influence of said appellant and is invalid.

6. That all employment thereunder terminated at the death of decedent, and that the services rendered during the lifetime of decedent have no value in excess of the sum paid to him by decedent during her lifetime.

7. That the appellant is chargeable with each of said sums of $1,000 and $5,514.75 and interest thereon.

8. That appellant is chargeable with interest at 7 per cent. per annum on all funds of estate commingled with his own funds during the time said funds were so commingled or the sum of $1,004.92.

9. That no allowance should be made at this time on account of executor's statutory commission.

We will discuss the evidence adduced at the trial and its sufficiency to support each finding in the order above enumerated.

1. The evidence shows that appellant first performed legal services for decedent in 1918 or 1919 and rendered services for her in various affairs "off and on," but did not do any great amount of work; that he was employed in 1923 to take care of the stock transaction; that she first came to him in relation to this transaction on or about April 2, 1923. Upon cross-examination appellant was asked:

"* * * Was any of the work on account of which you paid yourself, this $1000 and this $5514.75, * * * performed by you after the death of Mrs. Mallory? A. A small portion of it was performed after her death.

"Q. Some portion of it was performed after her death? A. A small portion after her death, the greater portion was before."

2. There is no evidence in the record that the decedent entered into said contract without any independent advice.

3 and 4. The evidence set out under point 1 above is surely not sufficient to sustain the finding: "A large and substantial portion of said services remained unperformed at the date of decedent's death."

5. There is no evidence that the contract was obtained by the undue influence of appellant. In this connection appellant maintains that the account current, together with the written exceptions thereto, constitute the only pleadings in the case; that a party contesting an account presented for settlement must file written exceptions thereto and set out specifically the grounds of his objections, and at the hearing he is held limited to the exceptions so presented; that without an allegation of fraud, overreaching, or other deceitful act, a finding as to undue influence is such error as will entitle appellant to a reversal of the judgment.

On the other hand, the respondents take the position that since the contract was entered into while the relationship of attorney and client existed, a presumption arose as a matter of law that said contract was obtained without sufficient consideration and by the undue influence of appellant; many cases being cited to uphold this position.

[1] The rule that evidence must be confined to the point at issue is applicable to a contest of an account. The contestants are limited by the exceptions presented, and the evidence is to be limited accordingly. 12 Cal. Jur. p. 51, § 820; Estate of Boyes, 151 Cal. 143, 90 P. 454; Estate of Vance, 141 Cal. 624, 75 P. 323; Estate of Marre, 127 Cal. 128, 59 P. 385; Estate of More, 121 Cal. 635, 54 P. 148; Estate of Sylvar, 1 Cal. App. 35, 81 P. 663. While it is the duty of the court to scrutinize the account and correct all errors therein, it is only where an independent investigation is set on foot by the court that the rule limiting evidence is inapplicable. Estate of Boyes, supra.

In view of this, it would seem that contestants, having failed to allege fraud or undue influence in their exceptions to the account (and especially where the exceptions are to payment of an allowed claim), were thereby precluded from introducing any evidence upon this point. No such evidence was introduced, however, and the finding of undue influence is therefore erroneous, unless, as contended by the respondents, the presumption of undue influence arose as a matter of law upon a simple showing that the contract was entered into while the relationship of attorney and client existed.

[2, 3] The rule has been many times declared that no one who holds a confidential relation towards another shall take advantage of that relation in favor of himself or deal with the other to his own advantage upon terms of his own making; that in every such transaction the law will presume that he who held an influence over the other exercised it unduly to his own advantage, and that the transaction will not be upheld unless it appears that such other had independent advice and that his act was not only the result of his own volition, but that he both understood the act he was doing and comprehended its result and effect. An essential element of the rule is that one person has suffered some injury through the abuse of confidence by another, and that fact must be alleged and proved. It must be made to appear that the relationship was used to obtain an unfair advantage or that confidence was violated. Dimond v. Sanderson, 103 Cal. 97, 37 P. 189; Cole v. Wolfskill, 49 Cal. App. 52, 192 P. 549.

[4] To raise the defense of undue influence in an action by an attorney on an obligation of the client, it is insufficient merely to plead the existence of the professional relation at the time the obligation arose. Metropolis Trust & Savings Bank v. Monnier, 169 Cal. 592, 147 P. 265. "An essential element of the rule is, that the attorney, * * * 'bargains in a matter of advantage to himself,' or, what amounts to the same thing, that the client has suffered injury through the abuse of confidence by the attorney. This fact must be both alleged and proven. It is not enough to show that the relation of attorney and client existed, and that during the existence of the relation the parties entered into a contract, the client being induced thereto by the abuse of confidence by the attorney. If this were so it would follow either that the contracts of an attorney and client are voidable, like those between a trustee and cestui que trust, which is not true (1 Sto. Eq. Juris., sec. 311); or that a party is entitled to relief on the ground of fraud, without showing that damage resulted from the fraud—which is contrary to the undoubted principles of law." Kisling v. Shaw, 33 Cal. 425, 441 (91 Am. Dec. 644).

[5] The rule that where the relation of attorney and client already exists when a contract is made concerning attorney's fees, the attorney is precluded from recovering more than a reasonable sum without regard to the attempted fixation of the value of such services by the agreement, "is not to be given universal application to every agreement made between attorney and client while the relation exists, but only to those agreements where the circumstances under which they are entered into disclose some special reason for its application—as where the written contract provides for greater compensation than was either expressly or impliedly agreed upon prior to the existence of the confidential relation (4 Cyc. 961); or where special relations of confidence exist, or where the client had no other independent legal adviser, or where there was some failure on the part of the attorney to make full disclosures to the client as to the extent of the services required. * * * Both of the parties to the contract understood what legal services plaintiff had already performed, and what further services he was to perform in the particular action to which the contract referred. The parties stood in no special confidential relation to each other which would give rise to either opportunity or imputation of any undue influence attending the making of the written agreement as to the amount of plaintiff's fees." Countryman v. California Trona Co., 35 Cal. App. 728, at 735 and 736, 170 P. 1069, 1073.

[6] In each of the cases cited by respondents on pages 29 and 30 of their brief, fraud and undue influence were put in issue by the pleadings. In the instant case the written exceptions to the account allege "decendent did not owe the same or any part thereof at the time of her death, and on the further ground that said claims and each of them are for alleged legal services rendered by said executor after the death of said decendent, and the claims are therefore invalid." There being no allegation of fraud, undue influence, or other deceitful act on the part of appellant, and no evidence tending to prove the allegations of the exceptions beyond a mere showing of the relationship of attorney and client, by which the presumption of undue influence was attempted to be raised, the finding of the trial court was in error and cannot be sustained.

[7] 6. Respondents maintain that the contract in question terminated at the death of decendent, while appellant contends that it remained in full force and effect until final judgment in the Pennsylvania case was rendered. It is an elementary rule of law that the relation of attorney and client is terminated by the death of the client, but an exception is made in the case of a special contract of employment, such as a specific contract to conduct a suit to final judgment, or some agreement on a fee for the entire case. Both of these elements are in the contract in this case. 2 Ruling Case Law, p. 959, § 31; In re Agee's Estate (Utah) 252 P. 891, 50 A. L. R. 641.

[8] The record shows that the estate benefited very materially through the efforts of the appellant, and the fee provided for in the contract is neither unreasonable nor unfair. The record is devoid of any evidence touching the value of the services rendered by appellant during the lifetime of the decendent, so that the finding that such services had no value in excess of the sum paid by decendent during her lifetime is utterly unsupported. Furthermore, the sum so paid was part of a retaining fee agreed upon.

[9] 7. This finding is predicated upon the finding of undue influence and cannot be sustained.

[10] 8. The evidence shows that funds of the estate were kept on deposit in the bank in the same account where appellant had his own personal funds, but that the balance at all times was in excess of the amount due to the estate and that no part of the estate funds was ever used by appellant. Appellant testified that he charged himself with 3 per cent. interest upon the lowest monthly balance standing in the account to the credit of the estate, which was the regular amount of interest allowed by the bank, or $430.67. 11

Cal. Jur. p. 1043, § 669: " * * * It has been held that the mere fact of mingling of funds without using them in the business of the representative or making any profit from their use does not justify charging him with interest." Estate of Sarment, 123 Cal. 331, 55 P. 1015. Respondents, on page 80 of their brief, contend that this case is not determinative of the question here and that the portion of the opinion quoted by appellant in his opening brief at page 61 is veriest dictum. The cited case was one in which the trial court found that there was an embezzlement and wrongful mingling of estate funds by administrators, and upon appeal the respondents sought upon this finding to sustain the order of the court charging the administrators with compound interest; the appellants contending that the finding was not supported by the evidence. The court held: "We are of the opinion * * * that the claim of * * * appellants that these findings are not supported by the evidence must be sustained. The court does not find, nor is there any evidence, that the administrators used the funds of the estate in their own business, or made any profit from their use. The mere fact that one of them mingled the proceeds of the sale with his own funds would not justify charging him with interest thereon since he had the right to their custody, and there is no provision of law which required him to keep them separate from all other funds."

It should be understood, however, that we do not approve of the practice of mingling such funds with the executor's own funds, whether in bank or elsewhere, and we can see great danger to an executor in following this practice, since it is likely to create controversies such as the present.

[11] "Under the amendment to section 1616 of the Code of Civil Procedure enacted in 1911 it is provided that at any time after one year from the admission of a will to probate, or the granting of letters of administration, the executor or administrator may, upon such notice to the other parties interested as the court may by order require, apply to the court for an allowance to himself upon his commissions (Estate of Piercy, 168 Cal. 750, 145 P. 88; Estate of Jones, 166 Cal. 147, 135 P. 293), and the court is empowered, upon the hearing of such application, to make an order allowing such portion of the commissions as may seem proper, and the portion so allowed may be thereupon charged against the estate. This provision plainly contemplates an allowance on account of commissions before the administration is completed, and to this extent changes the law as formerly existing. (Estate of Jones, supra.) * * * The provisions are remedial, and should be liberally construed to effect the purpose for which enacted. (Estate of Ellis, 6 Cal. Prob. Dec. 413.)" 11 Cal. Jur. 1175, 1176, § 774.

[12] All of the portions of the order appealed from are reversed except the order denying executor's fees. As to the appeal from that portion of the order denying any allowance on account of executor's statutory commissions, this will be affirmed, because of the fact that it is ordinarily within the discretion of the trial court whether or not he will allow the executor any fees prior to the final accounting.

PEOPLE v. SAMPSON. (Cr. 1081.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District California. June 5, 1929.

Rehearing Denied June 20, 1929.

1. Robbery ☞17(5)—Information charging property was in prosecuting witness' possession was sufficient, without alleging ownership where evidence showed his ownership (Pen. Code, § 956, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1042, § 2).

Information for robbery, charging that property was in possession of prosecuting witness and was taken from his person and immediate presence against his will and by force, held sufficient without alleging who was owner of property under Pen. Code, § 956, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1042, § 2, where evidence showed that property belonged to prosecuting witness.

2. Robbery ☞24(1)—Evidence that prosecuting witness was struck blow on head rendering him unconscious was sufficient to raise inference that dangerous weapon was used (Pen. Code, § 211a).

In prosecution for robbery, evidence that prosecuting witness, while riding in automobile driven by defendant and while looking to side, was hit on head and was rendered unconscious by blow, together with evidence of injury consisting of bump or bruise on side of head, was sufficient to warrant inference that dangerous weapon was used in commission of robbery, under Pen. Code, § 211a.

3. Robbery ☞24(1)—Character of weapon used by defendant in robbery may be shown by circumstantial evidence (Pen. Code, § 211a).

Under Pen. Code, § 211a, character of weapon used by defendant in course of robbery may be shown by circumstantial evidence.

4. Criminal law ☞1202(3), 1211—Evidence defendant pleaded guilty to prior conviction for grand larceny, and testified that he had served prison term, warranted inference that he served in penal institution authorizing imprisonment for life (Pen. Code § 667).

In prosecution under information charging defendant with robbery and prior conviction for grand larceny, evidence that defendant pleaded guilty to prior conviction and testified that he had served a term in prison after pleading guilty to charge of grand larceny on examination by own counsel held sufficient to warrant inference that he had "served a term—in a penal institution," authorizing imprisonment for life under Pen. Code, § 667.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; H. L. Preston, Judge.

Harry Sampson was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. Kingren, of Point Arena, and Burt Busch, of Ukiah, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINCH, P. J. The information charges the defendant with the crime of robbery and with having been previously convicted of the crime of grand larceny. On his arraignment he "entered a plea of guilty as to a prior conviction and not guilty as to the new charge in the information." The jury found him guilty of robbery in the first degree. His motion for a new trial was denied, and he was sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison for life. This appeal is from the judgment and the order denying a new trial. The proof is overwhelmingly that the defendant committed the alleged robbery, and it is not contended that it is insufficient.

[1] The information charges that the property therein described was in the possession of the prosecuting witness and was taken from his person and immediate presence, against his will and by means of force and fear, by the defendant. It is not alleged who was the owner of the property, although it was clearly proved at the trial that it belonged to the prosecuting witness. Section 956 of the Penal Code (as amended by St. 1927, p. 1042, § 2) provides: "When an offense involves the commission of, or an attempt to commit a private injury, and is described with sufficient certainty in other respects to identify the act, an erroneous allegation as to the person injured, or intended to be injured, or of the place where the offense was committed, or of the property involved in its commission is not material."

In People v. Price, 143 Cal. 351, 353, 77 P. 73, 74, after quoting section 956, it is said: "This is a rule of criminal pleading, and applies to burglary as well as to larceny and other cases. Under it the name of the owner of the property entered is immaterial, except where necessary to identify the property." Other cases are to the same legal effect. People v. Foster, 198 Cal. 112, 119, 243 P. 667; People v. Melson, 84 Cal. App. 10, 21, 257 P. 555; People v. Smith, 78 Cal. App. 68, 70, 248 P. 261. There is no doubt in this case, either from the averments of the information or from the evidence as to the identity of the property taken.

gerous or deadly weapon, at the time the robbery was committed, as required by section 211a of the Penal Code to constitute robbery in the first degree. The prosecuting witness testified that while he was riding in an automobile driven by the defendant, and while the witness was "looking out to the side of the machine," the defendant hit him "on the left side of the head." He testified: "I couldn't see what he hit me with. * * * I was riding along and looking out at the trees and he hit me over the head and that's the last I remember until I was on the road to Willits. * * * I seen a motion on the side and before I could look around something hit me in the head." The witness was found lying in the road shortly after the robbery and was taken in another automobile to Willits. He was unconscious when first found and did not get "his right mind back" until he had been taken 20 miles along the road to Willits. A deputy sheriff testified that, apparently two days or more after the robbery, he saw a bump or bruise on the side of the head of the prosecuting witness. "It was like a ridge, where it had been struck and a swelling" about two inches long. The blow on the head did not break the skin or cause bleeding. The prosecuting witness testified that he did not know with what he was struck and he admitted on cross-examination that it might have been with the defendant's fist. Having been rendered immediately unconscious by the blow, and not having seen in advance the instrument with which he was struck, the witness could not know what weapon was used. The character of weapon used by the defendant may be shown, of course, by circumstantial evidence, and proof that the victim was rendered unconscious by the blow and remained in that condition for a considerable time, together with the nature of the injury inflicted, warrants the inference, in the absence of other evidence, that a dangerous weapon was used.

[4] While the defendant "entered a plea of guilty as to a prior conviction" of grand larceny, he now contends that the evidence does not show that he "served a term therefor in any penal institution," and that, therefore, his sentence to imprisonment for life is not authorized by the provisions of section 667 of the Penal Code. During his examination in chief, the defendant was questioned by his own counsel as follows:

"Q. You had a little trouble before, have you, Mr. Sampson? A. I have, yes.

"Q. And you have been in prison on that account? A. I have.

"Q. How old were you at that time? A. Not quite twenty years old when I was sentenced."

On cross-examination he testified:

"Q. Mr. Sampson, you testified under direct examination this morning that you were in prison at one time? A. I did, yes.

"Q. How many times have you been in prison? A. Once.

"Q. Just once? A. Yes.

"Q. What was the charge? A. Grand theft.

"Q. At that time known as grand larceny? A. Yes.

"Q. You were, then, convicted of a felony? A. I pleaded guilty to it.

"Q. Grand theft, at that time grand larceny, and that's the only time you have been in prison on any charge? A. Yes."

This evidence, coming from the defendant himself after his plea of guilty of the prior conviction of grand larceny, is sufficient to warrant the inference that he had "served a term therefor" in a "penal institution." He entered a plea of guilty at the time of his arraignment on the prior charge, he was "sentenced" on that charge, and he was "in prison on that account." While the district attorney might well have made the matter certain by asking the defendant in what penal institution he was imprisoned, it is beyond belief that counsel for defendant, having voluntarily opened the inquiry, would not have asked him in what institution he was imprisoned, if it was not a penal institution.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

LUDWIG v. STEGER et al. (Civ. 3793.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 29, 1929.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing June 28, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 25, 1929.

1. Sales ⇨48—Illegal act, though merely malum prohibitum, cannot become basis of valid consideration for sale.

Illegal act cannot become the basis of a valid consideration for the sale or transfer of property, though the act is merely malum prohibitum.

2. Bills and notes ⇨106—Note is not sustained by consideration in violation of statute (Civ. Code, § 1667).

Promissory note cannot depend upon consideration which is in violation of express statutory inhibition under Civ. Code, § 1667.

3. Automobiles ⇨19—Note given for price of automobile held void for seller's failure to transfer certificate of ownership (Civ. Code, § 1667; Motor Vehicle Act, § 45, as amended by St. 1925, p. 402, § 7, and § 45½, as added by St. 1927, p. 1424, § 10).

Note given for purchase price of automobile held void under Civ. Code, § 1667; Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 517), § 45, as amended by St. 1925, p. 402, § 7, and § 45½, as added by St. 1927, p. 1424, § 10, where certificate of ownership of automobile was not signed or transferred by vendor and motor vehicle department as result never issued a new certificate, since under the statute no title to the automobile passed.

4. Automobiles ⇨19—Maker of note given for price of automobile, where he received no title, could defend suit on note for failure of consideration without offering to restore automobile, notwithstanding remedy by rescission (Civ. Code, § 1689).

That maker of note had right to sue for rescission, where consideration was void under Civ. Code, § 1689, did not prevent assertion of failure of consideration as defense in suit upon note given for the purchase price of automobile to which no title passed and maker of note could avoid liability thereon, though he failed to restore automobile to the owner.

5. Automobiles ⇨19—Remedy of seller of automobile who failed to transfer certificate of ownership was by replevin suit with demand for compensation for reasonable value of buyer's use of machine (Motor Vehicle Act, § 45, as amended by St. 1925, p. 402, § 7, and § 45½, as added by St. 1927, p. 1424, § 10).

Seller of automobile who failed to transfer certificate of ownership to buyer under Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 517), § 45, as amended by St. 1925, p. 402, § 7, and § 45½, as added by St. 1927, p. 1424, § 10, could not recover purchase price, but was limited to remedy by suit of replevin with demand for compensation for reasonable value of use of machine.

6. Automobiles ⇨19—Evidence held insufficient to require finding of estoppel of buyer of automobile to assert seller's failure to transfer certificate of ownership, in action on note given for price (Motor Vehicle Act, § 45, as amended by St. 1925, p. 402, § 7, and § 45½, as added by St. 1927, p. 1424, § 10).

In action by seller of automobile on note given for purchase price thereof, evidence held insufficient to requiring finding of estoppel of buyer to assert seller's failure to deliver certificate of ownership under Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 517), § 45, as amended by St. 1925, p. 402, § 7, and § 45½, as added by St. 1927, p. 1424, § 10.

Appeal from Superior Court, Shasta County; Walter E. Herzinger, Judge.

Action by Alex Ludwig against Richard Steger and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Carter & Smith, of Redding, for appellant. Anderson & Northup, of Redding, for respondents.

THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a directed verdict in favor of the defendants, in a suit upon a promissory note given in payment for the purchase price of an automobile. The motor vehicle certificate was not transferred, and it was held that the consideration for the note failed.

In March, 1927, W. B. Scott sold and delivered to defendants a used Hudson automobile for the sum of $600, in payment for which the defendants executed and delivered to the vendor their note for $572 and an old Buick automobile. The note was dated April 2, 1927, and became due 90 days after its date. The note was assigned to plaintiff. The owner's motor vehicle license was not signed by him or transferred to the defendants. Mr. Scott, however, testified that he had the "pink slip" at his home and forgot to transfer it, but that the defendants said they would stop and get it, but never did so. He said: "It has been an oversight * * * I guess, never thought about the pink certificate I had up there at the house until they brought the case in." After a colloquy between the court and counsel, in which it was conceded that the certificate of ownership had never been signed, transferred, or delivered to the purchasers, the court instructed the jury to return a verdict for defendants, which it accordingly did.

The appellant contends that a failure to transfer the motor vehicle certificate of ownership cannot be relied upon as a defense to a promissory note given in payment for the purchase of an automobile, and that the defendants were estopped from asserting the failure of consideration for the note because they omitted to call for or demand the transfer and delivery of the certificate.

Section 45 of the Motor Vehicle Act of California (Stats. 1925, p. 402), provides that, upon the transfer of the title to an automobile, the owner must sign and deliver the certificate of ownership, which must be sent to the motor vehicle department for registration within 10 days of the transfer, and that: "(e) Until said division shall have issued said new certificate of registration and certificate of ownership * * * delivery of such vehicle shall be deemed not to have been made and title thereto shall be deemed not to have passed and said intended transfer shall be deemed to be incomplete and not to be valid or effective for any purpose."

At the time of the trial of this cause, which occurred December 17, 1928, the transfer of the certificate of ownership had not been signed or delivered to the defendants. The vendor failed and neglected to conform to the law in this respect. The Motor Vehicle Act was amended by adding section 45½ thereto (Stats. 1927, p. 1424), making it a misdemeanor for "any person who refuses or neglects to deliver a certificate of ownership to a transferee entitled thereto under the provisions of this act. * * *"

[1] An illegal act cannot become the basis of a valid consideration for a sale or transfer of property, even though the act is merely malum prohibitum. Smith v. Bach, 183 Cal. 259, 191 P. 14; Berka v. Woodward, 125 Cal. 119, 57 P. 777, 45 L. R. A. 420, 73 Am. St. Rep. 31; Wallace v. Zinman, 200 Cal. 585, 588, 254 P. 946.

[2] A promissory note may not depend upon a consideration which is a violation of an express statutory inhibition. 19 Cal. Jur. 1005, § 158; 8 C. J. 243, § 383; 3 R. C. L. 950, § 146. Section 1667, of the Civil Code provides: "That is not lawful which is: 1. Contrary to an express provision of law."

[3] Since the certificate of ownership of the automobile, the sale of which furnishes the only basis of consideration for the promissory note involved in the present action, was never signed or transferred by the vendor and the motor vehicle department has consequently never issued a new certificate of ownership, the title to the machine did not pass to the defendants, but still remains in the owner, Scott. Hence, the note was without consideration and void. 42 C. J. 775, §§ 305, 306. In an elaborate memorandum following the case of State of Missouri v. Cox, 37 A. L. R. at page 1466, the following statement is supported by numerous authorities: "The cases are agreed that the failure to comply with the statute precludes an action for the purchase price of the car, or upon a note or check therefor."

Under a statute similar to section 45 of the California Motor Vehicle Act, in the case of Swank v. Moisan, 85 Or. 662, 166 P. 962, the Oregon Supreme Court said: "The sale of plaintiff's automobile became invalid ten days after the date of sale by operation of this statute. There being nothing immoral or unlawful in the contract of the parties, the law will not leave them where it finds them. Plaintiff could replevy his automobile and recover the value of its use by the defendants. * * * But plaintiff cannot recover on a note given to evidence the purchase price on a sale which is invalid."

[4, 5] It is true that the defendants might have instituted an action for rescission under section 1689 of the Civil Code on the ground that the consideration for the note was void, but this was not their only remedy. This remedy does not preclude the urging of the defense of failure of consideration in reply to a suit upon a void promissory note, even without offering to restore the machine to the owner, who has his remedy in a suit of replevin with a demand for compensation for the reasonable value of the use of the machine. Swank v. Moisan, supra.

[6] The appellant relies upon the case of Boles v. Stiles, 188 Cal. 304, 204 P. 848, to support his assertion that the respondents are estopped from denying that the title to the automobile passed to them. This case, however, does not uphold appellant's contention. That was a suit by one partner against another to replevin an automobile. It decides only that where one who claims title to a machine "by his own act and agreement having placed the plaintiff in the immediate and exclusive possession of the automobile is not in position to invoke the provision of the statute referred to." In the present case the situation is just the reverse. The right of possession of the car is not here involved, but rather, the question of whether there was a consideration for the execution of a promissory note.

The respondents did not waive their defense or right to the certificate of ownership signed by the vendor. It was the duty of the owner to deliver this certificate to the purchasers. This was essential to a valid transfer of title. Fairly construed with a view of upholding the judgment, the record indicates that there was no understanding between the parties to the effect that the defendants agreed to call at the home of the owner, Scott, for the certificate. Upon the contrary, he testified: "I guess (I) never thought about the pink certificate * * * until they brought the case." The failure to deliver the certificate was evidently the fault and negligence of the plaintiff. The record contains no evidence of his ever offering to remedy this omission by delivering it, prior to the trial of said cause. If the plaintiff relied upon the asserted understanding that the defendant agreed to call for the certificate, he should have at least offered to definitely prove this fact.

We are of the opinion that the judgment is sufficiently supported by the evidence.

The judgment is, therefore, affirmed.

SWITHENBANK v. WOOD et al.*
(Civ. 3741.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 7, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 5, 1929.

1. Landlord and tenant §90(1)—Court held warranted in concluding that presumption that lessee continued in possession after expiration of lease with permission of owner of undivided interest was overcome (Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, subd. 2).

Where, before expiration of lease, plaintiff who owned undivided interest in leased property refused to lease his interest in land to lessee, and, after expiration of lease, refused to join with cotenants in leasing property to lessee, but by mutual exchange of bills of sale with lessee established respective parties' ownership in lambs on leased ranch, and answer in action for partition of personalty alleged that defendants were at all times ready, willing, and able to pay plaintiff his share of rental, it could not be said as matter of law that trial court was not warranted in concluding that presumption, arising under Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, subd. 2, from plaintiff's failure to demand possession within 60 days after expiration of term, that lessee held possession with plaintiff's permission after end of term, was overcome, and that plaintiff and defendants were in possession as tenants in common of property described in lease after its expiration.

2. Trial §404(2)—On appeal on judgment roll alone, conclusion of law may be treated as finding of fact to uphold judgment.

If necessary to uphold judgment on appeal on judgment roll alone, a finding misplaced among the conclusions of law may be treated as a finding of fact, under the rule that every intendment not contradicted by, or inconsistent with, record on appeal, must be indulged in favor of orders and judgments of superior courts.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; T. H. Selvage, Judge.

Action by Lee Swithenbank against Charles W. Wood and others. From an adverse judgment, named defendant and a certain other defendant appeal. Affirmed.

H. C. Nelson, of Eureka, for appellants.

A. G. Bradford, of Eureka, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This is an action for the partition of personal property. The defendants Charles W. Wood and Lena Wood have appealed, on the judgment roll alone, from the parts of the interlocutory decree which award the plaintiff the increase of certain sheep and lambs "from and after August 26, 1926," and the wool therefrom during the same period, and also the increase of other live stock from and after July 16, 1926. The court found the following facts:

April 16, 1921, Mary Jane Swithenbank and others leased the Swithenbank ranch, together with the live stock and other personal property thereon to the defendant Charles W. Wood for a term expiring July 16, 1926. Plaintiff then had no interest in such property. The ranch is agricultural land. The rental provided in the lease was $1,600 for the first year, and at the rate of $1,700 a year for the remainder of the term for both the real and personal property. The lease provided that, at the expiration of the term, Wood was to leave on the premises a stated number of different kinds of live stock, concerning which there is no controversy. February 14, 1922, Mary Jane Swithenbank died, and, upon the settlement of her estate, there was distributed to the plaintiff "an undivided one-twelfth interest in and to" the leased property, both real and personal. Prior to the expiration of the term, the other owners sold all their interest in the personal property to Wood. Prior to such expiration Wood "requested plaintiff to execute a new lease of said real and personal property but * * * plaintiff refused to execute such lease." After the expiration of the term, the owners, other than the plaintiff, leased their interests in the land to defendant Charles W. Wood and Ernest D. Wood, but the plaintiff refused to join therein. August 16, 1926, by mutual exchange of bills of sale, the defendant Wood conveyed to the plaintiff 117 of the sheep and 25 of the lambs, and the plaintiff conveyed to Wood the remainder thereof, "to be classified and determined as per said lease."

* * * The purpose and intent of said parties in delivering and exchanging said bills of sale was to establish the ownership of each of said parties, respectively, in said sheep and lambs in numbers, rather than in undivided fractional interests." During the preceding month, the owners of the land "were negotiating with each other for a partition, division, or sale of said ranch, * * * and as a part of the * * * transaction relating to said bills of sale exchange between said plaintiff and defendant Charles W. Wood, said plaintiff stated to said defendant Wood that said sheep would not be segregated or separated until a sale or partition of said ranch. * * * No sale nor partition of said ranch has been had." "No segregation or division of said sheep has been made as determined in said lease, or otherwise or at all." "Plaintiff did not within sixty days from and after July 16, 1926, nor within sixty days from and after July 16, 1927, demand or request possession of plaintiff's interest in said lands or premises, nor did said plaintiff at any time demand or serve any notice to quit said premises upon said defendants or either of them."

As conclusions of law, the court found "that from and after the date of the expiration of said lease dated April 16, 1921, plaintiff and defendant Charles W. Wood have been in possession as tenants in common of the real and personal property described in said lease," and that plaintiff is entitled to judgment as hereinbefore stated.

Appellants' only contention is that, because of the plaintiff's failure to demand possession of the premises within 60 days after the expiration of the term, they were entitled to hold under the terms of the lease for another full year, and that therefore it was error to award the plaintiff any part of the increase of the live stock; the lease providing for the delivery of a stated number of each kind of live stock upon the surrender of the premises. Section 1161, subd. 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure, provides:

"In all cases of tenancy upon agricultural lands, where the tenant has held over and retained possession for more than sixty days after the expiration of the term without any demand of possession or notice to quit by the landlord, or the successor in estate of his landlord, if any there be, he shall be deemed to be holding by permission of the landlord, or the successor in estate of his landlord, if any there be, and shall be entitled to hold under the terms of the lease for another full year."

"Holding over in view of the circumstances outlined by this statute establishes a presumption prima facie of the renewal of the lease for another year upon the terms formerly existing, but such presumption may be rebutted by evidence offered by either party to the lease." Cowell v. Snyder, 171 Cal. 291, 297, 152 P. 920, 923; Ambrose v. Hyde, 145 Cal. 555, 557, 79 P. 64.

[1] Before the expiration of the term the plaintiff refused to lease his interest in the land to Wood. After the expiration of the lease, the plaintiff refused to join with his cotenants in the execution of a lease to Wood. The lease provided for payment of rent "quarterly in advance." The answer alleges: "The defendants have at all times been ready, willing and able and have offered to pay and do now offer to pay said plaintiff his share of the rental provided in said lease." This allegation implies that the defendants offered to pay the rental in advance for the quarter commencing July 17, 1926, and that the plaintiff refused to accept such payment. A month after the end of the term the mutual exchange of bills of sale took place between plaintiff and Wood. It cannot be held as a matter of law that the court was not warranted in concluding that the presumption that Wood held possession with permission of the plaintiff after the end of the term was overcome by the facts stated, and that the plaintiff and the defendants were "in possession as tenants in common of the real and personal property described in the lease" from and after the expiration of the term thereof.

[2] If necessary to uphold the judgment, the appeal being on the judgment roll alone, the finding that the plaintiff and the defendants were so in possession as tenants in common may be treated as a finding of fact, misplaced among the conclusions of law. Collins v. Ramish, 182 Cal. 360, 366, 188 P. 550; Stanward v. Yellow Taxicab Co., 75 Cal. App. 96, 102, 241 P. 902. "Every intendment and presumption not contradicted by or inconsistent with the record on appeal must be indulged in favor of the orders and judgments of superior courts." 2 Cal. Jur. 852; Philbrook v. Randall, 195 Cal. 95, 104, 231 P. 739; Platner v. Vincent, 194 Cal. 436, 442, 229 P. 24.

The judgment is affirmed.

3. Account, action on ⇨22—Evidence held to support finding that all allegations of complaint in action on book account were true.

Evidence in action on book account held to support trial court's finding that all allegations of plaintiff's complaint were true.

4. Limitation of actions ⇨53(1)—Action on book account, commenced within four years after last item, held not barred (Code Civ. Proc. § 337, subd. 2, 344).

Action commenced January 31, 1928, on book account, in which last item was February 12, 1924, held not barred by four years statute of limitations (Code Civ. Proc. § 337, subd. 2), which was intended to eliminate distinctions between actions on book accounts and actions for balances due on mutual, open and current accounts, in which cause of action is deemed to have accrued from time of last item proved, under section 344, though omitting word "balance."

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by J. H. Bailey against E. B. Hoffman and wife. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Kincaid & Fitzpatrick, of Redwood City, for appellants.

David Cosgrave, of Redwood City, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendants to recover on a book account. The defendants filed a joint answer. The action was tried before the court sitting without a jury. The court made findings of fact in favor of the plaintiff, and from a judgment entered thereon the defendants have appealed, and have brought up a bill of exceptions which, on its face, appears to be a digest only of the proceedings below.

[1] The plaintiff makes a preliminary objection to the hearing of the appeal. He calls attention to the fact that more than 60 days elapsed between the date the judgment was entered and the date of the filing of the notice of appeal. The defendants reply that the judgment was entered July 25, 1928, that on July 30, 1928, they served a notice of intention to move for a new trial, that afterwards they made their motion, and that the motion was denied September 17, 1928. Thereupon they show that within 30 days they filed their notice of appeal. Under these facts their notice of appeal was filed in due time. C. C. P. § 939.

[2] The first point made by the defendants is that the court erred in receiving in evidence the plaintiff's alleged book account. From the bill of exceptions it appears that the plaintiff produced a certain book kept by him and in which appeared the said account. The heading is "Dr. Hoffman Job at Emerald Lake"; then follows the year, 1924. Below in chronological order were entered charges for labor and materials January 7th to February 12th, both dates inclusive. No entries are made on the credit side. At the end the materials are summarized at $161.35, labor at $478.75, and freight at $4.75. Specifying their objections to the purported account, the defendants say that it does not show against whom the charges are made, it does not show in whose favor the charges are made, and that it is not a detailed statement in the nature of debit and credit arising out of contract or some fiduciary relation, and they cite and rely on Wright v. Loaiza, 177 Cal. 605, 171 P. 311.

The authority cited is not applicable to the facts. The statements or entries are made in detail. They are all debits. No credit appears, and none was claimed. The book was produced from the possession of the plaintiff, and there was nothing in the evidence showing or tending to show that he kept any accounts in favor of anybody but himself. Therefore it cannot be said that there was not some evidence showing that the account was in his favor. The account does not show expressly that it was against these defendants. But it will not be controverted that the parties were entitled to explain the account by the introduction of evidence regarding the circumstances under which it was made and the matter to which it related. Civ. Code, § 1647. Nothing to the contrary appearing in support of the judgment, we are bound to assume that evidence was introduced showing that these defendants occupied property at Emerald Lake, that there were not other Hoffmans occupying property there, or, if there were, that the other Hoffmans were not known as "Dr. Hoffman." Following the same line of reasoning, there are other facts, which we are likewise entitled to assume, all of which go to establish the identity of the debtor. Under these circumstances we think it cannot be said that there was no evidence before the trial court identifying the account as the account alleged in plaintiff's complaint. The trial court did not err in receiving the account in evidence.

[3] The trial court made a finding that "all the allegations of plaintiff's complaint are true." The defendants contend the finding is not supported by the evidence. This attack is based on the facts which we have just discussed. For the reasons stated above, we think the point is not well taken.

[4] In their answer the defendants pleaded that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. Code Civ. Proc. § 337, subd. 2. The last item in the account was February 12, 1924. The action was commenced January 31, 1928. The trial court made a finding that the action was not barred. The defendants claim that the finding was not sustained by the evidence. They also assert that if the account was proved as alleged that the statute barred all items not falling within the four-year term. They also assert that the amendment of 1907 applied to actions to recover "a balance due * * * upon an open book account," but that the amendment of 1917 is addressed to actions "to recover upon a book account." They stress the change made by omitting the words "a balance," and claim that the present rule is that the statute bars all items not falling within the four-year period. All of these contentions present solely a question of statutory interpretation. If the statute, as it stands, commences to run from the date of the last item proved by the plaintiff, all of the contentions just stated must be ruled against the defendants.

We think Furlow v. B. Co. v. Balboa L. & W. Co., 186 Cal. 754, 200 P. 625, rules the point. That was an action to recover on an open book account. When the facts occurred (1913-14) an action to recover a balance due upon a mutual open and current account would be barred in four years. Code Civ. Proc., § 337. If there were no other statutes on the subject, it might be argued that the expression "balance" applied to items that were entered within the four-year period. But there was another statute. It provided that, "in an action brought to recover a balance due upon a mutual, open, and current account, where there have been reciprocal demands between the parties, the cause of action is deemed to have accrued from the time of the last item proved in the account on either side." Code Civ. Proc. § 344. It will be observed that both statutes were limited to mutual, open, and current accounts. Section 344 was not amended. Section 337 was amended, and it placed on an even footing, under the four-year term, a mutual, open, and current account and an open book account. No doubt the court took all of these matters into consideration. Thereafter it expressed its conclusion as follows: "The rule has long been settled in this state with reference to a 'mutual, open, and current account' mentioned in subdivision 2, section 337, of the Code of Civil Procedure, that the statute runs from the date of the last item shown in the account. Carter v. Canty, 181 Cal. 749, 186 P. 346. The evident purpose of the amendment, subdivision 2, section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure, was to put an open book account upon the same basis." In other words, the court decided that the Legislature sought to eliminate all distinctions in applying the statute of limitations to the two classes of accounts.

When the amendment of 1917 was made we think that the Legislature sought to eliminate any distinction as to accounts generally and sought to place actions to recover (1) upon a book account whether open or not; (2) upon an account stated; (3) a balance due upon a mutual, open, and current account all on the same basis. The omission of the word "balance" is of negligible importance. It is expressly used regarding a mutual account. It is necessarily implied as to an account stated. In the sense of "a total" it is necessarily implied as to a book account, because to hold otherwise would authorize a plaintiff to sue for one item at a time as distinguished from suing on an account. As amended in 1917, the expression "a book account" includes and refers to an open book account, and also to a book account which consists of entries on one side only. As to the latter class it would be illogical to speak of "a balance." There can be "a balance" on account only when there are items on both sides.

Moreover, when the amendments of 1907 were adopted extraordinary conditions prevailed in this state. The greatest municipal fire of all times had occurred. Many persons were without available funds who, in a short space of time, would collect insurance and be prepared to pay their debts. To protect both debtor and creditor amendments were made to sections 337 and 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Legislature sought to protect, not only both classes, but all in each class. While these reasons were not mentioned, we think they were in mind when the Furlow Case, supra, was decided. Therefore, basing our ruling on the same line of reasoning as adopted in the Furlow Case, we hold that the statute commenced to run from the last item proved in the account, to wit, February 12, 1924. If we are mistaken in this holding, then it follows the plea of the statute would eliminate every entry not falling within the statutory period both as to a book account and also an open book account, because the statute, "upon a book account whether consisting of one or more entries, * * *" speaks of both without discriminating between them. In other words, the rule proclaimed in the Furlow Case would be abrogated by the amendment of 1917. That ruling we are not inclined to make.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

MESNICKOW v. FAWCETT et al. (Civ. 6451.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2. California. June 8, 1929.

1. Automobiles $\S$ 181(1)—Motorist warned of approaching danger from blinding lights must use more than ordinary care to avoid striking objects temporarily hidden.

Where motorist carrying guests had ample warning of approaching danger caused by blinding lights, she had duty to use more than ordinary care to avoid striking objects on path temporarily hidden.

2. Automobiles $\S$ 244(20)—In action for injury to guests, evidence showed negligence of driver striking parked truck when blinded by lights of approaching car.

In action for injuries to guests when automobile struck truck parked at side of highway, evidence relative to driver of car in which plaintiffs were riding being blinded by lights of approaching car would have been sufficient to sustain finding of negligence on her part.

3. Negligence $\S$ 93(1)—Negligence of driver of automobile will not prevent recovery for injuries to guests against owner of parked truck which car struck.

In action against owner of truck parked beside highway for injuries to guests in automobile which struck truck, negligence of driver of such automobile will not prevent recovery, unless guests by failure to act in premises were guilty of contributory negligence.

4. Automobiles $\S$ 224(5)—Guests held not contributorily negligent in not warning driver of danger from blinding lights.

Guests in automobile held not guilty of contributory negligence for failure to warn driver of danger caused by blinding effect of lights on passing car.

5. Automobiles $\S$ 173(2)—Driver parking on public highway must move off paved or traveled portion if practicable, and leave unobstructed width of 15 feet (Motor Vehicle Act, $\S$ 136).

Under Motor Vehicle Act, $\S$ 136 (St. 1923, p. 561), driver parking truck on public highway outside of business or residence district must move it off paved or traveled portion when practicable, leaving unobstructed width of 15 feet.

6. Appeal and error $\S$ 1011(1)—Finding on conflicting evidence cannot be disturbed.

Where there was conflicting testimony as to whether defendant was negligent in parking car along highway, finding of negligence cannot be disturbed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. D. Murphey, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth Mesnickow and others against K. E. Fawcett and another. Judgments for plaintiffs, and defendant S. Catelli appeals. Affirmed.

Gillis & Edwards, of Oakland, for appellants.

Forrest M. Pearce, of Oakland, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Three separate actions were instituted against a number of defendants for personal injuries incurred in an automobile collision. The three actions were consolidated for trial, by stipulation, before the court sitting without a jury. Separate judgments were rendered in favor of each of the three plaintiffs and against the defendant Catelli alone. This defendant has appealed on typewritten transcripts, and, by stipulation, these appeals are heard under the title designated above.

The three plaintiffs were riding in a Studebaker automobile as the business guests of Mrs. K. E. Fawcett at about 7:30 p. m. of the evening of November 10, 1926, on a public highway about three miles north of the town of Windsor in Sonoma county. Preceding them on the same highway, the defendant Catelli had driven a Chevrolet truck in the same direction. He found he was having trouble with the motor of the truck, and, fearing that he was out of gas, pulled off to the right side of the highway, stopped, and went back to the gas tank to test the gas. While the truck was thus standing in this position, the defendant Fawcett, traveling at a rate of 25 or 30 miles an hour, crashed into it, causing the injuries to the passengers for which they sued. Mrs. Fawcett was joined with Catelli as a party defendant.

[1, 2] The trial court found that the defendant Catelli was negligent in parking the truck on the side of the highway and that the defendant Fawcett was neither careless nor negligent in the manner in which she operated the Studebaker car. The appeals from the several judgments are based upon these findings. Particular criticism is made of the finding of want of negligence on the part of defendant Fawcett. The evidence is that she was traveling on a public highway which gave a straight stretch of more than a mile before the point of collision. She claimed she had been blinded by the headlights of another car passing in the opposite direction which came around a curve in the highway just prior to the collision. But this curve was shown to have been a quarter of a mile beyond the point of collision. She had, therefore, ample warning of the approaching danger caused by the blinding lights. When confronted by such conditions it is the duty of the operator to use more than ordinary care to avoid striking objects on his path which are temporarily hidden from his view. Such is the rule of Giorgetti v. Wollaston (Cal. App.) 257 P. 109, upon an almost identical state of facts. There was therefore evidence which would have sustained a finding of negligence on the part of this defendant.

[3, 4] However, though the plaintiffs might all have had judgment against the defendant Fawcett because of her negligence, this does not avail the appellant Catelli at this time unless he can show that the respondents, by their failure to act in the premises, were guilty of contributory negligence. This he has failed to do. The respondents were merely invited guests having no control over the operation of the car in which they were riding (Shields v. King [Cal. Sup.] 277 P. 1043); and, besides this, the danger caused by the "blinding" of the passing lights was so sudden, and in such close proximity to the collision, that they had no opportunity to warn the driver before the collision occurred.

[5, 6] On the issue of appellant's negligence the evidence was sharply conflicting. Witnesses testified that he had pulled the truck off the highway to the edge of a ditch, and that when he started out on his journey, some time prior to the collision, the tail-light on the truck was burning. Other witnesses testified that this light was not burning at the time of the collision and that the truck was standing partially on the paved portion of the highway. The duty of a driver in parking on a public highway outside of the business or residence district is fixed by section 136 of the Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 561). He must move it off the paved or traveled portion of the highway "when it is practicable" to do so, and must leave a clear and unobstructed width of 15 feet upon the main portion of the highway opposite the parked vehicle for the free passage of other vehicles. There was testimony which would have supported a finding favorable to appellant on this issue, but there was also some evidence supporting the finding of negligence. Under these conditions the judgment cannot be disturbed.

Some comment should be made upon the amount of the several judgments. The three respondents suffered "cuts and bruises" of varying degree. The trial court awarded the respondent Mesnickow $122, the respondent Barnes $711.60, and the respondent Sundberg $315.35. These awards were in accord with the statutory measure of damages in cases of this character as "the amount which will compensate for all the detriment proximately caused." Section 3333, Civ. Code. In view of the constant flow of "sympathy," verdicts coming to us arising out of motor vehicle collisions, it is a hopeful sign to note a trial judge mindful of this statutory injunction.

The judgments are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. MENDOZA. (Cr. 1533.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 12, 1929.

Intoxicating liquors §236(19)—Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction for ownership and operation of still (St. 1927, p. 497).

Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction for owning and operating still for manufacture of intoxicating liquor under St. 1927, p. 497, in view of defendant's entry by means of key into premises in which there was a house practically vacant except for the presence of still and whisky, and in view of defendant's admissions.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Fred V. Wood, Judge.

Antone Mendoza was convicted of owning and operating a still for the manufacture of intoxicating liquor, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Jo Lawrence, of Oakland, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and W. R. Augustine, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. Defendant, Antone Mendoza, together with Frank Barbosa, was charged by information with the violation of chapter 277, Statutes of 1927, in that on or about the 14th day of November, 1928, they were the owners of and had an interest in and operated a still designed and intended for use in the manufacture and production of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes. The jury returned a verdict of guilty. This is an appeal on behalf of defendant Mendoza from the judgment of conviction.

The only point urged for reversal is that the verdict is contrary to the law and the evidence. There is no merit in the appeal. The evidence shows that on May 14, 1928, appellant, accompanied by his wife, drove up to a certain house situated in Alameda county, turned into an alleyway and then drove their car into a garage situated on the premises. A police officer had entered the house the previous evening and had remained there over night. But for the presence of a still, some manufactured whisky, and a large amount of grain mash and a mattress, the house was vacant. After driving into the garage appellant entered the premises by means of a key and was confronted by the officer. Upon being questioned he stated that he was there for the purpose of purchasing some whisky. He later admitted that he was employed to operate the still. He was placed under arrest, and on the way to the police station he stated to the officer that he desired to pay his fine and be through with the matter. He subsequently informed the police officers that Barbosa was the owner of the still and informed them where he could be found. There was evidence of the neighbors to show that both appellant and Barbosa had during a period of some five months constantly visited the premises. There was also evidence to show that appellant had paid half the cost of the grain that was last used in the manufacture of the whisky. Under these circumstances it cannot be said that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. SILVA et al. (Cr. 1078.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 8, 1929.

1. Criminal law ⇨1144(17)—Presentation of matters which might have been presented and would have authorized judgment is presumed, where evidence is not brought up on appeal.

Any matters which might have been presented to court below, and which would have authorized judgment of conviction, will be presumed to have been presented, where evidence has not been brought up on appeal.

2. Criminal law ⇨202(3)—Acquittal of possessing still did not prevent conviction for operation thereof (Pen. Code, § 971).

Acquittal of defendants on charge of possessing still did not prevent conviction for operation of still, since defendants, under Pen. Code, § 971, could be convicted without being near place where still was operated, provided they aided and abetted in its operation.

3. Criminal law ⇨1144(16)—If necessary to support verdicts acquitting defendants of possessing still and convicting them for operation of still, it must be presumed, in absence of evidence, that separate stills were involved.

If necessary to support verdicts acquitting defendants on charge of possessing still and convicting them on charge of operating still, it must be presumed, in the absence of evidence, that the first count relates to possession of still in one place and that proof under second count shows operation of another still at different place.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Miller, Judge.

Tony Silva and another were convicted of operating a still, and they appeal. Affirmed.

Frank G. Warren, of Stockton, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINCH, P. J. The information contains two counts. In the first the defendants are charged with the offense of having "in their possession and control a still, stillworm, still cap and still condenser designed, used and intended for use in the manufacture and production of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes." In the second it is charged that, on the same day, they did "operate and cause to be operated, a stilling device designed, used and intended for use in the manufacture and production of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes."

The jury found the defendants guilty on the second count and not guilty on the first. The defendants separately moved for new trials, which were denied, and judgments of conviction followed. They have appealed from the judgments and the orders denying new trials. The appellants requested a transcript of the "reporter's notes of the * * * examination of the jury panel during the time of securing the jury," but made no request for a transcript of the reporter's notes of the evidence taken at the trial, and no part of such evidence is contained in the record.

[1] Appellants contend that the "verdicts are incompatible, incongruous, inconsistent and opposed to each other, and the verdict of guilty of the second count cannot stand in law in the face of the acquittal of the charges encompassed in the first count." There are several answers to the appellants' contention, only two of which need be mentioned. Since the evidence has not been brought up, "any matters which might have been presented to the court below, which would have authorized the judgment, will be presumed to have been thus presented." Platner v. Vincent, 194 Cal. 436, 442, 229 P. 24, 26.

[2, 3] Section 971 of the Penal Code provides: "All persons concerned in the commission of a felony, whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in its commission, though not present, shall hereafter be prosecuted, tried, and punished as principals, and no other facts need be alleged in any indictment or information against such an accessory than are required in an indictment or information against his principal." If it be assumed that both counts relate to the same still, the defendants may not have had possession of the still and may not have been near the place where it was operated, and yet they may have been concerned in its operation and may have aided and abetted in the operation thereof. But, if necessary to support the verdicts and the judgments, it must be presumed, in the absence of the evidence, that the first count relates to the possession of a still in one place and that, in support of the second count, the proof shows that the defendants operated another still in a different place.

The judgments and the orders are affirmed.

Newby & Newby, of Los Angeles (Dee Holder, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondents.

THOMPSON, J. This is a suit for the recovery of rental for an apartment house and the furniture therein contained. The complaint alleged that the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $15,750 for rent due upon a contract for "The Stratford Apartments, including the furniture." The evidence is undisputed that the defendant occupied and used the premises and furniture 26 months and 3 days, from October 1, 1924, to December 4, 1926.

The agreement upon which this action is based was dated November 11, 1924, and granted to the defendant the right "(1) To lease from the optionor [plaintiff] the Stratford Apartments * * * for a term of years, commencing October 1, 1924, and continuing to March 31, 1930, at a rental of $750.00 per month, * * * payable upon the first day of each and every successive calendar month. * * * (2) To sell to the optionee [defendant] * * * the furniture, furnishings and equipment in the said Stratford Apartments upon a conditional sales contract, the title to remain in the optionor until the total purchase price is fully paid. * * * The optionee agrees to pay * * * the sum of $37,691.28, * * * in the following manner, to-wit: The sum of $800.00, or more, * * * per month * * * which said installments shall include the interest on said principal sum remaining due at the rate of eight per cent per annum. * * * If said optionee shall at any time within the life of this agreement exercise the option herein contained, all installments theretofore paid by him (exclusive of rent) shall be applied on account of said purchase price, and if he fails to exercise said option, all such installments paid * * * shall be deemed as the consideration for the option herein contained, and not otherwise. * * *

Subsequent to the execution of the foregoing document, the defendant remained in possession of the apartment house and its furniture, operating it and appropriating the income therefrom until December 4, 1926. Thereupon he voluntarily relinquished possession of both the apartment house and furniture, joining with plaintiff in the execution of another contract with relation thereto upon the last-mentioned date, by the terms of which it was agreed that the apartment house and furniture were to be immediately delivered to the plaintiff "without prejudice to the legal rights of the parties to said agreement, dated November 11, 1924, except the optionee waives the right granted by said contract to complete the purchase of the said property and to remain in possession thereof; * * * and the said optionee shall hereafter be released from the obligation to pay to the optionor the rent for said Stratford Apartments, and $800 per month, upon the purchase price thereof. * * * Any indebtedness * * * under the terms of said contract dated November 11, 1924, * * * shall not be affected by this contract; * * * said indebtedness, if any, to be determined as of this date, the same as if this contract had not been executed. * * *

There is no language in the terms of either of the foregoing contracts to warrant the court in holding that the monthly installments of $800 may under any circumstances be construed to be applied to rent for the use of either the apartment house or the furniture. These payments were specifically designated as installments upon the purchase price of the furniture. Neither the question of the forfeiture of these $800 installments which were actually paid upon the purchase price of the furniture, nor defendant's liability for similar installments remaining unpaid at the time of the execution of the last document were involved in this action. This was a simple action for the recovery of unpaid rent. Nothing else was involved in the issues of the case.

The trial court evidently erroneously assumed that these $800 installments upon the purchase price of the furniture were to be treated as rental, and that the unpaid installments thereof, which were due prior to the execution of the last document were within the issues of this case. Without distinguishing between these installments and the agreed rental for the apartment house, the court found that "the aggregate amount due to the plaintiff * * * amounted to the sum of $39,255.00, and prior to the commencement of this action, the defendant had paid on account of said indebtedness the sum of $24,300.00 and no more, leaving the balance due * * * of $14,955." This finding is not wholly supported by the evidence, nor is it warranted by the pleadings.

The only material evidence which the record contains respecting the payment of money by the defendant under the terms of the contract upon which this action is founded was plaintiff's book account of the transaction, which is entirely unexplained. This account credited the defendant with having paid plaintiff the aggregate sum of $23,700. These credits were made up of 79 separate items of payments ranging from $150 to $1,150, showing merely the dates and amounts of the several payments. The book account fails to credit any of these sums to either rental of the apartment house or the purchase of the furniture. The account does, however, charge the defendant with 26 months' and 3 days' rent of the apartments at $750 a month, and also charges the defendant with approximately a similar number of monthly installments of $800 each for the purchase of the furniture.

[1, 2] Without conflict of evidence it appears, as the court found, that the defendant obligated himself to pay 26 months' and 3 days' rental of the apartment at $750 a month, and that he had paid to plaintiff only the aggregate sum of $24,300 an account of both of the existing obligations which were due. The only questions involved under the issues of this case are, what obligations of the defendant were entitled to credit for the sums of money which were paid to the plaintiff, and what amount of rent for the apartment house remains unpaid? The record is silent as to any agreement or request on the part of the interested parties regarding the application of the sums of money which were paid by the defendant. He was subject to two distinct obligations toward the plaintiff: One was to pay plaintiff $750 a month for the rental of the premises, and the other was to pay $800 a month on the purchase price of the furniture. These obligations were created by the same document, at the same time. Neither party having designated to which of these two obligations they desired the several payments to apply, they must be credited pursuant to the rule declared in section 1479 of the Civil Code, which provides:

"Where a debtor, under several obligations to another, does an act, by way of performance, in whole or in part, which is equally applicable to two or more of such obligations, such performance must be applied as follows:

"One. If, at the time of performance, the intention or desire of the debtor that such performance should be applied to the extinction of any particular obligation, be manifested to the creditor, it must be so applied.

"Two. If no such application be then made, the creditor, within a reasonable time after such performance, may apply it toward the extinction of any obligation, performance of which was due to him from the debtor at the time of such performance. * * *

"Three. If neither party makes such application within the time prescribed herein, the performance must be applied to the extinction of obligations in the following order; and, if there be more than one obligation of a particular class, to the extinction of all in that class, ratably:

"1. Of interest due at the time of the performance.

"2. Of principal due at that time.

"3. Of the obligation earliest in date of maturity.

"4. Of an obligation not secured by a lien or collateral undertaking.

"5. Of an obligation secured by a lien or collateral undertaking."

Neither of the obligations in the present case was secured by a lien. Since the plaintiff actually delivered possession of the furniture to the defendant, and specifically retained in itself the title to the property, no lien thereon was reserved. Section 3049 of the Civil Code provides that: "One who sells personal property has a special lien thereon, dependent on possession. * * *"

In 24 Ruling Case Law 121, § 391, it is said: "The existence of a seller's lien always presupposes that the title to the goods has passed to the buyer, since it would be an incongruous conception that a person might have a lien upon his own goods." Greenleaf v. Gallagher, 93 Me. 549, 45 A. 829, 74 Am. St. Rep. 371; Conrad v. Fisher, 37 Mo. App. 352, 8 L. R. A. 147; Hoven v. Leedhalm, 153 Minn. 95, 189 N. W. 601, 31 A. L. R. 574.

The obligation for the payment of rent for the apartment house, and the obligation to pay monthly installments on the purchase price of the furniture, therefore, belonged to the same class. Interest upon the payment of the installments for the purchase of the furniture was included in the amount specified. The contract provided that the defendant agreed to pay upon the total purchase price of the furniture "the sum of $800, or more, per month * * * which said installments shall include the interest. * * *" Since the obligations were of the same class, and no request for specific application of the payments to either obligation was made it becomes necessary to prorate the sums which were paid, between the two obligations, according to the provisions of section 1479 of the Civil Code. Since this is not a suit to recover unpaid installments on the purchase price of the furniture, it is only necessary to prorate the money paid by the defendants in order to ascertain what proportion of the agreed rent for the apartment house remains unpaid. By mere mathematical calculation it appears that $12,542 from the total sum of $24,300, which was paid, should be credited on the furniture account. This leaves a balance of $11,758 to apply to the credit of the defendant on the rent account. The period during which the defendant occupied the premises was 26 months and 3 days. At the rate of $750 per month, the total obligation for rent amounted to $19,575. This leaves a balance of rent, which was due to the plaintiff on December 4, 1926, of $7,817. The plaintiff's complaint prayed for 7 per cent. interest on the amount of rent which was due on the last-named date. The plaintiff is entitled to at least this sum of interest to May 4, 1927, at which time the judgment was entered in said cause. This amounts to $228 additional.

The judgment is therefore modified by striking therefrom the sum of $14,955, which was awarded to the plaintiff, and by allowing it in lieu thereof the sum of $8,045 with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the date of the entry thereof. As so modified the judgment is affirmed, appellant to recover his costs.

BRADY v. SUTTER BUTTE CANAL CO.
(Civ. 3817.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 10, 1929.

Animals  44—Complaint for poisoning grass by irrigation company without notice, whereby sheep of plaintiff, who owned pasturage, were injured, held to state cause of action.

Complaint alleging the ownership of a tract of land by third person, the purchase from him by plaintiff of the right to pasture thereon, the maintenance and operation by defendant irrigation company of a distributing canal, running through a portion of the tract and not fenced or otherwise separated from the land on either side thereof, the wrongful entry on said lands and spraying of same with poison by defendant, and its negligent failure to give any notice thereof, though knowing stock grazed thereon, resulting in the poisoning of plaintiff's sheep, held to state a cause of action; any ownership by defendant of a right of way to the premises and right to enter thereon and spray it with poison being a matter of defense, it not appearing from the complaint.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by Marion R. Brady against the Sutter Butte Canal Company. From a judgment for defendant on the pleadings, plaintiff appeals. Reversed with directions.

Lawrence Schillig, of Yuba City, and Desmond Winship, of Berkeley, for appellant.

Seth Millington, of Gridley, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. This action is before us upon the plaintiff's appeal from a judgment of the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Sutter, entered in favor of the defendant after sustaining defendant's demurrer to the plaintiff's amended complaint without leave to amend.

The amended complaint sets forth the following facts: That at all the times mentioned in the complaint the defendant was a corporation organized and existing under the laws of this state, having its principal place of business in Gridley, county of Butte, state of California; that the defendant is a public utility furnishing water for irrigation to consumers in the counties of Butte and Sutter, in said state; that at all the times mentioned in the complaint one Edgar Preston Brinegar was the owner, and one Rudolph Knox was in possession and entitled to the possession, of that certain land in the county of Sutter, state of California, described as follows: (Here follows a particular description of the lands alleged to belong to Edgar Preston Brinegar, situate in the county of Sutter, state of California, containing 450 acres, more or less); that at all the times mentioned in the complaint the defendant maintained and operated one of its distributing canals running in a northerly and southerly direction through a portion of said described tract of land belonging to said Edgar Preston Brinegar and in the possession of said Rudolph Knox; that said canal so maintained by said defendant was not inclosed and not fenced or otherwise set off or separated from the land on either side thereof, but the said canal and said pieces of land on either side thereof were so joined and connected as to form, and they did form, one parcel of land; that the plaintiff, during the year 1926, purchased from said Rudolph Knox, the pasture and feed then and there growing, and to be grown during said year 1926, on said above-described lands, in the possession of said Rudolph Knox, with the right of entry thereon, and placing sheep thereon for the purpose of pasturing and feeding on said grasses and feed growing on said lands; that the defendant, prior to the 14th day of July, 1926, the exact date of which was unknown to the plaintiff, wrongfully and unlawfully entered upon the above-described lands and sprayed the grass and verdure growing on the land on both sides of said canal, which grass and verdure plaintiff had purchased from said Rudolph Knox, with a dangerous and deadly poison, to wit, a solution of arsenic, for the purpose of killing the grass and verdure so growing on the lands adjoining said canal, well knowing that said solution of arsenic so sprayed on said grass was a dangerous and deadly substance and injurious to any animal eating the same, and well knowing that stock grazing upon the lands hereinabove described passed over and grazed on the lands so sprayed with said poisonous solution of arsenic by said defendant; that knowing all these things, the defendant nevertheless wrongfully entered upon said lands, and wrongfully, carelessly, and negligently sprayed said grasses growing thereon with said poisonous solution of arsenic, and willfully, negligently, and carelessly failed and neglected to give proper, adequate, or any warning, by posting notice or otherwise, that said poisonous solution of arsenic had been sprayed on said grass; that on or about the 14th day of July plaintiff, pursuant to his said agreement with said Rudolph Knox, for the pasturing of said lands, and not knowing that the grasses on said lands on both sides of said canal had been sprayed with said poisonous solution of arsenic, placed a large band of lambs, then and there of the value of $9 per head, on said premises to graze thereon; that as a direct and proximate result of the negligence of defendant in so spraying said poisonous solution on said grasses on both sides of said canal, and because of defendant's negligence in not giving proper, adequate, or any notice that said grasses had been so sprayed, plaintiff allowed the said lambs so placed on said premises to eat the grass and verdure so sprayed with said poisonous solution, and said lambs became poisoned thereby; that as a result thereof 225 of said lambs, of the value of $2,025, died, and became of no value to the plaintiff, and that 900 lambs were injured and stunted by such poison, and that plaintiff was unable to sell the same and had to carry said lambs over until the next year, at an expense of $1,400, etc. Other damages are alleged, the total of which aggregated, according to the complaint, $4,685, for which plaintiff asked judgment.

To this complaint the defendant interposed a demurrer, stating three grounds: First, that said complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; second, that the complaint is uncertain, in that it is nowhere alleged or cannot be ascertained therefrom whether said defendant was the owner of the distributing canal running in a northerly and southerly direction through a portion of said above-described tract, or whether Edgar Preston Brinegar was the owner of said right of way, that said complaint is uncertain for the further reason that it is nowhere alleged therein nor can it be ascertained therefrom whether or not the defendant entered upon said right of way or whether the said defendant entered upon the balance of said tract alleged to belong to Edgar Preston Brinegar to spray the grass and verdure growing on the right of way of defendant, nor can it be ascertained therefrom whether or not the defendant entered upon any lands belonging to Edgar Preston Brinegar; and, third, that said complaint is unintelligible for the same reason that it is uncertain.

It requires only a reading of the complaint to show that the grounds of demurrer set forth in the second and third specifications, relied upon by the respondent, are inapplicable. The complaint alleges that the premises, consisting of 450 acres, more or less, belonged to and were owned by Edgar Preston Brinegar; that said premises had been leased to one Knox; and that the lessee had sold the grasses growing on said premises to the plaintiff in this action. So far as the complaint is concerned, no right of way belonging to the defendant is involved. If the defendant owned a right of way to said premises, and had a right to enter thereon, and sprayed the same with poisonous substances, that is a matter of defense; it does not appear from the complaint. After stating that the premises belonged to Edgar Preston Brinegar, and had been leased to Rudolph Knox, it is alleged that the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully entered upon the same and sprayed the grasses growing thereon with poisonous substances. Paragraphs VI and VII of the amended complaint set forth facts which, as stated, constitute a cause of action, that the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully entered upon the described lands, spraying the grass and verdure along both sides of the canal with poisonous substances, well knowing that the substance was dangerous and deadly to animals, and well knowing that stock grazing upon the lands described in the plaintiff's complaint passed over and grazed upon the lands so sprayed, and that, well knowing these things, the defendant, after wrongfully entering upon the lands, etc., and spraying the same, negligently and carelessly failed to give any notice or warning of what it had done. If the fact be that stock was accustomed to graze along the banks of the canal, and the defendant was aware of that fact, and, while being so aware of such fact, entered thereon and sprayed the grass where the stock would go to feed with a poisonous substance, and neglected to give notice, we fail to see how the ownership or easement of a right of way through the premises would need to be stated in order to set forth a cause of action. Be that as it may, the complaint alleges the ownership of the land, its leasing to Knox, and the purchase of the pasturage by the plaintiff, and all the other facts necessary to set forth a cause of action against the defendant for injuries resulting from its negligence. This being true, there is no necessity to review the cases cited by counsel, wherein the particular facts stated have been held insufficient to state a cause of action, nor is it necessary to review the cases holding that an owner of land who places a poisonous substance thereon is not liable for injuries resulting to trespassing stock. Those cases are not in point so far as the allegations of plaintiff's complaint are concerned. What we have stated sufficiently shows that the first specification in the demurrer, that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, is without merit.

The judgment of the trial court is reversed, with directions to overrule defendant's demurrer and allow the defendant to file an answer to plaintiff's complaint, if it be so advised, within such time as the trial court may lawfully fix.

LOS ANGELES CITY SCHOOL DIST. OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY v. TUCKER
et al. (Civ. 3756.) ***

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 11, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 11, 1929.

1. Assignments $\S$ 48—No precise form is necessary to establish equitable assignment, clearly apparent intent to pass title being sufficient.

No precise form of words or writing is necessary to establishment of an equitable assignment, which will be held to have taken place if it clearly appears from entire transaction that parties intended to pass title to property assigned.

2. Assignments $\S$ 50(2)—Contractor's order, authorizing school board to deliver warrant for amount due him to company supplying materials, held equitable assignment.

Where order signed by contractor, authorizing board of education to deliver warrant for amount due him for altering and repairing school building to lumber company for materials supplied was accepted by board and relied on by lumber company, which filed no stop notice, trial court was warranted in holding that equitable assignment had taken place.

3. Assignments $\S$ 59—Contractor's letter to school board held not to affect his prior order to deliver warrant for amount due him to company supplying materials.

Contractor's order, authorizing board of education to deliver warrant for amount due him for altering and repairing school building to lumber company for materials supplied, being sufficient to transfer funds in board's hands, contractor's subsequent letter, requesting board to handle situation as they thought proper, was of no effect, even if showing that contractor did not intend order to operate as absolute assignment.

4. Mechanics' liens $\S$ 198—Claim of company filing stop notice after contract time for final payment was subordinate to contractor's assignment of amount due him to another company.

Claim of tile company, filing stop notice after expiration of 35 days from completion of work, when final payment became due under contract for alteration and repair of school building, was subordinate and subject to contractor's assignment of warrant for amount due him to lumber company before expiration of such time, which began to run when work was completed, not when board of education filed notice of completion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; F. C. Valentine, Judge.

Interpleader by the Los Angeles City School District of Los Angeles County against Lewis Tucker, the Patten & Davies Lumber Company, the Southern Surety Company, and others, in which defendants lumber company and others filed cross-complaints. From judgments for defendants lumber company and another, defendant surety company appeals. Affirmed.

W. I. Gilbert and Kenneth Keeper, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Dana R. Weller and Glen Behymer, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

G. C. Mansfield, of Los Angeles, for defendant.

Everett W. Mattoon, of Los Angeles, for City School District.

Harry G. Sadicoff, of Los Angeles, for cross-defendants Harris & Harris.

PRESTON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by defendant Southern Surety Company from a judgment rendered in favor of defendant Patten & Davies Lumber Company for the sum of $574.50, and from a judgment rendered in favor of defendant Noyes Marble & Tile Company for the sum of $264.

The facts are not in dispute and are briefly these: Lewis Tucker, a contractor, entered into a contract with the plaintiff Los Angeles city school district on the 27th day of February, 1925, for the alteration and repair of a school building in the city of Los Angeles for the contract price of $2,298. On the same date said Lewis Tucker as principal and appellant Southern Surety Company as surety executed a bond in the sum of $1,149, being 50 per cent. of the contract price, in compliance with the requirements of the act of 1919 (Stats. 1919, p. 487), entitled "An Act to secure the payment of the claims of persons employed by contractors upon public works, and the claims of persons who furnish materials, supplies * * * used or consumed by such contractors in the performance of such works, and prescribing the duties of certain public officers with respect thereto." This bond, by its terms, inured to the benefit of persons who furnished materials and performed labor on said school building. After the execution of said bond the said Lewis Tucker entered upon the performance of said contract. Among the persons furnishing materials were Patten & Davies Lumber Company and Noyes Marble & Tile Company, defendants and respondents herein.

The contract was completed by Tucker on the 30th day of April, 1925, and within 10 days thereafter, to wit, on the 9th of May, 1925, notice of completion was recorded in the office of the county recorder of Los Angeles county. The balance of the contract price due Tucker at the time of the completion of the building was $574.50.

On May 20, 1925, a writing was filed with the board of education, signed by Lewis Tucker, reading as follows:

"Los Angeles, Cal., May 20th, 1925.

"Mr. C. F. Lenz, Auditor L. A. Board of Education—Dear Sir: I hereby authorize you to deliver my warrant for the sum of $574.50, which is the 35-day payment for alterations to the old building at the Normandie Avenue School House, to Patten & Davies Lumber Co., this money being due them for material supplied by them for above mentioned work; said payment being due June 5th, 1925; when said warrant is ready for delivery I will endorse same to Patten & Davies at your office. Please notify me.

"Lewis Tucker, Contractor."

The board of education on June 1, 1925, caused to be entered upon its minutes the following:

"Regarding the contract for Alterations to the Old Building at the Normandie Avenue School, Lewis Tucker, Contractor:

"The Secretary reports that he is in receipt of a letter dated May 25, 1925, from Patten & Davies Lumber Company, enclosing an order signed by Lewis Tucker to deliver the amount of $574.50, representing the final payment on the above-mentioned contract, to Patten & Davies Lumber Company.

"We recommend that a warrant of $574.50, covering the final payment on the contract for Alterations to Old Building on the Normandie Avenue School site, be made payable to Lewis Tucker, contractor, when said warrant becomes due and payable, but that the Auditor be authorized and requested to deliver said warrant to Patten & Davies Lumber Company in case it has not otherwise become encumbered, and that both Lewis Tucker, contractor, and the Patten & Davies Lumber Company be notified by the Secretary of this action."

A stop notice was filed by respondent Noyes Marble & Tile Company with said board of education on June 8, 1925. Thereafter the said board of education, through an interpleader complaint, tendered said sum of $574.50 into court and requested that all interested parties litigate their claims therein. The parties to this action appeared and filed appropriate pleadings, but the only parties appearing at the trial were respondents Patten & Davies Lumber Company and Noyes Marble & Tile Company and appellant Southern Surety Company.

The trial court entered judgment in favor of Patten & Davies Lumber Company for $574.50, by virtue of the order from Lewis Tucker dated May 20, 1925, above set forth, and directed the clerk to pay to Patten & Davies Lumber Company said sum, which had been deposited in court by said board of education.

Appellant contends that the evidence offered by respondent Patten & Davies Lumber Company was insufficient to constitute an assignment of the funds belonging to Lewis Tucker. Patten & Davies Lumber Company, on the contrary, contends that the writing of May 20, 1925, above set forth, from Lewis Tucker to the auditor of the board of education, constituted an equitable assignment of Tucker's claim to said sum of $574.50.

[1, 2] No precise form of words or writing is necessary to the establishment of an equitable assignment. If, from the entire transaction, it clearly appears that it was the intention of Lewis Tucker and respondent Patten & Davies Lumber Company when the letter or order of May 20, 1925, was given, to pass title to the $574.50 in the hands of the board of education to Patten & Davies Lumber Company, then an assignment will be held to have taken place. Lawrence National Bank v. Kowalsky, 105 Cal. 41, 38 P. 517; McIntyre v. Hauser, 131 Cal. 11, 63 P. 69; Goldman v. Murray, 164 Cal. 419, 129 P. 462; McGown v. Dalzell, 72 Cal. App. 201, 236 P. 941; Dunlap v. Commercial National Bank, 50 Cal. App. 480, 195 P. 688. Here we have an order signed by the contractor authorizing the board of education to deliver his warrant for the full amount due him under the contract to Patten & Davies Lumber Company, for materials supplied by them to him in the execution of his contract, and the board of education accepted the order. Patten & Davies Lumber Company relied upon this order and did not file any stop notice with said board of education.

We conclude that, under such circumstances, the trial court was warranted in holding that an equitable assignment had taken place.

[3] Appellant argues that a letter written by Tucker to the secretary of the board of education on June 24, 1925, shows that it was not the intention of Tucker when he gave the order on May 20, 1925, that said order should operate as an absolute assignment to Patten & Davies Lumber Company. We do not so understand the letter of June 24, 1925; it specifically recognizes the order theretofore given to Patten & Davies Lumber Company, but merely requests the board of education to handle the situation as they think proper, etc. Furthermore, the order of May 20, 1925, being sufficient to transfer the funds in the hands of the board of education from Tucker to Patten & Davies Lumber Company, any subsequent order or instructions given by Tucker regarding said funds would be of no effect.

[4] Appellant also contends that if Tucker did make an equitable assignment to Patten & Davies Lumber Company, such assignment would not take precedence over the claims of laborers and materialmen who had filed their claims in the manner provided by law, and further that such an assignment would not take precedence over the rights of appellant Southern Surety Company.

In the face of the undisputed evidence in the case at bar appellant's contentions are untenable. Said contract was completed by Lewis Tucker and accepted by said board of education on or about April 30, 1925. Under the terms of said contract final payment was to be made to Lewis Tucker 35 days after completion of work, which would make the final payment due and payable on June 5, 1925. Noyes Marble & Tile Company filed its verified claim or stop notice for $264 with said board of education on June 8, 1925, or 3 days after the final payment was due Tucker under his contract. No verified claim or stop notice was filed by any person prior to June 5, 1925. Therefore, on June 5, 1925, when the final payment fell due, there was no valid reason why Patten & Davies Lumber Company as assignee of Lewis Tucker was not entitled to collect the final payment from the board of education.

Appellant assumes in its argument that the 35 days for final payment under the contract did not begin to run until May 9, 1925, the date the board of education filed the notice of completion, and then argue that the 35 days would not expire until June 13, 1925, and that Noyes Marble & Tile Company's stop notice was filed June 8, 1925, or before the final payment was payable under the contract, and therefore Noyes Marble & Tile Company had priority over said assignment from Tucker to Patten & Davies Lumber Company to the funds in the hands of the board of education. This is erroneous; the 35 days began to run under the contract when the alterations and repairs were completed, which was April 30, 1925.

If Noyes Marble & Tile Company had filed its stop notice before the 35 days expired under the contract, then it would have had the right to satisfy its claim out of the funds in the hands of the board of education before the assignment to Patten & Davies Lumber Company would be effective, but said stop notice being filed after the 35 days expired, and after the final payment matured and was payable, such claim is subordinate to and subject to said assignment. Southern California Electric Co. v. McDonald et al., 178 Cal. 386-392, 173 P. 760; Newport Co. v. Drew, 125 Cal. 585, 58 P. 187; Long Beach School District v. Lutge, 129 Cal. 409, 62 P. 36; Miles v. Ryan, 172 Cal. 207, 157 P. 5; Maryland Casualty Co. v. Shafer, 57 Cal. App. 580, 208 P. 192.

The judgment is affirmed.

CITY OF SAN DIEGO v. CUYAMACA WATER CO. et al. (CITY OF EL CAJON et al., Interveners). (L. A. 10171.)★

Supreme Court of California. June 20, 1929.

Rehearing Granted July 18, 1929.

1. Courts ⇨93(1)—Right of pueblos and successors to use waters of rivers and streams cannot, under rule of stare decisis, be disturbed.

Under rule of stare decisis, the prior and paramount right of pueblos and successors to use of waters of rivers and streams passing through and over or under surface of allotted lands in so far as necessary for inhabitants and for ordinary municipal purposes, being rule of property, cannot be disturbed.

2. Waters and water courses ⇨140—Purported grant of water right to Mission of San Diego did not create right prior to that of pueblo.

Purported grant by viceroy of Spain to Mission of San Diego of right to use and benefits of waters of San Diego river held insufficient to create a right prior or paramount to right to use thereof by the pueblo of San Diego in so far as necessary for inhabitants and for ordinary municipal purposes.

3. Evidence ⇨11—Judicial notice is taken of public history.

The Supreme Court takes judicial notice of public history.

4. Waters and water courses ⇨140—Pueblo of San Diego on its establishment became invested with land and water rights, regardless of rights of mission.

Pueblo of San Diego upon its establishment became invested with whatever land and water rights it was entitled to under the laws, institutions, and regulations of Spain and Mexico, regardless of purported right to use of waters of San Diego river by the Mission of San Diego, which at that time either had ceased or would presently cease to be.

5. Waters and water courses ⇨138—Right to waters of stream by prescription requires adverse use under claim of right acquiesced in by those otherwise entitled thereto.

Nature of right claimed to have been acquired in waters of flowing stream by prescription rests as prime essential on adverse use thereof by claimant under claim of right which has, to extent thereof and for required term of years, been acquiesced in by person or persons otherwise entitled to ownership and enjoyment of such waters.

6. Waters and water courses ⇨138—City's failure to object to use of waters which at time of diversion did not interfere with present use did not create right by prescription.

Failure of city to object to use of waters of stream at time diversion thereof constituted no interference with right of city to use thereof did not operate so as to create a right by prescription or in favor of those using waters, the right of city being always uncertain and conjectural, depending upon particular needs of city or its inhabitants at each particular stage of its development as a municipality.

7. Waters and water courses ⇨152(2)—City's failure to object to use of river waters not interfering with own use did not defeat its right thereto on ground of laches.

Right of city of San Diego to use of waters of San Diego river was not defeated on ground of laches by reason of failure to object to use of waters by others at time diversion constituted no interference with present use.

8. Waters and water courses ⇨127, 152(2)—City's right to use waters of river was public right as respected prescription and laches.

Right of city of San Diego to use waters of the San Diego river constituted a public right as respected prescription and laches urged by others making use of waters of stream.

9. Estoppel ⇨52—Defense of estoppel rests on doctrine that party cannot assert defense because of certain facts and conditions rendering its assertion inequitable.

Defense of estoppel rests upon doctrine that a right conceded for purposes of such defense to exist in party, he shall not be permitted to assert against another to the latter's injury because of the existence and proof of certain facts and conditions which would render its assertion inequitable.

10. Estoppel ⇨62(8)—City was not estopped to assert prior right to waters of river because of failure to object to prior diversion.

Where diversion and use of waters of San Diego river did not at time of diversion interfere with any of the uses which the city of San Diego was making of the waters thereof, the city was not estopped to assert its prior right to use of waters by reason of its failure to object to use at time of diversion.

11. Waters and water courses ⇨140—Those diverting waters of river must be held to have known as matter of law of existence of city's preferential right thereto.

Those appropriating and diverting waters along upper reaches of San Diego river and its tributaries must be held to have known as a matter of law of the existence in the city of San Diego of a prior and preferential right to use of waters and to the assertion thereof whenever expanding needs of city or its inhabitants required it.

12. Territories ⇨6—United States in taking over Alta California did not adopt statutes of limitation as applicable to public lands or waters.

United States in taking over territory known as Alta California under the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo did not also take over and agree to adopt the statutes of limitation of either Spain or Mexico as applicable to lands or waters diverted to public use.

13. Estoppel ◯121—Findings held to establish that city was not estopped to assert prior right to use of river waters (Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 3).

Findings of trial court held to establish that city of San Diego was not estopped, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 3, from asserting prior and preferential right to use of waters in San Diego river in so far as necessary for inhabitants and ordinary municipal purposes.

14. Waters and water courses ◯140—Disturbing and disastrous consequences to others furnish no right to deprive city of prior and paramount right to river waters.

That prior and paramount right of city of San Diego to use of waters of San Diego river may be fraught with disturbing and even disastrous consequences affecting other users furnishes no reason for a deprivation of the city of its prior and paramount right to use thereof.

15. Action ◯6—Trial court's attempt in declaratory action to give determination further effect than that of declaratory judgment was erroneous.

Where city bringing declaratory action for purpose of having its prior and paramount right to use of waters of river established neither pleaded nor attempted to prove any facts entitling it to other or affirmative relief, an attempt of trial court to give determination any other or further effect than that of declaratory judgment was erroneous.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; M. W. Conkling, Judge.

Action by the City of San Diego against the Cuyamaca Water Company and others, wherein the City of El Cajon and others intervened, and wherein defendants filed a cross-complaint. From the judgment, all parties to the action appeal. Affirmed in part, and in part reversed.

James O'Keefe, Shelley J. Higgins, and Arthur F. H. Wright, all of San Diego, and Hunsaker, Britt & Cosgrove, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Crouch & Sanders and Sweet, Stearns & Forward, all of San Diego, Philip Storer Thacher, of El Cajon, and E. V. Winnek, of San Diego, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This action was instituted by the city of San Diego, a municipal corporation, having for its purpose the determination of the question of its title to certain rights in and to the waters of the San Diego river to which the original defendants in said action were asserting and exercising certain adverse claims. The precise nature of this action was aptly described in certain earlier appeals to this court. In the case of Cuyamaca Water

Co. v. Superior Court, 193 Cal. 584, 588, 226 P. 604, 605 (33 A. L. R. 1316), it was thus stated: "In the pending quiet title action it will not, of course, be determined that the city is or is not entitled to any particular quantity of water. If the litigation terminates favorably to the plaintiff, the only right which will be established and determined to be vested in the city will be a right to the water and the use thereof prior and paramount to the defendants' rights therein, and then only to the extent necessary for the needs of the city and its inhabitants. The amount needed is necessarily uncertain and conjectural and dependent upon conditions such as rainfall and other established sources of supply. The subject matter of the action is the establishment of the priority of right, and not the quantity of water to be taken." In the case of City of San Diego v. Andrews et al., 195 Cal. 111, 231 P. 726, which was a proceeding in mandamus to compel the respondent judge of the superior court of the county of San Diego to proceed to hear and determine the present cause, this court restated in substance the purpose of the instant case. The importance of the foregoing clear concept of the nature and purpose of the present action will appear as we proceed with the consideration of the several issues involved therein. The original defendants in this action were Cuyamaca Water Company, a corporation, Cuyamaca Water Company, a copartnership, and certain individuals and the survivors and personal representatives of the members of said copartnership. The action was commenced in the early part of the year 1923, the amended complaint therein being served and filed on the 9th day of June, 1923. The defendants united in filing their demurrer to said amended complaint on June 18, 1923, said demurrer being both general and special and being based upon thirteen alleged grounds of demurrer. The demurrer was upon hearing overruled; whereupon and in December, 1923, said defendants served and filed their answer, embracing 17 separate defenses presented by the defendants jointly, and also a number of special defenses urged on the part of certain of said defendants individually. The defendants also presented and filed at the same time their cross-complaint, wherein they asserted affirmatively the particular foundation of their adverse claims to certain portions of the waters of the San Diego river over which the plaintiff was undertaking to have established its alleged prior and preferential right. To the defendants' answers and cross-complaint the plaintiff on December 21, 1923, served and filed its demurrer upon 42 specified grounds. Thereafter and while said demurrer was pending and undisposed of, certain other parties appeared separately in the action with applications for leave to intervene. These were one Carroll H. Smith, who in his proffered complaint in intervention alleged himself to be a resident, citizen, and taxpayer of the city of La Mesa in the county of San Diego, and also an owner of property within the La Mesa Lemon Grove & Spring Valley Irrigation District in said county, which said city and said irrigation district had for the sole source of water supply of each the waters of the San Diego river, which said waters they and each of them were receiving under and by virtue of an agreement with the defendant Cuyamaca Water Company, a copartnership, with which copartnership and the surviving members thereof the said petitioner wished to join in resisting the claim of prior and preferential rights thereto asserted by said plaintiff. The said Carroll H. Smith also alleged himself to be the owner of certain lands within the so-called Ex-Mission Rancho and to be thereby entitled to certain paramount and exclusive rights to the use of the waters of said river derived from grants of said rancho to his predecessors made by and under the Spanish crown. The La Mesa Lemon Grove & Spring Valley Irrigation District also and at the same time presented its application for leave to intervene in the action, basing its alleged right so to do upon its proffered complaint in intervention, wherein were set forth substantially the same averments as were embodied in the complaint in intervention of said Smith. In addition to these, the city of El Cajon, a municipal corporation, situate in the county of San Diego, also petitioned for leave to intervene, making substantially the same allegations as to the source and right of water supply from the waters of the San Diego river as were set forth by said other applicants for leave to intervene. The court upon a hearing permitted the several parties to file their respective complaints in intervention, and in due course the plaintiff, city of San Diego, presented and filed its several demurrers thereto. Thereafter the demurrers of the plaintiff to the answer and cross-complaint of the original defendants and also to the complaints in intervention of said several interveners were submitted to the trial court for decision; and the court in ruling thereon sustained the said plaintiff's demurrer to certain specified portions of the original defendants' answer and cross-complaint without leave to amend, and also sustained the demurrer of the plaintiff to certain other specified portions of said defendants' answer and cross-complaint with leave to amend. The trial court also at the same time overruled the plaintiff's demurrers to the several complaints in intervention. The effect of these several rulings by the trial court was that of determining as a matter of law that the city of San Diego had by virtue of its incorporation and right of succession become the successor and owner of those certain prior and preferential rights to the waters of the San Diego river with which, from its inception, the Pueblo of San Diego, as established in the year 1834, had become invested by virtue of its formation under the laws of Spain and Mexico. The question as to whether as a matter of law the plaintiff, city of San Diego, had originally become invested with these prior and preferential rights in and to the waters of the San Diego river by virtue of its succession to whatever rights of that nature existed in the Pueblo of San Diego, is thus presented upon this appeal, involving as it does the correctness of the aforesaid rulings of the trial court touching that point upon demurrer. As to the issues presented by those other specified portions of the original defendants' answer and cross-complaint, and which involve the question as to whether the plaintiff had lost its original superior right to the waters of the San Diego river, derived from said source by prescription, or by laches or by estoppel operating in favor of some or all of said defendants and their successors in interest, the trial court permitted said defendants to present amended pleadings, and upon their doing so overruled the plaintiff's later demurrers thereto; and having already overruled the plaintiff's demurrers to the several complaints in intervention, and the interveners having also amended their pleadings so as to embrace and conform to the defendants' amended answer and cross-complaint, and the plaintiff having answered the interveners' complaints and the amended cross-complaint of the defendants, the cause was thus brought to issue and proceeded to trial upon the disputed questions of fact thus presented. The cause was tried without a jury; a large mass of evidence was presented involving the testimony of many witnesses and the introduction of numerous exhibits, thus creating a record of unusual proportions, upon which was superimposed briefs and arguments of counsel evincing extraordinary effort, diligence and research. The cause was finally submitted to the trial court for its decision, and in due course the findings and conclusions of law of the trial court were filed, the correctness and sufficiency of which furnish the weighty burden laid upon this court in its determination of the merits of the several appeals, which have been taken and are being prosecuted by all of the parties to this action. By the findings, conclusions of law, and judgment based thereon of the trial court it was found and determined:

"That about the year 1834 there was founded, and until about the year 1850 there continued to exist upon what is now the site of The City of San Diego, a certain Mexican pueblo then designated and ever since known as the Pueblo of San Diego; that the location and site of said Mexican Pueblo of San Diego at the time the same was founded, was, ever since has been, and now is, situated and located upon the banks of a certain unnavigable river or stream, then, ever since and now known as the San Diego River; that said stream at the time of the organization of said Pueblo of San Diego and at all times thereafter during its existence flowed into and through said pueblo, and the banks and bed of said stream from the mouth to the easterly territorial limits of said pueblo a distance of approximately five miles, were located and lay entirely within the territorial limits and formed a part of the lands and waters of said Pueblo of San Diego.

"That said Pueblo of San Diego and the inhabitants thereof from its organization during the entire time of its existence, enjoyed, asserted and exercised a preference or prior right to the use of the waters of said San Diego River for the benefit of said pueblo and the inhabitants thereof.

"That said preference or prior right of said pueblo and of the inhabitants thereof to the use of all the waters of said river necessary to supply the domestic wants of the inhabitants of said pueblo, to irrigate the lands thereof, and for other municipal purposes within the general limits of said pueblo, was a right, and the distribution of said waters for such purposes by the pueblo authorities was a trust created, imposed and recognized by the laws, orders and decrees of the government of the Kingdom of Spain and the Republic of Mexico.

"That the plaintiff herein, The City of San Diego, was incorporated on or about March 27, 1850, and thereupon became the successor and ever since has been the successor of said Mexican Pueblo of San Diego, and as such successor to said Mexican Pueblo succeeded to and acquired all the rights and privileges theretofore held or exercised by said Pueblo of San Diego and in particular as the successor of said Mexican Pueblo of San Diego said The City of San Diego succeeded to and acquired all the rights and privileges theretofore enjoyed, asserted and exercised by said Pueblo of San Diego in and to the waters of said San Diego River; that since said incorporation said The City of San Diego, as the successor to said Mexican Pueblo, has at all times enjoyed, asserted and exercised a right of priority in and to the use of all the waters of said San Diego River necessary or convenient for the use of said The City of San Diego and the inhabitants thereof, and has not in any manner, nor to any extent, surrendered, forfeited or abandoned said rights, save and except in the manner and to the extent herein-after found and declared.

"That the San Diego River is an unnavigable natural stream of water located wholly within the county of San Diego, state of California, and takes its rise in the Cuyamaca Mountains in said county on the southerly and westerly slopes thereof, and flows in a south-westerly direction approximately fifty miles from its source until it reaches the easterly boundary of The City of San Diego, formerly the easterly boundary of said Pueblo of San Diego, from which point said river flows westerly through said The City of San Diego a distance of approximately five miles, discharging its waters into the Pacific Ocean through Mission Bay in said city and county."

From the foregoing findings and judgment of the trial court, omitting therefrom the expressed exceptions, the defendants and interveners have taken and prosecuted their appeal, and they present exhaustively several most interesting propositions in support thereof. They argue as the first of these that the trial court was in error in holding as a matter of law that the Pueblo of San Diego by virtue of its organization as such became entitled, under the Spanish and Mexican laws, to any prior or preferential right to the waters of the San Diego river passing above and underground through the allotted leagues which were to constitute the area of the pueblo lands. In support of this argument counsel for said appellants would have us go back even prior to the Christian era and consider in our review the history of civilization in so far as the same relates to the slow, involved, and obscure development of the civil and religious institutions of ancient and medieval Spain. If for the first time in the history of our California jurisprudence such a review was being asked, or such an elaborate argument as these appellants now urge was being presented, we might be disposed to consider as persuasively as we have now read interestingly the pages upon pages of Spanish history collated in that behalf. But the difficulty with the situation which appellants' diligent counsel now seek to have us reconsider is that the same question has already and on several occasions, early and late, been presented to and passed upon by this court in decisions which are uniformly adverse to the appellants' present contention. While there were other and earlier cases in the courts of this state and even in the Supreme Court of the United States which touched upon the subject of the formation of pueblos under the laws, institutions, and regulations of Spain applicable to the settlement and development of lands in what had become known as "New Spain and the Indies," the great leading case upon the subject applying these laws, institutions, and regulations particularly to those pueblos which had come into existence in California under both the Spanish and Mexican dominions, is the case of Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 530 to page 624, wherein Mr. Justice Baldwin, Mr. Chief Justice Stephen J. Field concurring, discussed at great length and with much learning the nature and extent of the rights which inhered in such pueblos by virtue of their foundation in those lands which lay within their immediate vicinage and beyond this to the extent of the additional four leagues of surrounding lands allotted to such pueblos as a result of their formal establishment as civil governments or quasi municipalities. It is not necessary to further refer to this leading case in other terms than those to which it has been referred to and commented upon by later decisions of the courts of this state and of the United States. In the case of Townsend v. Greely, 5 Wall. 326, 336, 18 L. Ed. 547, the effect of that earlier decision was briefly but clearly stated by Mr. Justice Field, who wrote the latter decision; and his language as used therein was quoted approvingly by this court in the case of Hale v. Akers, 69 Cal. 160, 166, 10 P. 385, which was presently to hand down its decision in the case of Lux v. Haggin in the following month of the same year and which is reported in 69 Cal. 255, 454, 4 P. 919, 10 P. 674. In this latter decision, which is the longest and most exhaustively treated cause in the history of California jurisprudence, Mr. Justice McKinstry, who wrote the opinion, went over the entire ground of the land and water rights of the owners of each in California whose title thereto looked for their derivation to the laws, institutions, and regulations of Spain and Mexico. In the course of his most learned and comprehensive dissertation he referred approvingly to the decision in Hart v. Burnett, supra, as to the right and title which the pueblo had to land within its general limits. The court then proceeded to say: "By analogy and in conformity with the principles of that decision, we hold the pueblos had a species of property in the flowing waters within their limits, or 'a certain right or title' in their use, in trust to be distributed to the common lands, and to the lands originally set apart to the settlers, or subsequently granted by the municipal authorities. It may be conceded that such authorities were not authorized to make concessions to individuals of the perpetual and exclusive use of portions of the waters, without reference to the needs of the other inhabitants; or that such concessions would be an abuse of the trust. But they had a species of right or title in the waters and their use, subject to the public trust of continuously distributing the use in just proportion. * * * Each pueblo was quasi a public corporation. By the scheme of the Mexican law it was treated as an entity, or person, having a right as such, and by reason of its title to the four leagues of land, to the use of the waters of the river on which it was situated, while as a political body, it was vested with power, by ordinance, to provide for a distribution of the waters to those for whose benefit the right and power were conferred." After quoting certain passages from Eschriche, an eminent Spanish authority upon the subject, the court further proceeded to say: "From the foregoing it appears that the riparian proprietor could not appropriate water in such manner as should interfere with the common use or destiny which a pueblo on a stream should have given to the waters; and semble that the pueblos had a preference or prior right to consume the waters even as against an upper riparian proprietor." The court, however, suggested that it "is not necessary here to decide that the pueblos had the preference above suggested. Nor is it necessary here to speak of the relative rights of two or more municipalities on the same stream." In the next and later case of Vernon Irrigation Co. v. Los Angeles, 106 Cal. 237, 251, 39 P. 762, the question directly arose. In that case the Vernon irrigation district, a corporation, owning a tract of land riparian to the upper reaches of the Los Angeles river, commenced its action to enjoin the city of Los Angeles, which was and is the successor of the pueblo of Los Angeles, and certain other defendants, from so diverting the waters of the Los Angeles river as to interfere with the plaintiff's riparian right therein. The city of Los Angeles by its answer put forth the claim that by virtue of its succession to the rights of the pueblo of Los Angeles, founded in 1786, it possessed the prior and preferential right to take all of the waters of the Los Angeles river. The trial was prolonged and the findings of the trial court voluminous, in the course of which it was found and decreed that the city of Los Angeles, by virtue of its succession to the rights of said pueblo, was the absolute owner of all of the water flowing in the Los Angeles river for the use of its inhabitants and for all other municipal purposes. From the judgment in its favor based upon this finding, the plaintiff took an appeal and thus presented to this tribunal for determination the correctness of the aforesaid finding of the trial court. This court, Mr. Justice Temple writing the opinion, gave its most careful and exhaustive consideration to the determination of this question, in the course of which he quoted exhaustively from the Spanish and Mexican law, approving the principles enunciated in the case of Hart v. Burnett, supra, and which were adopted by this court in Lux v. Haggin, supra, and quoted also with approval the language of the latter case above referred to and wherein it had been suggested, though not in that case found necessary to be decided, that the pueblos had a preferred right to the waters of rivers flowing through their lands, which could be asserted to the extent needed to supply the wants of their inhabitants. There were other questions presented in that case not necessary to be here considered, but it must be conceded that the question as to the prior and preferential right of a pueblo to the waters of a river passing through it to the extent above indicated was therein squarely presented and fully upheld by the terms and scope of that decision, and that the later formed municipality organized as the successor of the pueblo fully succeeded to these rights to which the pueblo had become entitled by virtue of its creation under the Spanish and Mexican laws.

The next case wherein this question arose was that of City of Los Angeles v. Pomeroy, 124 Cal. 597, 650, 57 P. 585, which was an action in which the city of Los Angeles undertook to condemn certain lands lying in the San Fernando valley along the Los Angeles river and to which stream said lands were riparian, for the purpose of utilizing the same, collecting and conserving the waters of said stream for delivery to the main supply pipe and distributing system of said city. The plaintiff based its claim of right to condemn the land in question for the utilization of its asserted right to the waters of said river, in part at least, upon the averments of its amended complaint to the effect that the city, as the successor of the pueblo, was the exclusive owner of all of the waters of said river for the purpose of supplying its inhabitants with water for domestic uses and also of supplying water for the irrigation of the irrigable lands embraced in the four square leagues of the pueblo, and for other municipal uses. These averments were traversed by the defendants. The cause was tried before a jury, to which the court gave the following instruction: "The city of Los Angeles is situated on the river below these lands, and is the owner of the right to take from the Los Angeles river all the water that is reasonably necessary to give an ample supply for the use of its inhabitants and for all municipal uses and purposes for which the city may require water. This right is measured by the necessity, and if the needs increase in the future the right will expand to include all that the needs require. This right of the city is paramount and superior to the rights of the defendants in the waters of the river." This court, upon appeal, Mr. Chief Justice Beatty writing the opinion, fully sustained said instruction in so far as it correctly stated the paramount and superior rights of the city to whatever expanding uses of the waters of said river the pueblo by virtue of its formation possessed, and in so doing expressly approved in principle the case of Vernon Irr. Co. v. Los Angeles, supra; the court, however, held that the instruction was erroneous in according to the city of Los Angeles greater rights to the waters of said river than those which, as the successor of the pueblo, it had received from it. The next case in which the same question controversially arose was that of City of Los Angeles v. Los Angeles Farming & Milling Co., 152 Cal. 645, 93 P. 869, 1135, wherein the city of Los Angeles asserted its prior and paramount ownership of the use of the waters of the Los Angeles river from its source to the city and from the surface to bedrock in so far as it was necessary to supply water for the use of its inhabitants, by virtue of its successorship to the pueblo and against the asserted riparian rights of the defendant, based upon its ownership of riparian lands lying along said river some ten miles above said city. The trial court accorded the plaintiff such right, and upon appeal this court, Mr. Justice McFarland writing the opinion, after stating that the only question in the case was as to whether "under the general law of the locality the old pueblo of Los Angeles, and the respondent herein, as its successor, had and has as against appellant the prior and paramount ownership of the use of so much of the water of the Los Angeles river as is necessary for its inhabitants and for general municipal purposes," proceeded to state that "this question need not be discussed as an original one, for it has been answered in the affirmative by former decisions of this court." The cases which are above referred to are there reviewed at length and expressly approved, and after such review and approval it is said: "The foregoing decisions are determinative of the prior and paramount right of the pueblo, and of plaintiff as its successor, to the use of the water of the river necessary for its inhabitants and for ordinary municipal purposes. The question as to what extent this right goes, a question somewhat considered in the Pomeroy Case—that is, for the use of the inhabitants of what territory, and for what municipal purposes can the water be taken as against a riparian owner—does not arise and need not be considered in the case at bar." Neither, it may be said, does this latter question arise in the present case. The law and the attitude of this court toward the law upon this subject stood as above stated during the twenty years which preceded the presentation of the same question to this court in the case of Cuyamaca Water Co. v. Superior Court, supra, which was a prior appeal in the instant case, and in which the issues primarily involved were those quoted from in that decision in the earlier stages of the present opinion.

[1, 2] The appellants herein contended in the trial court, and here contend, that they were and are entitled to have reconsidered and relitigated the question as to whether or not a Spanish or Mexican pueblo organized in California under the laws, institutions, and regulations of Spain or Mexico during their successive governments thereof, became possessed by virtue of such laws, institutions and regulations of a prior and paramount right to the use of the waters of rivers or streams passing through and over or under the surface of their allotted lands so far as may be or become necessary for the pueblo and its inhabitants, and as to whether or not a municipality organized under American rule as the successor of such pueblo succeeded to such pueblo rights. We are of the opinion that by virtue of the foregoing long line of cases, and particularly of the decision of this court in the case of the City of Los Angeles v. Los Angeles Farming & Milling Co., supra, wherein the cases preceding it were specifically reviewed and held to be determinative of this question, the subject is no longer an open one for further consideration and review before this court, and that by said decisions, so long and uniformly followed and adhered to, the proposition that the prior and paramount right of such pueblos and their successors to the use of the waters of such rivers and streams necessary for their inhabitants and for ordinary municipal purposes, has long since become a rule of property in this state, which at this late date in the history and development of those municipalities which became the successors of such pueblos we are not permitted, under the rule of stare decisis, to disturb. In so deciding we are not unmindful of the fact that counsel for the appellants herein have strenuously asserted throughout that the pueblo of San Diego was never so organized and established as such so as to have become entitled to a prior or paramount or any right or rights whatever in the waters of the San Diego river. In so far as this question was raised and presented by the pleadings in the trial court as a question of fact, we are satisfied from an examination of the extensive record herein that the evidence touching this subject was, to say the utmost of it, conflicting in such of its material and substantial aspects as to render the conclusions of the trial court in that aspect of the case binding upon this tribunal. We are also not unmindful of the contention elaborately presented and argued by counsel for appellants that the pueblo of San Diego, even if conceded to have been regularly established as such in the year 1834, never became entitled to any prior, preferential, or other rights in or to the waters of the San Diego river, for the reason that long prior to the alleged establishment of said pueblo the entire and exclusive right to the use and benefit of the waters of said river had been granted by the viceroy of Spain to the Mission of San Diego. In support of this contention the appellants introduced in evidence before the trial court and have here presented for our inspection and interpretation a photostatic copy of such purported grant. It bears the date, according to the translation thereof with which we have been kindly furnished, of the 17th of December, 1773, and the signature, by secretary, of Bucarely, the then viceroy of the King of Spain over Mexico. It purports to approve the removal of the Mission of San Diego from its former location near the Presidio on the shore of the bay of San Diego to a new site several miles up the arroyo, and in order to facilitate such removal and the development of the then small and in a sense still speculative and quite problematical success of the first mission established in Alta California, it proceeded to suggest the cultivation of its surrounding lands through the use of water from the stream, and for that purpose directs the "Reverend Fathers of the Mission to acquire and administer this concession and Royal grant (privilegio) to the waters of this arroyo referred to for the common benefit of all the nation, whether Gentile or converted, who dwell today or in the future in the province of the Mission of San Diego de Acala. This concession and the fruits also shall be held (ser tener) as to these children and their children and successors forever." The document proceeds to state in immediate connection with the foregoing that: "Although a Presidio is thus placed near to the entrance of this stream near to the Port of San Diego there can be no prejudice in this respect because there is always sufficient water for the service of the soldiers, and in the topography and report of Sr. Don Miguel Castro there is evident to the south of this place a worthy river and a torrent smaller in flow and some smaller arroyos from which to drain (disaguas) the Rancho del Rey where their cattle may wander under the vigilant eye of the herdsman." We are loath to believe that the viceroy of Mexico, framing this document in the then far distant capital of New Spain, ever intended by its terms to confer upon this primitive and as yet largely experimental mission settlement any such enlarged, prior, paramount, or exclusive rights in and to the waters of the San Diego river as the appellants herein claim for it. Its language does not so import and it may be said to be doubtful, to say the least of it, whether even the viceroy of the Kingdom of Spain in making such a concession would not have done violence to those laws, institutions, and regulations of Spain which provided for the establishment of civil governments of the sort known as pueblos in new lands so as to take away from these the whole of those water rights in rivers traversing their allotment of land which would be essential to the cultivation of such lands when occupied by civil settlement.

[3, 4] We learn from public history, of which we take judicial notice, that the civil settlement of Alta California was coequally contemplated by those who were officially in charge of the primary expedition which only four years before this purported grant had been put forth and provisioned for the discovery and occupancy of Alta California through the joint effort of Padre Junipero Serra and of Jose de Galvez, visitor general of New Spain. In the broad and detailed plans and express decrees of the latter, precise provision was made for the foundation and development of presidios, pueblos, and missions in the as yet unknown region, and these three forms of occupation were expected, as nearly as possible, to proceed simultaneously as a result of the joint military, civil, and religious expedition then about to set forth. It may be fairly assumed that these joint settlements designed to be established simultaneously were also intended to function harmoniously and not to become involved in disputes over the respective jurisdiction and property rights of each. That such did not prove to be the consequence in all cases is beside the mark, since we do not in this case find it necessary to finally determine the scope and intent of Bucarely's concession to the Mission San Diego in respect to its new location. The reason we are not called upon to do so is that according to evidence educed herein the Mission of San Diego was in or about the year 1834 secularized by Governor Figueroa of Alta California and his official coadjutors purporting or pretending to act in so doing under decrees of the Mexican government enacted in the preceding year. It is not necessary for us to herein determine whether or not the secularization of the Mission San Diego, put into effective operation in that and the following year or two, was in all or any of its aspects lawful. It is sufficient to note that by the consensus of both the civil and ecclesiastical historians of the time and event it was successful and that within a very few years at most the spoliation of the mission was so far completed that its productive activities had ceased, its Indians and its priesthood had departed, the former to relapse into their aboriginal condition and the latter to seek and find other fields of labor. The mission life in fact was destroyed and the mission lands which by virtue of its secularization were to become part of the public domain were within a decade thereafter conveyed by private land grant executed by Governor Pico to one Santiago Arguello, whose grant of the same was subsequently confirmed by the board of commissioners for the settlement of private land claims created by the United States government in 1851, and a patent therefor issued to said grantee a few years later. It has not been seriously, as it could not be successfully, contended herein that any of the original rights of the mission or of its founders or their successors derived from Bucarely's concession either survived the secularization of the mission or passed to Arguello or his successors by virtue of his private land grant and the confirmation thereof by the government of the United States. It follows necessarily that upon the establishment of the pueblo of San Diego in the year 1834 as found by the trial court it became invested with whatever land and water rights it was entitled to under the laws, institutions, and regulations of Spain and Mexico and that in the possession and continued exercise of those rights it was nowise impeded or impaired by the existence of any similar or even superior rights in the Mission of San Diego which either had ceased or would presently cease to be. There is therefore no merit in the contention of the defendants herein that they or any of them by virtue of their occupancy of the former mission lands are to be held the successors of whatever rights the mission had, since the entire right and title of the present occupants of such lands relates as to its origin solely to the Arguello grant.

We have thus, we think, disposed of every vital question presented by the defendants as appellants from that portion of the judgment of the trial court as to which the plaintiff herein is the respondent, and it only remains for us to consider and dispose of those portions of said judgment as to which all of the parties herein have prosecuted their separate appeals. In that portion of the findings of the trial court which are quoted in the earlier passages of this opinion, it will be seen that the prior and preferential rights of the city of San Diego as the successor of the pueblo were made subject to certain exceptions to be in said findings subsequently set forth. In these, its later findings, the trial court deals with those special defenses of said defendants and also of said interveners wherein it is pleaded and sought to be proven that, whatever prior or preferential rights in and to the waters of the San Diego river the city of San Diego had or acquired by virtue of its succession to the pueblo of San Diego, it has subsequently and either wholly or partly lost by prescription or by laches or has become estopped to assert as against these defendants and interveners through certain alleged affirmative action on the part of itself or its authorized officials.

On the threshold of the discussion as to the nature of these several defenses and, if available at all to the defendants, the extent to which they or any of them should be given application in the instant case, it will be well to recur to the statement made by this court upon the former appeal in Cuyamaca Water Co. v. Superior Court, 193 Cal. 584, 588, 226 P. 604, 33 A. L. R. 1316, and which is quoted in the early pages of the present opinion, and from which it will appear that the plaintiff herein is not seeking by this action to have it determined that it is entitled to any particular quantity of water, based upon its prior or present use of the waters of the San Diego river, to the extent of its asserted prior and paramount rights therein. The plaintiff in its pleadings asserts no such use of said waters in the past by either its predecessor the pueblo or itself, further than such use thereof under such claim of right as was from time to time necessary for the needs of the pueblo and its successor the city. On the other hand, the defendants and interveners herein have both by their pleadings, their proofs, and their argument, asserted and shown that neither the pueblo nor the city of San Diego ever did, prior to the institution of the present action, make actual use of any considerable amount of the waters of the San Diego river for any public or municipal or other purpose whatever, and that during the entire history of both pueblo and city the larger part of the waters of the San Diego river, except for the uses thereof undertaken by the defendants and interveners herein, would have flowed through and past said plaintiff and gone unused to the sea. In the findings of the trial court no finding is made and no estimate given as to the quantity of the waters of said river which the plaintiff or its predecessor had made use of, nor is there to be found either in the findings of the court or in the evidence in the case anything tending to establish that whatever actual uses or diversions of the waters of said river the defendants and interveners herein, or any of them, are shown to have made, ever resulted in a diminution in any appreciable degree of the amount of flow of the waters of said river which the plaintiff herein or its inhabitants were from time to time putting to actual use under or in pursuance of the exercise of the city's aforesaid prior and preferential right to the waters of said river. It is important to thus bear in mind the purposes of this action and the pleadings and proofs therein in any consideration of the merits of the defenses of prescription, laches and estoppel urged by the defendants and interveners herein. In dealing with these defenses it is also important to bear in mind the nature of each and the differences, if any, between them.

[5, 6] The nature of the right claimed to have been acquired in the waters of a flowing stream by prescription rests as a prime essential upon an adverse use thereof by the claimant under a claim of right which has, to the extent thereof and for the required term of years, been acquiesced in by the person or persons otherwise entitled to the ownership and enjoyment of the waters thus adversely abstracted from said stream and to enforce these rights by appropriate action. It is needless to cite authorities to a proposition thus deeply grounded in the law of waters; but there are certain instructive cases which bear directly upon the situation of the parties to this action as disclosed by the record herein. The first of these is the case of Anaheim Water Co. et al. v. Semi-Tropic Water Co., 64 Cal. 185, 30 P. 623. This was a case which involved certain alleged conflicting riparian rights to the diversion of the waters of the Santa Ana river, which formed the dividing line between two ranchos, from the owners of one of which the plaintiffs had derived by grant the right to use a certain definite amount of the waters of said river, to which the lands of the grantor were riparian, and of the other of which the defendant was the owner and was entitled to all of the riparian rights incident to such owner unless the same or some portion thereof had been lost by prescription. The trial court found that the plaintiff for many years had openly, notoriously, and continuously appropriated and used the waters of said river to the full capacity of their ditch, claiming the right so to do adversely to all the world; but the court also found that prior to a year or so before the commencement of the action such diversion and use on the part of the plaintiffs, even though thus claimed to have been done adversely, had never interfered with the use which the defendant during the same time was making of said waters, and that with the exception of the aforesaid brief time before the commencement of the action there had at all other times been sufficient water flowing in the river to supply the wants and demands of all of the parties to the action. In dealing with that situation this court (page 192 of 64 Cal. [30 P. 625]) said: "In the face of such facts as these, how can we be expected to hold that as against the owners of the Santiago Rancho the plaintiffs have established any prescriptive right? In order to establish a right by prescription, the acts by which it is sought to establish it must operate as an invasion of the right of the party against whom it is set up. The enjoyment relied upon must be of such a character as to afford ground for an action by the other party. This is thoroughly settled. Now it is very clear that while there was sufficient water flowing in the river to supply the wants and demands of all the parties, its use by one could not be an invasion of any right of any other; and as the court below found, as a fact, that until within a year or two prior to the commencement of the action, there was sufficient water flowing in the river to supply the wants and demands of all the parties, it is plain that the plaintiffs as against the owners of the Santiago Rancho have acquired no right by prescription." The next case to which we would refer is that of Faulkner v. Rondoni, 104 Cal. 147, 37 P. 883, wherein (without stating the facts of the case) we find that the doctrine above announced was expressly approved; the trial court having found that during the period claimed to have given rise to the prescription there had been sufficient water in the stream for the uses of all of the parties to the action and that therefore there had been no such invasion of the rights of one which could form the basis of a prescriptive right in the other. In the quite recent case of Pabst v. Finmand, 190 Cal. 128, 211 P. 11, the doctrine above quoted from Anaheim Water Co. v. Semi-Tropic Water Co., supra, was again approved; the court saying that the use by the adverse claimant "was not hostile unless there was an actual clash between the rights of the respective owners. While there was sufficient water flowing down the stream to supply the wants of all parties, its use by one was not an invasion of the rights of the other." The principle enunciated in the foregoing cases has direct application to the situation presented in the case at bar. The city of San Diego, by virtue of that prior and preferential right which it derived from the pueblo "to the use of all of the waters of the San Diego river necessary to supply the domestic wants of the inhabitants of said pueblo, to irrigate the lands thereof and for other municipal purposes within the general limits of said pueblo," has never thus far in its history possessed and is not now asserting any right of action to prevent the actual diversion of any quantity of the waters along the upper reaches of the San Diego river or its tributaries, whether undertaken by the defendants and interveners herein or their predecessors, or any other persons whatever, which has not at any particular time interfered with such exercise of its aforesaid rights in the waters of said river as from time to time in the course of its growth and history as a municipality it became possessed of. The right of said city was thus always "uncertain and conjectural," depending upon the particular needs of the city or its inhabitants at each particular stage in its development as a municipality, and it would be the height of unreason to hold that the pueblo in its primitive beginnings and the city in the infancy of its corporate life should have been bound to be continually taking arms against users of the upper waters of the stream to an extent which constituted no interference with its present use or right to use such waters at the time of such diversion. It follows that for this reason also no right by prescription exists or has ever existed in favor of these defendants and interveners or either or any of them arising out of their asserted adverse use of the waters of the San Diego river. The city is not in this action asserting a present right to any such remedy, but, on the contrary, and in the language of our earlier opinion, "the subject of the action is the establishment of the priority of right and not the quantity of water to be taken." It thus appears that the present action is not in any sense remedial but is purely declaratory in its nature and in the relief which, in so far as the plaintiff is concerned, is sought thereby.

[7, 8] With respect to the defense of laches which the defendants and interveners present and urge little need be said, since what has been immediately heretofore stated fully applies to such defense. The city of San Diego and its officials could not in reason be charged with laches in the assertion of something with respect to which no right of assertion existed and with respect to which no adverse invasion has thus far occurred. There would seem to be another and all-sufficient reason why the defense of prescription and of laches ought not to be available to the defendants as against the plaintiff in the present action. The right which the pueblo of San Diego and the plaintiff herein as its successor acquired in the waters of the San Diego river by virtue of the pueblo foundation was essentially a public right and, to employ the language of the findings of the trial court, "was a right and the distribution of such waters by the pueblo authorities was a trust created, imposed and recognized by the laws, orders and decrees of the Kingdom of Spain and the Republic of Mexico." In the case of Cuyamaca Water Co. v. Superior Court, supra, this court adopted the language upon this subject used in Lux v. Haggin, supra, wherein it was stated that: "The occupants of lands within the city, the pueblo's successor, are beneficiaries only to the extent that they are entitled to the use of such water and at such times as accords with the laws regulating the public and municipal trust." In the case of Vernon Irrigation Co. v. Los Angeles, supra, it was stated, with special reference to the rights to the waters of the Los Angeles river which the city had derived from the pueblo of Los Angeles, that "the waters of all rivers were, under the Spanish and Mexican rule, public property * * * for the use of the inhabitants." If this be true, it follows necessarily that the public right and public trust which the pueblo and its successor, the city of San Diego, had in these waters in no respect differed from those other public rights and properties which the state and its various subdivisions and agencies possess and administer; and it has been uniformly held that such public rights cannot be lost nor the public trust as to their administration and exercise be destroyed either by adverse possession or by laches or other negligence on the part of the agents of the state or municipality who may from time to time be invested with the duty of their protection and administration. People v. Kerber, 152 Cal. 731-733, 93 P. 878, 125 Am. St. Rep. 93, and cases cited. The case of Ames v. City of San Diego, 101 Cal. 390-392, 35 P. 1005, will, when carefully examined, be found to fully uphold this view. We are therefore of the opinion that for the above additional reason the defenses of prescription and laches urged by the defendants and interveners herein cannot be upheld.

[9-11] The defense of estoppel, however, rests upon an entirely different foundation in both law and fact from that underlying the foregoing two defenses. The defense of estoppel rests upon the doctrine that a right conceded for the purposes of such defense to exist in a party, he shall not be permitted to assert against another to the latter's injury because of the existence and proof of certain facts and conditions which would render its assertion inequitable. The question as to the application of this well-defined legal proposition as between the parties to an action must in the nature of things depend upon the facts of each particular case. Whether the facts of this particular case are such as to permit the application of this doctrine to the plaintiff in its capacity as a municipal corporation and with respect to the latter's "prior and preferential right to the waters of the San Diego river," as above defined, is the problem to which we must finally devote our attention. The essential facts as developed in the evidence adduced herein, bearing upon this problem, are not, with certain exceptions to be noted, the subject of material dispute. The original defendants in this action were Cuyamaca Water Company, a copartnership, and certain parties alleged to be surviving members or the legal representatives of certain deceased members thereof; also Cuyamaca Water Company, a corporation, which does not seem to have much to do with the case. The evidence in the case, stated as concisely as possible, discloses that in the year 1885 the San Diego Flume Company was organized for the purpose of developing the water supply along the upper reaches of the San Diego river and its tributaries which had theretofore been undeveloped and largely unused, with a view to conserving and utilizing the same upon the region lying between the city of San Diego and the mountains, wherein that stream and its tributaries had their source, and the lands of which region prior to said time being semiarid, had been but thinly populated and little used. In the course of this development and during the next few years the San Diego Flume Company expended large sums of money, estimated by the trial court to have been in excess of $1,000,000 in the creation of dams, diversion works, pumping plants, ditches, and flumes for the diversion and distribution of said waters to an extent hereinafter to be stated. The Cuyamaca Water Company, a copartnership, ere long succeeded to the rights and property of the San Diego Flume Company, and during the intervening years between 1889 and the date of the institution of this action has augmented the expenditures, continued and extended the activities, and administered the resources thus derived from its predecessor with the resultant effect that within the wide region reached and benefited by the aforesaid development and distribution of the waters of said river, to the extent hereafter to be noted, an extensive productivity has been attained; orchards, vineyards, farms, and homes have been created, and cities and towns have been established, such as the city of La Mesa, the city of Lemon Grove, the city of El Cajon, and other growing communities containing as a whole several thousand inhabitants and constituting prosperous centers of civic and community life, and all of which have during all the years of their creation and growth received their water supply from the waters of said river as thus developed and distributed by or through the Cuyamaca Water Company. Of recent years certain irrigation districts have been formed and are being operated within said region and one of these, to wit, the La Mesa, Lemon Grove, and Spring Valley irrigation district, has recently secured an option district, has recently secured an option upon, if not actually acquired, all of the rights and properties of the Cuyamaca Water Company, and has thus become the principal party in interest in the eventuality of the present action in so far as the defendants and interveners are concerned. The legal foundation of the San Diego Flume Company and also of its successor, the Cuyamaca Water Company, rested originally in certain formal appropriations located in due course of the laws permitting the same along the course of said river and its tributaries and to an amount in the volume of water claimed to be as herein-after stated. In pursuance of these appropriations certain quantities of said waters have been diverted and distributed to an extent also hereinafter to be designated. It would seem also that certain of the defendants put forth certain claims of right herein, depending upon their alleged ownership of certain lands riparian to said stream. During all of the earlier years of the activities of the San Diego Flume Company and of the Cuyamaca Water Company in the appropriation to the extent thereof of the waters of said river and also of the diversion and distribution thereof to the volume and extent thereof, and during all of the earlier years of the settlement, development, and growth of the region and of the several corporate communities therein as a direct result of the application of said waters to said otherwise semiarid region, the city of San Diego regarded quiescently, and in fact it may be said approvingly, the foregoing development of its "back country" through the aforesaid appropriation, diversion, and use of the waters of the San Diego river. It had every reason so to do and it had no reason to do otherwise, since its own advancement, progress, and prosperity in both business and population were being greatly enhanced thereby, and since also its own actual uses of the waters of said river were being in no wise diminished or impaired. It is true, as averred by the defendants and interveners herein and as found by the trial court, that the city of San Diego on various occasions in its municipal history and through its successive legislative bodies has granted certain rights and privileges to private persons and corporations to develop water by wells and works of various kinds within the limits of the former pueblo lands, and has even contracted to purchase such works when constructed and such water when developed for the use and benefit of the inhabitants of said city; but it is also true as found by the trial court that none of these arrangements was made with any predecessor of the defendants or interveners herein so as to entitle the latter to claim that acts and efforts on the part of the city to have developed its own water supply within its limits and for the use of its inhabitants amounted to such an admission of the validity of the appropriation and uses which the defendants and interveners were undertaking upon the upper reaches of the San Diego river as would operate to constitute an estoppel. The essential elements of an estoppel, even as between private persons, were thus far and up to at least the year 1914 entirely lacking. The defendants and their predecessors, the San Diego Flume

Company, in entering upon and prosecuting their plans for the appropriation and diversion of the waters along the upper reaches of the San Diego river and its tributaries, cannot lay claim to having been misled as to their rights as a matter of law to thus appropriate and use the waters of said river, since they must be held to have known as a matter of law of the existence in the city of San Diego of the aforesaid prior and preferential right of the city to such waters and to the assertion thereof whenever the expanding needs of the city or its inhabitants required such assertion. Neither, as we have seen, were the defendants or interveners at any time, at least prior to 1914, in a position to claim that as a matter of fact they or any of them were misled to their injury by any mere acquiescence on the part of the city of San Diego in their acts of diversion and use of the waters of the San Diego river to the extent thereof, since whatever the extent of such diversion and use of such waters these had in no wise interfered with any of the uses which the city of San Diego was thus far making of the waters of the river. There was, in a word, during all of said times ample water for the uses of both the city and these upper appropriators thereof. An instructive case upon this subject is that of Anaheim Water Co. v. Semi-Tropic Water Co., supra, to which reference has been made with relation to rights to be gained by prescription, and wherein also the subject of estoppel is considered; the court proceeding to say: "With respect to the estoppel relied on by the plaintiffs it is sufficient to say that, as the findings of the court below show that there was sufficient water flowing in the river in 1857 and for nearly twenty years thereafter to supply the wants and demands of the owners of each of the ranchos bordering on the stream, the owners of the Santiago Rancho were neither called upon to object to the diversion and appropriation by the predecessors of the plaintiffs, nor had they any right to object thereto. No right of theirs was interfered with. Nor does it appear that there was any fraud, misrepresentation, or concealment of any kind practiced upon the predecessors of the plaintiffs by the owners of the Rancho Santiago." In certain recent cases, hereinafter to be noted, and also in the case just cited, we have had occasion to quote with approval what was held in the case of Biddle Boggs v. Merced Mining Co., 14 Cal. 368: "There must be some degree of turpitude in the conduct of a party before a court of equity will estop him from the assertion of his title—the effect of the estoppel being to forfeit his property and transfer its enjoyment to another." It is to be noted in this immediate connection that the claim of estoppel which the upper appropriator of the waters of a stream undertakes to assert against a lower claimant thereto, based upon the latter's acquiescence, must be founded, not upon the amplitude of the former's claim as set forth in his recorded appropriation of such waters, nor by the carrying capacity of his ditches or flumes, but upon the actual diversion and use of said waters and only to the extent thereof. Pabst v. Finmand, 190 Cal. 124, 133, 211 P. 11; Haight v. Constanich, 184 Cal. 426, 194 P. 26; Northern Cal. P. Co. v. Flood, 186 Cal. 301, 199 P. 315. We understand the foregoing authorities to state the settled law as declared in this state touching this subject, notwithstanding the array of authorities presented by the appellants and interveners herein from other jurisdictions apparently laying down a different rule.

[12] Even, however, if it were to be conceded that a right based upon estoppel could arise by virtue of mere acquiescence in its assertion as between private persons, we are satisfied that no such claim of right could come into being as against a municipal corporation, founded upon its mere acquiescence or that of its officials in the diversion by any number of upper appropriators or even of upper riparian owners of the waters of a stream to the use of the waters of which such public or municipal corporation was entitled as a portion of its public rights and properties held in perpetual trust for public use. The general rule upon this subject is stated in 10 California Jurisprudence, p. 650, and cases cited, as well as certain limited exceptions to the rule. The defendants and interveners, appellants herein, have referred us to no case wherein the mere passive acquiescence of a public corporation or its officials in the invasion of its rights of property, however long continued, has been held to operate as an estoppel against its assertion of those rights. They have, however, called our attention to certain cases which are claimed to constitute exceptions to the operation of the general rule, and to which we shall presently refer. It is sufficient at this point in the discussion to state that in so far as, prior to the year 1914, the plaintiff herein may have passively acquiesced in the acts of the defendants and interveners in the diversion and use of the upper waters of the San Diego river, no estoppel in pais can be predicated thereon to any extent whatever in favor of the defendants and interveners herein for the several reasons above set forth. The cases above referred to are City of Los Angeles v. Cohn, 101 Cal. 373, 35 P. 1002, wherein the principle of estoppel in pais was given application to an action brought by the city of Los Angeles to recover possession of a small tract of land lying at the intersection of Spring and Main streets in said city, and which was claimed by it to be a part of a public street. That, however, as the court stated in its decision, was an exceptional case from the fact not only that the defendants had been in possession of the property in question adversely and exclusively for almost forty years, during which time they had erected substantial buildings thereon, but that the city, through its officers, had affirmatively and at the time of the erection of such buildings misled the defendants into the belief that the city laid no claim to the premises in question, and that, acting upon such belief and assurance, the defendants had erected their structures upon the property and occupied the same undisturbed for many years. This case bears no similitude to the case at bar. Counsel also direct our attention to the case of Ames v. City of San Diego, 101 Cal. 390, 35 P. 1005; but a reading of that case discloses that a clear distinction was drawn therein between the two classes of pueblo lands which the city of San Diego holds in succession from the former pueblo, namely, those held in trust for a specific public use, such as a park, which cannot be alienated and the title to which cannot be lost by adverse possession; and those lands, such as house lots, which the city, as successor to the pueblo, held and which might be alienated by it, and which it was held for that reason might be lost by adverse possession. There is no comfort for the defendants herein in the decision of this court in that case. Counsel for the defendants and interveners further insist that under the Spanish and Mexican laws pueblo lands might be lost by prescription. It is needless to follow this argument or the authorities cited therein further than to state that the United States in taking over the territory known as Alta California under the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo, agreeing therein to recognize the existence and protect the ownership of certain land titles within said territory, did not also take over and agree to adopt the statutes of limitation of either Spain or Mexico as applicable to lands or waters devoted to a public use.

[13] With respect to the events transpiring between the years 1914 and the date of the institution of the present action, inclusive, in so far as these affected the relations and respective rights and claims of the original parties to this action in and to the use of the waters of San Diego river, the record herein discloses that in the early part of the year 1914 the city attorney of the city of San Diego, acting in obedience to a resolution theretofore adopted by the common council thereof requesting him to make an investigation of the rights of the city in and to the waters of the San Diego river and submit an opinion thereon, presented to that body a formal report upon that subject, going with much of detail into the history of the pueblo foundation, and citing and quoting at length from the decisions of the state and federal courts touching the nature and extent of the water rights of pueblos in and to the waters of streams passing through them, and making particular application of these decisions to the nature and extent of the water rights of the pueblo and city of San Diego in and to the waters of the San Diego river. This opinion was published in pamphlet form at or shortly after the date of its presentation, and was admittedly brought to the attention of both the defendants and interveners herein about that time. It would seem to follow of necessity that if the asserted rights of the defendants and interveners to whatever extent, if any, we may find them to have been assertable, had not up to that time ripened into rights resting in the doctrine of estoppel, no later assertion of these rights and no later acts in the way of a further appropriation or diversion of said waters could be made the basis for a claim of right which did not then exist, unless they could be held to find their support in some very definite withdrawal of the claim of the city to that prior and preferential right to the use of such waters which was thus definitely set forth by the foregoing report the city attorney made in the month of January, 1914, and then or shortly thereafter brought to the notice and knowledge of the defendants and interveners herein. In the year 1917, however, the city of San Diego took a very definite step in the direction of making available to itself certain of the waters of the San Diego river not as yet conserved or appropriated to any beneficial use. In that year a bill was introduced in the United States Congress at the instance of the city of San Diego purporting by its title "to grant rights of way over government lands for reservoir purposes for the conservation and storage of water to be used by the City of San Diego, California, and adjacent communities." The text of the measure thus presented in Congress had reference to a proposed reservoir to be constructed along the upper reaches of the San Diego river and upon lands which formed a portion of an Indian reservation, the title to which was in the United States. While this measure was pending before certain committees of Congress during that and the following year, the passage thereof was strenuously opposed by certain representatives of the defendants and interveners herein; their contention being that the grant of such reservoir rights, with the resultant construction of the proposed reservoir, would constitute a serious interference with the already vested rights of the defendants and interveners to the beneficial use of the waters of the San Diego river. In furtherance of the urge of these opponents and in an effort to so far limit the scope and purpose of said grant and the exercise of whatever reservoir rights and uses were to be asserted thereunder, it was sought to have the city of San Diego, through its officials then in charge of its municipal affairs, adopt certain resolutions disclaiming any intent on the part of said city to interfere with the uses then being made of the waters of the San Diego river by the defendants and interveners herein, and in pursuance thereof certain resolutions were adopted by the then governing body of said city touching this subject. A considerable portion of the record consists of details of this proceeding in Congress and there is considerable discussion in the brief of counsel with respect to the attitude thus taken by the city of San Diego with relation thereto. It would seem, however, that the trial court adequately and correctly considered and epitomized this entire episode in its findings of fact herein, and that with particular reference to the resolutions adopted by the governing body of the city of San Diego having reference to the aforesaid controversy correctly stated therein that: "It is not true that by said resolutions, or by any resolution, or act of said common council the plaintiff herein, acting by or through its legislative body, has expressly or impliedly admitted the ownership by the defendants, or any of them, of the right to use and develop the waters or any of the waters of the San Diego river prior, superior or paramount to the rights of the plaintiff." With respect to the action of the Congress of the United States as to the form and scope of said proposed legislation, in view of the developed opposition of the defendants and interveners herein to the passage thereof, the trial court found that: "It is not true that the Public Lands Committee of Congress or any other Congressional body, or any member of Congress, upon receiving or noting the protest of defendants, or any of them, or of any city or communities served by Cuyamaca Water Company, or for any other reason, refused to adopt said proposed bill or house resolution unless or excepting this plaintiff admitted either expressly or impliedly an ownership and estate of these defendants, or any of them, in or to the waters or the use of the waters of the San Diego river. On the contrary, it is true that the Congress of the United States and the Public Lands Committee of the Senate, and the House of Representatives, and each of them, and the members thereof, explicitly and unequivocally set forth in said bill, and insisted in setting forth in said bill a provision declaring that nothing therein contained should be construed as affecting or intending to affect or in any way to interfere with the laws of the State of California relating to the control, appropriation, use or distribution of water used in irrigation or for municipal or other uses or any vested rights acquired therein, and that the Secretary of the Interior and The City of San Diego in carrying out the provisions of said Act should proceed in conformity with the laws of said State of California." The foregoing findings of the trial court, based as they are on much probative evidence which fully supports them, would seem to set at rest the question as to whether the plaintiff had lost, by its affirmative action or by way of estoppel, whatever rights we have found it to be possessed of prior to the year 1914, to the assertion of its paramount use whenever required of the waters of the San Diego river. There is, however, a further finding of the trial court which would seem to be conclusive as to the existence of any right whatever resting in estoppel on the part of the defendants and interveners herein to a superior right to that of the plaintiff in the use of the waters of the San Diego river. Such finding, which in our opinion the evidence fully supports, reads as follows: "It is not true that the plaintiff has been guilty of any carelessness or any culpable negligence resulting in the defendants, or any of them, being misled as to the state of the plaintiff's title as set forth in its amended complaint. Neither is it true that the defendants were at all times ignorant, or were at any time ignorant of the claim of the plaintiff to the prior and paramount right to the use of the water of the San Diego river. Neither is it true that the defendant had no convenient or ready means of acquiring knowledge respecting the prior and paramount right of the plaintiff in and to the waters of the San Diego river, but, on the contrary, it is true that the defendants and their predecessors in interest at all times had convenient and ready means of acquiring knowledge respecting such right, and at all times knew of plaintiff's claim to such right. It is not true that such acts, omissions and declarations of the plaintiff as are herein found to have been performed were said or done through fraud, and it is not true that any act or omission or declaration of the plaintiff constituted a fraud upon the defendants, or any of them, and it is not true that any act or omission or declaration herein found to have been done or declared by the plaintiff has injured the defendants, or any of them, or justified the defendants, or any of them, in believing that the plaintiff did not own or claim to own an estate in the waters of the San Diego river as alleged in said amended complaint; neither is it true that the defendants nor any of them relying or acting upon any belief fraudulently induced by the plaintiff have expended any money in the development of the waters of the San Diego river. Neither is it true that the defendants nor any of them, or their predecessors in interest, relying or acting upon the belief that the City of San Diego did not own the prior and paramount right to the use of the waters of the San Diego river, expended large or any sums of money in developing said waters and acquiring an estate therein."

When we come to consider the essential and elementary basis of the doctrine and plea of estoppel in the light of the foregoing findings of the trial court, the conclusion would seem to be inevitable that the elements of estoppel are entirely lacking in this case. These elements of estoppel are all embraced in the definition thereof found in subdivision 3 of section 1962 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which reads as follows: "Whenever a party has, by his own declaration, act, or omission, intentionally and deliberately led another to believe a particular thing true, and to act upon such belief, he cannot, in any litigation arising out of such declaration, act, or omission, be permitted to falsify it." This court has frequently been called upon to interpret and apply the foregoing provision of the Code. It is necessary to cite but two of the most recent cases in which it has done so. One of these is Mercantile Trust Co. v. Sunset, etc., Co., 176 Cal. 461, 472, 168 P. 1037, 1041, wherein this court said: "It is of the essence of an estoppel in pais that the party asserting such estoppel should not only have been ignorant of the true state of facts, but that he should have relied upon the representation or admission of the adverse party." The other case is that of Staniford v. Trombly, 181 Cal. 372, 378, 186 P. 599, 601, wherein it was said with reference to the facts of that case: "There was an absence of the essential elements of estoppel, namely, false statements or concealments, or conduct amounting to false statements or concealments, with reference to the boundary made by one having knowledge, actual or virtual, of the facts, to one ignorant of the truth with the intention, resulting in consummation, that he should act upon such false statements or concealments or equivalent conduct."

[14] In the presence of the foregoing findings of fact as made by the trial court, and in the light of the indispensable elements as thus stated by this court essential to be proven in order to the formation of a basis for the defense of estoppel, it is as difficult to understand as it is impossible to uphold the further findings and conclusions of the trial court to the effect that the defendants and interveners are entitled to the benefit of their plea of estoppel to the extent of their diversion and use of the waters of the San Diego river in the amount of twenty-seven cubic feet per second, or in any amount, and that as against such right resting solely in such use the city of San Diego is estopped to assert its prior and paramount right to the use of the waters of the San Diego river. That this conclusion may be fraught with certain disturbing and even disastrous consequences, affecting chiefly the interveners herein, and which have been insistently and even passionately urged by their counsel in the presentation of this prolonged controversy, can be held to furnish no reason for a deprivation of the plaintiff herein of its ancient, prior, and paramount right to the use of the waters of the San Diego river as defined by this court upon the former appeal. If it be true, as the trial court expressly found it to be, that the San Diego Flume Company and its successor, the Cuyamaca Water Company, entered upon and prosecuted their plan for the diversion of the waters of the San Diego river with full knowledge as a matter of law, and with full means of knowledge as a matter of fact, as to the existence of the prior and paramount right of the plaintiff as the successor of the pueblo to the use of the waters of the San Diego river as such right is set forth and defined in our former opinion, and if it be further true, as it must be conceded to be, that the interveners are entitled to assert and insist upon no further rights or equities in respect to the use of said waters than those which were possessed by their predecessor in interest, the Cuyamaca Water Company, we are unable to perceive upon what principle of equitable application the public trust in which the city of San Diego holds its prior and paramount right to the use of the waters of said river to the full extent which the needs of the expanding city from time to time require is to be subverted for the simple and only reason that other persons or other communities along the upper reaches of the river, with full knowledge of the aforesaid prior and paramount rights of the plaintiff, may have undertaken, at a considerable expenditure of money, to make a beneficial and profitable use of such waters.

[15] The only remaining question for our determination upon these appeals relates to that portion of the judgment of the trial court wherein it purported to enjoin the defendants and interveners from the doing of certain constructive work in connection with their conservation and diversion of the waters of the San Diego river except in subordination to the prior and paramount rights of the plaintiff therein, and also purporting to restrain the defendants and interveners from the assertion of any claims of right or title in or to the waters of the San Diego river except in subordination to the paramount rights of the plaintiff therein, and save and except in the amounts and to the extent in said judgment specified. In respect to the aforesaid portions of the judgment it is clear that the trial court has gone beyond the scope and issues of the instant action. This, as we have seen and as this court has already decided upon the former appeal, is an action purely declaratory in character and is one wherein the plaintiff has neither pleaded nor attempted to prove any facts which would entitle it to any other or affirmative relief beyond that of having its prior and paramount right to the use of the waters of the San Diego river established. This being so, the trial court was in error in attempting to give to its determination of this matter any other or further effect than that of a declaratory judgment.

It follows from the foregoing conclusions that the judgment herein must be and is hereby affirmed in so far as it purports to establish the prior and paramount right of the plaintiff to the use of the waters of the San Diego river as the same was defined in our former opinion herein; that the judgment herein is reversed in so far as it purports to determine that the defendants and interveners have become possessed either by prescription or by estoppel of any rights in and to the waters of said river, or any portion thereof, in diminution to any extent whatever of the prior and paramount rights of the plaintiff therein; that said judgment is reversed as to that portion thereof wherein it purports to decree that the plaintiff is entitled to any other or further relief herein other than that afforded by the remedy of a declaratory judgment; each of the parties hereto to pay its own costs upon these appeals.

MISSION FILM CORPORATION v. CHADWICK PICTURES CORPORATION.

Supreme Court of California. June 21, 1929.

1. Continuance ⇨19—Order denying continuance held not abuse of discretion because of necessary absence of party.

Unavoidable absence of a party held not to render order denying continuance erroneous as abuse of discretion.

2. Motions ⇨43—Motion denied cannot without leave of court denying motion be renewed before other court or officer, except higher tribunal (Code Civ. Proc. § 182).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 182, a motion once made and denied, except for informality in the papers or proceedings cannot be renewed before any other court or officer, except a higher tribunal, save where leave to renew application is given by the court or officer refusing the motion.

3. Continuance ⇨8—Refusal of continuance after other judge had denied continuance on same grounds held not abuse of discretion under circumstances.

Where one judge had denied application for continuance on ground of necessary absence of party, there was no error in denying application to other judge presenting no additional grounds, particularly where lengthy excerpts from such party's deposition were received in evidence.

4. Witnesses ⇨205—Client's communication to attorney to be privileged must have been communicated in confidence.

Communications of client to attorney to be privileged as confidential must have been confidentially communicated or at least so regarded by client at time of communication.

5. Witnesses ⇨205—Client's statements to attorney to be communicated to adversary are not privileged.

Statements by client to his attorney as to statement of account or business transaction to be communicated to his adversary are not privileged.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by the Mission Film Corporation, a corporation, against the Chadwick Pictures Corporation, a corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. Allan Frankel and A. V. Kaufman, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Joe Crail and Harold C. Morton, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. Judgment went for the plaintiff in this action to enforce the collection of moneys claimed to be due under a contract, and the defendant has appealed. The appeal was submitted upon an order to show cause, no brief for respondent being presented or on file.

The respondent entered into a contract with the appellant by the terms of which the former was to produce a motion picture which the appellant undertook to sell and distribute. Certain sums of money were to be advanced by the appellant distributor during the filming of the picture, and, upon delivery to it of the master print and two negatives in saleable condition, the distributor agreed to advance to the producer, in cash, one-half of the balance of the actual negative cost, not to exceed $30,000. The distributor further agreed to pay to the producer one-half of the proceeds derived from the sale, exhibition, and distribution of the picture, guaranteeing, in any event, the entire negative cost up to $30,000 within six months after date of the delivery of the master print and negatives. Payments were made up to the one required upon delivery of the print and negatives, and plaintiff brought this action to recover the balance due under the contract. Defendant denied the delivery of the negatives in accordance with the contract. The court found that the negatives and print were delivered, and that defendant had collected large sums of money from the sale and exhibition of the picture. It therefore gave judgment in favor of plaintiff as prayed for.

When the cause came on for trial, counsel for the defendant moved for a continuance on the ground that it was essential to have the testimony of the president of the defendant corporation, who was practically the sole stockholder, and who had conducted all the negotiations with reference to the contract; that he was at that time detained in New York by reason of pending business; and that counsel were not possessed of sufficient facts to enable them to properly defend the action. The motion was denied on the ground that a similar motion, based on the same affidavit, had been previously made that morning before the judge of another department of the court, and by him denied.

[1-3] Appellant first contends that the court erred in denying the motion for a continuance, and that such denial was an abuse of discretion. There is nothing in the record indicating the reasons for the denial of the motion by the judge to whom it was first submitted.

In the absence of a showing to the contrary, we must assume that due consideration was given to the fact that a considerable amount of money was involved, and that the requested continuance was for a period of approximately only 30 days. While the circumstance that the witness who is unable to attend is, at the same time, one of the parties should no doubt be regarded as strengthening the showing in favor of a continuance, it has never been held in this court that the unavoidable absence of a party necessarily compels the court to grant a continuance. Sheldon v. Landwehr, 159 Cal. 778, 781, 116 P. 44. "It is for the trial court in all cases, except where otherwise expressly provided by statute, to determine whether or not the circumstances shown upon an application for a continuance are such as to make it proper that a continuance should be granted, and its conclusion thereon will not be disturbed unless there has been a plain abuse of discretion." Lynch v. Superior Court, 150 Cal. 123, 88 P. 708. It does not appear that the defendant was given leave to renew the motion before the judge trying the cause. A motion once made and denied, except for informality in the papers or proceedings, cannot be renewed before any other court or officer, except a higher tribunal, save where liberty is given by the court or officer refusing the motion to renew the same. Hitchcock v. McElrath, 69 Cal. 634, 11 P. 487; Code Civ. Proc. § 182. The granting of the motion, after the same has once been denied, is a matter addressed to the discretion of the court. Estate of Riviere, 8 Cal. App. 773, 775, 98 P. 46. Had such permission been granted to the defendant, the failure to support the motion with new evidence might have afforded sufficient reason for the refusal of the court to again entertain it. Gay v. Gay, 146 Cal. 237, 241, 79 P. 885. As the second motion presented no grounds which were not before the court on the first motion, the court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to consider it. Particularly is this true in view of the fact that the appellant was permitted to introduce in evidence lengthy excerpts from the deposition of Mr. Chadwick (the witness whose absence was the basis for the motion for a continuance), taken in Los Angeles some months earlier, and which appears to deal quite fully with the material phases of the controversy.

[4, 5] In the course of Mr. Chadwick's deposition he was asked whether the motion picture involved in this action had "produced gross about $26,000." He replied: "That is my judgment. I would rather submit actual figures on that when I get back to New York." During the trial, one of defendant's counsel, called as a witness for the plaintiff, was asked whether a statement submitted by him to counsel for the plaintiff was not the statement from Mr. Chadwick showing the earnings of the picture. On answering that he "couldn't say that," the further question was put to him: "That was what Mr. Chadwick told you it was, wasn't it?" Defendant objected to this question on the ground that what Mr. Chadwick told the witness—his attorney—was privileged. The objection was overruled, and appellant assigns this ruling of the court as error, citing subdivision 2 of section 1881 of Code Civ. Proc. While "on principles of public policy, communications from a client to his attorney, touching the subject matter under investigation are privileged, and will not be allowed to be disclosed by the attorney" (People v. Atkinson, 40 Cal. 284), the communication must be confidential, and so regarded, at least by the client, at the time. If it clearly appears that the same was not intended by the client to have been confidential, it is not privileged. Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 663, 678, 22 P. 26, 131. It is clearly manifest that the statement here in question was not privileged and confidential, for it was the intention of the client that it should be disclosed (Estate of Nelson, 132 Cal. 182, 188, 64 P. 294), it having been furnished by Mr. Chadwick on his own suggestion for submission to counsel for the plaintiff.

Appellant asserts that the findings allege that "the plaintiff is entitled to the sum of $16,501.70, with interest thereon since December 15, 1924, and further interest on $13,925.13 since June 15, 1925." Appellant has misread finding 3. It states that there is due from defendant to plaintiff the sum of $16,401.70, with interest on $2,476.57 of said sum since December 15, 1924, and interest on $13,925.13 from June 15, 1925—December 15, 1924, being the date of delivery of the negatives, as found by the court, and June 15, 1925, representing the six months' time within which, under the contract, the entire negative cost was to be paid to the plaintiff.

We find no merit in the other contentions raised by the appellant.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. CARROW. (Cr. 3188.)

Supreme Court of California. June 18, 1929.

1. Receiving stolen goods ⇨8(3)—Evidence held to warrant conviction of receiving stolen property.

Evidence held to warrant conviction of receiving stolen property.

2. Criminal law ⇨1202(3)—Testimony of accused on witness stand that he has been convicted of felony goes only to credibility, and cannot be considered as proof of prior offense, increasing penalty (Pen. Code, §§ 667, 668).

Testimony of accused on witness stand that he has been convicted of a felony goes only to his credibility, and may not be considered on the issue of prior conviction, as increasing penalty, under Pen. Code, §§ 667, 668.

3. Criminal law ⇨1202(3)—Extrajudicial admission of defendant of prior conviction of felony held insufficient to warrant conviction as second offender (Pen. Code, §§ 667, 668).

Extrajudicial admission of accused that he had previously been convicted of felony is insufficient to warrant conviction and increased punishment, under Pen. Code, §§ 667, 668, as second offender, despite Code Civ. Proc. § 1844.

4. Criminal law ⇨1202(3)—Punishment as second offender should not be imposed, unless proper proof is made by state (Pen. Code, §§ 667, 668).

Pen. Code, §§ 667, 668, greatly increasing term of imprisonment of persons convicted, who theretofore had been convicted of offenses punishable by imprisonment in state prison, and who have served time therefor in any penal institution, should not be applied, unless proper proof has been made by state.

5. Criminal law ⇨1188—On reversal of conviction for insufficient evidence of prior felony, court may remand cause to permit sentence as for first offense.

Where accused was sentenced as second offender under evidence insufficient to show commission of prior felony, the Supreme Court, on reversing the judgment, may remand the cause to the trial court for new trial, unless that portion of indictment charging prior conviction be dismissed, and sentence be imposed as for first offense.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Douglas L. Edmonds, Judge.

Charles W. Carrow was convicted of receiving stolen property, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded with directions.

Superseding opinion in 270 P. 379.

Joel Terrell, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn and James S. Howie, Deputy Attys. Gen., for the People.

LANGDON, J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of receiving stolen property. The information also charged that in the state of Kansas, prior to the commission of said offense, defendant had been convicted of a felony. The jury found the defendant guilty as charged, and also that he had suffered a prior conviction. In accordance with the provisions of the statute (section 1168, Pen. Code), defendant was sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison for the term prescribed by law.

[1] Upon appeal, defendant contends that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict. It is conceded that defendant was in possession of the property in question and that it had been stolen. The general conduct of defendant, including his admission that he knew it was "hot" (meaning that he knew the property had been stolen), together with the fact that the property was found under a clod of dirt in the front yard of defendant's residence, where he admitted that he had concealed it, were sufficient indications of knowledge of the fact on the part of defendant that the property had been stolen.

[2] It is also contended that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict as to the charge of prior conviction of defendant. Defendant denied the charge in the indictment of prior conviction of a felony. Upon that issue the record contains the testimony of a police officer that the defendant, after his arrest, stated that he had served a term in the state penitentiary of Kansas for grand larceny; that he was convicted because of the theft of automobile tires. When the defendant was on the witness stand, he was asked if he had ever been convicted of a felony, and he stated that he had been so convicted. He contends upon appeal, however, that this latter question and answer should have gone only to the credibility of the witness, and that it was incompetent upon any other issue, and that the jury should have been so instructed. On the other hand, the respondent contends that the admission of defendant, testified to by the officer, is sufficient for the finding of the jury upon the prior conviction under the provisions of section 1844, Code of Civil Procedure, to the effect that the direct evidence of one witness, who is entitled to full credit, is sufficient for proof of any fact except perjury and treason. It is argued that, while the defendant may not have been entitled to full credit upon every subject, he is entitled to credit upon this matter which is against his interest.

[3, 4] However, the case of People v. Johnson, 57 Cal. 571, holds that, while a defendant taking the witness stand may be asked if he has been convicted of a felony, that question goes only to his credibility, and this rule would exclude the testimony of defendant in this case so far as the issue of prior conviction is concerned. This leaves the record with only the extrajudicial statement of the defendant, and it has been held repeatedly that a material element of a charge may not be proven by the extrajudicial statement of the defendant alone. People v. Chadwick, 4 Cal. App. 63, 87 P. 384, 389, and cases therein cited. In People v. Chadwick, supra, it was said that the allegation of previous conviction of a felony is a distinct element of the charge and must be proven by competent evidence. The provisions of the law (sections 667 and 668, Pen. Code) increasing greatly the term of imprisonment of a person found guilty of a crime who theretofore has been convicted of an offense punishable according to the laws of this state by imprisonment in the state prison, and who has served a term therefor in any penal institution, should not be applied unless proper proof has been made by the state.

[5] The procedure followed in the case of People v. Chadwick, supra, seems appropriate here, for, although the portion of the verdict relating to a prior conviction was unauthorized, it does not follow that a new trial must be granted. The verdict that the defendant had suffered a prior conviction is severable from that portion finding him guilty of receiving stolen property.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded to the trial court, with direction to that court that if, within 20 days after the filing therein of the remittitur from this court, the district attorney shall apply for an order dismissing that portion of the indictment which charges the defendant with having been convicted of a felony prior to the commission of the offense of receiving stolen property charged therein, and said application shall be granted, and the court, in the exercise of its discretion upon the facts and circumstances of the case, shall pronounce judgment and sentence upon the defendant as provided in section 496, Penal Code, thereupon such judgment shall stand affirmed. If the district attorney shall not within said period of 20 days make said application, the superior court is directed to grant a new trial.

Supreme Court of California. June 19, 1929.

1. Death ☞77—Supreme Court will not hold that plaintiff suffered no pecuniary loss, evidence showing decedent gave earnings and partly paid for home.

Where evidence in action for death showed that deceased had resided for several years in home of plaintiff and her husband, had given all earnings to them, gave sum of $200 to plaintiff and paid practically one-half of purchase price of house and lot so that enough evidence was set out to show that plaintiff and her husband had stood in loco parentis to decedent for many years, Supreme Court, in absence of any contrary showing, will not hold that plaintiff suffered no pecuniary loss at death of brother; it being unnecessary to set out all evidence on subject and sufficient, if enough appears, to show question should have been left to jury.

2. Appeal and error ☞854(5)—Showing substance of record referring to transcript for verification held sufficient as against motion to affirm nonsuit based on one of several grounds (Supreme Court Rule 8).

Though it is true that motion for nonsuit made on more than one ground, if good on any ground, will be sustained, defendants in action by plaintiff for death of brother on motion to affirm judgment held not aided thereby, though they moved for nonsuit upon grounds of absence of showing of negligence and absence of showing of pecuniary loss to plaintiff, since, under Supreme Court Rule 8, it is sufficient to show substance of record, parenthetically referring to line and page of typewritten transcript for verification which plaintiff, as appellant, did.

In Bank.

Action by Jesus Hernandez Montanez against Elizabeth Morton Beard and another. Judgment of nonsuit for defendants. Motion to affirm judgment for failure to print pertinent portions of transcript. Motion denied.

Theodore Gottsdanker, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Culver & Nourse, of Los Angeles, and Estudillo & Schwinn, of Riverside, for respondents.

PRESTON, J. Motion to affirm judgment for failure to print pertinent portions of transcript. The action is for negligence.

Sixto Hernandez met his death in 1926, having been struck by an automobile driven by the defendant, Elizabeth Morton Beard, who was, at that time, on business of her father, defendant George H. Morton. The plaintiff is the adult sister and sole heir at law of the deceased and brings the action under section 377, Code of Civil Procedure.

At the conclusion of the plaintiff's case a motion for nonsuit was made upon two grounds: First, the absence of a showing of negligence; second, the absence of a showing of pecuniary loss suffered by the plaintiff. The motion was denied on the first ground, but granted on the second, and judgment passed for defendants. The appellant has filed a 10-page brief, setting up generally the facts of the case, the making of the motion for nonsuit, the grounds therefor, and the action of the court thereon, with appropriate references to the transcript. It then sets up a portion of the evidence upon which plaintiff relies to show that a pecuniary loss was suffered by her in the death of the decedent. The brief, concededly, does not purport to show all the evidence on this subject, but declares the evidence so set up sufficient to show the judgment erroneous. Instead of filing a reply brief the respondents confidently move to affirm the judgment.

[1] The evidence set out in the brief by question and answer shows that the deceased was some 24 years of age at the time of his death and had resided for more than 17 years in the home of the plaintiff and her husband as a member of their family; that all of his earnings had been given to them; that at the time of his death he was earning from 40 to 50 dollars, twice a month, which it seems he likewise paid over to the plaintiff and her husband. The evidence shows one incident of a gift of $200 by decedent to plaintiff, also that he paid practically one-half of the purchase price on a house and lot for her, which cost a total of $1,200. In other words, enough of the evidence is set out to show that the plaintiff and her husband had stood in loco parentis to the decedent for many years. In the absence of any contrary showing we are not prepared at this time to hold that the plaintiff suffered no pecuniary loss at the death of her brother. It was not necessary to set out all the evidence on this subject, if enough appears to show that this question should have been left to the jury, and we are not prepared at this time to say that such a showing was not in fact made.

[2] It is true that a motion for nonsuit made on more than one ground, if good on any ground stated, will be sustained. But this observation does not aid respondents here. Under rule 8 of this court, as now existing, it is sufficient to show the substance of the record, "parenthetically referring to the line and page of the typewritten transcript for verification." This was done. We, therefore, think that the showing of the appellant is sufficient as against this motion and it is denied.

STERLING CORPORATION v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (L. A. 11186.)

Supreme Court of California. June 18, 1929.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 607(1)—Period allowed to request transcript begins to run from written notice of termination of new trial proceedings, unless written notice is waived (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 953a; $\S$ 953d, as added by St. 1927, p. 86).

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 953a, requiring party appealing to file with clerk request for transcript within 10 days after notice of decision denying new trial, 10-day period does not begin to run until written notice of termination of new trial proceedings have been served, unless written notice thereof has been waived in writing or by oral stipulation in open court and entered in minutes, in view of section 953d, as added by St. 1927, p. 86, although notice of appeal from judgment was filed after motion for new trial had been denied; notice of appeal in such case not furnishing record evidence of termination of new trial proceedings.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 571—Petitioner for mandamus to require settlement of reporter's transcript not proving essential facts necessary to relief held not entitled to writ (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 953d, as added by St. 1927, p. 86).

Where petition for mandamus requiring superior judge to settle reporter's transcript alleged that no notice of termination of new trial proceedings, as required by Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 953d, as added by St. 1927, p. 86, was ever served on petitioner, which allegation was controverted in reply and return to writ showing that notice of denial of motion was served, and petitioner introduced no evidence in support of allegation of nonservice when matter came on for hearing but submitted matter on pleadings and papers on file, petitioner was not entitled to mandamus, since burden was upon petitioner in such proceeding to prove every fact that lies at foundation of his proceeding, except such allegations of petition as are admitted by answer, and, where answer to alternative writ states a defense to petition, peremptory writ will not be issued unless issues of fact have been disposed of.

In Bank.

Application by the Sterling Corporation for writ of mandamus prayed to be directed to the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Elias V. Rosenkranz, Judge, requiring him to settle reporter's transcript. Writ discharged.

McGee & Sumner, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Arthur E. Koepsel, of Orange, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J. Petitioner, Sterling Corporation, seeks by mandamus to compel Hon. Elias V. Rosenkranz, as judge pro tempore of the superior court of the county of Los Angeles, to settle and allow a stenographic reporter's transcript, as provided in section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, for use upon appeal in an action wherein the said court rendered judgment against it as defendant and thereafter denied its motion for a new trial. Petitioner alleges that the trial judge refused to certify the transcript because he was of the view that petitioner had failed to comply with the provision of section 953a, which requires a party appealing to file with the clerk a request for the transcript within 10 days after notice of decision denying the motion for a new trial.

[1] Petitioner alleges that at the time it filed the request for the transcript with the clerk no written notice of the order denying the new trial had been served upon it, and that by virtue of section 953d, Code of Civil Procedure, enacted in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 86), the 10-day period allowed by section 953a would not begin to run until written notice of the termination of the new trial proceedings had been served upon it, unless written notice thereof had been waived in writing or by oral stipulation made in open court and entered in the minutes, which was not the case here. Since the filing of the petition herein, this precise point has been determined in petitioner's favor by this court in Griffin v. Kent (Cal. Sup.) 274 P. 56, followed by the District Court of Appeal in Smith v. Wall, 275 P. 983. Prior to the decision of this court another division of the District Court of Appeal had reached a similar conclusion in Attkisson v. Reynolds, 270 P. 686.

Riggs v. Guedemann (Cal. App.) 270 P. 1001, cited by respondent, was decided without reference to the provisions of section 953d, and on the authority of decisions rendered prior to the enactment of said section, in which decisions it was held that the filing of a notice of appeal from a judgment or order denying a new trial furnishes record evidence of actual notice of the judgment or order, and in such a case the 10-day period to request a transcript commences to run from the date of the filing of the notice of appeal, although no written notice of the entry of judgment or order has been served on the party appealing. Estate of Keating, 158 Cal. 109, 110 P. 109; Fiske v. Gosbey, 168 Cal. 334, 143 P. 611; Spear v. Monroe, 181 Cal. 728, 186 P. 149. Section 953d has abrogated the rule of law announced in said decisions. Griffin v. Kent, supra; Attkisson v. Reynolds, supra; Smith v. Wall, supra. Furthermore, if this were not the case, the rule of said decisions relied on by respondent is not applicable in the instant case, for the notice of appeal, as quoted in the reply to the petition, does not afford record evidence of actual notice of the order denying a new trial. Petitioner had 10 days from the date of notice of the termination of the new trial proceedings to file a request for a transcript. The notice of appeal from the judgment was filed after the motion for a new trial had been denied, but it makes no reference to the new trial proceedings. It furnishes record evidence of actual knowledge of the entry of judgment, but not of the termination of the new trial proceedings.

[2] We conclude that the petition states facts which justified the issuance of the alternative writ, and that petitioner would now be entitled to the issuance of the peremptory writ if it had substantiated by proof the allegation of the petition that no written notice of the order denying the new trial had been served upon it. This it has failed to do. It alleges that "no notice as required by said section (953d) was ever served on petitioner, and there was no waiver of notice by either of the methods mentioned in said section." In the reply and return to the writ this allegation is controverted by an allegation that "notice of denial of motion for new trial was served on September 25, 1928," which was six days after the motion had been denied, according to the allegations of the reply. In this event, the 10-day period commenced to run on September 25, and had expired when petitioner filed its request for a transcript on November 17, 1928. The reply to the writ admits that an affidavit of service of said notice of denial of motion for a new trial was not filed with the clerk until December 1, 1928, which was after petitioner had filed its request for a transcript. But if the notice had in fact been served, the absence from the clerk's files of an affidavit would not enlarge the rights of petitioner. Petitioner introduced no evidence in support of its allegation of non-service when the matter came on for hearing in this court, nor did it stipulate with respondent as to the facts, but instead it joined with respondent in submitting the matter on the pleadings and papers on file. The burden is upon the petitioner in a mandate proceeding to prove every fact that lies at the foundation of his proceeding (Cothran v. Cook, 146 Cal. 468, 80 P. 699; Hippen v. Ford, 129 Cal. 315, 61 P. 929), excepting such allegations of the petition as are admitted by the answer, and where the answer to the alternative writ states a defense to the petition, the peremptory writ will not be issued until the issues of fact have been disposed of.

Attkisson v. Reynolds, supra, relied on by petitioner, in which it was held that the burden was upon the appellee, rather than the appellant, to show that written notice had been given, as required by section 953d, involved a motion to dismiss made by the appellee, upon whom the burden rested, as moving party, to present facts justifying a dismissal of the appeal. Here the appellant has initiated a proceeding to compel the trial judge to settle the transcript in order that it may better prosecute its appeal, and the burden was upon it to establish the facts entitling it to the relief claimed.

Writ discharged.

While a contract of insurance must be construed most favorably to assured, court need not indulge in a strained and forced construction to harmonize incongruous elements, so as to create obligation against insurer, when it is reasonably probable that parties did not contemplate such result.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank C. Collier, Judge.

Action by Willard O. Fiske against the Niagara Fire Insurance Company of New York. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded, with direction.

Superseding opinion in 266 P. 853.

David R. Faries, John R. Berryman, Jr., and Edwin Heizman, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

SEAWELL, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff to recover on an assigned contract of insurance, based upon the following enumerated perils insured against and the exceptions thereto:

"(c) Theft, robbery or pilferage, excepting by any person or persons in the assured's household or in the assured's service or employment, whether the theft, robbery or pilferage occur during the hours of such service or employment or not and excepting the wrongful conversion, embezzlement, or secretion by a mortgagor or vendee in possession under mortgage, conditional sale or lease agreement, and excepting in any case, other than in case of the theft of the entire automobile described herein, the theft, robbery or pilferage of tools and repair equipment." (Italics ours.)

The defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The lower court overruled the demurrer and, defendant having declined to answer, judgment was entered in the sum prayed for. The defendant prosecutes this appeal therefrom on the judgment roll.

The plaintiff's assignor and one Spainhower on February 21, 1923, entered into a conditional contract of sale, by the terms of which plaintiff agreed to sell the automobile to Spainhower for $400, payable $140 upon the execution of the contract and the balance at the rate of $30 per month. Subsequent to the execution of the contract, which was also subsequent to the delivery of the check for $140, but prior to the delivery of the automobile, the insurance policy was issued by the appellant, insuring the plaintiff and Spainhower "jointly and severally" against loss occurring by reason of "theft, robbery or pilferage," subject to the exceptions above enumerated in said paragraph (c) of said contract of insurance. Spainhower disappeared with the automobile, and neither he nor the automobile was thereafter located. The sole question to be solved is whether it was the intent of the parties to the insurance policy to insure against the loss of said automobile in the manner above described. In other words, what did the parties contemplate by the use of the words and phrases and exceptions employed in said paragraph?

[1] This transaction transpired long prior to the act of the Legislature which expanded and defined the meaning of the word "theft" in its application to larceny. If it be conceded solely for the purpose of argument that the legal definition of the word "theft" as used in the contract of insurance included the act of obtaining possession of said automobile in the manner described in the complaint, nevertheless plaintiff could not recover thereon, for the reason that it is clear that the parties thereto intended to exclude (and certainly not to include) as a risk or peril insured against, the kind of dishonest acts which the vendor of said automobile charges against the person whom he voluntarily selected as a conditional purchaser of said automobile. Paragraph (c) of the contract, upon which plaintiff relied to sustain his action, does unquestionably by necessary implication, if not by express terms, "exclude the acts which form the gist of this action as constituting risks insured against. If the rule of ejusdem generis as applied to the first four words of said paragraph (c), to wit, "theft, robbery or pilferage" as those words are commonly, if not universally, understood by the public, is not absolutely conclusive of the point that the parties meant thereby those ordinary acts of dishonesty accomplished by stealth or force, in which the owner of the property is not a voluntary participant, certainly the remaining portion of the sentence, to wit, "excepting by any person or persons in the assured's household or in the assured's service or employment, whether the theft, robbery or pilferage occur during the hours of such service or employment or not, * * * removes all doubt and makes it absolutely certain as to the kind of acts committed by third persons that were intended to be and were covered by the policy of insurance.

It will be noted that the parties did not have in mind such an unusual and absurd proposition of the vendee committing theft, robbery or pilferage against the owner who had voluntarily placed his property in the hands of the vendee. If the first portion of said paragraph may be said to be uncertain as to what the parties intended, the latter portion, which excepts wrongful conversion, embezzlement or secretion by a mortgagor or vendee in possession under mortgage, conditional sale or lease agreement, would seem to be sufficient to remove any doubt as to the intent of the parties. "The whole of a contract is to be taken together, so as to give effect to every part, if reasonably practicable, each clause helping to interpret the other." Civ. Code, § 1641. In arriving at the intention of the parties to said contract, it must be kept in mind that they were engaged in drawing a policy of insurance guaranteeing protection against risks or perils to which the owners of automobiles are commonly subjected, to wit, theft committed as theft is ordinarily committed, and were not concerned with the purpose that the Legislature had in mind in the framing of penal statutes for the prevention or punishment of crime. The question is: What did the parties have in mind and intend, and not what the Legislature may have had in mind in adopting the policy of enlarging or extending common-law definitions of crime so as to include acts not formerly within the statute?

[2] The complaint alleges that the party whom the owner of the automobile made its conditional vendee, obtained possession of said automobile by falsely representing to the owner that he had on deposit with the National Bank of Kansas City, Mo., $140, when, as a matter of fact, he had no such sum or any part thereof on deposit with said bank. The most that can be said of this transaction, as shown upon the face of the complaint, is that it constituted a very ordinary case of false representation, and it is so pleaded in the complaint. The complaint contains no statement of facts which would constitute larceny by trick or device. The transaction constitutes a simple case of obtaining the possession of property by false representations, and neither party intended to nor had in mind any thought of covering any such risk or abuse of confidence which thereafter developed, by the policy of insurance.

[3] The automobile was sold by its owner to a vendee selected by it upon a contract of sale and the insurance company cannot be required, in the light of the facts of this case, to assume the obligation of the vendee. We think there is nothing in Buxton v. International Indemnity Co., 47 Cal. App. 583, 191 P. 84, which lays down a rule in conflict with our construction of the contract in the instant case. That was an action brought to reform a contract of insurance and to recover or enforce the same as revised and reformed. The decision was rested largely upon a letter which the agent of the insurance company wrote to the assured prior to the issuance of the policy as follows: "I wish to advise you that the International Indemnity Company will from this date extend policies on all cars in which you may have an equity to cover any claims arising under the following conditions: * * * Third. If the conditional buyer of an automobile or any member of his immediate family should steal any automobile insured under our policies and thereby commit a felony, upon warrant being secured for the arrest of such party or parties the company hereby agrees that your equity in any automobile insured by this company will be fully protected."

The above letter, having been written prior to the issuance of the policy, was held to constitute a part of the contract, and clearly, this being so, there was a waiver in that contract of the exceptions which are operative in the instant case. Placing ourselves in the position of the parties to the contract, we are satisfied that it was not the intention of the parties to insure against the risk or peril which is made the basis of this action. It is true that a contract of insurance must be construed most favorably to the assured. But this does not mean that a court must indulge in a strained and forced construction to harmonize incongruous elements, to the end that an obligation may be created against the insurer, when it is reasonably probable that the contracting parties did not contemplate such a result.

Numerous cases are cited by respondent as illustrative of the applicability of the word "theft" to the facts of the instant case. While we are of the view that the contract excepts as a peril insured against the deprivation of the owner of his property parted with in the manner described in the complaint, it nevertheless may be stated in passing that the facts in said cited cases which are held to constitute larceny or theft are widely different from the facts pleaded in the instant case. For example, People v. Shaughnessy, 110 Cal. 598, 43 P. 2, was a case in which the prosecuting witness was tricked of his money in a lottery scheme, which is referred to in the opinion as a "bunco game." People v. Rae, 66 Cal. 423, 6 P. 1, 56 Am. Rep. 102, was a case of a conspiracy to obtain possession of property by the employing of the artifice commonly called the "confidence game." The case strongly relied upon by respondent, and which seems to form the basis of a number of other decisions cited, Hill-Howard Motor Co. v. North River Ins. Co., 111 Kan. 225, 207 P. 205, 24 A. L. R. 736, was a false impersonation case.

It will be found upon an examination of the authorities cited that most all of the cases upon which respondent relies are cases where property was obtained by trick or device or by the employment of artifice, or impersonating another, or cheating by the use of cards or mechanical devices, or by deceiving the senses of the person imposed upon by unfair means, or by conspiring with others to cheat, or by resorting to those sharp practice acts which are usually hurriedly pressed upon the unwary and commonly known as "swindling." The outstanding well-considered decision directly and squarely combating respondent's theory is Delafield v. London, etc., Co., 177 App. Div. 477, 164 N. Y. S. 221. It may be observed that a number of the cases relied upon by respondent are not in point. However, we do not deem it necessary to pursue this branch of the case further, as the decision is not rested upon the grounds last discussed.

In their brief and on oral argument counsel for appellant have stated that the only question involved on the appeal is whether a policy insuring against theft, robbery, and pilferage insures against a larceny committed by means of trick and device. The attitude of counsel evidences a desire to have this question settled on this appeal and by the statement that it is the only question presented to compel its determination. However desirable that result might be, we cannot be forced into that position in the face of the plain terms of the policy which removes that question from the case.

[4] The contract of insurance forming a part of the complaint by special reference must be examined in order to determine whether a cause of action is stated therein. Upon so examining it, we are of the opinion that it does not state a cause of action and the demurrer should have been sustained.

The judgment is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded to the superior court, with direction to sustain said demurrer.

CONGDON v. G. M. H. WAGNER & SONS.

Supreme Court of California. June 19, 1929.

1. Records 9(1)—Land Title Law relates to land titles only and to lien instruments affecting title to land (Torrens Land Title Law).

The Torrens Land Title Law (St. 1915, p. 1932) has relation to land titles only and such transaction by way of mortgage lease, contract to sell, or other instrument intended to create such a lien, incumbrance, or charge on land as shall affect title thereto.

2. Chattel mortgages 134—Crops 1—Crops are "personalty," and crop mortgages do not constitute lien or charge on land (Civ. Code, § 2955 et seq.).

Growing crops are personal property, and crop mortgages executed and recorded under provisions of Civ. Code, § 2955 et seq., do not affect title to land on which crops covered by mortgage are being grown, and do not constitute lien or charge on land.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Personal Property.]

3. Chattel mortgages 12—Growing fruit crop is "personalty" subject to chattel mortgage.

A growing crop of fruit occupies same relation to the land as growing crop of grain, and as fructus industriales is personal property which might properly be subjected to chattel mortgage.

4. Records 9(13¼)—Purchaser under Land Title Law held not to take land free of lien of chattel mortgage on growing fruit crop (Civ. Code, § 2955 et seq.; Torrens Land Title Law).

Chattel mortgage on growing crop of fruit executed and recorded under Civ. Code, § 2955 et seq., is not such a lien, incumbrance, or charge on title to land as would require or permit its registration under the Torrens Land Title Law (St. 1915, p. 1932), and purchaser of land under such law would not take land free and clear of the lien of such chattel mortgage on the crops.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; A. C. Finney, Judge.

Action for damages for conversion by Ruth Congdon against G. M. H. Wagner & Sons. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Ward Chapman, of Los Angeles, and Hickcox & Trude, of El Centro, for appellant.

C. L. Brown, of El Centro, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This action was commenced by plaintiff to recover damages for an alleged conversion of a crop of grapes of which the defendant had taken possession and harvested and marketed under a claim of right so to do by virtue of the provisions of a chattel mortgage covering said personal property. The plaintiff recovered judgment for the damages which she sought by reason of such conversion. This appeal is upon the judgment roll, and the sole question thus presented is as to whether the findings support the conclusions of law and judgment of the trial court. The facts as disclosed by the findings are these: On August 15, 1923, and for some time prior thereto, two persons whose names were D. Van Tol and J. Trainor were the owners and tenants in common of a tract of land in Imperial county, containing approximately 40 acres, and upon which or a portion thereof there was then growing a crop of grapes. Upon said date these owners of said land made, executed, and delivered to the defendant in this action, a corporation, a chattel mortgage upon said growing crop of grapes as security for certain moneys advanced and to be advanced to said mortgagors and which were to be applied to the cultivation, irrigation, growing, harvesting, and marketing of said grapes, the proceeds whereof were to be applied to the payment of said advancement. The mortgage by its terms provided that it should also cover future crops of grapes to be grown upon said land through a series of years, to and including the year 1925, and further provided that in the event the indebtedness thus to be incurred was not repaid within a specified time the mortgagee would have a right to enter upon said premises and take possession of whatever of said crop was growing thereon and proceed to harvest the same, applying the proceeds thereof to the payment of said indebtedness. Said crop mortgage was found by the trial court to have been duly executed and duly recorded in the office of the county recorder of Imperial county and was in full force and effect from the date of its execution to and including a portion of the latter year. The trial court further found that prior to March 7, 1925, the owners of said property had caused the same and the title thereto to be registered under that certain initiative law known as the Torrens Land Title Law, or, perhaps more correctly, as defined in the title thereof, as the "Land Title Law" and which was adopted by the people at the general election on November 3, 1914, and which went into effect on December 19, 1914. (Stats. 1915, p. 1932.) The court further found that the aforesaid crop mortgage had not been registered under said Land Title Law, and that the same and the record thereof had not been made to appear upon the certificates of title provided for under said law, but that the same was simply recorded in the record of chattel mortgages of the county of Imperial and so appeared upon the records of said county on March 7, 1925. The court further found that on March 7, 1925, the aforesaid owners of the land sold and transferred the same under and in accordance with the provisions of said Land Title Law to the plaintiff herein for a valuable consideration, and that at the time of the sale and transfer the plaintiff had no actual knowledge of the existence of said chattel mortgage, but took the land by virtue of the sale in good faith and in the ordinary course of business; that at the time of the purchase of the land by the plaintiff a crop of grapes was growing thereon which became ripe, and ready for harvesting on or about July 1, 1925; that on said last-named date the former owners of the land were indebted to the defendant in a sum exceeding $7,000 and were in default in the payment thereof, and that thereupon the defendant entered upon the premises under the terms and provisions of its crop mortgage and proceeded to harvest and market said crop of grapes, receiving therefor a net sum of $1,064.32, which sum it appropriated to its own use. The plaintiff having expended the sum of $750 in the growth and care of said grapes in the belief that the same was her property commenced this action against the defendant for the recovery of damages for the alleged conversion of said grapes. Upon the foregoing findings of fact the trial court based its conclusion of law to the effect that the plaintiff was entitled to recover judgment for such damages, which conclusion was predicated upon the theory that the plaintiff having purchased the premises under and by virtue of the provisions of the Torrens Land Title Law, and that said crop mortgage not having been registered under the provisions of said Torrens Land Title Law, she took the title to the premises and crops then growing thereon free and clear of said chattel mortgage, and hence that the defendant as the holder of the mortgage was not, after the date of the plaintiff's purchase of the land, entitled to enforce the same against the crop of grapes growing upon the land at the time of her acquisition thereof. The trial court gave its judgment in the plaintiff's favor, and from said judgment the defendant prosecutes this appeal.

[1-4] The Torrens Land Title Law upon which the respondent relies to support the judgment is none other than that which the official title to said act defines it to be not than what the body and substance of the act discloses it to be, namely, a law which has relation to land titles and which provides a method of its own for their registration and transfer. It purports to provide a method by which the owner or owners of an estate or interest in a particular tract of land may bring the land and the title thereto under the operation of the act by filing a verified petition in the superior court of the county wherein the land is situated, setting forth the estate or interest which the applicant has or claims therein, and whether the same is community property or is subject to a homestead, or to any easement, lien or incumbrance affecting the title to the land, and, if so, the names and addresses of the holders of such easement, lien, or incumbrance. Upon the filing of the application in said court it shall cause to be set in motion a procedure having for its object and purpose the bringing before said court of all such persons as may have any interest in the title to said land or any particular estate or estates therein, including those who may be the holders of mortgages, easements, liens, attachments, or other incumbrances, to which the said land or the owners of estates therein is subject. Having by the prescribed procedure brought all such persons before said court, it shall proceed to a hearing and to the entry of a decree defining and certifying the title to such land and any lien or other charge affecting such title, which decree shall be in the nature of a decree in rem and shall forever quiet the title to said land and shall be final and conclusive as against the rights of all persons, known and unknown, to assert any estate, interest, claim, lien, or demand of any kind or nature whatsoever against the said land. Upon the filing with the county recorder of a certified copy of said decree, the latter shall, in his capacity of registrar as defined in said act, proceed to register the title in accordance with the directions of said decree and to issue a certificate or certificates of said title to the person or persons entitled thereto, which certificates shall set forth, in the order of their priority, "the particulars of all estates, mortgages, liens, encumbrances, and charges to which the owner's title is subject." The act proceeds to provide for the registration of all later transactions affecting the title to said land, and finally provides that, "No unregistered estate, interest, power, right, claim, contract, or trust, shall prevail against the title of a registered owner * * * or of any person bona fide claiming through or under him." The foregoing constitutes a sufficient epitome of the provisions of said Land Title Law to show that the act has relation to land titles only and to such transactions by way of mortgage, lease, contract to sell, or other instrument intended to create such a lien, incumbrance, or charge upon land as shall affect the title thereto. It has, however, been held consistently by this court that growing crops are personal property (Marshall v. Ferguson, 23 Cal. 65; Davis v. McFarlane, 37 Cal. 636, 99 Am. Dec. 340), and that crop mortgages made, executed, and recorded under the provisions of section 2955 et seq. of the Civil Code do not affect in any degree the title to the land upon which the crops covered by said crop mortgage are being grown and that the same do not constitute a lien or charge upon the land. (Simpson v. Ferguson, 112 Cal. 180, 40 P. 104, 44 P. 484, 53 Am. St. Rep. 201; First Nat. Bank v. Brashear, 200 Cal. 389, 253 P. 143. It was also early decided by this court that a growing crop of fruit occupied the same relation to the land as a growing crop of grain, and as fructus industriales was personal property which might properly be subjected to a chattel mortgage. This being so, it would seem to be clear that such a crop mortgage does not come within the designations which are set forth in the aforesaid Land Title Law as constituting such a lien, incumbrance, or charge upon the title to the land itself as would either require or permit its registration under the terms and provisions of said act, and hence that the purchaser of the title to said land would not be protected as against the operation and effect of a duly executed, duly recorded and existing chattel mortgage upon the growing crops upon such land as the purchaser thereof was acquiring title to under the terms and provisions of said Land Title Law. The holder of such crop mortgage, legally executed and duly recorded under the provisions of section 2955 et seq., Civil Code, has, by virtue of the provisions of said Code, given constructive notice to all the world as to the existence of said crop mortgage and as to the priority of his lien in so far as it affects the crops growing or to be grown upon said land, and by such constructive notice all persons dealing with the owner or owners of said land during the period that the crops affected by said mortgage are growing thereon must be held to be bound thereby, notwithstanding the fact that the owner or owners of the land may have seen fit to take advantage of the so-called Torrens Land Title Law in order to facilitate a transfer or other transaction affecting the title to the land. It follows that the trial court was in error in holding that the plaintiff as the purchaser of said land under the provisions of the so-called Torrens Land Title Law took the same free and clear of the incumbrance upon the crops being grown upon the land at the time of her acquisition of said title which were subject to the lien of the defendant's chattel mortgage thereon.

The judgment is reversed, with instructions to the trial court upon its findings of fact herein to make and enter its conclusions of law and judgment in favor of the defendant in conformity with the views expressed in this opinion.

GINSBERG TILE CO. v. FARAONE et al.*
(Civ. 5870.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 11, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 11, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 8, 1929.

1. Partnership ⇔ 199—Partnership cannot sue in firm name (Code Civ. Proc. § 388).

Code Civ. Proc. § 388, permitting partnership to be sued in its firm name, does not permit suit by partnership in firm name.

2. Parties ⇔ 76(7)—Demurrer and motion to dismiss, on ground that plaintiff in suit brought in name of partnership had not legal capacity to sue sufficiently, specified grounds of objection and did not waive objection that partnership could not sue in firm name (Code Civ. Proc. § 431).

Defendants' demurrer and motion to dismiss suit, brought in name of partnership as plaintiff, on ground that plaintiff had not legal capacity to sue sufficiently, specified grounds of objection as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 431, and is not waiver of objection that partnership may not sue in firm name as legal entity.

3. Parties ⇔ 95(5)—Dismissal of suit brought in name of partnership, without affording plaintiff opportunity to amend, held error.

In sustaining motion to dismiss suit brought by plaintiff in name of partnership on ground that plaintiff had not legal capacity to sue, court erred in not affording plaintiff an opportunity to amend; such complaint being amendable by substituting individual partners as parties plaintiff.

4. Appeal and error ⇔ 138—Appeal from order dismissing suit by partnership for want of capacity to sue will not be dismissed for want of capacity to prosecute appeal.

Appeal from order dismissing suit brought in name of partnership for want of capacity of plaintiff will not be dismissed on the ground that appellant for same reason has no capacity to prosecute appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by the Ginsberg Tile Company, a partnership, against Salvatore Faraone and others. From an order granting defendants' motion to dismiss, plaintiff appeals and defendants move to dismiss the appeal. Motion to dismiss appeal denied, and order reversed with directions.

Superseding opinion in 274 P. 549.

Russell W. Cantrell and I. M. Peckham, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Devoto, Richardson & Devoto, of San Francisco, for respondents.

GOODELL, Justice pro tem. This appeal was taken on the judgment roll alone from an order granting the motion of the respondents to dismiss. The action was commenced in the name "Ginsberg Tile Company, a copartnership, plaintiff," and the appeal was taken in the same name.

The facts are that on May 25, 1926, a complaint was filed by "Ginsberg Tile Company, a copartnership," against Salvatore Faraone and Jennie Faraone, his wife, defendants, alleging that certain work had been done by the plaintiff upon the improved real property of the defendants, under an agreement between them whereby plaintiff was to be paid $593.75 for his work, which amount was unpaid, and that a claim of lien had been filed for record on February 24, 1926. The complaint prayed for judgment for $593.75 and for the foreclosure of the lien. There was no allegation in the complaint respecting the copartnership named in the caption, or showing who were its constituent members.

The defendants demurred upon the sole ground that plaintiff had no legal capacity to sue, and they moved to dismiss upon the same ground.

Before the demurrer and motion were heard, an amended complaint was filed in the name of the same "plaintiff" and with two personal defendants (G. M. Sourich and T. A. Sourich) and four fictitious defendants added, and containing an allegation that plaintiff, Ginsberg Tile Company, was at all times mentioned a copartnership composed of H. Ginsberg and S. Ginsberg, and that they had complied with the provisions of sections 2466 and 2468 of the Civil Code. The amended complaint amplified in many important respects the rather sketchy averments of the original pleading, added allegations not found in the original, and changed the theory of the action from one based upon a contract made directly with Faraone and wife to one based upon a subcontract between plaintiff and G. M. Sourich and T. A. Sourich, original contractors, for work upon property owned by the Faraones.

The respondents promptly demurred to the amended complaint, again upon the ground of plaintiff's lack of capacity to sue, and again moved to dismiss upon the same ground, and moved to strike the amended complaint from the files upon the ground that it changed the cause of action originally set forth. The trial court granted the motion to dismiss, but took no action upon the demurrer or motion to strike.

[1] "The principal and substantial question presented for decision," to adopt the ap-pellant's own statement of it, "is whether the filing of a complaint by a copartnership in its firm name, instead of having the individual names of the copartners appear in the caption thereof, is such a fatal defect as to render the action a nullity, legally justifying its dismissal on this ground, or whether such a defect is merely an irregularity, which may be taken advantage of by special demurrer, for non-joinder of parties plaintiff, and if no objection is thus specifically taken to the complaint, the defect is waived."

Bliss, in his work on Code Pleading (3d Ed.), at section 145, says: "The full names of both plaintiffs and defendants should be given as plaintiffs and as defendants—not, as at common law and in equity, by describing them in the body of the pleading, but in the form of a title to the cause, and they may be afterwards referred to, without naming them, as 'the plaintiff' or 'the defendant.' In an action by or against a partnership, the full names of all the partners must be stated."

Section 388 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that, "When two or more persons, associated in any business, transact such business under a common name, whether it comprises the names of such persons or not, the associates may be sued by such common name. * * * The Legislature, as early as 1854, thus modified the common-law rule which permits partners neither to sue nor be sued in their partnership name. But it will be noted that the rule was relaxed with respect to defendants only. Had the Legislature intended to authorize or sanction a procedure such as that attempted here, obviously it would have been necessary simply to have provided that "the associates may sue or be sued by such common name." On settled and familiar principles it is clear that by expressly permitting such practice in the case of defendants the Legislature manifested an intention to prohibit it in the case of plaintiffs.

"While a copartnership acting under a fictitious name may be sued in that name * * * the rule governing its prosecution of an action is that the full names of all the partners must be stated." Holden v. Mensinger, 175 Cal. 300, 165 P. 950. But it is settled that if plaintiffs do sue in their partnership name the defendants must interpose their objection at the very outset or they waive it (Agricultural Extension Club of Nevada County v. M. Hirsch & Son, 39 Cal. App. 433, 179 P. 430, and Gilman v. Cosgrove, 22 Cal. 356), and it is claimed that in the instant case there has been such waiver.

[2] The basis for this assertion of waiver is not that the defendants made no preliminary objection at all, but that they put it on the wrong ground. The defendants promptly demurred to both complaints, and twice moved to dismiss, upon the sole ground that the plaintiff had not legal capacity to sue. The appellant contends that this was ineffective, for two reasons: (1) Because the demurrers did not "distinctly specify the grounds" upon which the objection was taken (Code Civ. Proc. § 431), and (2) because the demurrers should have been upon the ground of "a defect or misjoinder of parties plaintiff." It is difficult to find any real or substantial difference between the ground which was specified and that now urged as the only proper one. When it is borne in mind that waiver presupposes voluntary abandonment, and that the respondents asserted their point without any delay at all, the waiver argument loses its force. As between the two grounds, there is authority both ways. In the Gilman Case, supra, where the defendants answered without having first objected to the suit in the firm name, it was held that they had waived the objection and "should have demurred to the complaint for a defect of parties." On the other hand, in the Agricultural Extension Club Case, supra, where in similar circumstances the defendants likewise answered, it is said that "the defect is one which may be taken advantage of upon the plea that the plaintiff has not legal capacity to sue." Dicta to the same effect are indeed found in two cases relied upon by the appellant. Thus in Los Angeles R. Co. v. Davis, 146 Cal. 179, 79 P. 865, 106 Am. St. Rep. 20, the court said that: "The point that plaintiff was not a corporation goes only to its capacity to maintain an action, * * * and therefore it could be raised by demurrer to the complaint only under subdivision 2 of section 430 * * * which provides as a cause of demurrer 'that plaintiff has not legal capacity to sue.' * * *" And so in Fruit-Cleaning Co. v. Fresno Co. (C. C.) 94 F. 845, 847, it is said: "Nor is it a question of misjoinder or non-joinder of parties plaintiff, but it is the legal question whether there is an actual party plaintiff in the case."

H. Ginsberg and S. Ginsberg undoubtedly had legal capacity to sue. And had they incorporated their business, the corporation certainly would have had legal capacity to sue. But the suit was brought in the name of neither a natural nor an artificial person. The plaintiff admittedly did that which at common law cannot be done at all, and that which a plaintiff in this state cannot do.

As we see it, the ground that plaintiff had no legal capacity to sue was no less appropriate than the ground of defect or non-joinder. It called the attention of the pleader directly and pointedly to the fact that he was not suing in the name of a legal entity at all; that he was using as a so-called plaintiff a mere name, instead of suing in the names of natural persons who happened to use such name or symbol in transacting their business. The bare statement of the ground in the demurrer and motion, in the statutory language, was itself a "distinct specification of the ground" and could not fail to rivet the attention of counsel upon the fact that he had no plaintiff before the court. (Parenthetically it should be said that counsel who now prosecutes this appeal was not in the case when these pleadings were drawn.) On the other hand, a demurrer for nonjoinder would concede that the plaintiff named was itself proper enough, but would suggest that other parties should be joined as plaintiffs, which was not, by any means, what the respondents wanted to point out. What they sought to do was to point out that there was no plaintiff at all before the court, and we think their demurrer and motion were designed fairly and effectively to accomplish this.

From the framework of both complaints it is apparent that the theory of the pleader was that a partnership, as such, is a legal entity, and, as in the case of a corporation or natural person, may sue and be sued, and not that the individuals making up the partnership are the parties plaintiff, irrespective of the name under which they operate.

The appellant contends that it is not indispensable that the copartnership relation of the plaintiffs be shown in the caption so long as, in the body of the complaint, such partnership relation is specifically averred. This, of course, is true, but it does not meet the difficulty here. The cases of Wise et al. v. Williams, 72 Cal. 544, 14 P. 204, and Fruit-Cleaning Co. v. Fresno, etc., Co. (C. C.) 94 F. 845, are cited, but neither is in point. In the first, John H. Wise and Thomas Denigan were plaintiffs, and were so named in the caption. In the caption, however, they were not described as copartners. The body of the complaint contained the allegation that they were copartners doing business under the firm name of Christy & Wise. All that the case holds is that language descriptive of the partnership relation need not be contained in the caption (the real parties, natural persons, being named therein), so long as the allegations in the body of the complaint show such relationship. The cases would be parallel if in the case at bar H. Ginsberg and S. Ginsberg appeared as plaintiffs. They do not so appear either in the caption or in the body of the complaint. The federal case falls into the class of the Gilman and Agricultural Extension Club Cases, supra, for the reason that objection to the defect there was not taken until seven months after a replication had been filed, at which time the respondents sought to file an amended answer setting up the defect. Moreover, the names of the parties were set out in the bill of complaint sufficiently to conform to the equity rule of the federal courts.

It is conceded by the appellant "that, under the old common law, an action brought in the name of an unincorporated association or partnership is, in strictness, not a misnomer of a party plaintiff, but rather the omission of a party plaintiff, rendering the action a nullity," (Italics ours.) But counsel adds that, "This harsh doctrine according to the trend of present-day authority, even in England, has been moderated," etc.

With respect to the common-law rule, the Supreme Court, in the case of Holden v. Mensinger, 175 Cal. 300, 165 P. 950, says: "Partners cannot, at common law, sue or be sued by their partnership names; but by statute in some of the States, as in Ohio, Iowa, etc., this is allowed, and so far partnerships are treated as corporations. Elsewhere their demands are joint and personal, and must be enforced by them as individuals." (Bliss on Code Pleading, sec. 145; Williams v. Southern Pac. R. R. Co., 110 Cal. 457, 42 P. 974; Clement v. British American Assur. Co., 141 Mass. 303, 5 N. E. 847.)"

In California the Legislature, with power to moderate the common-law rule to the fullest extent, has relaxed it only in part (Code Civ. Proc. § 388). The courts, in the cases to which we have referred, have moderated it further by holding that, unless raised at the threshold, the objection is waived. But the only implication from those cases is that if the objection is interposed in a timely and proper manner it is perfectly good. The objection here certainly was timely, and we are satisfied that the manner of asserting it was proper.

[3] The statute and the authorities in this state fully warrant the conclusion at which the lower court arrived, namely, that "plaintiff" had no legal capacity to sue. Numerous cases from other jurisdictions have been brought to our attention, but with the law so well settled (Holden v. Mensinger, supra; Gilman v. Cosgrove, supra; Agricultural Extension Club of Nevada County v. M. Hirsch & Son, supra, and section 388, Code Civ. Proc.) resort need not be had to outside authorities, nor need they be discussed. However, the difficulty with the case arises from the fact that the lower court, granting the motion to dismiss, thereby cut off the opportunity to amend, coupled with the fact that in its brief herein the appellant stood, more or less steadfastly, upon the technical ground discussed above, that by demurring and moving on one ground, and not on the other, the defendants waived the admitted defect and irregularity. In that connection it should be observed that in its brief appellant asks for a reversal "with instructions to the lower court to overrule the demurrer interposed to the amended complaint, with leave to the defendants to answer." To reverse in the form requested or for that reason would run counter to the settled and unbroken line of authority in this state and to the provisions of section 388 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But while we are satisfied that the amended complaint was demurrable, still there is a serious question whether leave should not have been granted to amend. The authorities to which we have referred hold that if the objection is not raised at the threshold it is waived, which is but another way of saying that the defect is not absolutely fatal. If therefore a cause of action exists, the complaint is amendable. The granting of the motion to dismiss was tantamount—so far as the question of amendment is concerned—to the sustaining of a demurrer without leave to amend. The record shows that the motion to strike out the amended complaint, the demurrer, and the motion to dismiss the action were all taken under submission on briefs and that thereafter a minute order was entered granting the motion to dismiss. On the same day a formal order was signed by the judge that plaintiff take nothing and that judgment be entered in favor of defendants for their costs. If the amended complaint was susceptible of amendment so as to show upon its face the real parties plaintiff—and we are satisfied it was—the case would seem to be squarely within Metzger v. Vestal, 76 Cal. App. 409, 417, 244 P. 942, wherein the lower court had sustained a demurrer without leave to amend and on the same day entered judgment against plaintiffs. It was there urged that counsel had had ample time, while the demurrer was under advisement, to ask leave to amend in anticipation of an adverse ruling; further, that after the ruling, application could have been made under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but upon the authority of Schaake v. Eagle, etc., Can Co., 135 Cal. 472, 480, 63 P. 1025, 67 P. 759, and James v. P. B. Steifer Mining Co., 35 Cal. App. 778, 788, 171 P. 117, it was held that plaintiffs were not required, in order to have the point reviewed on appeal, to ask leave to amend in advance of the ruling, or to move to vacate the judgment for the purpose of permitting them to amend. The court said:

"The rule that a party, against whom an order has been entered sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend, must ask leave to amend in order to have the ruling reviewed on appeal presupposes that the complaining party had an opportunity to ask such leave prior to the time of entry of judgment on the order. * * *

"* * * While the demurrers were properly sustained, * * * the plaintiffs ought to be permitted to amend in order that the case may be decided upon the merits rather than upon technical rules of pleading. 'Unless it be clear to a trial court that a defective complaint cannot be amended so as to obviate the objections made thereto, a plaintiff desiring it should be allowed reasonable opportunity to so amend.' (Payne v. Baehr, 153 Cal. 441, 447, 95 P. 895, 897.)"

The motion to dismiss, the granting of which gave rise to this appeal, was made upon the ground that "plaintiff" had no legal capacity to sue. The motion to strike out the amended complaint was upon the ground that it wholly changed the cause of action set forth in the original complaint. This latter point is discussed in the briefs, but it is not necessary to discuss it herein. Moreover, as stated above, it was not the ground of the motion to dismiss and no action was taken upon the motion to strike, by the lower court.

[4] The respondents, consistently with their position in the lower court that the "plaintiff" had no legal capacity to sue, have moved to dismiss this appeal upon the ground that the "appellant" cannot, for the same reason, prosecute an appeal, which motion should be denied.

For the reasons herein given the order appealed from is reversed, with directions to the trial court to allow the complaint to be again amended within 10 days after notice. Each side, however, to pay its own costs on appeal. The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

WERNER v. BRYDEN. (Civ. 3805.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 12, 1929.

1. Venue ⇨21—Defendant's right to trial in county of his residence cannot be set aside, unless conflicting with plaintiff's right to impartial trial.

Defendant's right to have case tried in county wherein he and his witnesses reside is a substantial one, not to be set aside unless it actually conflicts with plaintiff's higher right to impartial trial.

2. Appeal and error ⇨965—Venue ⇨42—Applications to change place of trial are addressed to sound discretion of trial court, whose action cannot be disturbed, unless discretion was clearly abused.

Applications for a change of place of trial are addressed to sound legal discretion of trial court, whose action cannot be disturbed on appeal, unless abuse of such discretion clearly appears.

3. Venue ⇨52(1) — Mere preponderance in number of witnesses will not necessarily determine order on motion to change place of trial.

A mere preponderance in number of witnesses either party expects to produce will not necessarily determine whether order for change of place of trial on ground of witness' convenience shall be made.

4. Venue ⇨70—Denial of plaintiff's motion to change place of trial for local prejudice and witnesses' convenience held not abuse of discretion under facts stated in affidavits.

Facts stated in parties' affidavits held to show that trial court did not abuse discretion in denying plaintiff's motion for change of place of trial on grounds that she could not have impartial trial in county of venue and that witnesses' convenience would be promoted by change.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; J. B. Landis, Judge.

Action by Augusta Werner against Charles J. Bryden. From an order denying plaintiff's motion for a change of the place of trial, she appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 84 Cal. App. 472, 258 P. 138.

George A. Connolly and Jerome Politzer, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

W. P. Rich, of Marysville, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from an order denying her motion for a change of the place of trial from the county of Yuba to the city and county of San Francisco, made on the following grounds: "1. That there is reason to believe that an impartial trial * * * cannot be had in the County of Yuba. * * * 2. That the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice would be promoted by the change."

The case has already been tried twice. It appears from the affidavits used at the hearing of the motion that the jury in the first trial was unable to agree, standing six for the plaintiff and six for the defendant. In the second trial a verdict was returned in favor of the defendant. A new trial was granted on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict. There appears to have been no difficulty in securing a jury at either trial. The plaintiff challenged but eight jurors for cause at the first trial and twelve at the second. The defendant owns property of the value of about $100,000, while the plaintiff is dependent "upon her daily labor in the City and County of San Francisco." In plaintiff's affidavit it is stated that the grandmother of the defendant, Mary J. Bryden, has resided in the city of Marysville, Yuba county, for fifty years, and "is one of the best known and most highly respected residents of the County of Yuba"; that the defendant's father, James R. Bryden, died in the year 1922, and had lived all his life in Yuba county; that he was "very well and favorably known all throughout the County of Yuba. * * * The family of the defendant * * * has been for many years, and now is, highly respected and very well known all throughout the County of Yuba. The citizens and residents of the said County of Yuba, owing to their respect for the said Mrs. Mary J. Bryden and for the said James R. Bryden * * * all sympathize with the family of said defendant by reason of the matters disclosed by the filing of the complaint in the above entitled action, and by the trial of said action, as well as by the publicity given thereby by the press, and by reason thereof, affiant is informed and believes, and therefore alleges, that it is impossible for affiant to have a fair and impartial trial of the above entitled action in the said County of Yuba." There is nothing in the affidavit to show what, if any, publicity was given the proceedings at the trial by the press.

The defendant's affidavit "denies that plaintiff cannot have an impartial trial in * * * the County of Yuba; * * * denies that any prejudice exists in said County of Yuba against plaintiff, either personally or against her case; denies that there is anything existing in the public minds or otherwise, in said County of Yuba, to prevent plaintiff from having a fair and impartial trial; * * * denies that the reputations of (Mary J. Bryden and James R. Bryden) * * * in the former trials of this action in any way influenced or in any subsequent trial of this action in any way will influence the minds of the people of said County of Yuba, or any thereof." It appears that it would be more convenient for three of the plaintiff's witnesses to attend the trial of the case in San Francisco, and that it would be more convenient for two of the defendant's witnesses, one of whom is the court reporter of Yuba county, to attend such trial at Marysville.

[1-3] "The right of defendants to have their case tried in the county wherein they and their witnesses reside is a substantial one and is not to be set aside unless it actually conflicts with the higher right of a plaintiff to have an impartial trial." Ross v. Kalin, 53 Cal. App. 616, 619, 200 P. 745, 746. "Applications like this are addressed to the sound legal discretion of the trial court, and its action cannot be disturbed on appeal unless it clearly appears that there was an abuse of that discretion." Stockton C. H. & A. W. v. Houser, 103 Cal. 377, 380, 37 P. 179, 180; J. I. Case T. Co. v. Copren Bros., 35 Cal. App. 70, 76, 169 P. 443; Ross v. Kalin, supra. "The determination of a motion of this character upon the ground of the convenience of witnesses rests largely in the sound discretion of the court to which it is addressed, and its order thereon will be disturbed only for an abuse of such discretion. * * * A mere preponderance in number of the witnesses which either party expects to produce will not necessarily determine the order to be made." Scott v. Stuart, 190 Cal. 526, 527, 213 P. 947, 948.

[4] It so clearly appears from the facts stated in the affidavits that the denial of the motion was not an abuse of discretion that no further discussion or citation of authorities is deemed necessary.

The order is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

Action to rescind contract for purchase of real estate by Nanna B. Wiberg against H. E. Barnum and another, doing business as the Barnum-Walters Company. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

John J. McMahon, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Victor T. Watkins, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. In December, 1923, appellant entered into a contract in writing by the terms and provisions of which she agreed to purchase from the defendants certain real property therein described, situated in Los Angeles county. Thereafter, and in June, 1924, she notified them of her rescission of said contract, reciting in detail various grounds of fraud through which she alleged the contract to have been procured, and demanded a return of the amount theretofore paid on account of the agreed purchase. A suit for rescission was subsequently instituted, wherein judgment was rendered in favor of the defendants, and the plaintiff appeals therefrom. It is alleged in the complaint that the defendants stated and represented to the plaintiff that, if she would sign said contract agreeing to buy the property mentioned, and pay a first installment of $387, she would not be expected or compelled to pay the second or any further installments; that they had then a buyer, and within 30 days the defendants would resell the same at a net profit to plaintiff of $500. No resale was made, and on June 10, 1924, demand was made for the second installment, whereupon, and as soon as the plaintiff discovered the alleged fraud and the defendants' refusal to make a resale, she signed and served her notice of rescission.

The complaint alleges the facts recited above, and, further, that the representations so made by the defendants were false, fraudulent, and untrue; that they were known to the defendants to be false and fraudulent, and were made for the purpose of inducing the plaintiff to enter into said agreement, and to obtain from her said sum of $387; that she believed and solely relied upon each and all of said statements and representations, but for which she would not have signed the agreement, or have paid to the defendants the first installment; that no resale of the property was made; and that, at the time of the execution of said contract, the defendants did not have a purchaser in view for such resale.

Upon the trial, objections of the defendants to the introduction of any evidence tending to show the alleged fraud by which the plaintiff claimed to have been induced to enter into the contract in suit were sustained. It was the theory of the defendants, and of the trial court, that as the agreement to resell in the future was an independent and separate contract and transaction, for which the plaintiff might have sought damages for a breach, but that it was not written into the initial contract, evidence thereof was irrelevant and incompetent, since the principal contract provided that no statement or representation not embraced therein should be binding upon either of the parties.

[1] The theory of the plaintiff, however, as plainly alleged in the complaint, was that the false, fraudulent, and deceptive statements of the defendants were advanced, not as affecting the property or its condition or value, or the terms of purchase, but as an inducement and part consideration which led the plaintiff to make the contract; that the agreement was one not, in fact, looking toward the purchase of property by the plaintiff, but for the sole purpose of making a net profit of $500 upon the investment of $387 for a period not exceeding 30 days; that the purchase was one incidental to a resale, concerning which the defendants made the representations alleged facts, and not mere expressions of opinion. It is obvious that, had the transaction been consummated as alleged to have been promised by the defendants, the plaintiff would not have retained the real property, and the defendants would not have declined to return the amount of the investment with the agreed increase. It is likewise patent, assuming the allegations of the complaint as true, that the plaintiff was not interested in the property, or in its character or value, but that she relied upon the statements and promises of the defendants that they would resell to a party whom they held in reserve, who was ready, able, and willing to buy, and contracted with that end in view. Upon these facts, the sole consideration for the entire transaction was an agreed profit to the plaintiff, through the resale which she consented to assist in facilitating, but which the defendants did not carry out, nor at any time intend to fulfill, although the plaintiff fully performed all of the conditions of her agreement. From this the conclusion is inevitable that the written instrument upon which the defendants sought to rely at the time of trial was incomplete, and that evidence of the entire transaction was erroneously excluded.

[2, 3] As was said in Brison v. Brison, 75 Cal. 533, 17 P. 693, 7 Am. St. Rep. 189: "In cases of fraud, actual or constructive, no mere form of words, which the parties have made use of, can shut out inquiry as to the real facts. And this from the necessity of the case. For, as has been pertinently asked, if parol evidence be not admissible, how else can the fraud be shown?" The rule is settled in this state that parol evidence is admissible to show fraud, since it does not vary or contradict the contract, but shows that no binding contract was legally made. Browne v. San Gabriel River Rock Co., 22 Cal. App. 682, 136 P. 542, 544. Our Supreme Court, in applying the principles as repeatedly stated in numerous cases, held in Davis v. Butler, 154 Cal. 623, 98 P. 1047: "A single material 'misrepresentation' knowingly made, with intent to influence another into entering into a contract, will, if believed and relied on by that other, afford as complete ground for rescission as if it had been accompanied by a multitude of other false representations."

The same rule is announced in California

Credit & Coll. Corp. v. Randall, 76 Cal. App. 321, 244 P. 958, wherein it was held that a provision that verbal agreements of agents contrary to the terms of the contract were unauthorized and could be disregarded did not preclude proof of fraudulent representations by which the defendant was induced to execute an agreement in writing and a promissory note.

[4] It is objected by respondents that appellant must be held to have waived the right to use the reporter's transcript upon this appeal, for the reason that in her notice to the clerk she did not request it. Sufficient of the examination of the witness and rulings of the trial court, however, are included in the briefs to present the question here involved, and, since the transcript was in fact prepared, certified, and transmitted to us, appellant's omission is cured. White v. Hendley, 35 Cal. App. 267, 169 P. 710.

Ex parte GRIGORIS. (Cr. 1542.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 17, 1929.

Contempt $\Rightarrow$ 54(4)—Affidavit not reciting defendant's knowledge of order requiring payment of alimony in proceedings to which defendant was party held sufficient.

Affidavit on which order committing petitioner for refusal to pay alimony is based is not insufficient for failing to charge that petitioner had knowledge or notice of order requiring payment of alimony, where petitioner was party to proceeding in which alimony order was made; only jurisdictional requirements in such case being affidavit of making of order and disobedience thereof.

Original habeas corpus by Peter Grigoris, also known as Peter Gregory, to obtain his release from custody of the Sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco from confinement under commitment for contempt for failure to pay alimony. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

TYLER, P. J. Habeas corpus. Petitioner seeks to be discharged from the custody of the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, by whom he is held in custody under an order of the superior court adjudging him guilty of contempt in failing and refusing to pay certain sums of alimony in a divorce proceeding. It is claimed on his behalf that the affidavit supporting the commitment is insufficient for the reason that it fails to charge that petitioner had any knowledge or notice of the order of court, the violation of which constitutes the ground for the adjudication upon which the commitment is predicated. We are cited to the case of Frowley v. Superior Court, 158 Cal. 220, 110 P. 817, as supporting this contention. It was there held that the petitioner could not be held guilty of contempt unless he had knowledge of the order, and, this being true, knowledge on his part was one of the essential facts to be stated in the affidavit. In that case, however, the petitioner was not a party to the proceeding in which the order violated was made. Here petitioner was a party to the proceeding in which the order was made, and the record in such proceedings shows that he appeared therein. Under these circumstances the only jurisdictional facts required to be stated in the affidavit are the making of the order and the disobedience of it. Ex parte Von Gerzabek, 63 Cal. App. 657, 661, 219 P. 479; In re McCarty, 154 Cal. 534, 98 P. 540. Both of these jurisdictional facts are recited in the affidavit.

The writ is discharged, and the prisoner remanded.

YORK, J. This is an appeal from an interlocutory decree of divorce against defendant and an attempted appeal from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, based upon the ground that the decision is contrary to the evidence.

This appeal was taken upon a bill of exceptions, which purports to set out the evidence adduced at the trial, and, as the bill of exceptions fails to specify the particulars wherein the evidence is alleged to be insufficient, the evidence cannot be reviewed upon this appeal. Section 648, Code Civ. Proc.; Schultz v. City of Venice, 200 Cal. 50, 54, 251 P. 913.

However, there was sufficient evidence before the court to support the findings which the court made, and the findings made by the court were sufficient to support the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed. The appeal from the order denying motion for new trial is dismissed.

CRYSTAL ICE & COLD STORAGE CO. v.
RENSCHLER PRODUCE CO.
et al. (Civ. 3613.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 12, 1929.

1. Warehousemen ⇨24(1)—Company operating cold storage warehouse had duty to use ordinary care in maintaining temperature to preserve stored apples.

It was the duty of company conducting cold storage warehouse to use ordinary care in the maintenance of temperature that would preserve apples stored therein by another.

2. Evidence ⇨574—Court need not accept opinions in government bulletin indicating temperatures in warehouse storing apples was excessive as against warehouse foreman's opinion based on practical experience.

Though opinions relative to cold storage of apples expressed in government bulletin introduced in evidence in action to recover storage charges wherein defendants cross-complained for damages to apples from scald indicated that temperatures maintained in plaintiff's warehouse was too high to produce best results in preservation of apples, court was not required to accept opinions as against those of plaintiff's foreman based upon ten years' practical experience in cold storage of apples in plaintiff's plant.

3. Evidence ⇨8—Court need not judicially notice that temperature in warehouse higher than government advised caused deterioration of apples stored therein.

In action to recover for storage of apples in plaintiff's warehouse, wherein defendant cross-complained asking damages for scald to apples, court was not required to take judicial notice that high temperature maintained in warehouse was cause of deterioration of apples, though temperatures were higher than those indicated by government bulletin which would give best results.

4. Damages ⇨62(3)—Owner withdrawing apples from storage at intervals during several months of silence could not recover for deterioration from improper temperatures.

Where company storing apples with another withdrew apples from storage as early as December, 1925, and so continued to withdraw at frequent intervals until June, 1926, and did nothing to prevent or minimize damage alleged to have been caused to apples because of improper temperatures maintained in warehouse, owner of apples could not recover for damages where it remained silent while owner of warehouse had no knowledge of deterioration of apples.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by the Crystal Ice & Cold Storage Company against the Renschler Produce Company and others, wherein defendants filed cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Charles A. Bliss and A. R. Price, both of Sacramento, for appellants.

Butler, Van Dyke & Desmond, of Sacramento, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The plaintiff conducts a cold storage warehouse in Sacramento. The Renschler Produce Company, referred to herein as the defendant, is engaged in the wholesale produce business in the same city. During October, November, and December, 1925, and January, 1926, the defendant delivered to the plaintiff 4,825 boxes of apples to be kept in cold storage. Of these apples, 2,487 boxes of were stored on a seasonal basis, to remain until the end of the following June, unless sooner withdrawn by the defendant, and the remainder thereof "were stored on a monthly basis, the contract for the storage of which was renewed at the end of each month in cases where the apples were not sold." The defendant withdrew apples from storage as early as December, 1925, and continued to make withdrawals at frequent intervals until some time in June, 1926, when the last of them were withdrawn, and during all that time the defendant made no complaint as to the condition of the apples when withdrawn or that they were in any manner damaged while in storage. The plaintiff sent the defendant monthly bills for storage charges, and instructed its collectors to call on defendant and demand payment. On the defendant's continued failure to pay these bills, this action was commenced to recover the unpaid balance of $761.28. "Just before the suit was begun," the defendant presented a claim to the plaintiff, dated September 28, 1926, for $4,941.19 on account of alleged damages to the apples while in storage, and the defendant has filed a cross-complaint for that sum. The court found in favor of the plaintiff for the amount demanded in the complaint and against the defendant on the cross-complaint, and judgment was entered accordingly. The defendant has appealed from the judgment.

The cross-complaint alleges that the plaintiff "carelessly and negligently and without exercising any care, * * * permitted and allowed the rooms wherein said apples were stored to become overheated and kept said rooms at a temperature of at least 11 degrees Fahrenheit too high for the safe preservation of said apples, causing said apples to become unmarketable as good fruit." This allegation is denied in the answer to the cross-complaint. While the appellant's argument is set forth under several headings, the only question raised by the appeal is whether the respondent maintained the proper temperature for the preservation of the appellant's apples. In appellant's opening brief it is said: "We submit that the findings that plaintiff and cross-defendant was not negligent in the care of defendant's fruit; and that defendant has not been damaged by the negligence or lack of ordinary care in the storage of defendant's apples, are not supported by the evidence."

[1] The appellant correctly says that it was the plaintiff's duty "to use ordinary care in the maintenance of such temperature as would preserve the apples." 27 R. C. L. 991. Whether the plaintiff performed this obligation must be determined by ascertaining what temperature was maintained and what temperature was required to preserve the fruit. Records of the temperature maintained, made at intervals of 4 hours, and continuous "automatic thermometer disc records," were introduced in evidence. It was stipulated at the trial that such records show the following:

The temperature in room 8, where the apples were on season storage, was maintained, during the greater portion of the time at 36 degrees Fahrenheit; but frequently the temperature was permitted to rise to 36½ degrees and 37 degrees for 4, 8, and 12 hour periods. October 22 and 23 it stood at 37 degrees for 12 hours, immediately followed by 40 degrees for 4 hours, 38 degrees for the next 8 hours, and then 39 degrees for 8 hours; October 27, at 39 degrees for 8 hours; November 21 and 22, at 37 degrees to 40 degrees for 16 hours; March 15 and 16, at 37 degrees to 38 degrees for 48 hours; April 5 and 6, at 37 degrees to 38 degrees for 24 hours; June 5 and 6, at 37 degrees to 38 degrees for 20 hours; June 9, at 38 degrees for 12 hours; June 18, 37 degrees to 37½ degrees for 24 hours; June 20, 21, and 22, at 36 degrees to 37½ degrees for 60 hours. Temperatures ranging from 36 degrees to 37 degrees are omitted in this summary of the facts stated in the stipulation. The temperatures maintained in the monthly storage rooms do not vary greatly from those given.

The evidence shows without contradiction that the damage to the defendant's apples was due to a disease known as scald. Leavitt W. Renschler, one of the defendants, testified that scald "is not a disease, it is caused by refrigeration"; that it "is the brown color that gets on the apples from the heat."

The defendant, however, introduced in evidence "Farmers' Bulletin No. 1380," issued by the United States Department of Agriculture. It is therein stated: "Apple scald is a non-parasitic or physiological disease. It * * * is due to certain unfavorable conditions to which apples are sometimes subjected. Seasonal and orchard conditions are involved, as well as those that prevail in transportation, in storage, and on the market." Experiments at Wenatchee, Washington, showed that "apples from the heavily irrigated trees developed about three times as much scald after removal from storage as those from the lightly irrigated trees. * * * Low temperature is the best means of prolonging the life of the apple and is a most important agency in delaying the development of scald. * * *

An increase of 9 degrees in the storage temperature has resulted in two to three times as much scald upon removal from storage on a particular date. It will be seen from two sets of data on the 1916 Grimes Golden that the effect of low temperature is that of delaying rather than preventing it, the disease being as serious at 32 degrees F. at the end of 16 weeks as it was at 41 degrees F. at the end of 12 weeks. It is important that the apples be cooled as quickly as possible after picking. They should be delivered to the storage plant promptly, and the storage conditions should be such that there will be the least possible delay in bringing the fruit to the final storage temperature."

In "Department Bulletin No. 1406," also introduced in evidence by the defendant, it is said: "After being cooled, apples from most sections of the United States should be held at 30 degrees to 32 degrees F. An exception should be made to apples grown in Pajaro Valley of California, since storage of this fruit at 35 degrees to 38 degrees is necessary to prevent one type of internal browning or breakdown."

Most of the apples involved in this suit were grown at Hood River, Or., and the remainder at Yakima, Wash., and were shipped thence to Sacramento during the months of October, November, and December, 1925. Most of them had been in cold storage for periods ranging from three weeks to three months prior to shipment, but at least one carload was shipped "as received from the orchard." All of them were shipped in refrigerator cars. It thus appears that the important early cooling of the apples immediately after picking was in the hands of persons other than the plaintiff.

Renschler testified that some of the Spitzenburg apples were withdrawn 30 days after they were placed in storage with the plaintiff in November; that 10 to 15 per cent. of them showed scald; that the other apples showed scald, ranging from 8 per cent, in those first withdrawn to 25 per cent. "the latter part of the season"; and that he visited the storage plant "three, four or five times a week, when we were taking them out of storage"; but that during all that time he failed to call plaintiff's attention to the poor condition of the apples withdrawn.

While the foregoing evidence undoubtedly is sufficient to support a finding that the plaintiff did not exercise ordinary care in the storage of the defendant's apples, the important question is whether there is sufficient evidence to support the contrary finding made by the court. A. J. Nevis, who during the period of storage and for 10 years prior thereto was plaintiff's foreman, in charge of the cold storage plant, testified:

"We maintain a temperature in the warehouse for the cold storage of apples of 36 degrees; we have always found that is the correct temperature. * * * Q. And do you find that produces the best results? A. In Sacramento, yes. Very good results. Q. And you have never had any bad results? A. None whatever. Q. This is the first time this character of complaint has ever been presented to you or your company? A. To my knowledge, it is. * * * Q. Did you examine the contents of the boxes? A. Open the boxes? Q. Yes. A. No, we are not supposed to do that. * * * It has been my experience that fruit would be affected with a lower temperature; * * * that a temperature of 32 * * * might be good for some apples, and not for others; apples carrying a temperature at that degree are apt to contract what we call internal browning, which is prevalent with apples; apples carrying a much higher temperature, forty, and forty-two, would be susceptible to scald; and we consider a medium about thirty-six degrees about right. * * * Q. What is the least temperature at which scalding occurs? A. Scalding occurs around forty-two, forty-three or more. Q. Does it at forty? A. I have never had it scald at that temperature. * * * Q. Would it scald at forty-one? A. Possibly. Q. Now, if it would scald at forty-one, about how long would it have to remain at forty-one? * * * A. It would have to be—in my opinion the duration of the shortest—two days possibly, where there could be any damage done. * * * Q. Did you ever store apples for the Renschler Company? A. Ever since we have been in business except this year. Q. And maintained the temperature the same? A. Yes. * * * Q. Did you store any of the northwestern apples so called any time prior to 1925-1926? A. Yes sir. Q. Did you store any for Mr. Renschler? A. Yes, all his apples were northwestern apples."

[2, 3] The opinions relative to the cold storage of apples, expressed in the bulletin introduced in evidence, indicate that the temperature maintained in the plaintiff's plant was too high to produce the best results in the preservation of the defendant's apples, but the trial court was not required to accept such opinions as against those of the foreman, which were based upon 10 years' practical experience in the cold storage of apples in plaintiff's plant. The appellant suggests that the court should have taken judicial notice "that the high temperature was the cause of the deterioration of defendant's apples." As said in Brown v. Piper, 91 U. S. 37, 23 L. Ed. 200, "the preservative effect of cold, and especially of dry cold, is well known and exemplified in the keeping of meat and fruit in icehouses"; but no authority is cited to the effect that a court may take judicial notice of the particular temperature which will best preserve a particular variety of fruit.

[4] The court found "that defendant withdrew apples from storage as early as December, 1925, and so continued to withdraw at frequent intervals until June, 1926," and "that he did nothing to prevent or minimize, such alleged damage." As stated, Renschler testified that the deterioration of his apples ranged from 8 per cent. in the first withdrawals to 25 per cent. in the last. The defendant knew of this deterioration, and remained silent, while the plaintiff was without knowledge thereof. In Farmers' Bulletin No. 1380, it is said: "When scald begins to appear in commercial storage lots the dealer knows that the fruit cannot safely be held for more favorable prices, and it is usually moved to market and sold for what it will bring."

"It is a recognized rule of law that in a case where injury or damage to a plaintiff's property is threatened as the result of a tort or breach of contract by another, the duty rests upon the plaintiff to use reasonable care and diligence to protect his property against such threatened loss or injury, and if he fails to do so he will not be permitted to charge the defendant for that portion of his loss or injury which was due to plaintiff's own neglect in this behalf." Vitagraph, Inc., v. Liberty Theatres Co., 197 Cal. 694, 242 P. 709; Sargent v. North End Water Co., 190 Cal. 512, 213 P. 33; 8 Cal. Jur. 782.

The judgment is affirmed.

NIELSEN v. SWANBERG. (Civ. 6754.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 4, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 3, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 1, 1929.

1. Frauds, statute of $\S$ 128—Written notification of desire to have defendant repurchase stock was not required, where defendant bound himself in writing in original contract to repurchase.

Where defendant had bound himself in writing in original contract concerning sale of stock to perform his obligation to repurchase stock upon receiving notification from company holding it of its desire to exercise option for repurchase of stock by defendant, notification to defendant of desire for him to repurchase stock held not required to be in writing to take it out of statute of frauds.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 173(6)—Objection that notification of desire to have stock repurchased was not in writing may not be made first on appeal.

Where no objection was interposed at trial nor motion for nonsuit made, objection that notification of plaintiff's desire to have defendant repurchase stock according to his obligation cannot be insisted upon on appeal to District Court of Appeals.

3. Corporations ☞121(2)—Defendant's inability to purchase stock as agreed, and statement that no tender would be necessary, rendered tender unnecessary to support action for price.

Inability of defendant to consummate purchase of stock according to his written agreement to repurchase it, and his statement to plaintiff giving plaintiff to understand that no tender of stock would be necessary, rendered tender thereof unnecessary to support action to recover purchase price of stock.

4. Corporations ☞121(2)—No tender of stock to defendant agreeing to repurchase and pledging it for payment was necessary, since restoration would extinguish plaintiff's lien (Civ. Code, § 2913).

Where agreement provided that stock was to be purchased on monthly payments and be pledged as security for payment of repurchase price by defendant, no tender of stock was necessary to support action to recover purchase price, since pledgor is not entitled to pledged property until debt is paid, and under Civ. Code, § 2913, restoration of stock to defendant would have extinguished plaintiff's lien.

5. Corporations ☞120—Defendant's promise as representative of second party consummating agreement for sale of stock to repurchase and pledge stock for price constituted agreement therefor.

Where defendant was party to agreement for sale of stock and was active representative of second party to agreement in consummating it, his promise to purchase back stock which was to be pledged for repurchase price constituted an agreement of repurchase by him.

6. Corporations ☞121(4)—It was unnecessary to allege damage, where it was alleged defendant promised to pay reasonable value for stock.

Where plaintiff, in action to recover purchase price of certain stock, alleged that defendant had promised to pay fair and reasonable value of stock in monthly installments and for which, when determined to be fair and reasonable, judgment was prayed, it was unnecessary to allege that plaintiff had been damaged in that sum by defendant's failure to purchase stock as he agreed.

7. Corporations ☞121(5)—It was unnecessary, in action for price of stock, to prove performance of lease referred to by agreement for purchase to fix term for trade restraint.

Where agreement concerning sale and repurchase of stock referred to contemporaneous lease for but one purpose of fixing term during which party should not engage in certain business, it was unnecessary for plaintiff in action for purchase price of stock to prove performance of conditions of lease, since where reference is made in contract to another writing for specified purpose that writing becomes part of contract for specific purpose only.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by A. T. Nielsen against C. O. Swanberg. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Superseding former opinion in 275 P. 825.

Joseph C. Meyerstein, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Avery J. Howe, of Palo Alto, for respondent.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This action is for the purpose of recovering the purchase price of certain stock and is predicated upon a clause in a written agreement executed on June 25, 1923, between the Altomont Creamery, Inc. (respondent's assignor), as the party of the first part; Acme Ice Cream Company, as party of the second part; and C. O. Swanberg (appellant), as party of the third part—which is as follows: "The Third Party further agrees that at any time prior to July 1, 1926, should the first party not have exercised the option next hereinabove given it to exchange the said preferred stock for common stock, he, the Third Party, at the option and upon the request of the First Party, will purchase the said 130 shares of preferred stock at the price of $100 per share, payable at the rate of $1000 upon transfer of the said stock, and not less than $1000 per month thereafter until the entire sum of $13,000 is paid, provided, however, that in case the First Party shall desire to exercise either of the options herein granted, it shall so notify the Third Party not less than 30 days prior to the time when such option shall be exercised, said stock to be pledged as security for payment of the said repurchase price." Respondent A. T. Nielsen, the assignee of Altomont Creamery, Inc., was the owner of all of the stock of the Altomont Creamery, Inc., with the exception of two shares, one of which was owned by his wife and the other by one R. W. Johnstone, and while one Roseberg was the general manager of the Acme Ice Cream Company, appellant C. O. Swanberg appears to have been the controlling spirit of the corporation—at least he dictated its action with reference to the agreement under consideration in which he agreed to purchase the Acme Ice Cream Company stock from Altomont Creamery, Inc., respondent's assignor, which stock was to be pledged as security for the payment of the "repurchase price." Judgment was entered for plaintiff for $3,000, as the monthly installments found to be due under the contract up to the filing of the complaint, and from such judgment defendant has appealed.

Appellant specifies the following errors: The court erred in finding that respondent elected to exercise the option contained in the agreement sued upon; that respondent tendered the stock to appellant; that the Altomont Creamery, Inc., or its assignee, performed all the terms and conditions of the agreement sued upon on their part; that defendant did breach, break, and repudiate said agreement; and that there is now due, owing, and wholly unpaid, and was at the time of the commencement of this action due, owing, and wholly unpaid by appellant to respondent the sum of $3,000. The first and main question presented is, did respondent exercise his option, for under the terms of the agreement sued upon it was incumbent upon him to notify appellant 30 days prior to July 1, 1926, that he elected to do so.

The testimony relative to the demand or notification that respondent desired to exercise his option is without dispute that respondent called upon appellant at the Granada Hotel in San Francisco in February, 1926, and said to him:

"I asked him if he bore in mind that I had 130 shares of stock that would be due and payable about June or July, and he said 'yes,' he was aware of that fact and that it would be taken care of.

"Q. Did he say anything as to what was meant by the expression 'taken care of'? The Court: You say you made a demand upon him? A. Yes.

"Q. Now, what was that demand? A. The demand that he pay me $1000 a month on the preferred stock, which he had guaranteed to repurchase.

"Q. Did you say that to him in the same language you have used here, or substantially that language? A. I said to him exactly as I said before. I asked him if he was aware of the fact that that would be due and payable at that time, and he said yes, that he had that in mind, and that it would be taken care of."

In this conversation respondent requested that appellant purchase the stock, "that he pay me $1000 a month on the preferred stock, which he had guaranteed to repurchase." Appellant contends that this statement that he demanded that appellant pay him $1,000 a month on the preferred stock is qualified by respondent's answer to the question by the court: "I said to him exactly as I said before. I asked him if he was aware of the fact that that ($1000 a month) would be due and payable at that time and he said yes, he had that in mind, and that it would be taken care of." We question appellant's claim that respondent intended to qualify his statement that he demanded that appellant pay him $1,000 a month on the preferred stock. In any event, appellant must have understood that respondent was exercising his option and requesting him to purchase the preferred stock. This is shown by his answer: "Yes, he was aware of that fact and that it would be taken care of." This is further evidenced by appellant's statement to respondent when the latter called at the Granada Hotel in July, as testified to by respondent: "I know what you are here for and I have a long story to tell you. * * * He was very sorry to have to tell me that he wasn't able to pay me for the stock right now, but if I would not get excited about it and go to court about it, he would make arrangements to pay me a little later on."

In Flickinger v. Heck, 187 Cal. 111, 114, 200 P. 1045, 1046, the court says: "The particular act or acts which constitute an election may be fixed by the terms of the option, as also the time when, the place where, and the persons to whom it shall be made." (James on Law of Option Contracts, secs. 801, 817). The language of the contract itself controls as to what act or acts constitute an election. Under the terms of one option, the election may consist of a tender of the property to be sold or purchase price to be paid; under the terms of another option, it may consist of a mere notice of election to purchase or sell, leaving payment of the price and delivery of the property as subsequent matters in performance of the executory contract raised by the election (Breen v. Mayne, 141 Iowa, 399, 118 N. W. 441). The contract in the present case provides that to exercise the option "it (Altomont Creamery, Inc., respondent's assignor) shall so notify the third party (appellant) not less than 30 days prior to the time when said option shall be exercised." There is no question but that the notification given was within the period provided in the contract, the only point raised being as to its sufficiency.

[1, 2] As to appellant's contention that the notification should be in writing to take it out of the statute of frauds, it may be said that appellant had bound himself in writing in the original contract to perform his obligation to purchase the stock upon Altomont Creamery, Inc., respondent's assignor, notifying appellant of its desire to exercise the option. Furthermore, as no objection was interposed at the trial nor motion for nonsuit made, the objection cannot now be insisted upon. Nunez v. Morgan, 77 Cal. 427, 19 P. 753; Armstrong v. Barceloux, 34 Cal. App. 437, 167 P. 895.

[3, 4] Appellant gave respondent to understand by his statement, "Yes, he was aware of the fact that it would be taken care of," that no tender would be necessary. In the early part of July, 1926, appellant said to respondent: "I am very sorry, Mr. Nielsen, that I am an old man, over 80 years old, and this is the first time I ever had to break my word, but I am simply unable to pay it." At this time he made no statement that had the stock been tendered before July 1st he could have completed the purchase according to the agreement, nor did he offer any evidence to that effect at the trial. While the complaint alleges a tender and the court so found and the evidence does not support such a finding, the inability of appellant to consummate the purchase and his giving respondent to understand that no tender would be necessary renders a tender unnecessary.

Hulen v. Stuart, 191 Cal. 562, 569, 217 P. 750. Where "defendant led plaintiff to believe that if he had agreed to repurchase the bonds he would keep his agreement, and defendant did not notify plaintiff to the contrary * * * until it was too late for plaintiff to make tender * * * plaintiff was therefore excused from making tender, and defendant is now estopped from claiming that there was no sufficient tender." Pierce v. Lukens, 144 Cal. 397, 402, 77 P. 996, 998. Further, the agreement here provides that the stock is to be purchased on monthly payments and "Said stock to be pledged as security for payment of said repurchase price." The stock being pledged, no tender was necessary—a pledgor is not entitled to possession of pledged property until the debt is paid. Puckhaber v. Henry, 152 Cal. 419, 93 P. 114, 125 Am. St. Rep. 75, 14 Ann. Cas. 844; Savings Union Bank & Trust Co. v. Crowley, 176 Cal. 546, 169 P. 67. Restoration of the stock to appellant would have extinguished respondent's lien. Civ. Code, § 2913.

A rehearing was granted in this case in view of appellant's contention that the original decision (Cal. App.) 275 P. 825, was in conflict with the rule announced in Levinson v. Silverman (Cal. App.) 264 P. 796, Gopcevic v. California Packing Corp., 64 Cal. App. 132, 220 P. 1078, and Cuthill v. Peabody, 19 Cal. App. 305, 125 P. 926, but after a careful review of these cases we are of the opinion that they are distinguishable from the present case, as here the stock was to be paid for in monthly payments and not in a lump sum and "said stock to be pledged as security for payment of the said repurchase price" and falls within the rule announced in Hulen v. Stuart, supra, in which case the facts show that after the breach by the defendant the plaintiff retained the shares of stock; that no attempt was made to sell them, and plaintiff—as in the present case—produced in court the certificates of stock. It was argued that plaintiff's sole remedy was either a resale of the stock and suit for the balance, or the difference between the market price and the contract price, that is, a suit for damages, or as announced in Cuthill v. Peabody, that the vendor would be compelled to recoup his loss, if any, solely by an action for damages founded upon a breach of the vendee's contract to accept and pay for the property under section 3311 of the Civil Code. The prayer of the complaint was not for damages, but for a specific sum, the contract price agreed to be paid by the defendant to the plaintiff. The court, speaking through Mr. Justice Waste—now chief justice—uses this language: "The complaint clearly states a cause of action for the return of the purchase price of the stock with interest in accordance with the terms of the agreement executed by the defendant to Hulen. (Schulte v. Boulevard Gardens Land Co., 164 Cal. 464, 129 P. 582, 44 L. R. A. [N.

S.] 156, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 1013; Dickinson v. Zubiate Mining Co., 11 Cal. App. 656, 662, 106 P. 123; Williamson v. Marshall, 54 Cal. App. 24, 28, 200 P. 1058.) On still another theory the complaint states a cause of action under section 3311 of the Civil Code, which provides: "The detriment caused by the breach of a buyer's agreement to accept and pay for personal property, the title to which is not vested in him, is deemed to be the * * * excess, if any, of the amount due from the buyer, under the contract, over the value to the seller. * * *'" Having alleged that the stock had no value, and that the defendant promised to pay a specified amount, for which judgment is prayed, it was unnecessary to allege that plaintiff had been damaged in such sum. An allegation and proof, under the first theory, of the value of the stock was also immaterial for the reason that plaintiff's right to repayment did not depend upon its value; and as to the statement of a cause of action, it is likewise immaterial whether or not defendant accepted plaintiff's tender of a return of the stock. (Dickinson v. Zubiate Mining Co., 11 Cal. App. 663, 106 P. 123; Schulte v. Boulevard Gardens Land Co., 164 Cal. 471, 129 P. 582, 44 L. R. A. [N. S.] 156, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 1013.) Even though the plaintiff in stating her cause of action had mistaken the measure of the recovery which she sought, it would have made no difference. It is possible for a party to a contract, broken by the other party to it, to make such an election of remedies as to preclude him from thereafter seeking and obtaining the remedy of damages, but if he has not made such an election and is entitled to recover, the fact that he seeks damages according to a wrong measure is almost wholly inconsequential and does not preclude the court from according him the damages to which he is entitled according to their true measure. (Phillips v. Stark, 186 Cal. 369, 371, 199 P. 509; Bartlett v. Odd Fellows' Sav. Bank, 79 Cal. 218, 223, 21 P. 743, 12 Am. St. Rep. 139.) The court further says: "The plaintiff, as executrix, still retains possession of the stock. The certificates were produced in court, and can be endorsed and delivered to the defendant, upon payment of the amount of the judgment, as was contemplated in Williamson v. Marshall, supra."

The case of Williamson v. Marshall, referred to as in accord, is found in 54 Cal. App. 24, 200 P. 1058. The suit was for the breach of a written agreement by the defendant to repurchase from plaintiff all of his 100 shares of the capital stock of a corporation at the fair value of such shares. The court there says: "The sole purpose of the present action, notwithstanding the form of the prayer of the complaint, is to recover from the defendants the sum of money agreed to be repaid, in accordance with the terms of the agreement. * * * The consideration had passed to the obligor, and the only duty imposed upon the defendants was the obligation to repay the sum of money specified. (Dickinson v. Zubiate Mining Co., 11 Cal. App. 656, 662, 106 P. 123; Hellings v. Heydenfeldt, 107 Cal. 577, 40 P. 1026.) The facts bring the case within the provision of section 3302 of the Civil Code, which provides that "the detriment caused by the breach of an obligation to pay money only, is deemed to be the amount due by the terms of the obligation with interest thereon." We do not think it matters, as urged by the respondents, that the plaintiff has not followed the usual and ordinary form of alleging his damage. Under our code there is but one form of action, and if the complaint states facts which entitle the plaintiff to relief, either legal or equitable, it is not demurrable upon the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. (Whitehead v. Sweet, 126 Cal. 67, 73, 58 P. 376.) "When the plaintiff, as here, alleges facts to exist, which, if proved, would entitle him to recover the sum of money he demands from the defendant, he has shown, so far as the recitals of the complaint can, that he has sustained damages." (Bartlett v. Odd Fellows' Sav. Bank, 79 Cal. 218, 223, 21 P. 743, 12 Am. St. Rep. 139.) Having alleged that the defendants had promised to pay the fair and reasonable value of the stock, which is stated, and for which, when determined by the court to be fair and reasonable, judgment is prayed, it was unnecessary to allege that plaintiff had been damaged in such sum. (Dickinson v. Zubiate Mining Co., 11 Cal. App. 656, 663, 106 P. 123.)

In Hulen v. Stuart the certificates were not indorsed over, and the court held that, the certificates being produced in court, the plaintiff should recover the full purchase price and indorse and deliver the stock to the defendant.

[5, 6] Furthermore, appellant was a party to the agreement; was the active representative of the Acme Ice Cream Company, the second party therein in consummating the agreement, and as such his promise to purchase back the stock which was to be pledged for the "repurchase price" constituted an agreement of repurchase as in Hulen v. Stuart. As is said in Williamson v. Marshall, supra, which we again quote: "The sole purpose of the present action, notwithstanding the form of the prayer of the complaint, is to recover from the defendants the sum of money agreed to be repaid, in accordance with the terms of the agreement. * * * The consideration had passed to the obligor, and the only duty imposed upon the defendants was the obligation to repay the sum of money specified. * * * Having alleged that the defendants had promised to pay the fair and reasonable value of the stock [here $13,000 in monthly installments of $1,000] and for which, when determined by the court to be fair and reasonable, judgment is prayed, it is unnecessary to allege that plaintiff has been damaged in such sum."

[7] Appellant contends that respondent failed to prove the performance of the conditions of the lease which in paragraph 2 of the agreement was made a part thereof in this: "That the lessor (Altomont Creamery, Inc.), or its assignee, did furnish light, water, power or refrigeration, as provided in paragraph 4 of said lease." Paragraph 2 of the agreement refers only to the agreement not to engage in the business of selling ice cream within the limits of Palo Alto for a period contemporaneous with a certain lease entered into between the parties and "to which said lease reference is hereby specifically made." The agreement, it seems, refers to the lease for but one purpose—to fix the term during which respondent's assignor should not engage in the ice cream business in Palo Alto. Where reference is made in a contract to another writing for a specified purpose, such writing becomes a part of the contract for such purpose only (Moreing v. Weber, 3 Cal. App. 14, 84 P. 220).

This disposes of the questions raised by appellant's specifications of error, and from what has been said it follows that the judgment should be and it is affirmed.

(Civ. 6656.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 15, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 11, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 12, 1929.

1. Sales $\S$ 72(5)—Inspector's certificate of quality of rice held not conclusive, so as to bar purchaser's remedy for inferior goods shipped, in absence of specific contract provision making certificate final.

In a contract for the purchase of rice of a specified quality, providing for certificate of inspector to be attached to draft drawn against letter of credit, but not specifically providing that such certificate should be final as to quality of rice, such certificate was not conclusive of quality, so as to bar purchaser's right of action for damages for inferior quality shipped.

2. Evidence $\S$ 397(1)—Terms of written contract cannot be changed by parol evidence.

Evidence is not admissible to change the terms of a written contract.

3. Customs and usages ☞17—Evidence of custom or usage inconsistent with written contract is not admissible to vary contract (Civ. Code, §§ 1655, 1656; Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 12).

Evidence of custom or usage inconsistent with written contract is not admissible, under Civ. Code, §§ 1655, 1656, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 12, to change terms of contract.

4. Sales ☞261(6)—Agreement to ship and deliver No. 1 rice is express warranty of quality, where No. 1 rice has definite, well-known trade meaning.

Agreement to ship and deliver No. 1 rice amounts to express warranty of quality, where No. 1 rice has definite and well-known meaning in trade.

5. Sales ☞261(4)—Rule that sale of goods by descriptive name amounts to express warranty, simply requires delivery of goods sold.

The rule that a sale of goods by descriptive name well known in the trade amounts to an express warranty simply means that seller is bound to deliver the goods which he contracted to deliver.

6. Sales ☞166(1)—Judgment for purchaser for damages for delivery of inferior rice held supportable on theory of breach of contract, irrespective of breach of warranty of quality.

Where seller, contracting to ship and deliver No. 1 Saigon rice, delivered a large quantity of rice, which under express terms of contract was not No. 1, judgment for purchaser for damages was supported on the theory of breach of contract, irrespective of breach of warranty of quality.

7. Sales ☞182(3)—Irrespective of warranty, question of purchaser's waiver by acceptance is question of fact.

Whether there was warranty or not, the question of purchaser's waiver by acceptance is a question of fact.

8. Sales ☞181(12)—Purchaser's objection that rice was not of quality sold, and correspondence held not to show waiver of breach notwithstanding acceptance of shipment.

Purchaser's prompt objection that rice shipped was not quality contracted for and correspondence in relation thereto held not to show waiver of breach notwithstanding purchaser's acceptance of shipment.

9. Evidence ☞413—Broker's letter of same date, but prior to executed contract of sale, was properly excluded, as superseded by written contract in purchaser's action for breach (Civ. Code, § 1625).

In purchaser's action for damages for seller's shipment of inferior rice, broker's letter to sellers confirming sale, written on same date, but prior to execution of contract, was properly excluded, under Civ. Code, § 1625, because superseded by written contract.

10. Sales ☞182(1)—Letter of credit, describing inspection certificate as one of quality, weight, and condition, held not conclusive as matter of law that certificate was finally determinative of quality of rice shipped.

In purchaser's action for breach of contract by delivery of rice inferior in quality, letter of credit, issued pursuant to contract which enumerated necessary documents to accompany drafts, and described certificate of inspection as one "as to quality, weight, and condition," if admissible, was not conclusive that such certificate was final and determinative of quality of rice shipped, since it did not, as matter of law, change express language of contract in respect of matters to which it related.

11. Sales ☞181(12)—Evidence held to support finding that rice shipped was of inferior quality.

Evidence held to support finding that rice shipped by seller was below standard of rice which seller agreed to ship.

12. Sales ☞285(4)—Lack of details in purchaser's claim for damage was excused, where seller disclaimed all responsibility for inferior quality of goods delivered.

Seller's denial of responsibility for inferior quality of rice shipped and delivered excused purchaser from rendering more detailed statement of damage in claim.

13. Appeal and error ☞221—Claim as to time and place for admeasuring damages, not made at trial, cannot be made on appeal.

Seller, not claiming at trial that time and place for measuring purchaser's damage for inferior rice shipped and delivered was at point of shipment, rather than point of delivery, cannot make such claim on appeal.

14. Sales ☞418(2)—Damages for breach of c. i. f. contract for shipment of rice from Orient to Cuba held properly admeasurable at time and place of arrival.

Under c. i. f. contract for shipment of rice from Orient to Cuba, which apprised sellers that no inspection as to quality would be made by purchasers at point of shipment, damages were properly measurable as of time and place of arrival at Cuba.

15. Sales ☞418(1)—Judgment for purchaser for breach of contract by delivery of rice of inferior quality properly included interest from date of commencement of action (Civ. Code, §§ 3287, 3313).

Under Civ. Code, §§ 3287, 3313, there was no error in including in judgment for purchaser for damages for breach of contract for sale and shipment of rice by delivery of rice of inferior quality interest from date of commencement of action.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Caniss, Judge.

Action by Max J. Brandenstein and others, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of M. J. Brandenstein & Co., against D. C. Jackling and others, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of the Pacific Rice Mills. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Chandler & Quayle, of San Francisco, for appellants.

H. U. Brandenstein, R. A. Carter, and H. R. Kalisher, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

KOFORD, P. J. Plaintiffs recovered judgment for $15,680 for breach of warranty of quality made in the sale of rice, together with interest from the commencement of this action. Defendants appeal, claiming chiefly that there was no warranty made in the sale.

The contract of sale and warranty upon which the judgment appealed from is based was made between two San Francisco merchants for the sale and purchase of rice to be shipped from the Orient to Cuba and is in its essential parts as follows:

"San Francisco, March 9, 1920.

"Pacific Rice Mills hereby agrees to sell and M. J. Brandenstein & Company, San Francisco, California, agrees to buy the following goods at the prices and on the terms mentioned below:

"Quantity: About two thousand (2,000) long tons of 2,240 pounds each.

"Packed: Double bags of 224 pounds gross each.

"Quality: No. 1 Saigon long grain rice, f. a. q. of the season.

"Price: $11.80 per 100 lbs. gross, in bond CIF Havana, Cienfuegos or Santiago, buyers' option, to be declared on request of sellers.

"Shipment: March/April/May from Orient to Cuba.

"Terms: Draft at sixty days sight against confirmed bankers irrevocable letter of credit to be established immediately by buyers in favor of sellers; interest for sellers' account.

* * * * *

"This contract is made subject to terms of carriers B/L.

"The word 'about,' if used herein in designating quantity, shall mean that a variation of not more than five per cent. (either way) of shipping weights or quantity is permitted.

"Claims for damages or difference in quality must be presented within ten days after arrival of each portion of goods at destination.

"The goods are for buyer's account and risk as soon as landed from the carrier and order tendered.

"Wharfage, if any, to be paid by buyer.

"C. i. f. and c. & f. sales differ from f. o. b. sales only in that sellers guarantee insurance and freight as the case may be; no additional responsibility being involved.

"Oriental shipping weights final.

"Oriental surveyor's certificate, certifying rice to be f. a. q. of the season and free from worms, weevils, and other vermin at time of shipment to accompany documents and to be final.

* * * * *

"The terms of this contract are herein stated in their entirety and it is understood that there is no other contract or verbal agreement."

The trade terms used in said contract are explained in the court's findings as follows:

"Under general usages and customs of the trade of selling and buying rice to be imported from the Orient in the contracts involved in this action the terms 'quality No. 1 Saigon long grain rice, f. a. q. of the season' and 'oriental surveyor's certificate' had and were intended by the parties to said contracts to have the following meaning, viz.:

"'Long grain': Rice of the long grain type as distinguished from the round grain type;

"'Saigon': Rice grown in Indo-China and exported from the port of Saigon;

"'No. 1 Saigon': Rice grown in Indo-China and exported from Saigon of which the broken grains do not exceed twenty per cent. of the lots of rice involved. For the purpose of such determination the percentage of broken grains is by weight; all whole grains and all grains that are broken but remain more than half grains are considered unbroken grains; only half grains or less than half grains are considered broken grains;

"'F. A. Q.': Fair, average quality;

"'F. A. Q. of the season': Fairly equal to the average crop of Saigon Long Grain Rice produced during the rice growing season involved;

"'Oriental Surveyor's Certificate': The certificate of inspection of two disinterested inspectors at the point of shipment."

The findings continue:

"Such certificate of inspection for each lot of rice, together with bill of lading and proper insurance policies, is thereupon attached to the draft for the purchase price of rice shipped, drawn against letter of credit established with a California bank by the buyer in favor of the seller, and payable at such time after sight as may be agreed upon between the parties; and, in this case, agreed upon by the parties to the action by said contracts; that said draft, with said other documents, is then forwarded and presented to the California bank for payment; if the documents do not describe the rice to be such as called for by the contracts, payment may be but need not be refused by the buyer. If said documents do describe the rice to be such as called for by the contracts, and otherwise sufficient, said draft is thereupon paid in advance and irrespective of the fact of the actual arrival of the rice at its destination. And, further, said rice may be bought, sold and paid for several times on mere exchange of the documents before the arrival of the rice at the port of destination."

The rice was shipped. The shipper attached inspection certificates, bills of lading and proper insurance policies to a draft drawn upon the plaintiffs. The draft was honored and paid. When the rice thereafter arrived in Cuba the plaintiffs objected upon the ground that the rice was not No. 1 quality. This action is based upon that claim and judgment was given plaintiffs for breach of warranty of quality. Of a total of 20,779 bags shipped under this contract, 4,000 bags, or about 20 per cent. were found by the court to fall below grade No. 1. In holding that the certificate was not the final and ultimate test of the quality meant by the expression "No. 1," and that it did not by itself make full and complete performance by the seller in respect to that quality, the court took notice or decided that the contract clause calling for the certificate did not require the certificate to certify whether the rice was No. 1, but only to certify that it was f. a. q. of the season and free from worms, weevils, and other vermin at time of shipment.

The importance of this point in this case is illustrated by the fact that there was a second cause of action upon a contract dated March 22, 1920, similar to that declared upon in the first cause, but upon which second cause of action plaintiff was denied relief, although 250 bags of rice shipped under that contract were found to fall below No. 1 grade. That cause of action was in most respects the same as the first, but the court held there was no warranty, the inspection certificate being held final as to all qualities. That contract had a different clause calling for an inspection certificate. It read:

"Hongkong Surveyors or Saigon Merchants certificate final as to quality, condition and weight at time of shipment."

[1] In the contract upon which the judgment appealed from is based, the inspection certificate was made final, but that certificate was not required to certify that the rice possessed those special qualifications meant by the expression "No. 1." The finality of the inspection certificate therefore related to those qualities only to which the certificate was by the contract required to certify. This case is therefore distinguishable from those cited by appellant, such as California Sugar & White Pine Agency v. Penoyar, 167 Cal. 274, 139 P. 671, and Bullock v. Consumers' Lumber Co., 3 Cal. Unrep. Cas. 609, 31 P. 367, 370, where the quality of goods sold was left to the determination of a third party. No doubt the parties could have expressly stipulated in the contract for a certificate of a third party that the rice was No. 1 quality, and could have stipulated that such certificate should be the final and ultimate test of that quality; but it seems plain that they clearly omitted doing so. Such a stipulation would make such certificate conclusive evidence that the warranty had been fulfilled in the absence of fraud.

There being no contract requirements for a certificate as to No. 1 quality, we need not consider the debated points whether the certificate did in fact so certify and whether, if it did not, such defect was waived by respondents in honoring a draft with such defective certificate. This action is not on the draft.

ranty was intended. They claim that the contract called for a final certificate of all qualities agreed upon; that the contract was a "c. i. f." contract calling for performance by delivery of certain documents representing the shipped goods rather than the goods themselves; that the contract called not for quality but for a certificate of quality, including the qualities meant by the term No. 1; that evidence at the trial showed a general custom of having an inspection made by independent merchants at the point of shipment and of issuing certificates and other documents representing the shipped rice, which documents changed hands from time to time by sale from one merchant to another; that the custom was to rely upon the certificates and not to warrant; that even if the contract here contained a warranty of No. 1 quality, the certificate of inspection satisfied that warranty, it being claimed that the certificate would necessarily by indirection certify to the qualities embraced in the expression No. 1 while certifying to the other qualities of No. 1 rice.

The answer to each of these contentions is the same. Evidence is not admissible to change the terms of a written contract. If there is a warranty expressed in the contract, evidence of custom and usage is not admissible to show that no warranty was intended. Miller v. Germain Seed, etc., Co., 193 Cal. 62, 222 P. 817, 32 A. L. R. 1215; Buckner v. A. Leon & Co. (Cal. Sup.) 267 P. 693; Ferguson v. Koch (Cal. Sup.) 268 P. 342, 58 A. L. R. 1176. Nor is evidence of a custom admissible which is inconsistent with the contract. "Stipulations which are necessary to make a contract reasonable, or conformable to usage, are implied, in respect to matters concerning which the contract manifests no contrary intention." Civ. Code, § 1655. "All things that in law or usage are considered as incidental to a contract, or as necessary to carry it into effect, are implied therefrom, unless some of them are expressly mentioned therein, when all other things of the same class are deemed to be excluded." Civ. Code, § 1656. Evidence may be given of "usage, to explain the true character of an act, contract, or instrument, where such true character is not otherwise plain; but usage is never admissible, except as an instrument of interpretation." Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 12.

[4] Respondents answer the several contentions of appellants by asserting that the contract in this case contains an express rather than an implied warranty, and that, being an express warranty, none of the facts, circumstances, usages, or customs referred to by appellants can operate to take away from the contract that which is expressed therein. With this we agree. The agreement to ship and deliver No. 1 rice amounts to an express warranty of quality where, as here, No. 1 rice has a definite and well-known meaning in the trade. Flint v. Lyon, 4 Cal.

17; Polhemus v. Heiman, 45 Cal. 573; Barrios v. Pacific States Trading Co., 41 Cal. App. 637, 183 P. 236; Firth v. Richter, 49 Cal. App. 545, 196 P. 277; Newhall Co. v. Hogue-Kellogg Co., 56 Cal. App. 95, 204 P. 562; 24 R. C. L. 171; 22 Cal. Jur. 994. Miller v. Germain Seed, etc., Co., 193 Cal. 62, 222 P. 817, 32 A. L. R. 1215, is not contrary. It was held that the warranty there considered partook both of the nature of an express and of an implied warranty. The seller did not expressly say that the seed sent was the kind ordered. Affirmation of quality or variety was implied from the mute act of the seller in sending seed in response to an order for a certain kind. Evidence of custom was there held admissible, not to change the terms of a written or express contract but in connection with that part of the contract which the court said was the implied part of the contract. The court said (page 66 of 193 Cal. [222 P. 818]): "It is, of course, conceded that if there had been a written warranty or an expressed oral warranty of the character of the seed, the custom of the dealer in other cases not to give such a warranty would have no bearing upon the terms of the express warranty."

[5, 6] The rule that a sale of goods by a descriptive name well known in the trade amounts to an express warranty simply holds one to deliver the goods which he has contracted to deliver. The appellants' express written agreement to deliver No. 1 Saigon long grain rice would not be performed by the delivery of round grain or No. 2 rice or any other thing not described in the contract. As about 20 per cent. of the bags delivered contained rice of less value than the rice agreed upon, the buyer was entitled to damages for breach of contract. Considering appellants' failure to deliver all No. 1 rice as a breach of contract, instead of a breach of warranty of quality, the judgment appealed from would be equally well supported. So treating it, there might be some difference in considering whether respondents had waived the breach by accepting the goods, since such a waiver is perhaps more easily shown when there is no warranty. It has been frequently held that acceptance of goods does not waive a breach of warranty. North Alaska, etc., Co. v. Hobbs, Wall & Co., 159 Cal. 380, 113 P. 870, 120 P. 27, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 501.

scription of the goods, or the broken promise may have been in the form of a collateral warranty, or it may have been a warranty implied by law. * * * It is doubtful if the intention of the parties varies with the form in which the promise is put, whether as part of the description of the goods, or as a strictly collateral warranty. No doubt it is possible, however, for the buyer not merely to accept title to the goods offered, but to accept the transfer of title as full satisfaction of all the seller's obligations under the contract. Whether the buyer thus agrees to waive deficiencies in performance is logically and should, it seems, be legally a question of fact in each case." In the instant case the acceptance of the rice by the respondents does not show a waiver of the breach. Immediately upon receipt of the shipment of rice, the respondents notified the appellants in writing that there was an excessive amount of broken grains and further stated "when we are in receipt of full particulars we will advise you further." To which appellants immediately replied to the effect that they disclaimed any further duty or responsibility as to quality than the furnishing of the merchant's certificate of inspection and added "however, would be glad to take the matter up with our suppliers should you put us in possession of the necessary facts." This correspondence in connection with the time and place of the discovery of the breach and the quantity and nature of the defects in quality does not show a waiver of the breach.

[9] Some points are made upon the admissibility of evidence. The broker's letter to appellants confirming the sale, written on the same date of but prior to the execution of the contract, was offered in evidence by appellants but was not admitted. It contained the following clause: "Remarks: Hongkong surveyors' or Saigon merchants' certificate final as to quality, condition and weights at time of shipment. Contract to follow." It was properly excluded under the rule of Civil Code, § 1625, because it was superseded by the written contract.

[10] Defendants' Exhibit No. 9 was a letter of credit issued to appellants by a San Francisco bank, containing the statement that it was issued at the instance of respondents. In enumerating the necessary documents to accompany drafts against the amount of credit specified in the letter, it described the required certificate as one "as to quality, weight, and condition." It was not rejected as at first stated by appellants, but received in evidence upon the offer of appellants. This evidence, if admissible, was not conclusive. It did not as a matter of law change the express language of the contract in respect of the matters to which it related.

[11] Evidence offered by respondents as to the percentage of broken grains of rice was sufficient to support a finding that the rice both when shipped and when unloaded at

Cuba was below the standard of No. 1 rice. The samples produced and testified to showed the condition of the rice after it arrived and had been stored in Cuba several months. Appellants cite authority to the effect that the presumption that a thing proven to exist continues to exist does not work backward, but respondents rely upon opinion testimony in the record to the effect that the broken grains were broken in the milling process, which would be before shipment. Questions about the dates of samples taken, the keeping of the samples and the honesty of the samples, all relate to the weight of the testimony. Respondents' testimony that the rice was below the standard of No. 1 quality, however, was uncontradicted by any counter showing by appellants.

[12] Respondents made the claim within ten days after arrival that the shipment contained an excessive amount of broken grains. Respondents did not, however, specify a direct and detailed claim for damages within that time. Appellants immediately replied to respondents that they had no responsibility other than furnishing the surveyor's certificate. Respondents' claim did not fail to measure up to the meager requirements of the contract for claims, and the sweeping denial of responsibility by appellants excused a more detailed statement of damage by respondents in their claim.

[13, 14] The time and place used at the trial in admeasuring the damages was the time of the arrival of the shipment and at Cuba. Appellants now claim that the time and place for measuring the amount of damages should be the time and place of shipment from Saigon. This point was not made by appellants at the trial and is not available to them on this appeal. Their objection to evidence of value at Cuba was confined to the claim that the parties were precluded by the inspection certificate. Moreover, it was proper to measure the damages as of the time and place of arrival of the rice at Cuba under the authority of W. R. Grace & Co. v. Levy, 30 Cal. App. 231, 156 P. 626. Appellants knew the rice was to be shipped to Cuba by the terms of the contract and the contract likewise apprised them that no inspection as to quality No. 1 would be made by respondents at point of shipment. See, also, 22 Cal. Jur. 1022, and cases cited, and Porter v. Gestri, 77 Cal. App. 578, 247 P. 247.

[15] The court did not err in including interest in the judgment from date of commencement of action. The rule of Civil Code, § 3287, entitles the plaintiff to interest when entitled on a particular day to recover damages which are certain or capable of being made certain by calculation. Damages which are fixed by market value or by the difference between two market values have been held to be certain by calculation within the meaning of this rule. Olcovich v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 179 Cal. 332, 336, 176 P. 459; 8 Cal. Jur. p. 791; 1 Sutherland on Damages, § 348, p. 1100. Civil Code, § 3313, prescribes the measure of damage for breach of warranty of quality of personal property as the excess in value of the property if it had been of the quality warranted over its actual value at the time to which the warranty referred. There was testimony of the market value of No. 1 Saigon long grain rice at the port of discharge in Cuba and testimony that Saigon long grain rice at that place which fell below No. 1 standard was of the value of $1.75 to $2 per hundredweight less than the No. 1 grade. The amount of damage awarded respondents was apparently figured at $1.75 per hundredweight of the portion of the rice which fell below grade No. 1. The amount recovered by respondents was a part of the amount already paid appellants by them when they honored the draft before arrival of the shipment.

The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

PEOPLE v. BARNETT. (Cr. 1082.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California. June 12, 1929.

1. Indictment and information $\S$ 122(2)—Information charging lascivious conduct, as well as rape, held authorized, though complaint filed in justice court charged rape alone, where testimony on preliminary examination showed lascivious conduct (Pen. Code, § 809, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1045).

District attorney had authority to incorporate, in information charging rape, second count containing charge of lascivious conduct, under Pen. Code, § 809, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1045, though complaint filed in justice court merely charged defendant with rape, where testimony taken on preliminary examination afforded proper basis for charge of lascivious conduct.

2. Indictment and information $\S$ 122(2)—Defendant could not claim surprise because of inclusion in information of charge of lascivious conduct, not contained in complaint before magistrate charging rape, where defendant had opportunity to present his defenses.

Where it did not appear from the record that defendant was denied opportunity to present any defense which he had, and evidence taken on preliminary examination disclosed offenses of rape and lascivious conduct, defendant could not object that inclusion in information of charge of lascivious conduct not contained in original complaint amounted to surprise.

3. Indictment and information $\S$ 122(2)—That penalty for lascivious conduct may exceed that for rape did not deny defendant, charged with rape and lascivious conduct, and convicted only of lascivious conduct, of constitutional rights, though original complaint charged rape only (Pen. Code, $\S$ 264, 288).

That penalty for lascivious conduct under Pen. Code, $\S$ 288, may extend from one year to life imprisonment, while jury, on conviction for rape under section 264, have right to impose only jail sentence, did not result in denial of constitutional rights to defendant, acquitted of rape charge contained in first count of information, and convicted of lascivious conduct as charged in second count, though original complaint charged crime of rape only.

4. Infants $\S$ 20—Testimony of female, giving month of offense and circumstances relating thereto, sufficiently fixed date of lascivious conduct (Pen. Code, $\S$ 288).

In prosecution for lascivious conduct, under Pen. Code, $\S$ 288, testimony of female, giving month of occurrence of offense, together with circumstances relating thereto, by her statements given on trial and on preliminary examination sufficiently fixed date of offense.

5. Witnesses $\S$ 351—Testimony as to reputation of female in prosecution for lascivious conduct held properly excluded, where no foundation was laid (Pen. Code, $\S$ 288).

Testimony of witness as to reputation of girl, in prosecution of defendant for lascivious conduct, under Pen. Code, $\S$ 288, was properly excluded, where no foundation was laid.

6. Criminal law $\S$ 829(19)—Requested instruction that individual jurors should vote to acquit, if entertaining reasonable doubt, held sufficiently covered.

Requested instruction that, if jury or individual jurors entertained reasonable doubt as to defendant's guilt, the jury and individual jurors should vote acquittal, held sufficiently covered by instruction that all 12 jurors must concur in conclusion of guilt, and each be satisfied of guilt beyond reasonable doubt.

7. Criminal law $\S$ 785(6)—Elimination, from instruction relative to immaturity of prosecuting witness and jury's duty to give defendant benefit of reasonable doubt, of statement that witness was likely to be influenced and that jury should acquit, held not error.

In prosecution for lascivious conduct, modification of instruction that prosecuting witness was child of immature years and likely to be influenced very easily by older minds, and that jury should give defendant benefit of doubt and acquit him, if entertaining reasonable doubt as to truth of her testimony, by elimination of words "and acquit him" and "and likely to be influenced very easily by older minds" as unnecessary and argumentative, held not error.

8. Criminal law $\S$ 786(1)—Instruction as to weight to be given defendant's testimony was properly refused.

Where court instructed jury as to credibility of witnesses and that jury was exclusive judge of the facts, requested instruction as to weight and consideration to be given to defendant's testimony was properly refused.

9. Criminal law $\S$ 757(1)—Instruction cautioning jury to carefully scrutinize testimony of prosecuting witness in prosecution for lascivious conduct was improper.

Instruction of trial court, cautioning jury in weighing testimony of prosecuting witness in prosecution for lascivious conduct, held improper, as instruction on weight of evidence of particular witness.

10. Affidavits $\S$ 18—Affidavit of deceased witness was incompetent.

Court did not err in excluding affidavit of deceased witness as incompetent.

11. Witnesses $\S$ 243—Trial court could permit district attorney to ask leading questions of prosecuting witness under 14.

In prosecution of defendant for lascivious conduct with female under 14, it was not error to permit district attorney to ask leading questions of prosecuting witness; allowance of such questions being within trial court's discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Percy S. King, Judge.

P. G. Barnett was convicted of lewd and lascivious conduct with a female under 14, and he appeals. Affirmed.

E. L. Webber, of Napa, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PLUMMER, J. The appellant was tried upon an information containing two counts; count No. 1 charging the defendant with the crime of rape, in that he had sexual relations with a female under the age of 14 years, not his wife, and count No. 2 charging the defendant with lewd and lascivious conduct with a female, not his wife, and under the age of 14 years, etc. Conviction was had upon the second count. The defendant's motion for a new trial being denied, an appeal has been taken to this court.

[1] Upon being arraigned upon the information referred to, the appellant interposed the following motion:

"Now comes the defendant above named and moves the court to set aside the second count of the information filed against him herein upon the following grounds, to wit: (1) That the complaint or deposition against this defendant filed in the justice's court of Hot Springs township, on or about the 20th day of December, 1928, charged the defendant with 'unlawfully and feloniously having an act of sexual intercourse with Roberta Salmon, a female, then under the age of eighteen years, and not the wife of said P. G. Barnett,' and did not charge the defendant with lewd and lascivious conduct as set forth in the second count of the information filed in this court, and that the testimony taken upon the preliminary examination was taken upon the charge set forth in the complaint or deposition filed with the justice of the peace, namely the charge of rape.

"Wherefore defendant prays that said second count of said information be dismissed.

"[Signed]

E. L. Webber,

"Attorney for Defendant."

This motion was denied, and upon this appeal it is alleged that the court erred in so doing.

It will be observed that, in making the motion referred to, no attempt is made to comply with the provisions of section 995 of the Penal Code; that is, the motion is not, apparently, based upon any of the provisions therein contained. The appellant, apparently, relies upon the point that, as the complaint filed before the committing magistrate charged the defendant only with the crime of rape, and after an examination was had the defendant was bound over to answer the charge of rape, the district attorney had no legal authority to incorporate in the information filed against the appellant the charge of lascivious conduct.

The notice of motion to which we have referred makes no reference to the testimony taken upon the preliminary examination. However, the record shows that upon the hearing of the motion, by stipulation the testimony taken upon the preliminary examination of the defendant was presented to the trial court and used upon the hearing of the motion. An examination of this testimony shows beyond any controversy whatever a proper basis for charging the defendant with the offense set forth in the second count of the information, and upon which the defendant was convicted. We do not wish to tarnish the records of our official reports with a recital of the testimony, and content ourselves with the statement that a cursory reading thereof is sufficient to disclose a basis for the second charge contained in the information. This being true, section 809 of the Penal Code, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1045, is applicable, where it provides that after a person has been bound over, following a preliminary examination, the district attorney must within 15 days, file an information in which he may charge the offense named in the complaint filed before the committing magistrate, and upon which the defendant has been bound over, and may also, in the language of the section, "charge the offense, or offenses, named in the order of commitment, or any offense, or offenses, shown by the evidence taken before the magistrate to have been committed."

[2] The argument is made by appellant that he was taken by surprise, by reason of the second count in the information, but there is nothing in the record which shows that the defendant did not have ample opportunity to present any defense which he had. It may be here stated that the evidence taken upon the preliminary examination disclosed to the defendant, the same as it did to the prosecuting officers, the different offenses, or the several offenses, with which the defendant might be charged, including the two offenses with which he was charged.

[3] As the defendant was acquitted of the crime of rape contained in the first count and found guilty of lewd and lascivious conduct, as charged in the second count, it is argued that the defendant has been deprived of his constitutional rights by reason of the fact that the original complaint charged him with the crime of rape; whereas, the information upon which he was tried charged him also with lascivious conduct, upon which he was convicted, and that the jury must have been misled, or labored under the impression that they were finding the defendant guilty of a lesser offense, and for which only a lesser punishment might be inflicted. It is true that under section 264 of the Penal Code, upon a charge of rape involving the circumstances here presented, a jury trying the case have the right to impose only a jail sentence; whereas, under section 288 of the Penal Code the jury is given no power in relation to the punishment to be imposed upon one found guilty of lascivious or lewd conduct, etc., and that the penalty provided by that section may extend from one year to life imprisonment. While the sections of the Code do present the anomaly of one convicted of the crime of rape being given a less severe punishment than one convicted of lewd and lascivious conduct, it is a matter with which courts have nothing to do. Whatever injustice or incongruity there may be between the two sections relating to punishment can be adjusted only by the Legislature, and there is the place for appellant to present his argument in relation thereto.

While the appellant makes some argument as to the sufficiency of the testimony to support conviction, such contention is not tenable, as clearly appears from a reading of the transcript of the evidence taken upon the appellant's trial. This evidence, like that taken at the preliminary examination, is of such a character that it ought not to be incorporated into the official reports of any court, and for that reason we content ourselves with the statement that there is ample testimony to justify the finding of the jury that the defendant was guilty not only of the offense with which he was charged in the second count, but that the jury might also well have found the defendant guilty of the crime of rape.

[4] Objection is also taken that the time of the offense was not sufficiently fixed. It appears from the record that the offense of which the defendant was found guilty was one occurrence, and that occurrence was during the month of July, 1928. The child involved was not able to give the date, but did give the month and all and singular the circumstances relating thereto, and all of which was clearly disclosed, not simply by the testimony given upon the trial, but also in the testimony given at the preliminary examination, so that the defendant knew the acts and the circumstances surrounding their occurrence with sufficient definiteness as to time to meet the issue with a defense, if any defense thereto existed.

[5] Objection is also made to the exclusion of testimony of one witness called by the defendant to testify as to the reputation of the girl involved in this case. A reading of the testimony shows beyond controversy that no foundation was laid for the admission of this testimony, and the court's ruling was absolutely correct.

[6] It is finally urged that the court erred in refusing to give certain instructions requested by the appellant, and also in modifying certain instructions. The first error alleged is in modifying instruction No. 2, requested by the defendant. That instruction is as follows: "I instruct you that our courts have repeatedly mentioned the fact that a charge of this character is one easily made, and once made difficult to disprove, no matter how innocent a defendant may be, and that the jury should therefore weigh the testimony of the female with great caution, and be satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the defendant, from all the evidence introduced in the case."

The instruction to this extent was given. The requested instruction continued as follows: "And if the jury or any individual juror entertains a reasonable doubt as to the defendant's guilt, it will be the duty of the jury or such individual juror to vote the acquittal of the defendant."

Complaint is made as to the refusal of the court to give the latter portion of the instruction. However, an examination of the record discloses that the court elsewhere did give the following instruction: "In criminal cases the law requires a concurrence of 12 minds in the conclusion of guilt before a verdict of guilty can be legally rendered. Every member of the jury must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendant." This instruction properly gives all that portion of the requested instruction which was eliminated by the trial court.

[7] Appellant's next objection is to the action of the court in striking from defendant's proposed instruction the following words: "And likely to be influenced very easily by older minds," and also the words "and acquit him." The instruction as requested reads: "I instruct you that the witness Roberta Salmon is a child of immature years, and likely to be influenced very easily by older minds, and that, if you entertain any reasonable doubt as to the truth of her testimony, it will be your duty to give to the defendant the benefit of the doubt and acquit him."

[8] The words "and acquit him," as eliminated by the trial court, added nothing to the meaning of the instruction, and the words "and likely to be influenced very easily by older minds" were properly stricken from said instruction as being a mere argument addressed to the jury. The court having instructed the jury as to the credibility of witnesses, and also that the jury was the exclusive judge of the facts, appellant's requested instruction No. VII as to the weight and consideration to be given to the testimony of the defendant was properly refused. See People v. Heath, 79 Cal. App. 20, 248 P. 1027, People v. Jeans, 79 Cal. App. 464, 249 P. 1089, and People v. Brown, 62 Cal. App. 96, 216 P. 411.

[9] It is not necessary to discuss further the refusal of the court to give other instructions requested by the defendant, further than to say that a reading of the instructions given by the trial court shows that the jury was fully and completely instructed. It may also be added that the defendant had the benefit of instructions relative to cautioning the jury as to the testimony of the complaining witness to which the defendant was not entitled. The court in several instances cautioned the jury as to acting upon such testimony.

One of the instructions was in this language: "I instruct you that our courts have repeatedly mentioned the fact that a charge of this character is one easily made, and once made difficult to disprove, no matter how innocent a defendant may be, and that the jury should therefore weigh the testimony of the female with great caution, and be satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the defendant from all the evidence introduced in the case." And again the jury was cautioned by the following instruction: "You are instructed to carefully scan and scrutinize all of the evidence of the prosecutrix in this case, and, if you find that her evidence lacks corroboration in any material particular, it is your duty to act upon such evidence with great caution." A third instruction of like tenor was also given to the jury relative to the testimony of the prosecutrix.

After having instructed the jury in general terms that they were the sole judges of the fact and the credibility of the witnesses, it has frequently been held that it is improper to single out any particular witness and caution the jury as to how such testimony should be weighed. 8 Cal. Jur. 356, § 394; People v. Brown, supra, and cases there cited. In several instances the jury was instructed that the defendant could not be found guilty of the charge embraced in count No. 2, unless they were satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt. As the defendant was found not guilty on count No. 1, it is unnecessary to consider the appellant's objection in relation thereto, further than to say such instructions would have no bearing upon the charge upon which the defendant was found guilty.

[10, 11] Appellant likewise objects to the ruling of the court in excluding an affidavit of a deceased witness. We do not need to cite authorities to show the correctness of the court's ruling in this particular. Its correctness is self-evident. The same is true of the objection made by the appellant in relation to the court permitting the district attorney to ask leading questions of the prosecutrix. Under the circumstances disclosed in this case, it has been frequently held that the allowance of such questions is within the discretion of the court. Moran v. Abbey, 63 Cal. 56; People v. Clary, 72 Cal. 59, 13 P. 77. Other cases might be cited, but these are sufficient.

The order and the judgment of the trial court are affirmed.

McFARLAND v. CORDIERO. (Civ. 6811.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 7, 1929.

Rehearing Denied June 28, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 5, 1929.

1. Limitation of actions ⇨31—One-year limitation held applicable to action for injuries against mother signing minor's application for license to operate automobile causing injuries (Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 1; § 340, subd. 3; Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 5128, § 62).

Code Civ. Proc. § 340, subd. 3, prescribing one-year limitation as applicable to actions for personal injury caused by neglect of another, held applicable to action for injuries against mother of minor signing his application for license to operate an automobile causing injuries, and not section 338, subd. 1, prescribing a three-year limitation upon a liability created by statute, since person by signing application assumes responsibility by his act of signing, and not by reason of Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 5128, § 62.

2. Judgment ⇨312—Judgment would be modified to follow order sustaining demurrer to cause of action for personal injuries only.

Where complaint charged cause of action for personal injury and for injury to personal property, and demurrer alleged that cause of action for personal injury was barred, judgment should have followed order sustaining demurrer to cause of action for personal injury and would be modified so as to conform thereto.

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Edward I. Butler, Judge.

Action by Ada McFarland against Maria C. Cordiero. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Modified, and as modified affirmed.

Wallace L. Ware, Bryce Swartfager, and Thomas M. Brownscombe, all of Santa Rosa, for appellant.

Barry J. Colding and Theodore Hale, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant to recover damages for injuries sustained in an automobile collision. Thereafter she filed a first amended complaint. To that pleading the defendant interposed a demurrer. The demurrer was sustained. Plaintiff failed to amend and judgment was entered in favor of the defendant. The plaintiff has appealed and has brought up the judgment roll.

The appeal presents the single question as to whether or not the plaintiff's action, at least in part, is barred by the statute of limitations. In her amended complaint the plaintiff alleged that on the 7th day of August, 1926, John Cordiero, the minor son of the defendant, operated the automobile in which he was riding in a careless and negligent manner causing his car to collide with a Studebaker automobile and thereby caused said Studebaker automobile to swerve and crash into plaintiff's automobile; and that plaintiff suffered bodily injuries to her damage in the sum of $10,000. The pleading continues and sets forth that plaintiff's car was greatly injured and that she suffered a property loss in the further sum of $475. It is alleged that the said John Cordiero held an operator's license issued by the division of motor vehicles which license was issued pursuant to an application in writing and that the application was signed by the defendant who, as above stated, was the mother of John and at said time had the custody of said minor.

The first ten paragraphs of the complaint contain the ordinary allegations in such an action and plead the plaintiff's bodily injury and damages. The remaining two paragraphs plead damage to property and then follows the prayer, verification, etc. The defendant's demurrer was addressed to the first amended complaint. It pleaded that the complaint did not state facts sufficient; that two causes of action are alleged and not separately stated; and "that said cause of action as set forth in paragraph I to X inclusive of said complaint is barred by the provisions of section 340 (subd. 3) of the Code of Civil Procedure of the State of California." On February 17, 1928, the trial court made an order, "This matter having been heretofore submitted it is by the court ordered that the demurrer be sustained on the ground that the action is barred by the statute of limitations." The record discloses no other filings, minutes, or orders until March 26, 1928. On that date the judgment was filed. That document is worded as follows: "An order having been entered in this action on the 17th day of February, 1928, sustaining the demurrer to the complaint herein on the ground that said action is barred by the statute of limitations and leave to amend not having been given and plaintiff having been regularly served with a copy of said order, now, therefore, it is ordered and adjudged, that the complaint herein be, and the same is hereby dismissed and that the defendant have and recover her costs of said plaintiff."

[1] Subdivision 3 of section 340 of the Code of Civil Procedure is the statute prescribing one year as applicable to actions for personal injury caused by the neglect of another. Both parties concede said statute would be applicable if the action were against John Cordiero; however, as to his mother, the signer of the application, the plaintiff contends that subdivision 1 of section 338, of the Code of Civil Procedure, is the controlling statute because it prescribes three years as the statute of limitations applicable to an action upon a liability created by statute, and therefore it is the statute applicable to the facts. In making this contention we think the plaintiff is in error. Commencing with the amendment in 1905, an action for personal injuries caused by the neglect of another is barred in one year. If the act of neglect was the act of a minor, as the law formerly stood the parents would not be liable. Spence v. Fisher, 184 Cal. 209, 193 P. 255, 14 A. L. R. 1083. That rule has been qualified by statute commencing with the amendment of 1917, Statutes, page 408. In no one of the amendments has the Legislature said or attempted to say that the parents are liable for the torts of a minor child. However, the Legislature has made the general requirement that all operators and chauffeurs must obtain licenses; that to obtain a license a written application must be made; what the contents of the application must be; and, if the application is by a minor, the application "shall not be granted unless such application is signed by * * * the parent * * * having the custody of such minor." Continuing the statute provides: "Any negligence of a minor so licensed in driving a motor vehicle upon a public highway shall be imputed to the person or persons who shall have signed the application of such minor for said license, which person or persons shall be jointly and severally liable with such minor for any damages caused by such negligence." 1 Deering's Gen. Laws, p. 1867. In other words, by signing the application the person signing assumes the responsibility by his act of signing and not by reason of the imposition of the statute. The primary liability for acts of negligence rests on the operator of the automobile whether he is a minor or adult. The statute of limitations applicable to him is section 340 of the Code of Civil Procedure, subdivision 3. If the operator is a minor and his parent is willing that he should operate an automobile and desires that he should receive a license authorizing him to do so, then and in that event the parent may sign the application and in doing so he places himself in the same position and under the same statute of limitations as the operator. The parent's liability is not, in principle, different from that of a bondsman. In the case of County of Sonoma v. Hall, 132 Cal. 589, 62 P. 257, 312, 65 P. 12, 459, a question closely allied was under consideration. Hall was the recorder of Sonoma county. He collected, or should have collected, certain fees prescribed by the statute and should have turned those fees into the county treasury. He did not do so. The plaintiff sued him on his official bond. The defendants pleaded the statute of limitations. Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 1. The court held the defendants pleaded the proper statute; that the liability of Hall, the principal, was created by statute; and that the liability of the other defendants was the liability of the principal.

[2] On appeal, for the first time, the plaintiff claims that in any event the form of the judgment was incorrect. We think that point is well founded. The complaint charged a cause of action as for personal injury and also a cause of action as for injury to personal property. The demurrer was in legal effect as though it had been worded "that the cause of action for personal injury pleaded in said complaint is barred," etc. It was so understood by both counsel and the trial court. The order sustaining the demurrer was in accordance with that understanding, but the judgment was not in accordance with the order. If the form of the judgment had followed the form of the order, the plaintiff would still be entitled to a hearing on the cause of action as for injury to her automobile.

The judgment will be modified to read as follows: "An order having been entered in this action on the 17th day of February, 1928, sustaining the demurrer to the cause of action for personal injuries set forth in the complaint herein on the ground that said action is barred by the statute of limitations, and leave to amend not having been given, and plaintiff having been regularly served with a copy of said order, now, therefore, it is ordered and adjudged that the cause of action for personal injuries set forth in the complaint herein be and the same is hereby dismissed." Nothing should have been said regarding costs because perchance the plaintiff may hereafter be awarded costs.

The judgment will be modified as above indictated. As so modified the judgment is affirmed. Neither party will recover costs on this appeal.

HOFFMAN v. EASTMAN KODAK CO.
(Civ. 6449.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 15, 1929.

1. Damages §105—Code limiting liability of depositary for negligence to value of property disclosed held limitation of rule of damages for property lost (Civ. Code, § 1840).

Civ. Code, § 1840, providing that liability of depositary for negligence cannot exceed amount which he is informed by depositor, or has reason to believe, property deposited to be worth, constitutes limitation of general rule of damages that value of property deposited, considering cost and nature thereof and character of use, is recoverable in action for loss of property.

2. Damages §105—Depositary of film, not knowing of its special value, held liable only for cost of film lost, not for expenses in taking pictures.

In action for damages for loss of motion picture film, defendant with whom film was deposited for development, not informed as to value of film and having no knowledge of value of film after pictures were taken, had right to assume film had no special value, and was liable only for cost of film, and not for expenses incurred in taking pictures.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action by S. O. Hoffman against the Eastman Kodak Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

F. Eldred Boland and Knight, Boland & Christin, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Edmund Gerald Brown, of San Francisco (Lewis E. Lercara, of Oakland, of counsel), for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Action for damages for the loss of a roll of film deposited by plaintiff with defendant for development.

The film consisted of a strip about 100 feet in length, which had been exposed by plaintiff in one of the small amateur moving picture cameras now on the market and left with defendant to be developed. This character of film is manufactured by defendant and sold by it at the price of $6 through retail dealers with the understanding that the original price includes developing. The evidence shows that plaintiff purchased one of such films and thereafter, accompanied by his sister, took a trip to the Grand Canyon, Ariz. He had with him his amateur moving picture camera and the film in question, his declared intention being to take, while at the canyon, some moving pictures of the scene, and particularly the color stratification of the walls of the canyon. Plaintiff admitted that, although he was at the canyon over a period of 10 days, he only exposed this particular film, except that he took some "snap shots" with a small pocket kodak. He spent three days on a trip with his sister to the bottom of the canyon and the remainder of the time on the rim thereof at the Tovar Hotel. They also took sight-seeing trips. Plaintiff testified that he took the trip primarily for the purpose of taking pictures with the film in question. Upon returning from his vacation he delivered the film to defendant for development. The film was lost, and the present action was brought to recover damages on account thereof. Plaintiff, for the purpose of proving the damages suffered by him, offered evidence of the cost of his trip. He testified that his total expenses in taking the trip amounted to the sum of $302. Whether or not this amount included his sister's expenses, the record does not disclose. It is conceded that the lost property had no commercial value. Plaintiff claimed, however, that he was an amateur photographer and the pictures taken had a peculiar value to him. It was upon this theory that the court admitted evidence of the expense incurred in taking the same, as the proper measure of damages, and rendered judgment for the expenses of the trip amounting to the sum of $302.

[1, 2] In cases of this character it has been held that the true rule is not to inquire as to the market value, since such articles have none, but to show the value to a plaintiff, taking into account the cost and nature thereof and also the character of the use to which the lost property might be put by him, and the like. Willard v. Valley Gas & Fuel Co., 171 Cal. 9, 151 P. 286. Assuming that the rule here applied as to the proper measure of damages is correct, we are of the opinion that the judgment cannot stand. Section 1840 of the Civil Code provides that the liability of a depositary for negligence cannot exceed the amount which he is informed by the depositor, or has reason to believe, the thing deposited is worth. This section, in our opinion, constitutes a limitation of the general rule of damages provided for in cases of this character. Here no claim is made that defendant was informed as to the value of the film, nor is there any evidence to show that it had any reason to suppose it had any special value. Defendant had the right to be informed upon this subject so that it might exercise the proper degree of care that the character of the property bailed would require. Without such information it had a right to assume that the property bailed had no special value. This rule is a salutary one, for without it one might receive films for development which were exposed in remote and distant places, requiring large sums to visit, which fact, being unknown to the bailee, would incur a liability greatly disproportionate to any profit he might receive from their sale and development. Defendant, not having been informed, and having no knowledge of the value of the property bailed, its liability must be limited to the cost of the film, with the value of which it was familiar.

LONG v. SMITH. (Civ. 3768.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 15, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1011(1)—Findings on conflicting evidence are conclusive.

The weight and credit to be given various witnesses' testimony is entirely within the province of the trial court, whose findings on conflicting evidence are conclusive.

2. Appeal and error ⇨931(1)—All reasonable inferences are indulged in support of trial court's findings on conflicting evidence.

All reasonable inferences are to be indulged in support of the trial court's findings on conflicting evidence.

3. Appeal and error ⇨1011(1)—Grantor's testimony held merely to raise conflict in evidence, precluding disturbance of trial court's finding that deed was delivered.

In action to quiet title, plaintiff's testimony that she signed deed to defendant's testatrix without knowing what she was doing, what was to be done with it, or what effect it would have, and without intending to convey property, merely raised conflict in evidence as to sufficiency of delivery to pass title, so as to preclude appellate court from disturbing trial court's finding, supported by substantial evidence, in favor of delivery of deed.

4. Quieting title ⇨47(2)—Court's finding on uncontradicted evidence, in action to quiet title, that defendant's testatrix conveyed land to plaintiff in trust, and that plaintiff reconveyed it to testatrix at latter's request, held determinative of case.

Court's finding on uncontradicted evidence, in action to quiet title, that deed from defendant's testatrix to plaintiff was made without consideration and intended only as conveyance in trust for grantor, and that plaintiff exercised no right of ownership, and reconveyed property to grantor at latter's request, in order that she might dispose of it by will, as she desired, held determinative of entire case.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; James L. Allen, Judge.

Action by Mabel Long against F. H. Smith, individually and as executor of the estate of Anita Calhoun, deceased. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Dorsey G. Whitelaw and S. P. Williams, both of El Centro, for appellant.

F. H. Smith, of El Centro, and Louis Lamy, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PRESTON, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff, Mabel Long, brought this action to quiet title to four city lots situated in El Centro, Cal. Judgment was entered in favor of defendant, from which judgment she prosecutes this appeal.

This action involves the execution and delivery of a deed signed by the plaintiff Mabel Long, whose name was formerly Mabel Mendez, as grantor, to her sister, Anita Calhoun, as grantee.

Anita Calhoun was the original owner of the property in question, and for some time prior to her death was in ill health, suffering from tuberculosis and diabetes. She became badly involved financially and was greatly worried and harassed by her creditors. In order to prevent said property from being seized by her creditors, she (Anita Calhoun) did, on the 21st day of April, 1925, convey the property in question by a grant, bargain, and sale deed, but without consideration, to appellant. Thereafter, and on the 27th day of July, 1925, appellant, at the request of Anita Calhoun, signed and acknowledged a grant, bargain, and sale deed reconveying said real property to said Anita Calhoun. Appellant gave said last-mentioned deed to F. H. Smith, the respondent herein, who was at that time the attorney and agent of Anita Calhoun.

Anita Calhoun never parted with the management and control of said property when she made the deed to appellant in April, 1925, but remained in control of the same, and collected and retained for her own use and benefit all the rents and profits therefrom until her death, which occurred July 29, 1925, and after her death the rents and profits were collected by respondent as the executor of her estate until the commencement of this action. Appellant was never in control or possession of the property in question, and never demanded or received any rents or profits therefrom until this action was begun, which was some nine months after the death of Anita Calhoun.

Appellant, Mabel Long, first contends that there was no delivery of the deed which she made to Anita Calhoun on July 27, 1925.

The legal requirements to effect a valid delivery of a deed have often been stated by the Supreme Court of this state. In Williams v. Kidd, 170 Cal. 631-638, 151 P. 1, 3 (Ann. Cas. 1916E, 703), the Supreme Court states the rule as follows: "It is essential to the validity of a transfer of real property that there be a delivery of the conveyance with intent to transfer the title, and the true test under which delivery is to be determined is in ascertaining whether in parting with the possession of the conveyance the grantor intended thereby to divest himself of title. If he did, there was an effective delivery of the deed. If not, there was no delivery. The solution of this question is grounded entirely on the intention of the grantor, and this essential matter of intention is a question of fact to be determined by the trial court from a consideration of all the evidence in a given case bearing upon the question." See, also, Bury v. Young, 98 Cal. 451, 33 P. 338, 35 Am. St. Rep. 186; Kenniff v. Caulfield, 140 Cal. 34, 73 P. 803; Estate of Cornelius, 151 Cal. 552, 91 P. 329; Follmer v. Rohrer, 158 Cal. 757, 112 P. 544; Reed v. Smith, 125 Cal. 491, 58 P. 139; Black v. Sharkey, 104 Cal. 279, 37 P. 939; Hibberd v. Smith, 67 Cal. 547, 4 P. 473, 8 P. 46, 56 Am. Rep. 726; Denis v. Velati, 96 Cal. 223, 31 P. 1; Hotaling v. Hotaling, 193 Cal. 382, 224 P. 455, 56 A. L. R. 734; Blackledge v. McIntosh, 85 Cal. App. 475, 259 P. 770.

The testimony of appellant as to what transpired and under what circumstances she signed the deed in question and gave it to respondent, as agent and attorney of Anita Calhoun, is in direct conflict with that given by respondent and the notary public who took appellant's acknowledgment to the deed; in fact, there is little or no corroboration of any of the testimony given by appellant. No good purpose would be served by discussing the evidence in detail.

The trial court, by its findings, accepted the evidence of respondent and his witnesses, and rejected that given by appellant. A careful examination of the entire record fully satisfies us that the trial court was amply justified in so doing.

[1, 2] The weight and credit to be given to the testimony of the various witnesses is a matter entirely within the province of the trial court, and its findings upon conflicting evidence are conclusive, and all reasonable inferences are to be indulged in support of the findings.

[3] We think the evidence in the case at bar, which the court accepted as true meets all the requirements of the law, and that it fully justifies the findings of the trial court that there was a sufficient delivery of the deed in question to pass title to Anita Calhoun, and that appellant "on the 27th day of July, 1925, at the request of Anita Calhoun, * * * reconveyed the said property by her grant deed, duly made, executed and delivered to said Anita Calhoun, and duly acknowledged by said appellant, in order that said Anita Calhoun might make her will and dispose of said property by will as she might desire."

Appellant lays great stress upon several alleged facts and circumstances testified to by her to show that there was no intention on her part to deliver the deed so it would be immediately effective to transfer the title to the property. Among these facts and circumstances are: That at the time she signed the deed she did not know what she was signing; that she had no opportunity to read the deed; that she signed the paper not knowing what was to be done with it, or what effect it would have, and without any intention of conveying the property, etc. All these facts and circumstances did no more than raise a conflict in the evidence on the vital issue of the sufficiency of the delivery of the deed to pass title to Anita Calhoun, and, the trial court having resolved that conflict in favor of the delivery of the deed, such finding will not be disturbed by this court, where there is any substantial evidence to support it.

Appellant also contends "that there was undue influence practiced upon her, sufficient to invalidate the deed if it was otherwise good." There is no substantial evidence in the record to support this contention, and the trial court rightfully found against appellant upon this issue.

[4] The respondent alleged in his cross-complaint, and the court found upon uncontradicted evidence, "that on the 21st day of April, 1925, Anita Calhoun was the owner in fee simple of the property sued for and described in plaintiff's amended complaint, and on said date duly made and executed to said plaintiff a grant deed to said property, duly acknowledged; * * * that said deed purported upon its face to convey the fee simple title to said property to plaintiff, but in truth and in fact, was made without consideration to said Anita Calhoun from plaintiff, and was intended to be only a conveyance of said property to plaintiff, to be held by her in trust for said Anita Calhoun; that said Anita Calhoun remained in full possession of said premises and exercised full control and management thereof after the execution of said deed as aforesaid up to the time of her death on the 29th of July, 1925, and collected the rents and profits thereof, and the said plaintiff exercised no right or act of ownership over said property, and on the 27th day of July, 1925, at the request of said Anita Calhoun, reconveyed the said property by her grant deed of that date, duly made, executed and delivered, to said Anita Calhoun, and duly acknowledged by said plaintiff in order that the said Anita Calhoun might make her will and dispose of said property by will as she might desire." This finding alone seems to us to be determinative of the entire case. Appellant never owned the property, but only held it in trust for her sister, and, by the deed of July 27, 1925, she was merely discharging that trust.

We find no merit whatever in the appeal. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

CHURCHILL CO. v. BEAL et al.★
(Civ. 3806.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 18, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 18, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 15, 1929.

- 1. Deeds ⇨112(2)—Contents of official plat of survey, according to which lands are granted or deeded, become integral and controlling part of grant or deed.

When lands are granted according to official plat of survey, plat itself with all its notes, lines, descriptions, and landmarks becomes part of grant or deed, and controls so far as limitations are concerned, as if such descriptive features were written in deed or grant itself.

- 2. Boundaries ⇨10—Objects referred to in field notes were properly considered in determining location of disputed corner at place corresponding with calls and distances of survey.

Objects referred to in field notes of survey as being nearest to disputed corner were proper objects to be considered by trial court in determining location of disputed corner at place which would correspond precisely with calls and distances of survey.

- 3. Public lands ⇨28—Survey cannot limit or change boundaries of public lands conveyed under prior survey.

When lands are sold by federal government with regard to survey that has already been made, no resurvey can affect, limit, or change boundaries of lands theretofore conveyed.

- 4. Boundaries ⇨43—Objection that judgment fixing meander line as boundary is uncertain held untenable, where plaintiff's westerly line, sole subject of dispute, was definitely located by judgment.

Where only ground of dispute between adjoining owners was true location of westerly line of plaintiff's tract, objection that judgment is uncertain because it does not more definitely fix easterly meander line, which constitutes dividing line between lands belonging to plaintiff and defendants, is untenable, where judgment follows field notes of original survey.

- 5. Appeal and error ⇨1047(3)—Failure to pass on motion to strike out testimony held not prejudicial, where lengthy cross-examination was permitted, and no surprise shown.

Defendants in boundary line dispute were not prejudiced by refusal of trial court to pass on motion to strike out testimony of witness who retraced lines of survey according to field notes of such survey, where defendants were permitted to cross-examine such witness at considerable length, and made no showing of surprise by reason of testimony of such witness.

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; C. J. Luttrell, Judge.

Action by the Churchill Company, a corporation, against Ellen Beal, as special administratrix of the estate of Henry N. Beal, deceased, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Charles L. Gilmore, of Sacramento, and Thomas Ashby, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Tapscott & Tapscott, of Yreka, for respondent.

PLUMMER J. Plaintiff had judgment in an action brought to quiet title to certain lands described in its complaint. From this judgment the defendants appeal. While the action is, in form, one to quiet title, the only issue really involved is the location of the west boundary line of township No. 47 north, range No. 2 east, Mt. Diablo base and meridian, in so far as it affects sections 18 and 19. If the boundary line claimed by the plaintiff, and adopted by the trial court as the true west boundary line of the lands belonging to the plaintiff, is the true boundary line, then the judgment of the trial court should be affirmed. If, on the other hand, as contended by the defendants, that the boundary line as run by a surveyor named George W. Wakefield, in 1906, is the true westerly boundary line of said sections, then and in that case the judgment should be reversed. The distance between the two lines just referred to includes a strip along said sections a trifle over 5 chains in width.

The record shows that in 1858 one Tracy surveyed the west boundary line of township 47, the field notes of which were put in evidence. The Tracy survey was on the township line only; he did not survey section or subdivision lines of the land. In October, 1872, while the land was still a part of the public domain of the United States, Alex McKay resurveyed certain township lines, and in the field notes of his survey refers to a number of natural objects along the line of the survey, such as the road from Yreka to Oregon, Cottonwood creek, and the rock fence; also a point where the line enters certain low swamp or wet land. McKay's survey included a survey of the sections and subdivision of the lands involved in this suit, including the meander lines through sections 18 and 19. The field notes of this survey were introduced in evidence. The McKay survey was approved February 3, 1880, and in this manner became the official survey of the land. A plat of this survey was filed in the Shasta land office on April 1, 1884. The lands in dispute were shown as surveyed lands on the plat just referred to. Following this survey the lands belonging to the plaintiff were conveyed by the United States either to the plaintiff or to the plaintiff's grantors by patents dated May 6, 1887, December 3, 1889, and August 20, 1902. The plaintiff's title to whatever lands were and are included in these patents is not disputed. The only question is as to where these lands are located, starting for a description thereof from the true boundary line to the west.

In 1906, in order to locate some unsurveyed lands lying to the east of the lands belonging to the plaintiff, a resurvey was made of township 47 north, range 2 east, M. D. B. & M., by a surveyor named George F. Wakefield. This survey was approved in 1909, and the plat thereof filed in the surveyor general's office in San Francisco. The Wakefield survey does not follow what the court found to be the true line of the McKay survey, and, so far as the record shows, the field notes thereof do not make mention of any corners or of natural or artificial objects mentioned and referred to in the McKay survey. As we read the record, we do not find that the Wakefield survey makes any mention of any monument or stake at the southwest corner of section 19, as located by McKay. The trial court found that the southwest corner of section 19, as located by McKay, and which constitutes the starting point for determining the lands belonging to the plaintiff and the lands granted by the United States to the plaintiff and the plaintiff's grantors, was at a point a trifle over 5 chains east from the line indicated and the point indicated by the Wakefield survey. That the trial court was correct in the location of the southwest corner of section 19 is supported by the field notes of the McKay survey. The first object referred to in the field notes as the west line of section 19 is extended north is the road running from Eureka to Oregon. This road runs in a diagonal direction from the southeast to the northwest, and is mentioned in the field notes of the McKay survey as being distant from the southeast corner 3.50 chains. On the Wakefield survey the line crosses this road at a distance from the southwest corner of section 19 of 6.80 chains. The next object referred to in the McKay survey is Cottonwood creek, which, on the McKay survey, is 12 chains north of the southwest corner of section 19. On the Wakefield survey it is north 13.30 chains; thence following the line northerly on the McKay survey, we find a rock fence distant from the southwest corner of section 19, 62.05 chains. This rock fence runs in a northwesterly and southeasterly direction, and is intercepted by the Wakefield line at a distance of 71.79 chains from the southwest corner of section 19, as shown by the Wakefield survey. Likewise, another object known as the "Emigrant Road," referred to in the McKay survey, crosses the westerly line of section 19 at a distance of 76.90 chains from the southwest corner of section 19.

Irrespective of oral testimony of some witnesses that they were familiar with the location of the southwest corner of section 19, as designated in the McKay survey, these objects and the calls and distances were and are sufficient to support the conclusion of the trial court as to the true location of the southwest corner of section 19. In other words, the field notes and the objects referred to in the McKay survey cannot be superimposed upon the line run as the westerly line of sections 19 and 18 by Wakefield, which again supports the finding of the trial court as to the location of the southwest corner of section 19, as established by McKay, and the true westerly line of the sections involved in this action.

The record contains the testimony of two civil engineers or surveyors, one named Harvey J. Sarter, who for a number of years was the county surveyor of Shasta county, and also the testimony of the surveyor named Zumwalt. These witnesses testified to retracing the lines run by McKay, Sarter testifying that he found something to mark every section corner and quarter section corner of the survey run by McKay, and that he found the southwest corner of section 19 of the survey run by McKay, these resurveys or retracings of the lines extended back over a period of 20 years; that he was not making a new survey, but a location of the McKay corners on the ground, and that he followed, strictly, the McKay field notes; that he found the objects referred to in the McKay field notes at the distances therein stated from the southwest corner of section 19. A witness by the name of Churchill testified that he had known the southwest corner of section 19 since 1890. The surveyor Zumwalt testified to finding the objects referred to in the McKay field notes at substantially the same distance from the southwest corner of section 19, as stated in the field notes. The witness Sarter also testified that he was familiar with the location on the ground of the corners marking the west line of sections 18 and 19, according to the Wakefield survey, and that their position, with reference to the McKay corners, was a considerable distance west from the same corners set by McKay.

[1] The summary shows that there are two surveys involved in this action, one by McKay in 1873 and the other by Wakefield in 1906. The plaintiff claims title and location of land having its westerly boundary line according to the McKay survey. The appellants in this action contend that the Wakefield resurvey, made in 1906, and approved, in 1909, supersedes the earlier survey, and that the appellants' west line must be held coterminus with the Wakefield survey. In support of their contention that the rights of the parties to this action must be determined according to the Wakefield survey, a number of cases are cited to the effect that the United States land department has a right to make resurveys of the public domain and of the lands belonging to the general government, and that the resurveys or latest approved surveys must be held controlling. With this contention we agree, so long as the resurveys have to do only with the lands belonging to the general government. So long as the lands are unpatented or unconveyed, or have not passed into private ownership, the right to make resurveys, as contended for by the appellants, undoubtedly exists. In this case, however, that question is not really involved. The question really is, Has the government a right to make a resurvey so as to change the lines of an original survey concerning lands to which it no longer holds title? In other words, Can a resurvey of lands which have already been granted, made for the purpose of running lines on adjacent public land, be so made as to change the location on the ground of lands to which the government has no ownership?

As a prelude to an answer to this question, we may state that the record shows that the patents issued to the plaintiff and the plaintiff's grantors were based upon the original plat and field notes of the survey made by McKay in 1873. Every one of the patents refer to such plat and field notes. In 22 Ruling Case Law, p. 283, the law in relation to patents referring to and based upon plats and field notes is thus stated: "It is a well-settled principle that when lands are granted according to an official plat of the survey of such lands, the plat itself, with all its notes, lines, descriptions and landmarks become as much a part of the the grant or deed by which they are conveyed, and controls, so far as limits are concerned, as if such descriptive features were written out on the face of the deed or the grant itself. The survey, in other words, is to be taken as a part of the patents, and these must be construed together." The same rule is supported by a number of authorities, and is stated in 9 C. J. 180 as follows: "When maps, plats or field notes are referred to in a grant or conveyance, they are to be regarded as incorporated into the instrument, and are usually held to furnish the true description of the boundaries of the land." And in the same volume of C. J., on page 164, it is said: "Original corners, as established by the government surveyors, if they can be found, or places where they were originally established, if they can be definitely determined, are conclusive on all persons owning or holding with reference thereto, without regard to whether they were located correctly or not, and must remain the corners or monuments by which to determine the boundaries."

[2] In 4 Cal. Juris. p. 412, upon the subject of establishing corners, the rule, supported by authorities, is thus stated: "In a controversy involving a boundary the description of which commences and ends at a corner marked by a monument which had long since disappeared, it is the duty of the court to ascertain, if possible, the true position of the corner; accurately, if it can be done, or approximately within reasonable limits if the exact position cannot be ascertained with absolute certainty. If possible the court should fix the place of the monument where it will best accord with natural objects described in the field notes as being about it, and found to exist on the ground, and which is least inconsistent with the distances mentioned in the notes and plat of the survey." And, in relation to the data to be considered by the court in fixing the place of a lost corner, it is further said: "In establishing a disputed corner, those objects intended to mark the corner, and referred to in the notes of the original survey as being nearest the corner, are, when satisfactorily established stronger evidence than objects more remote." Thus, in the case at bar, the objects referred to in the McKay field notes, being nearest to the disputed corner, were proper facts to be considered by the trial court in determining the location of the disputed corner at a place which would cause it to correspond precisely with the calls and distances of the McKay survey. Again, before citing the cases bearing upon the real question presented for determination as stated above, it may be said that this action is not a collateral attack upon any government survey. No attempt is made to invalidate the Wakefield survey of 1906. It is only an attempt to fix the line of the original McKay survey as made and located on the ground in 1873, so that none of the cases bearing upon collateral attack on surveys need be considered. The question of what objects and data may be considered by the trial court in determining the location of a boundary line or of a disputed corner has been passed upon so frequently that we deem it unnecessary to review the decisions bearing thereon further than to say that the objects mentioned and referred to in the McKay survey are shown by the authorities to constitute proper data for the trial court to consider in fixing the location of the southwest corner of section 19 as located in the McKay survey, and also the west boundary line of the lands involved in this action.

[3] We come now to the question urged by the appellants, that the resurvey by Wakefield, being a government survey, is controlling. The law, however, is well settled that, when lands are sold by the general government with regard to a survey that has already been made, no resurvey can be made so as to affect, limit, or change the boundaries of the lands which have theretofore been conveyed. In the case of Washington Rock Co. v. Young, 29 Utah, 108, 80 P. 382, 110 Am. St. Rep. 666, we find the following: "On a resurvey of a tract of land to establish lost boundaries, the original corners, as established by the government surveyors, if they can be found, or the places where they were originally established, if they can definitely be determined, are conclusive, without regard to whether they are located correctly." This case, as reported in 110 Am. St. Rep. supra, contains an extended note beginning on page 677. A long list of authorities are there collected supporting this statement: "When public land has been surveyed by authority of the United States, and patented with reference to the boundaries as fixed by such surveys, the corners and lines so established, whether correct or not, are conclusive and cannot be altered or controlled by other surveys." In other words, as elsewhere stated in the note: "The true corner of a" patented "governmental subdivision of land is where the United States surveys in fact establish it, whether such location is right or wrong as * * * shown by a subsequent survey."

In the case of Cragin v. Powell, 128 U. S. 700, 9 S. Ct. 206, 32 L. Ed. 566, where the subject of prior and subsequent surveys was considered, the court thus holds the law to be: "That the power to make and correct surveys of the public lands belongs to the political department of the government and that, whilst the lands are subject to the supervision of the general land office, the decisions of that bureau in all such cases, like that of other special tribunals upon matters within their exclusive jurisdiction, are unassailable by the courts, except by a direct proceeding; and that the latter have no concurrent or original power to make similar corrections, if not an elementary principle of our land law, is settled by such a mass of decisions of this court that its mere statement is sufficient." (Here follows citation of numerous authorities.) The court then continues: "It is conceded that this power of supervision and correction by the commissioner of the general land office is subject to necessary and decided limitations. Nor is it denied that, when the land department has once made and approved a governmental survey of public lands, the plats, maps, field notes and certificates all having been filed in the proper office, and has sold or disposed of such lands, the courts have power to protect the private rights of a party who has purchased, in good faith, from the government, against the interferences or appropriations of corrective resurveys made by that department subsequently to such disposition." That is the limitation involved in this action.

The resurvey was made subsequent to the time when the government had parted with its title, and its power to recapture any of the lands theretofore sold to the plaintiff by means of a resurvey, or otherwise, was wanting. If the original survey, as made by McKay, fixed the westerly boundary of the lands granted to the plaintiff and the plaintiff's grantors as found by the trial court, then, and in that case, whether the line as originally located was correct becomes immaterial. It is the correct line in the determination of this action, as it fixes on the grounds the lands covered by the patents, the ownership of which has passed to the plaintiff in this action. The following California cases support the rules which we have just herein set forth: Kimball v. McKee, 149 Cal. 435, 86 P. 1089; Foss v. Johnstone, 158 Cal. 119, 110 P. 294; Weaver v. Howatt, 161 Cal. 77, 118 P. 519; Weaver v. Howatt, 171 Cal. 302, 152 P. 925; Spiers v. Spiers, 176 Cal. 557, 169 P. 73; Wilmon v. Aros, 191 Cal. 80, 214 P. 962. Practically all of the cases herein referred to support the principle that, in making a resurvey to determine the boundaries of lands which have been granted, the tracks of the original survey should be followed, so far as it is possible to discover the same and locate upon the grounds the lines of the lands patented as nearly as may be according to the original survey thereof and in reference to which lands have been sold.

[4] It is further contended by the appellants that the judgment of the court is uncertain, and that the cause should be reversed and sent back to the trial court, to the intent and purpose that the easterly meander line of the plaintiff's lands may be more definitely fixed. The easterly meander line just referred to would constitute the dividing line between lands belonging to the plaintiff and lands belonging to the defendants. We think, however, in view of the findings and judgment of the trial court, which follow the field notes of the McKay survey, and in view of the definite location of the starting point, to wit, the southwest corner of section 19, the objection of appellants in this particular is untenable, and need not be considered further.

[5] Objection is also made by the appellants that they suffered prejudice by reason of the failure of the trial court to pass upon their motion to strike out certain testimony given by the witness Sarter. While we think it is advisable in all cases for a court to pass upon motions in relation to striking out of testimony, when made, in this particular case there does not appear any reasonable objection to the course pursued by the trial court, in that appellants were not deprived of any opportunity to make any defense which they had. Their cross-examination of Sarter was very lengthy, and went into all the details of the respective surveys involved. No continuation of the trial of the case was asked in order that they might meet any of the testimony given by Sarter. The testimony given by Sarter was clearly admissible. It related to retracing the lines as originally established by McKay. What the witness testified to did not constitute a resurvey of the plaintiff's land or the re-establishment of any of the lines. It was simply a proceeding to ascertain where the lines and corners had been originally established by McKay. The record does not contain any showing that the appellants were taken by surprise by reason of any testimony given by the witness Sarter. Under these circumstances, the appellants cannot well claim that they suffered prejudice by reason of the failure of the court to promptly deny their motion to strike out the testimony of the witness Sarter.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. SCHLOSSER. (Cr. 1817.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 24, 1929.

Criminal law §1130(5)—Where specifications of error are unaccompanied by argument or citation of authority, appellate court will not search record to find errors.

Where specifications of error in appellant's brief are unaccompanied by argument or citation of authority, appellate court will not assume burden of searching record to determine whether there has been miscarriage of justice.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Charles L. Allison, Judge.

Alvera Schlosser was convicted of manslaughter, and she appeals. Affirmed.

Trent Penland and J. R. LeGallez, both of San Bernardino, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. The defendant was charged by information with the crime of murder, in that she did, on September 29, 1928, kill her husband, Fred Schlosser. The jury returned a verdict of guilty of manslaughter, and she appeals from the judgment pronounced upon the verdict and from the order denying her motion for a new trial.

The entire appeal may well be disposed of by calling attention to the fact that the various specifications of error are unaccompanied by argument or citation of authority. Under a well-known rule of procedure we are not called upon, under such circumstances, to assume the burden of searching the record to determine whether there has been a miscarriage of justice. Were this the only case where counsel have failed to point out the error alleged to have been committed and its prejudicial effect, we should be inclined to make a more exhaustive study of the record to determine whether a mistrial has occurred. But we have had occasion several times of late to call the attention of counsel to the fact that it is their duty to present the law and the argument. This is one of the duties they assume upon their admission to the bar. If we are to depart from the rule and shoulder the responsibility of the profession in this particular, the time is not far distant when the state will be utterly unable to provide sufficient judicial machinery to transact its business. In the interests of a more comprehensive justice, and with a viewpoint not beclouded by the individual case, we must again assert that, where counsel will not take the time to point out the particular errors upon which he relies and the law which he invokes, we will not. People v. Chutnacut, 141 Cal. 682, 75 P. 340. Nowhere in appellant's opening brief (and no reply brief has been filed) is there anything which leads us to believe or even suspect that there has been a miscarriage of justice.

Judgment and order affirmed.

WILLARD GEORGE HOTEL CO., Inc., v. WARDEN et al. (Civ. 3771.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 12, 1929.

1. Quieting title §10(1)—Plaintiff must establish its own chain of title, but when both parties claim through common source neither need prove chain of title.

Plaintiff suing to quiet title and cancel tax deed may not rely on weakness of defendant's title, but must affirmatively establish its own chain of title, except that when both parties claim title through a common source it is unnecessary for either to prove chain of title.

2. Municipal corporations §578—Plaintiff suing to cancel tax deed was not required to further prove chain of title than by introducing its deed.

Where all the title possessed by defendant in action to quiet title and to cancel tax deed, and who never had possession, was derived solely from tax deed for delinquent street assessments levied against property standing of record in plaintiff's name, plaintiff's deed was prima facie evidence that grantee named therein was owner and in possession, and it was unnecessary for plaintiff to further prove its chain of title.

3. Evidence §591—Reception in evidence of defendant's tax deeds was merely prima facie evidence of matters therein recited, notwithstanding they were offered by plaintiff while examining defendant under statute (Street Improvement Act, § 29; Code Civ. Proc. § 2055).

In action to quiet title and to cancel tax deeds in which invalidity of tax deeds was specifically made an issue by pleadings, reception in evidence of defendant's tax deeds was merely prima facie evidence of matters therein recited under Street Improvement Act, § 29 (St. 1903, p. 384, Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 8198), and presumptions as to regularity of proceedings leading to execution of deeds were rebuttable, notwithstanding said deeds were offered by plaintiff while defendant was being examined as witness under Code Civ. Proc. § 2055.

4. Constitutional law ☞311—Rule precluding property owner from showing invalidity of proceedings resulting in forfeiture of land for failure to pay assessment of insignificant amount would be unconstitutional (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Rule of evidence which would preclude owner of valuable property from showing invalidity of proceedings by means of which he forfeited his land for mere failure to pay street assessment of comparatively insignificant amount would violate Const. art. 6, § 4½, and would be neither just nor equitable.

5. Municipal corporations ☞579—Doctrine of caveat emptor applies to purchaser at tax sale so far as regularity of proceedings leading to tax deeds is concerned.

So far as the regularity of proceedings leading to execution of tax deeds is concerned, the doctrine of caveat emptor applies to purchaser at tax sale.

6. Municipal corporations ☞581—Tax deeds were void for failure to give owner required statutory notice (Street Improvement Act).

Tax deeds conveying property for delinquent street assessments under Street Improvement Act (St. 1903, p. 376; Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 8198) were void, where notice required by statute to owner of property as prerequisite to execution of the deeds was not given.

7. Municipal corporations ☞581—Affidavit held insufficient to show due diligence to excuse service of notice to redeem from tax sale on corporate owner of hotel property (Street Improvement Act, § 28).

Affidavit reciting that purchaser at tax sale, on making inquiry at city assessor's office, was informed that property was assessed to certain hotel corporation, that affiant searched city and telephone directories and on going to address given was informed by clerk on duty that place had changed hands and that hotel company or persons representing it had departed and their whereabouts were unknown, and that affiant made inquiries of persons in vicinity without being able to ascertain whereabouts of owner of property, held insufficient to show exercise of due diligence required by Street Improvement Act, § 28 (St. 1903, p. 384, Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 8198), to be relieved from requirement of giving owner notice to redeem or failure to make inquiry of county clerk for names or location of corporation or of its officers, in view of section 26 and Civ. Code, §§ 290, 299, and Code Civ. Proc. § 411.

8. Municipal corporations ☞581—Statute requiring written notice to redeem from delinquent street assessments must be strictly construed (Street Improvement Act, § 28).

Street Improvement Act, § 28 (St. 1903, p. 384; Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 8198), requiring purchaser at tax sale at least 30 days before application for deed to serve on owner and occupant of property a written notice to redeem, must be strictly construed.

9. Municipal corporations ☞578—Judgment canceling tax deeds was not erroneous for failing to allow purchaser penalties and interest, where offer thereof in open court was not accepted.

Contention that judgment canceling tax deeds as void was erroneous because it failed to allow penalties and interest to purchaser at tax sale on amount which she paid held without merit, where original owner's attorney tendered the money in open court, which offer was not accepted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by the Willard George Hotel Company, Inc., against Grace P. Warden and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. Everett Brown, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

George D. Blair, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment quieting title and canceling a tax deed.

The respondent is a hotel corporation. It owned lots 8 and 9 of James Townsend's subdivision of Los Angeles, according to the map thereof which was recorded in book 30, page 53, of miscellaneous records. April 21, 1923, this property was sold for delinquent street assessments to the appellant Grace P. Warden by the city superintendent for the sum of $111.74, pursuant to the Street Improvement Act of California (St. 1903, p. 376; Act 8198, Deering's Gen. Laws of Calif. 1923).

May 17, 1924, upon appellant's demand, tax deeds to these lots were executed and delivered to the purchaser by the city engineer and superintendent of streets. The respondent was an active hotel corporation, whose articles of incorporation were on file in the county clerk's office. It was the record holder of the lots in question. A street assessment for the sum of $22.83 against each of these lots became delinquent. Without personal service or knowledge on the part of respondent, these lots were sold and conveyed to the appellant. The certificate of sale and notice of purchase were fatally defective. There was a lack of due diligence on the part of appellant in locating or notifying the owner. Upon trial the court quieted title in the plaintiff subject to the repayment to appellant of the assessments paid by her, together with interest and penalties amounting to the sum of $111.74, and thereupon canceled the tax deeds as void.

The appellant contends that the findings and judgment are not supported by the evidence; that the respondent, who offered in evidence the tax deeds at the trial on examination of the appellant under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is bound thereby; and that the conditional payment of $111.74 does not include interest and penalties provided for by law.

The evidence shows that the respondent was the record holder of the title to the lots in question, and that the deed of conveyance from its grantors, Philip R. and Helen W. Johnson, was duly executed January 24, 1923, and recorded prior to the levy, assessment or sale of said lots to appellant for delinquent street assessments. This deed was introduced in evidence, and the respondent's record title was not further established. The record also shows that the appellant's only claim of title is based upon the tax title deeds executed to her by the superintendent of streets on May 17, 1924, pursuant to the provisions of section 28 of the California Street Improvement Act, supra.

[1, 2] It is true that the respondent may not rely upon the weakness of appellant's title, but upon the contrary must affirmatively establish its own chain of title, except that when both parties claim title through a common source, it is unnecessary for either to prove the chain of title. 22 Cal. Jur. 167, § 42; 5 R. C. L. 675, § 48. In the present case the appellant may not complain of respondent's failure to prove its chain of title. All the title that the appellant possessed was derived solely from the street superintendent's tax deed for delinquent street assessments levied against the property standing of record in the name of the respondent. The respondent's deed was prima facie evidence that the grantee therein named was the owner and in possession of the property. 22 Cal. Jur. 170, § 44. The appellant never held possession of the lots. Under such circumstances it was unnecessary for the respondent to further prove its chain of title. A similar situation existed in the case of Denning v. Green (Cal. App.) 263 P. 819, which seems to be decisive of this case upon that point. In the Denning Case the evidence showed that the appellant secured the tax title deed upon which he relied by the payment of delinquent taxes which were assessed to Lucy J. Benjamin in 1916, and that the property was sold for nonpayment of these taxes. The court there says: "Hence the record shows that defendant claims by virtue of a quasi-conveyance from Lucy J. Benjamin because of the non-payment of her taxes. Both parties therefore claim under a common source of title. Under these circumstances it was sufficient for plaintiff to show a conveyance of title from that source without further establishing that the grantor herself had title."

In the present case there is better reason for adhering to the foregoing rule announced in the Denning Case, for this appellant's sole claim of title depends upon the respondent's own default in the payment of street assessments, it being the record owner of the property, while in the Denning Case the tax deed rested upon the default to pay taxes by a former record owner of the property. Applying the principle announced in the Denning Case, supra, it may be said that the appellant here necessarily bases his claim upon respondent's title deed, under which circumstances it is unnecessary for respondent to have proved its chain of title. Strange v. Strange, 23 Cal. App. 281, 137 P. 1104, Thiele v. Security Trust & Savings Bank, 202 Cal. 758, 262 P. 308.

[3, 4] The reception of appellant's tax deeds was merely prima facie evidence of the matters therein recited, regardless of the fact that the deeds were offered by the respondent while the appellant was being examined as a witness under the provisions of section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The invalidity of these tax deeds was specifically made an issue by the pleadings. Section 29 of the Street Improvement Act, supra, provides: "The deed of the Street Superintendent shall be prima facie evidence of the truth of all matters recited therein, and of the regularity of all proceedings prior to the execution thereof, and of title in the grantee."

These presumptions as to the regularity of the proceedings leading to the execution of the deeds are certainly subject to rebuttal. 26 R. C. L. 424, § 382. It would be a harsh rule of evidence, and violative of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, which would preclude the owner of valuable property from showing the invalidity of proceedings by means of which he is deemed to have forfeited his land for the mere failure to pay a street assessment of comparatively insignificant amount. This would be neither justice nor equity. Equity will critically scrutinize proceedings which tend to result in a forfeiture. Forfeitures are not favored. In the case of Numitor Gold Mining Co. v. Katzer, 83 Cal. App. 161, 171, 256 P. 464, 468, it is said: "For generations the theory of the law has been that the purchaser of a tax title is a mere speculator who, owing to the misfortune or carelessness of the owner, has become possessed of a desirable property for an infinitesimal proportion of its actual value."

[5] So far as the regularity of the proceedings is concerned which led to the execution of the tax deeds, the doctrine of caveat emptor applies to the purchaser. Cooley on Taxation (4th Ed.) 3045, § 1553.

[6] The deeds of conveyance from the superintendent to the appellant were void for lack of service of the notice required by statute to be made upon the owner of the property as a prerequisite to the execution of the deeds, and because the superintendent's certificates of sale of the lots were defective. In 3 Cooley on Taxation, 2791, § 1409 et seq., it is said: "The absence of the notice renders the sale void. This is one of the most important of all safeguards that have been deemed necessary to protect the interests of persons taxed, and nothing can be substituted for it, or excuse the failure to give it. * * * A sale without notice to one whose name appears on the records is void against him. * * * Whatever the provision (of law) is, it must be complied with strictly, since all such provisions are mandatory. * * * A notice is bad * * * if it fails to give the name of the person taxed, when the statute requires it."

[7] The respondent was a corporation duly organized under the laws of California. As the owner of real property in Los Angeles county it was required by the provisions of section 299 of the Civil Code to file a copy of its articles of incorporation in the office of the county clerk of that county. These articles contained the name of the corporation, the location of its principal place of business, and the names and residences of the directors who were chosen for the first year. Section 290, Civ. Code. Section 26 of the Street Improvement Act above mentioned requires the superintendent of streets after publication of the delinquent list and sale of property, to execute in duplicate certificates of sales of property "setting forth the description of the property sold, the name of the owner thereof, as given on the assessment roll," etc., one copy of which must be filed in his office and the other delivered to the purchaser. Section 28 of this statute also requires the purchaser, at least 30 days prior to his application for a deed, to "serve upon the owner of the property, and upon the occupant of such property, if the same is occupied, a written notice, setting forth a description," etc. If the owner cannot be found after due diligence an affidavit to this effect must be filed with the superintendent of streets, and a copy of this notice must be posted on the premises involved in the sale. In compliance with this statute, C. D. Warden filed this affidavit in behalf of the appellant, the material portions of which are in the following language:

"That he did as such agent make inquiry at the Assessor's office of the County of Los Angeles at his office in the City of Los Angeles for the name of the person owning or to whom the property was assessed described in the attached Notice to Redeem, and was informed that said property was assessed to Willard George Hotel Co.

"That affiant searched the city directory and telephone directory of the cities of Pasadena and Los Angeles, California, seeking to find the said Willard George Hotel Co. and affiant found in the telephone directory of the City of Los Angeles the address given of said Willard George Hotel Co. as 705 West Seventh Street in said City of Los Angeles and that affiant did go to said address as above given and inquired for the Willard George Hotel Co. but was informed by the clerk on duty that the hotel at said place had changed hands and that the Willard George Hotel Co. or any person representing them had departed from said place and their address or whereabouts were unknown.

"That affiant inquired of Mrs. S. Contino, who lives directly across the street from the property described in said Notice to Redeem, and from Mrs. Florence Abajen, who lives in the first house directly to the east of the property described in said Notice to Redeem, seeking to ascertain the address or whereabouts of the owner of the property described in said Notice to Redeem, but was informed by said Mrs. Contino and Mrs. Florence Abajen that they did not know the name or address or whereabouts of the said owner described in said Notice to Redeem."

[8] It will be observed that the efforts of the appellant to locate the owner of the property, as disclosed by this affidavit, falls far short of the exercise of due diligence. In spite of the fact that appellant was informed by the assessor that these lots were assessed in the name of "Willard George Hotel Company," no inquiry was made of the county clerk for the names or location of either the corporation or any of its officers. Service upon a corporation can only be made by notice to the officers named in section 411 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and yet no inquiry was made to ascertain the names or residences of any such officers. No date is given when the appellant claims to have inquired from certain named individuals, or when she examined the city directory. In spite of the fact that the statute requires the superintendent to give the name of the owner in his certificate of sale, and that the appellant was evidently furnished the name of the owner by the assessor, the superintendent certifies that the name of the owner was "unknown." In the notice of application for her deed, which was posted on the premises, the name of no owner was mentioned. The only reference to the owner is found in the caption of this notice, as follows: "To the owners of the property hereinafter described, and to the occupants of such property." As a matter of fact, the owners were ignorant of the fact that their property had been sold for delinquent street assessments. A strict construction of the statute is required. 37 Cyc. 1479, § 5. Both the certificates of sale and the notice of application for deeds were therefore fatally defective. 26 R. C. L. 409, § 367; 3 Cooley on Taxation, 2791, § 1409 et seq.

[9] Finally, the appellant contends that the decree is erroneous because it fails to allow her the penalties and interest upon the amount which she paid. It appears, however, that each lot was sold for delinquent street assessment amounting only to $22.83. Adding the penalty and interest provided by law, the aggregate sum would still amount to less than the sum of $111.74, which was allowed by the court. Moreover, with reference to the repayment of the taxes, penalties, and interest which were due to the appellant, the respondent's attorney tendered the money in open court. He said: "We offer to pay it in court at this time." This offer was not accepted. In the case of Denning v. Green, supra, it is said: "Equally without merit is the claim that the judgment should have been made conditional on the repayment by plaintiffs to the defendant of all taxes, penalties, and costs. * * * The record shows that such tender was made in open court and refused by the defendant."

The judgment is affirmed.

LEWIN v. PIONEER HATCHERY.
(Civ. 3739.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 18, 1929.

1. Sales $\S$ 261(6)—Assurance that cockerels sold for breeding purposes were in good, healthy, and virile condition constituted warranty, for breach of which seller would be liable.

The assurance by seller of cockerels for breeding purposes to the effect that they were in good, healthy, and virile condition amounted to a warranty, the breach of which would make seller liable for damages.

2. Sales $\S$ 284(4)—Seller of diseased poultry to be placed with others is liable in damages, where disease is communicated to other birds.

Seller of cockerels warranting them to be healthy, knowing that they were to be placed with other poultry, is liable in damages, where birds sold had infectious or contagious disease not only in respect to animals purchased but to others to which disease is communicated.

3. Sales $\S$ 441(3)—Evidence held to warrant finding that cockerels were afflicted with chickenpox when purchased.

In buyer's action for damages against seller of cockerels, evidence held to support finding that cockerels were afflicted with chickenpox when purchased.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 122(2)—Appellate court may adopt adequate findings based on evidence to uphold judgment (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583).

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583, the appellate court may adopt adequate findings based on evidence for purpose of upholding judgment.

5. Sales $\S$ 442(8)—Purchaser of diseased poultry for breeding purposes held entitled to recover value of other poultry lost through communicated disease; "article of personal property" (Civ. Code, $\S$ 3313, 3314).

Buyer of poultry for breeding purposes may recover from seller value of poultry lost by reason of disease communicated to other poultry under Civ. Code, $\S$ 3314, the term "article of personal property," as used in section 3314, not being restricted to manufactured articles, and section 3313 restricting amount of damages in event of breach of warranty as to quality of personal property not purchased for special purpose to difference in value of property purchased not being applicable.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Third Series, Article of Personal Property.]

6. Fraud $\S$ 41—Pleadings, in action for damages to poultry by reason of disease communicated by cockerels purchased from defendant, held to warrant judgment for damages for fraud or deceit (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1572, 3300).

Pleadings, in purchaser's action for damages for poultry lost through disease communicated by cockerels purchased from defendant, held to justify judgment under Civ. Code, $\S$ 3300, for damages for fraud or deceit as defined in section 1572.

7. Fraud $\S$ 42—Allegation of seller's intent to deceive is unnecessary, in absence of demurrer.

An allegation of intent to deceive on the part of the seller is unnecessary to the statement of a good cause of action for fraud or deceit, in the absence of demurrer.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; M. S. Sayre, Judge.

Action by I. M. Lewin against the Pioneer Hatchery, a corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Fred S. Howell, of Petaluma, for appellant.

H. B. Churchill and Bryce Swartfager, both of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment rendered against the defendant for damages resulting from the loss of a flock of hens which died from the effect of chickenpox communicated to them from cockerels which were purchased for breeding purposes.

The complaint alleged in substance that the defendant sold and delivered to plaintiff 90 White Leghorn roosters for breeding purposes, representing to him that the cockerels were in good, healthy, and virile condition; that plaintiff had no knowledge or information to the contrary, and relying upon these representations as to the condition of health, he placed the roosters with his flock consisting of 2,050 hens, which were theretofore healthy and free from disease; that the roosters were in fact infected with chickenpox, which soon thereafter broke out among his hens, 1,350 of which died as a result of the disease, to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $2,025.

Upon the trial the court found that the defendant "represented to plaintiff that the roosters were in good, healthy and virile condition"; that they appeared to the plaintiff to be healthy and free from disease, and that he had no knowledge or means of ascertaining facts to the contrary, but that in truth the roosters, at the time of delivery, "were infected with a * * * chicken disease known generally as the pox"; that the plaintiff being ignorant of the presence of the disease among the cockerels, and relying upon the defendant's warranty, placed them among his hens, which were theretofore healthy and free from disease; that the plaintiff's hens contracted the chickenpox from defendant's diseased cockerels, "so that a great number of said hens died therefrom"; and that the plaintiff sustained damages on that account as follows: "(A) For loss of hens, $1,622.50; (B) For trips to Santa Rosa, * * * $20.00; (C) For doctoring hens, $112.50; (D) For medicine for hens, $50.00; Total, $1,805.00." Thereupon judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $1,805.

On appeal the defendant contends that the representations did not amount to a warranty; that the evidence does not support the finding that the cockerels were afflicted with pox, nor that the plaintiff sustained a loss of hens from the disease; that the court failed to find how many chickens actually died from the pox; and that the evidence fails to support a judgment for damages according to the measure thereof required by sections 3313 and 3314 of the Civil Code.

[1] The assurance on the part of the defendant, as an inducement for plaintiff to buy the cockerels for breeding purposes, to the effect that they were in "good, healthy and virile condition," amounted to a warranty, the breach of which would make the defendant liable for damages. 22 Cal. Jur. 957, § 41; 38 Cyc. 388; 24 R. O. L. 177, § 450. Mere expressions of opinion as to the fitness of an article, or words of praise and commendation of the character or qualities of animals, do not constitute a warranty. It is, however, not necessary to use the term "warrant" in order to hold a vendor liable for breach of positive assurance as to the fitness of an article or the quality or character of animals. When, however, positive averments are made by the seller for the purpose of inducing the purchase of property, respecting the soundness, health, or condition of animals or poultry, which representations are relied upon by the vendee, they will be deemed to constitute a warranty even though it may not appear that the seller intended it as such. 2 Mechem on Sales, 1102, § 1268; 1 Williston on Sales, 384, §§ 202, 210, 405; Benjamin on Sales (7th Ed.) 664; Miller v. Germain Seed Co., 193 Cal. 62, 74, 222 P. 817, 32 A. L. R. 1215.

[2] In 3 Sutherland on Damages, 2006, § 675, it is said: "If animals sold are warranted sound and are not so, but have an infectious or contagious disease which they communicate to others, where the parties contemplate their being placed with other stock, the loss, not only in respect to the animals purchased, but to others to which the warranted animals communicate the disease, may be recovered, as well as the expenses of taking care of and doctoring them." 2 Mechem on Sales, 1456, § 1825.

The same principle applies to a breach of warranty as to the health and condition of poultry.

[3] There is ample evidence to support the finding that the cockerels were afflicted with the pox. The plaintiff testified: "I first learned that the cockerels had pox when the inspectors picked out the roosters. That was the third day after the cockerels had been delivered. * * * The inspectors said the cockerels they examined had the pox. * * * There were 16 or 18 that were not banded, and of these I think about 12 during the first four days, developed the pox."

Nor does the record fail to support the finding that a great number of the plaintiff's hens died from this disease incurred from defendant's cockerels. The plaintiff testified regarding this matter: "The roosters had the pox right away the second day. The hens did not develop it until eight or ten days. When the pox broke out among the hens I took out about two or three dozen a day which I kept separate * * * and treated them. * * * We lost 1350 hens through that time. * * * Their average value was $1.50."

Mr. Himy Lewin, son of plaintiff, testified: "I have a record of the hens that died. * * * I made a daily record of the death of the chickens from the pox. After I came home from school I would go out and bury the chickens, and counted them."

He then gave the number, which he enumerated from month to month, aggregating a total of 1,376 hens which he claimed died from this disease. The evidence is conflicting regarding this result, but on appeal it must be assumed that the trial court accepted this testimony as true.

[4] The court failed to find how many hens died as a result of this disease. It is also true that the number of hens which died from the disease was a material issue, for the defendant denied that the plaintiff lost any chickens on account of the pox. Under the provisions of section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure as added by St. 1927, p. 583, this court is authorized to adopt adequate findings based upon the evidence, for the purpose of upholding the judgment. Accordingly, it is found upon the evidence above quoted that: "The plaintiff lost 1350 hens of the value of $1.50 apiece, which died from chickenpox incurred from the disease communicated to them from the cockerels which were purchased from the defendant." This finding will support the judgment.

[5] Finally the defendant contends there is no evidence in the record to support damages for a breach of warranty according to the measure which is prescribed by the terms of sections 3313 and 3314 of the Civil Code. Section 3313 fixes the measure of damages which will ordinarily follow a breach of warranty as to the quality of personal property. Special circumstances, however, may warrant the allowance of consequential damages which are the natural result of conditions deemed to have been reasonably within the contemplation of the contracting parties. 22 Cal. Jur. 1024, §§ 92-98; California Press Mfg. Co. v. Stafford P. Co., 192 Cal. 479, 221 P. 345, 32 A. L. R. 114; 8 R. O. L. 455, § 25; 17 C. J. 746, § 76. It is not necessary that the particular subject which resulted in the loss shall have been actually mentioned or discussed, if it sufficiently appears that it was reasonably and necessarily included within the contemplation of the parties. In the present case the record satisfactorily shows that the subject of diseased cockerels was actually considered by the parties at the very time of delivery. The plaintiff testified: "I took them [the cockerels] out of the coops and handed them out to Mr. Furbee, and Mr. Furbee handed them right back to Mr. Millner [defendant's manager], and I made the remark there that the roosters are scratched and painted with iodine [which, the evidence shows, is used in treatment of pox lesions]. Mr. Millner said, 'O, that's nothing,' * * * 'Don't worry Mr. Lewin, they were inspected by me very thoroughly. They are all healthy and good.'"

The appellant contends that since this cause is founded upon an alleged breach of express warranty, the measure of damages is not fixed by section 3300 of the Civil Code, but must find support in sections 3313 and 3314 of the same Code, for the reason that the first-mentioned section provides that the damages for a breach of obligation arising from contract is such sum as will compensate the aggrieved party for all detriment proximately caused thereby, "except where otherwise expressly provided by this code." In other words, the appellant contends that the sole measure of damages either direct or consequential, for a breach of contract, must find the support of some provision of the Civil Code; that since the plaintiff has seen fit to rest his cause upon an alleged breach of warranty, he must rely on sections 3313 and 3314 of the Civil Code for the measure of his damages. Section 3313 restricts the amount of damages which may be recovered in the event of a breach of warranty as to the quality of personal property which is purchased for no special purpose, to the "excess, if any, of the value which the property would have had at the time to which the warranty referred, if it had been complied with, over its actual value at that time."

This section affords no relief in the present case, for the court made no allowance for the loss of the cockerels. That feature of possible damages is therefore eliminated from consideration.

The appellant argues that section 3314 does not aid the respondent, for the reason that this section relates only to damages resulting from a breach of warranty to manufactured "articles of personal property"; that the word "article" may not be construed to include animate objects such as poultry. Section 3314 provides that: "The detriment caused by the breach of a warranty of the fitness of an article of personal property for a particular purpose, is deemed to be that which is defined by the last section, together with a fair compensation for the loss incurred by an effort in good faith to use it for such purpose."

Limiting the application of this section to manufactured or inanimate articles alone would be unreasonable and unwarranted restriction. This construction would result in depriving an aggrieved vendee of just and adequate compensation for the breach of a warranty of animate objects of personal property. The term "article of personal property," as it is used in the preceding section of the Civil Code, should therefore receive a more liberal construction. It is not unreasonable to hold that the word "article," as it is there employed, means merely object or thing. Webster defines the meaning of the word as a distinct thing that is specifically pointed out or designated; the subject matter, concern, or item referred to. In the sense that it merely means an object or thing belonging to the class of personal property, it may apply with equal reason to either animate or inanimate objects. Webster's Dictionary defines the word "thing" as "whatever may be owned or possessed, as distinguished from persons." The Century Dictionary asserts that this word may apply to either animate or inanimate objects.

We are of the opinion that section 3314 of the Civil Code furnishes authority upholding consequential damages under such circumstances as the one presented in the present case. The latter portion of that section provides that the detriment caused by a breach of warranty as to the fitness of personal property shall include "a fair compensation for the loss incurred by the effort in good faith to use it" for the purpose for which it was purchased. In the present case the cockerels were purchased for breeding purposes. They were declared to be sound and healthy. The vendee had no knowledge to the contrary. Relying on these representations the plaintiff in good faith placed them with his flock of hens which were free from pox. It is a fair inference from the testimony to assume that the diseased cockerels infected the hens, and thereby caused the death of 1350 of them.

[6, 7] Even though this liberal construction of the phrase "article of personal property" be not accepted the pleadings would seem to justify a judgment under section 3300 of the Civil Code, based upon fraud or deceit.

It is true that the respondent appears to concede that this case must depend upon the theory of a breach of warranty. But the pleadings do not mention the term "warranty." The complaint quite fully recites facts constituting a cause of action based upon fraud or deceit as it is defined in section 1572 of the Civil Code. Although no intent to deceive was alleged on the part of the vendor, in the absence of a demurrer this was unnecessary. 10 Standard Ency. of Proc. 56, § 4. We are therefore of the opinion that the judgment in this case may be reasonably upheld on the theory last mentioned, in which event section 3300 of the Civil Code furnishes the measure of damages.

With the modification of the finding above adopted, the judgment finds ample support in both the evidence and the findings. It is therefore affirmed.

Under conditional sales contract, one may not retake property and also collect purchase price.

3. Guaranty $\hookrightarrow$ 78(1)—Guarantor of promissory note held not entitled to attack validity of original contract pursuant to which note was given, since guarantor's liability depends entirely on guaranty contract.

Guarantor of promissory note, given by purchaser of furniture in satisfaction of checks for purchase price which had been dishonored and to forestall litigation and loss of furniture, will not be heard to attack validity of original contract of purchase nor to question consideration for guaranty, since latter is an independent obligation of guarantor, and his liability depends on terms of his own contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harry R. Archbald, Judge.

Action by C. A. Stavn timer against Mrs. Gertrude Winfree. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Thomas J. Pitts, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

George C. Watson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. During the month of November, 1923, the respondent and one Cora E. Bailey, since deceased, entered into certain instruments in writing, by the terms of which the latter received possession of a quantity of furniture, and for the use or toward the purchase of which she agreed to pay in monthly installments the amounts therein specified. Among other provisions of the contract, it was agreed that, should default in any payment occur, the party of the first part might "take possession thereof and remove the same"; that in such event he should be "entitled to all rent then due" thereunder; that Mrs. Baley should not be entitled to "any allowance, return or set-off for payments previously made"; and that time was of the essence of the agreement. In April, 1924, three of her checks for $100 each, which she had given and for which she had received credit, were dishonored and returned by the banks, and, in satisfaction of these obligations and to avoid being deprived of the furniture, she executed and delivered to respondent her promissory note in the sum of $300, dated June 10, 1924, payable in 60 days, with interest, and reasonable attorney's fees in the event of enforced collection. At the time of its execution, appellant signed an indorsement upon said note, as follows:

"Mrs. Gertrude Winfree.

"Los Angeles, Cal., June 10-1924.

"For value received, I hereby waive presentation of the within note to the maker, demand of payment, protest and notice of non-payment, and do guarantee payment of the same, and of all expenses of collection thereof, including attorney's fees and also of all expenses, including attorney's fees, incurred in enforcing this guaranty and do hereby without notice expressly consent to the delay or indulgence in enforcing payment and to the express extension of the time of payment of the same. Mrs. Gertrude Winfree."

[1-3] Thereafter Mrs. Baley died, and, at the request of the public administrator, respondent repossessed the furniture. This action was instituted upon said note, against the indorser and guarantor, and, judgment having been rendered in favor of the plaintiff, the defendant appealed. The principal defense and ground of appeal urged here is that the contract was not one of lease, but of installment or conditional sale, retaining title in the conditional vendor; it is denied that the note in suit was given in payment of the amounts represented by the returned checks, and appellant insists that it represented installments due upon the purchase price of the furniture. Positive testimony introduced on behalf of the plaintiff, however, refutes this latter assertion, and the finding of the trial court is therefore conclusive that it was given, and intended, as above stated. The rule is familiar that under conditional sales one may not retake the property and also collect the purchase price—that he "may not have his cake and eat it too." But Mrs. Baley obtained the plaintiff's merchandise, and retained and enjoyed the use thereof, during her lifetime, under the terms of an agreement that, should she be compelled to part with it, she would forego all payments theretofore made, and would pay any amounts then due. The rule attempted to be invoked would apply had the plaintiff sought to collect the full amount of the purchase price of the furniture, after repossessing the property. Such is not the case. That Mrs. Baley was indebted to the respondent for the amounts above mentioned, and gave her checks therefor, and received credit accordingly, is not disputed. It appears that upon the return of the checks she gave a promissory note to avoid suit thereon and to forestall the loss of the furniture. Apparently respondent had no recourse as against her estate, but in any event he did not demand payment of any future installment. He sued for the aggregate amount of three checks given by Mrs. Baley in her lifetime, prior to repossession, and theretofore temporarily satisfied by a promissory note upon which appellant was the indorser and guarantor. The terms of the original contract are only incidentally here involved, nor is a technical interpretation of its nature and character pertinent to the issue presented. The ultimate consideration for the note and contract of guaranty was, in effect, twofold. It was given, not only in satisfaction of an existing indebtedness, but also to avoid litigation and the deprivation of the maker of her necessary furnishings. Under the facts and circumstances of this case, a guarantor will not be heard to attack the validity of the original contract, nor to question the consideration for the guaranty. The latter is an independent obligation of the guarantor, and his liability depends entirely upon the terms of his own contract. Western Natl. Bank v. Wittman, 31 Cal. App. 615, 161 P. 137; Cooke v. Mesmer, 164 Cal. 332, 128 P. 917.

The judgment is affirmed.

ELM et ux. v. BENNETT. (Civ. 6410.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 24, 1929.

I. Appeal and error ⚡996—Evidence, in action for death resulting from automobile accident, regarding deceased's contributory negligence, held to warrant different inferences precluding review by appellate court.

Evidence, in action for damages for death resulting from automobile accident, held to present fair and reasonable ground for difference of opinion, as to whether or not deceased interfered in any manner with operation of automobile so as to make her guilty of contributory negligence, precluding interference by appellate court with trial court's decision that deceased was not contributorily negligent.

2. Negligence ⚡82—Contributory negligence to defeat recovery must contribute proximately to injury complained of.

In order that negligence of plaintiff may release defendant from liability, such negligence must contribute proximately to injury complained of, it must concur and co-operate with negligence of defendant up to very time of injury, and recovery is not barred if it is so remote as to become condition and not cause in chain of causation.

3. Automobiles ⚡244(58)—Undisputed evidence as to physical conditions surrounding accident held to support conclusion that deceased's act in grasping steering wheel did not contribute to collision.

In action for damages for death resulting from automobile accident, undisputed evidence as to physical conditions immediately following accident, showing that automobile in which deceased was riding struck rut in left side of road, swerved across road into gutter running parallel with right side of road, continued to run in and out of gutter for distance of about 75 feet, then started up bank and turned toward tree until within few feet of it, when it turned sharply to left, at which time deceased apparently grasped wheel so that side of car struck tree, held sufficient to support conclusion that deceased's act in grasping wheel did not contribute to collision.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Charles R. Barnard, Judge.

Action by Eric Elm and wife against Kathleen Bennett. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Bronson, Bronson & Slaven, of San Francisco (Harold R. McKinnon, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Irvine P. Aten, of Fresno, for respondents.

KNIGHT, J. Appellant, a high school student, accompanied by two girl companions named Astrid Elm and Adeline Harding, was driving a Ford coupé along what is called the Copper King road, near Fresno, about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, returning from a high school picnic; and, while rounding a curve in the road on a slight descent in the grade, at a speed of between 20 and 25 miles an hour, the coupé ran into a rut in the left side of the road caused by recent rains, and, after swerving across the road, climbed a slight bank, ran into a tree standing 3 or 4 feet distant from the road, and overturned, causing the death of Miss Elm. As a result of the accident, the parents of the deceased brought this action for damages, and, upon trial before the court sitting without a jury, the court found, as alleged in the complaint, that the accident was proximately caused by appellant's negligent operation of the automobile, and further found that there was no contributory negligence on the part of the deceased. Thereupon judgment was entered in favor of the respondents for $2,500, from which judgment the appeal herein is taken.

[1] Appellant concedes that the evidence relating to the question of her negligence is sufficiently conflicting to preclude an inquiry into the trial court's finding on that issue, but she contends, as sole ground for reversal, that the evidence shows without conflict that, when the coupé struck the rut, Miss Elm negligently contributed to the accident by grasping the steering wheel. This contention is based alone upon the testimony of appellant, the essential part of which was as follows: "As we hit the rut Miss Elm grabbed the wheel. That pulled me to the other side. We hit the tree, and that was the last I knew until we got up. * * *" However, in apparent contradiction of appellant's testimony, Miss Harding, who was seated in the coupé between appellant and the deceased, testified that, although she could not say "absolutely" that Miss Elm did not reach for the steering wheel, she did not see her do it, and that, in order for Miss Elm to have done so, it would have been necessary for Miss Elm to have reached in front of her. Furthermore, appellant admits that she did not see the tree until the coupé was within a few feet of it; that at no time did she apply the brakes, and that, after seeing the tree, she did not "do anything to avoid hitting it," because, as she explained, they "were too close to it." We are of the opinion that the foregoing evidence presents a fair and reasonable ground for a difference of opinion as to whether or not Miss Elm interfered in any manner with the operation of the automobile, and therefore raises such a conflict as to preclude this court from interfering with the trial court's decision thereon. Felsenthal v. Warring, 40 Cal. App. 119, 180 P. 67.

[2, 3] Moreover, in order that the negligence of a plaintiff may release a defendant from liability, such negligence must contribute proximately to the injury complained of; it must concur and co-operate with the negligence of the defendant up to the very time of the injury, and recovery is not barred if it is so remote as to become a condition and not a cause in the chain of causation. 19 Cal. Jur. 649. The undisputed evidence in the case at bar as to the physical conditions present immediately following the accident shows that, after the coupé struck the rut in the left side of the road, it swerved across the road into a gutter running parallel with the right side of the road, and continued to run in and out of the gutter for a distance of about 75 feet; that it then turned slightly to the right, ran up the bank, and was headed directly for the tree until within a few feet of it, when it turned sharply to the left, so that the side of the coupé instead of the front of it struck the tree. Even though it be assumed, therefore, as appellant claims, that Miss Elm did grasp the wheel, it may be reasonably inferred from the facts stated that she did so only when the coupé was within a few feet of the tree, after appellant had apparently lost control of the automobile, and in an effort to steer it clear of the tree and thus avert a head-on collision which at that moment seemed inevitable. And if such be the fact, it is legally sufficient to support the conclusion that Miss Elm's act in grasping the wheel did not contribute to the collision, as appellant contends, but at most resulted in preventing disaster to the other occupants of the car.

It is our conclusion that the facts above set forth are legally sufficient to sustain the findings.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

HOGBERG v. LANDFIELD et al. ★
(Civ. 6581.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 8, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 8, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 5, 1929.

1. Judgment $\S$ 256(2)—Recital in judgment that contract was not rescinded held contrary to finding that notice of election to rescind in due form for fraud was given showing completed rescission.

Where court found that defendant's representations in sale of corporate stock were false, known to be false by defendant, and made to induce plaintiff to enter into contract, and that plaintiff relied on representations to his injury and gave notice of rescission of both contracts in due time on ground of fraud and failure of consideration, recital in judgment that second contract had not been rescinded was contrary to finding that notice of election to rescind in due form was given; rescission being complete when notice is served.

2. Fraud $\S$ 23—Party may rely on representations concerning existing facts not within means of knowledge but known to other party.

Party is justified in relying on representations concerning existing facts not within his knowledge or his means of knowledge, but within knowledge of party making representations.

3. Licenses $\S$ 26—Fraudulent sale of securities by broker held noncompliance with Securities Act, entitling injured party to sue surety on broker's bond (Corporate Securities Act, $\S$ 2, subd. 10, $\S\S$ 6, 14, and $\S$ 2, subds. 7, 9, and $\S$ 5 as amended; Civ. Code, $\S$ 1572).

Under Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 677), $\S$ 5, as amended by St. 1923, p. 90, $\S$ 2, requiring bond conditioned on faithful compliance with provision of law and under section 2, subds. 10 and 7 (as amended by St. 1921, p.

1116, § 1), 9 (as amended by St. 1923, p. 89, § 1), and sections 6, 14; Civ. Code, § 1572, recognizing right to sue broker for fraud in sale of securities and liability of surety on broker's bond to persons suffering loss by broker's failure to comply with act, sale of securities by licensed broker through false and fraudulent representations is noncompliance with act and entitles party injured by broker's failure to comply to recover against surety.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action by Emil Hogberg against P. E. Landfield, doing business as an individual and also under the fictitious name of Edward Marvin Company and also under the firm name and style of P. E. Landfield Company, and another. From adverse portions of judgment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions to enter judgment for plaintiff.

Superseding former opinion in 274 P. 995.

Everette C. McKeage, of San Francisco, for appellant.

John Ralph Wilson and R. F. Mogan, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued to rescind two separate contracts for the sale of shares of corporate stock. A separate judgment was asked against the defendant Maryland Casualty Company as the surety upon Landfield's bond as a stock broker. Each contract was pleaded in a separate cause of action. Judgment went for plaintiff and against defendant Landfield on the first cause of action only, in favor of the surety company on both causes, and in favor of Landfield on the second cause. The plaintiff has appealed from the portions of the judgment denying him relief on his second cause of action and denying any relief against the surety company. The appeal is presented on typewritten transcripts.

On August 15, 1924, plaintiff paid Landfield $2,650 under the first contract for shares of stock of the New Dominion Copper Company, and on October 24, 1924, paid him $960 for additional shares in the same company. Both sales were made by Landfield while acting as a duly licensed stockbroker, and both sales were accomplished through the false and fraudulent representations of Landfield. The bond of the surety company was given under the terms of sections 5 and 6 of the Corporate Securities Act and was in full force during the time when the acts complained of were done.

[1] The trial court found that all the representations pleaded in the complaint were made by Landfield, that they were false, that said defendant knew them to be false, that he made the representations for the purpose of inducing plaintiff to enter into the contracts, that he knew plaintiff believed and relied on said representations, and that plaintiff did so rely to his injury. It was also found that the stock was practically worthless, and that, within due time, plaintiff gave notice of rescission of both contracts on the grounds of fraud and failure of consideration. Upon these findings the trial court made the conclusion of law that plaintiff was not justified in relying upon these representations when the second contract was made and recited in the judgment that this second contract had not been rescinded.

This recital is directly contrary to the finding that notice of election to rescind in due form was given. When such notice is served, the rescission is complete and the court should so find. American Type Founders' Co. v. Packer, 130 Cal. 459, 62 P. 744; Prewitt v. Sunnymead Orchard Co., 189 Cal. 723, 732, 209 P. 993.

[2] The conclusion that appellant was not justified in relying upon the representations is contrary to the findings of fact and to the settled rule of law that a party is justified in relying upon representations concerning existing facts not within his knowledge or his means of knowledge, but within the knowledge of the party making the representations. For these reasons this part of the judgment must be reversed.

Appellant's right to recover from the surety company on its bond depends upon the construction of the Corporate Securities Act as amended in 1923 (Stats. 1923, p. 90), which as a prerequisite to a broker's license required a bond in the sum of $5,000 "conditioned upon the faithful compliance with the provisions of law." In construing these provisions of the act the court, in Blumenthal v. Larson, 79 Cal. App. 726, 730, 248 P. 681, 682, said: "While the phrase 'provisions of law' is a very broad and general one, we are of the opinion that it only refers to the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act." In the Blumenthal Case two causes of action were pleaded, one an open book account for securities bought and sold by plaintiff for the account of the defendant, and the second, a breach of contract for the sale by plaintiff and purchase by defendant of securities for which the defendant had refused to pay. In holding that the bond required by the act did not cover such defaults as those sued for, the court drew attention to the fact that no fraud was alleged in the sale of any security good or otherwise, but that the default of the defendant for which the plaintiff sought to hold the surety was nothing more than a breach of substantive law, a matter not covered by the terms of the act. In the course of the opinion it was said: "The title of the act in question declares it to be one for the regulation and supervision of companies, brokers, and agents, to prevent fraud in the sale of securities, and it provides for the enforcement of the act and punishment for violation of its provisions. The manifest and declared purpose is to prevent fraud in the sale of securities, as the same are defined by section 14 of the statute. This section sets forth the prohibited acts which would constitute fraud, the prevention of which was the purpose of the statute and bond." Page 731 of 79 Cal. App. (248 P. 683).

In Mitchell v. Smith (Cal. Sup.) 267 P. 540, the surety was sought to be held upon allegations that the broker had embezzled stock which had been entrusted to him for sale. The court there held that the language of the statute meant that a surety was liable for failure on the part of the broker to comply with the provisions of law set out in the Corporate Securities Act and not on his failure to comply with all the general laws. In Anthony v. Van (Cal. App.) 274 P. 563, the plaintiff sought to hold the surety upon a bond given under the same provisions of the act because of the default of the brokers alleged to have been the conversion of securities entrusted to them for sale. We there held, upon the authority of the Mitchell Case, that such conversion was not a matter covered by the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act and denied the plaintiff relief. In Bridges v. Price (Cal. App.) 273 P. 72, a case arising after the 1925 amendment to the Corporate Securities Act, we held that, because of this amendment, these cases did not control an action based upon a bond executed in accordance with that amendment. It was there said, however, that the provisions of the 1923 act to the effect that the bonds shall be conditioned "upon the faithful compliance" with the provisions of law likened the case to those of bonds conditioned upon the "faithful performance" of a contract which have always been construed as being breached by any failure of performance in the principal contract, citing Garrett v. Dodson (Tex. Civ. App.) 199 S. W. 675, 682; General Bonding etc. Co. v. Hill (Tex. Civ. App.) 195 S. W. 873; Lamson v. Maryland Casualty Co., 196 Iowa, 1185, 194 N. W. 70; Trinity Parish v. Aetna Indemnity Co., 37 Wash. 515, 79 P. 1097; Long v. American Surety Co., 23 N. D. 492, 137 N. W. 41; Hensley v. School District, 97 Kan. 56, 154 P. 253. This is the principle which is applicable to the case at hand. The bond was given for the "faithful compliance" with the provisions of the law (interpreted in the cases cited as referring only to the Corporate Securities Act). The title of the Corporate Securities Act clearly discloses the purpose, among others, to prevent fraud in the sale of securities. The right of a party to sue a broker for actual fraud in the sale of securities is clearly recognized by the provisions of the act. Section 14 (St. 1917, p. 680) of the act provides that any one who fails to comply with any of the provisions of the act is guilty of a misdemeanor. Section 6 of the act (St. 1917, p. 677) provides that the corporation commissioner may revoke a broker's certificate if he shall find that the broker "has violated any provision of this act or had engaged, or is about to engage in any fraudulent transaction." The complaint upon which the action is based is that the defendant Landfield, while acting as a duly licensed broker, sold to the plaintiff certain shares of stock for which the plaintiff paid him in cash; that these sales were accomplished through the false and fraudulent representations of Landfield; and that the stock so sold was practically worthless.

The word "broker" is defined in subdivision 9 of section 2 of the act (St. 1917, p. 675, as amended by St. 1923, p. 89, § 1) as one "who shall * * * engage * * * in the business of selling, offering for sale, negotiating for the sale of * * * any security." A "sale" is defined in subdivision 7 of the same section (St. 1917, p. 674, as amended St. 1921, p. 1116, § 1) as including, among other things, every contract by which for a pecuniary consideration called a price one transfers property to another. "Actual fraud" is defined in subdivision 10 of the same section (St. 1917, p. 675) as meaning the same as that defined in section 1572 of the Civil Code. The Civil Code section covers any acts committed by a party to a contract with intent to deceive another party thereto or to induce him to enter into a contract, such as the suggestion as a fact of that which is not true by one who does not believe it to be true.

[3] This is precisely the case made out by appellants against the broker in the court below. As against the broker the trial court found all the facts constituting actual fraud as here defined, and judgment properly went against the broker upon that ground. Section 5 of the Corporate Securities Act provides that the surety on the bond given under the terms of that act shall be liable to any and all persons who may suffer loss by reason of the broker's failure to comply with the act. Manifestly the sale of securities by a licensed broker accomplished through false and fraudulent representations is a noncompliance with the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act. The broker's failure to comply having been plainly put in issue and found by the trial court, judgment should have gone in favor of the plaintiff and against the surety company. A new trial upon the facts is not necessary as the findings fully cover every disputed issue of fact.

The judgment is therefore reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter judgment on the findings in favor of appellant and against the defendant Landfield and the respondent Maryland Casualty Company on both causes of action.

Ex parte EDWARDS. (Cr. 1764.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. June 21, 1929.

1. Infants $\Rightarrow$ 18—Juvenile court has no jurisdiction in juvenile proceedings over minor not within county or resident thereof (Juvenile Court Law, § 3).

In order that juvenile court of county have jurisdiction of minor in other than criminal cases, minor must be or reside within county, in view of Juvenile Court Law (St. 1915, p. 1225) § 3.

2. Habeas corpus $\Rightarrow$ 44—On original habeas corpus proceeding in appellate court, contention that subsequent petition in juvenile court concludes inquiry into residence of infant as affecting jurisdiction in proceeding reviewed held without merit.

On original habeas corpus proceeding in District Court of Appeal to procure infant's release from custody of juvenile court, a contention that a petition filed in juvenile court subsequent to commencement of habeas corpus proceeding concluded inquiry into actual residence of minor as affecting jurisdiction in first proceeding held without merit.

3. Habeas corpus $\Rightarrow$ 44—On original habeas corpus in appellate court, petition in juvenile court without findings of fact thereon cannot prevail as against admitted facts to contrary.

Mere allegations of fact in a petition in juvenile court, without finding of fact thereon by court, cannot prevail on habeas corpus in appellate court as against admitted facts to contrary.

4. Courts $\Rightarrow$ 21—Jurisdiction of civil proceedings cannot be obtained over person of one forcibly brought within territorial limits of court.

Jurisdiction in civil cases cannot be obtained over the person of one who is forcibly brought within territorial limits of court.

5. Infants $\Rightarrow$ 16—Juvenile court proceedings to determine custody of infant are civil in nature.

Proceedings in juvenile court to determine custody of person of infant are civil in nature.

6. Infants $\Rightarrow$ 18—Juvenile court of county other than infant's residence held without jurisdiction to determine custody of such infant, which had theretofore been determined by juvenile court of county of his residence.

Where custody of infant had been determined by juvenile court of county of infant's residence, juvenile court of another county to which infant was taken by virtue of order in proceedings to determine custody held without jurisdiction of person of infant either in that proceeding or in proceeding instituted subsequent to infant's arrival in such county.

Habeas corpus by Damon Edwards, directed to the superior court of Fresno county to procure petitioner's release from custody of such court sitting as a juvenile court. Writ granted.

Ernest R. Utley and Lee Nuffer, both of El Centro, for petitioner.

Everts, Ewing, Wild & Everts and Dan F. Conway, all of Fresno, for respondent Alice Akers.

Glenn M. De Vore, Dist. Atty., of Fresno, for respondent Oliver M. Akers.

HOUSER, J. From the files herein it appears that in the month of September, 1926, under the provisions of the Juvenile Court Law (St. 1915, p. 1225, as variously amended), a petition was presented to the superior court in Imperial county, sitting as a juvenile court, pursuant to which Damon Edwards, a minor, was adjudged free from the custody and control of his parents. More than two years thereafter, while said minor was residing with petitioner herein in Imperial county, a petition was filed in the superior court in Fresno county, sitting as a juvenile court, by which it was sought to have it judicially declared that said Damon Edwards was a ward of the juvenile court. Notwithstanding the fact (as shown by the petition therein) that, at the time the petition was filed in Fresno county, the minor in question was neither a resident of nor within said county, a citation was issued and an order made by such court, under the purported authority of which the minor was taken from Imperial county to Fresno county, and, on a hearing of the petition in the juvenile court of the latter county, temporary custody of the minor was awarded, not to the probation officer of said court, but to the then husband of the mother of the minor. Thereupon, on application to this court, a writ of habeas corpus was issued. Six days thereafter a second petition was filed in the juvenile court of Fresno county, which, among other things, contained the allegation that said Damon Edwards "is now within and now residing within the county of Fresno"; and by which second petition the petitioner again sought to have said minor declared a ward of the juvenile court of Fresno county.

The question presented for determination by this court is whether, after the juvenile court of one county has acquired and retains jurisdiction of a minor, the juvenile court of another county may by its order seize the minor in the county first exercising jurisdiction over him, carry him into the second county, and there, by virtue of the fact that he is then within said second county, acquire jurisdiction over him.

[1-3] At the outset, it is conceded that, generally speaking, and without reference to the commission of criminal offenses by a minor, in order that the juvenile court of a given county have jurisdiction over a minor, it is necessary either that the minor be or reside within such county (section 3, Juvenile Court Law, St. 1915, p. 1225); from which it follows that since, by the allegations of the first petition filed in the juvenile court of Fresno county, it appears that at the time the petition was filed therein the minor was neither a resident of nor within the county of Fresno, the juvenile court of that county was without jurisdiction in the premises. But it is claimed that, even though the minor was unlawfully seized in the county of his residence and transported into another county and there detained in custody, by thereafter being "within" the county, the juvenile court thereof might acquire jurisdiction over him; and it is further contended that, because the second petition filed in the juvenile court of Fresno county contained the allegation that at the time of its filing the minor was "within" the county of Fresno, the fact of the actual residence of the minor is beyond inquiry by this court in this proceeding—which latter point might be disposed of by the fact that the second petition in Fresno county was not filed until after the instant proceeding was initiated. Moreover, the mere allegation in the second petition, without a finding of fact thereon by the court, should not be permitted to prevail as against admitted facts to the contrary.

[4, 5] In criminal cases, ordinarily it would seem to be the rule that, however irregular or improper may be the manner of bringing before a particular court one accused of an offense, jurisdiction of the person will attach. Ex parte Ah Men, 77 Cal. 198, 19 P. 380, 11 Am. St. Rep. 263; In re Kaster, 52 Cal. App. 454, 198 P. 1029; Ex parte Clark, 85 Cal. 203, 24 P. 726; People v. Pratt, 78 Cal. 345, 20 P. 731. On the other hand, the rule is equally well established that in civil cases jurisdiction cannot be obtained over the person of one who is forcibly brought within the territorial limits of the court. Nor are proceedings instituted under the provisions of the Juvenile Court Law of the kind of that involved herein of a criminal nature. People v. De Fehr, 81 Cal. App. 562, 574, 254 P. 588; In re Daedler, 194 Cal. 320, 228 P. 467; In re Tahbel, 46 Cal. App. 755, 759, 189 P. 804; In re Brodie, 33 Cal. App. 751, 166 P. 605.

[6] Considering the law as enunciated in the authorities hereinbefore cited, together with the fact that the order by which the minor was taken from Imperial county to Fresno county was based upon the first petition presented to the juvenile court of the latter county, in which concededly such juvenile court had no jurisdiction, and that the allegation in the second petition presented therein, to the effect that the minor was "within" and "residing within" Fresno county, was predicated solely upon a wrongful detention of said minor by virtue of an order of the juvenile court rendered in excess of its jurisdiction, it is clear that, without reference to other questions of law presented in behalf of and urged by petitioner herein, the minor should be restored by respondents to the jurisdiction of the juvenile court of Imperial county, and to the custody of petitioner, Cornelia Stevens, at El Centro, in said county, subject, however, to such further orders as may or shall be made by the said juvenile court of Imperial county. It is so ordered.

Ex parte PARMAN. (Cr. 1549.)

Habeas corpus ⇨85(2)—Alleged fugitive from justice, petitioning for habeas corpus, not showing absence from demanding state, and demand being legally sufficient, petitioner was remanded.

Where petitioner for habeas corpus, arrested on warrant charging him with being fugitive from justice, claimed that he was not in demanding state at time of commission of alleged offense, and findings returned showed that, on hearing, extradition demand charged offense committed by petitioner in positive and direct terms, showed that petitioner offered no testimony of his absence from demanding state at time of commission of offense, and it further appeared that demand for petitioner was in all respects legally sufficient, writ was discharged, and petitioner remanded to custody.

Habeas corpus by Chris Parman, alias Chris Palmer, directed to the Chief of Police of the City and County of San Francisco to secure release of petitioner from custody. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

Harry S. Whitthorne, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. Petitioner herein filed an application for a writ of habeas corpus, claiming that he was held by the police authorities upon a warrant charging him with being a fugitive from justice of the state of Washington.

He claimed in the petition that he was not in the demanding state at the time of the commission of the alleged offense. The matter was referred by this court to Hon. C. J. Goodell, judge of the superior court, city and county of San Francisco, for hearing. The findings returned to this court show that a hearing was had, and that on such hearing it appeared that the extradition demand charges an offense committed by petitioner against the laws of the state of Washington, in positive and direct terms. They further show that petitioner offered no testimony to the effect that he was absent from the demanding state at the time of the commission of the offense charged, as claimed in his petition. It also appears therefrom that the demand for the petitioner is in all respects legally sufficient. This being so, the writ is discharged, and the petitioner remanded.

In re JONES' ESTATE.

JONES v. BRYSON.

(Civ. 6308.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 24, 1929.

Wills 554—On sisters' predeceasing testatrix, niece who was to take what surviving sister left held entitled to distribution of entire estate as substitutionary legatee (Civ. Code, § 1343).

Under will devising testatrix's property to two sisters by name, and providing for survivorship, and that on death of surviving sister what is left is to go to testatrix's niece, testatrix's brother being expressly disinherited, held, where sisters predeceased testatrix, will required distribution of estate to niece as substitutionary legatee under Civ. Code, § 1343; the language of the will clearly indicating intent that brother was to take nothing.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Crail, Judge.

Will contest proceeding by J. Hawley Jones against Frank Bryson, administrator of the estate of Anna Dakin Jones, deceased, and another. Judgment for proponents, and contestant appeals. Affirmed.

William L. Kuehn and Arthur Loveland, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Winterer, Combs & Ritchie, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. This is an appeal from a final decree of distribution entered by the superior court of Los Angeles county in the above-entitled cause. All of the property of the estate of Anna D. Jones, deceased, was distributed to Anna Mabel Jones. The deceased left a will, the dispute concerning the construction of which produced this litigation. It reads as follows:

"Dated March 28, 1916

"I, Anna D. Jones of Pasadena, Los Angeles Co., California, of the age of 60 years, and being of sound mind and memory, do declare this to be my last will and testament, as follows: I do hereby give, devise and bequeath all my estate of every name, and kind, and wheresoever the same may be situated to my sisters, Sara Jones McAdam and Emma Jones Nixon. I wish the sum of ($200.00)

two hundred dollars to be taken from the estate and given to Emma Jones Nixon, the remainder to be shared equally between them.

"For reasons known to him I give nothing to my brother J. Hawley Jones, Charleston, W. Va.

"My wishes in regard to him and my sister Jennie Jones, Deerfield, N. Y., my sisters will carry out as need arises. They are to give keepsakes to Nellie Patrick Jones and Anna Mabel Jones, Oakland, Minn., Selecting those most suitable.

"In the event of the death of either sister, the survivor inherits, and on the death of the death of (sic.) the surviving sister what is left to go to my niece, Anna Mabel Jones. Should my brother J. Hawley Jones be living, and in need, she is to help him as I should.

"My funeral expenses are not to exceed $150.00.

"Anna D. Jones."

It is the contention of appellant that, although the will disinherits him, it does not make a complete disposition of the estate of the deceased, and that, under the circumstances, he may still claim the rights of an heir. He insists that Anna Mabel Jones is not a substitutionary legatee, and that the trial court did not so find, and it is argued that, since Sara Jones McAdam and Anna Jones Nixon, sisters of the testatrix, preceded her in death, the dispositions to them failed, and that appellant, the brother, is entitled to inherit. Respondent claims the entire estate as a substitutionary legatee, under the provisions of section 1343 of the Civil Code, which reads: "If a devisee or legatee dies during the lifetime of the testator, the testamentary disposition to him fails, unless an intention appears to substitute some other in his place. * * *"

We think the intention of the testatrix is clearly expressed and free from ambiguity. By its language it is plain that she intended to leave no legacy to J. Hawley Jones, her brother. It is stated in words which permit of no doubt that it was her purpose to give Anna Mabel Jones whatever of her estate should remain after the death of the survivor of her two sisters named as legatees. In the face of this language, "what is left to go to my niece, Anna Mabel Jones," it cannot be said that the will does not dispose of the entire estate. It does this, and to others than appellant, and it also expressly excludes him from any direct bequest. Hence, there is nothing of the estate to be claimed by heirs at law. If this is so, even under appellant's theory he cannot prevail.

It was the intention of the testatrix that all of her estate not devised to her two sisters above mentioned should go to Anna Mabel Jones. This is indicated by the provision that: "In the event of the death of either sister, the survivor inherits, and on the death of the surviving sister what is left to go to my niece, Anna Mabel Jones. Should my brother, J. Hawley Jones, be living, and in need, she is to help him as I should." The mere fact that both sisters died before the testatrix, and that therefore the legacies to them failed, furnishes no basis to declare that the subsequent provision directing the disposition of the residue of the estate should be defeated. To so hold would conflict with the doctrine stated in Estate of Gregory, 12 Cal. App. 309, 107 P. 566, and Estate of Heberle, 155 Cal. 723, 102 P. 935. It is true, in the last-named matter the will expressly provided that, if the testator's sister's death should occur prior to her receiving her legacy, it should be otherwise disposed of. We think the same intention is unmistakably shown in the will here under consideration. Estate of Fritze, 85 Cal. App. 500, 259 P. 992, strongly relied upon by appellant, is not in point because, as stressed in the opinion, in no part of the will was there expressed the intention "that the surplus of the estate shall be taken by the person there designated."

We conclude that the sisters of the deceased, Sara Jones McAdam and Emma Jones Nixon, received estates terminable as to each by her death, and that Anna Mabel Jones was given the residue of the estate of Anna D. Jones in fee.

The judgment is affirmed.

WOODHEAD LUMBER CO. v. E. G. NIEMANN INVESTMENTS, Inc., et al.
(Civ. 6714.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 18, 1929.

1. Contracts ⇨187(1)—Third parties only remotely or incidentally benefited may not enforce contract (Civ. Code, § 1559).

Contract made expressly for benefit of third person may be enforced by him under Civ. Code, § 1559, and, conversely, third parties who are but remotely or incidentally benefited may not enforce contract.

2. Contracts ⇨187(1)—Third party, who establishes that he is one of class for whose benefit contract was made, may recover thereon (Civ. Code, § 1559).

In order for third party to establish that contract was made for his benefit under Civ. Code, § 1559, it is not necessary that he should be referred to by name in the contract, but it is sufficient if he shows he is one of the class of persons for whose benefit the contract is made.

3. Contracts ⇨147(3), 187(1)—Whether contract is intended for benefit of third person is question of construction, and parties' intent must be gathered from reading contract as whole in light of attendant circumstances (Civ. Code, § 1559).

Question whether contract is intended for benefit of a third person under Civ. Code, § 1559, is one of construction, and intent of parties must be gathered from reading the contract as a whole in the light of the circumstances under which it was entered into.

4. Mechanics' liens ⇨317—Materialman held entitled to sue on bond given by owner to mortgage company requiring payment of claims of laborers and materialmen, where mortgage company had prior lien (Code Civ. Proc. § 1186; Civ. Code, §§ 1559, 1641).

Materialman, whose lien was inferior to that of mortgage company making loan for construction of building, by virtue of mortgage lien having attached before commencement of construction work, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1186, held entitled to maintain suit on bond given by owner to mortgage company conditioned on indemnifying obligee against any and all loss arising by reason of failure to complete building and agreeing to pay in full claims of laborers and materialmen, since provision for payment of claims for materials was clearly intended for benefit of materialmen, entitling plaintiff to sue as the third party beneficiary under Civ. Code, § 1559; entire contract being considered together under section 1641.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge.

Action by the Woodhead Lumber Company against E. G. Niemann Investments, Inc., and the Detroit Fidelity & Surety Company. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Lloyd Wright, of Los Angeles (Wendell P. Hubbard and Charles E. Millikan, both of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

J. Karl Lobdell, H. L. Watt, and Charles E. R. Fulcher, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LUCAS, Justice pro tem. Appellant Woodhead Lumber Company, a corporation, appeals from a judgment of dismissal entered after the court sustained the demurrer of defendant and respondent Detroit Fidelity and Surety Company to appellant's amended complaint, without leave to amend.

The amended complaint in substance alleges that on or about December 5, 1925, defendant E. G. Niemann Investments, Inc., the owner of certain real property situate in the city of Los Angeles, entered into a contract with appellant by which it was agreed that the latter would furnish services and materials to said defendant to be used in the construction of a building to be erected upon said real property; that appellant with the knowledge and consent of said defendant and between the dates of February 26, 1926, and April 24, 1926, furnished such materials and performed such services, the reasonable value of which was the sum of $6,443.60; but that no part thereof, other than a small sum credited for materials returned, has been paid.

It is further alleged that the respondent Detroit Fidelity & Surety Company, on or about January 14, 1926, entered into a contract of surety with said defendant E. G. Niemann Investments, Inc., by which contract the said surety company became bound unto the California Mortgage Company in the sum of $50,000. Portions of said bond are set out in hæc verba. After reciting that the principal named therein, to wit, E. G. Niemann Investments, Inc., was the owner of the real property above referred to and was about to construct a three-story brick apartment building thereon and that said mortgage company had agreed to loan the said owner $50,000, taking as security a first mortgage on its property, providing a bond was furnished as hereinafter conditioned, the bond provided: "Now, therefore, the condition of this obligation is such that if the principal (the owner) shall indemnify the obligee (the mortgage company) against any and all loss directly arising by reason of the failure of the principal to fully complete said apartment building as per plans and specifications on file with California Mortgage Company, and shall also pay in full the claims of all persons performing labor upon or furnishing materials to be used in such work, then this obligation shall be void; otherwise to remain in full force and effect."

It is then alleged in said amended complaint that "said bond was conditioned upon the payment in full of all claims of all persons performing labor upon or furnishing materials on the above-described property, and that the said bond by its terms was made to inure to the benefit of any and all persons who performed labor upon or furnished materials to be used in the work" on said real property.

Judgment was asked for the value of the materials furnished and services rendered by appellant.

The respondent Detroit Fidelity & Surety Company demurred on the ground that said amended complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and on the further ground of uncertainty. We find no uncertainty existing in the complaint.

Appellant's action is based upon the asserted right to sue as a third party beneficiary it being urged that, given a liberal construction, the contract of surety between respondent Detroit Fidelity & Surety Company and defendant E. G. Niemann Investments, Inc., should be properly held to inure to appellant's benefit.

Respondent contends that while the contract of suretyship if enforced would incidentally benefit appellant, the contract itself shows it was not made for appellant's benefit and that the allegations to the effect it was so made are conclusions of the pleader and should be treated as mere surplusage.

[1] Section 1559, Civil Code, furnishes the rule that: "A contract, made expressly for the benefit of a third person, may be enforced by him at any time before the parties thereto rescind it."

Conversely, it is the law that third parties who are but remotely or incidentally benefited may not enforce a contract. Buckley v. Gray, 110 Cal. 339, 42 P. 900, 31 L. R. A. 862, 52 Am. St. Rep. 88; Chung Kee v. Davidson, 73 Cal. 522, 15 P. 100.

[2] But, in order for a third party to successfully contend that he was more than incidentally benefited and that the contract was made for his benefit, it is not necessary that he should be referred to by name in the contract; it is sufficient to allege and prove that he is one of a class of persons for whose benefit the contract was made. McKeever v. Oregon Mortgage Co., 60 Mont. 270, 198 P. 752; People's Lumber Co. v. Gillard, 136 Cal. 55, 68 P. 576.

[3] It is also the law that the question whether a contract is intended for the benefit of a third person is one of construction, and that the intent must be gathered from reading the contract as a whole in the light of the circumstances under which it was entered into. VI R. C. L. p. 887.

[4] It appears from the allegations of the amended complaint that the circumstances under which the contract of surety in question was entered into were these: Defendant E. G. Niemann Investments, Inc., was the owner of a lot upon which it desired to construct an apartment building. It needed money, services, and materials. The California Mortgage Company agreed to furnish the money, and appellant Woodhead Lumber Company agreed to furnish at least a portion of the services and materials. But the mortgage company wanted assurance that its money would be returned with interest, and appellant wanted to know that its services and materials would be paid for. To secure its loan the mortgage company insisted upon a first mortgage on the property and a $50,000 bond securing it against loss in the event the building was not completed. With the payment of the materialmen and laborers it was not concerned because its first mortgage lien, attaching prior to the commencement of construction work, would be preferred to mechanics' and materialmen's liens. Code Civ. Proc. § 1186.

With such payments appellant, on the other hand, was vitally concerned, for the liens provided by law for its protection would be secondary to the $50,000 first mortgage lien of the mortgage company. The allegations of the amended complaint show that appellant neither furnished services nor materials until after the contract of surety was written, conditioned upon the payment in full of the claims of all persons performing labor upon or furnishing materials to be used on the work.

The provision in the bond in reference to loss by reason of failure to complete the building clearly inured to the benefit of the mortgage company—that concerning the payment of materialmen did not. To give this latter clause effect (and it is to be remembered that “the whole of a contract is to be taken together, so as to give effect to every part, if reasonably practicable * * *” [Civ. Code, § 1641]), it must be held that it inured primarily to the benefit of the materialmen. Therefore, since it is alleged that appellant was one of the materialmen, appellant is entitled to sue upon the bond. And, it being further alleged that by agreement it furnished services and materials used in the construction of the building and that the same have not been paid for, its cause of action is completely stated.

The case of French v. Farmer, 178 Cal. 218, 172 P. 1102, we believe, fully supports the conclusion reached herein. There one Farmer, a contractor, agreed to build a wagon road for a railroad company. The National Surety Company executed a bond to the railroad company, conditioned upon the faithful performance by the said Farmer of his obligations under his contract with the railroad company, and upon his payment of all laborers and materialmen. In holding that the said French could recover under the bond against the surety company for goods and provisions furnished the contractor, the court said: “The question is, then, squarely presented, whether or not there can be a recovery upon the bond based upon the condition thereof by a third person not a party thereto, where the bond does not by its terms expressly inure to the benefit of such third person, and the right to sue thereon is based entirely upon the theory that the third person is entitled to sue upon a promise made for his benefit. The Supreme Court of Texas, upon a bond identical in form, held that the surety could not be sued thereon by a third party. National Bank of Cleburne v. Gulf, etc., Ry. Co., 95 Tex. 176, 66 S. W. 203. This was upon the theory that the bond was one of indemnity to the Railway Company, containing no express agreement to pay such third person, and therefore he could not sue thereon. If we adopt this view we violate the fundamental principle that every part of a contract should be given some effect, for the Railway Company could not, in any event, be liable for ‘goods’ and ‘provisions’ furnished the contractor in carrying out its contract, nor in this case could there be any lien therefor, as the property upon which the work was done was government property. If, under the circumstances any effect whatever is to be given to this clause in the condition of the bond, it must be held that it was the intention of the parties to benefit such third persons rather than the Railway Company, to whom the bond ran.”

Likewise here the mortgage company could not in any event be held liable for the services and materials of mechanics and materialmen. Liens therefore could be filed, but, as seen above, they would in no wise affect the mortgage company's security. On the contrary, their own effectiveness would be impaired by the existence of the prior lien.

Restating our conclusions in the language of the foregoing opinion, if any effect whatever is to be given to the clause in the bond in reference to the payment of materialmen, it must be held that it was the intention of the parties to benefit such materialmen rather than the mortgage company, to whom the bond ran.

The judgment of dismissal is reversed, and the cause remanded with directions to overrule the demurrer.

WHITE v. NATIONAL BANK OF COMMERCE et al. (Civ. 3810.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California. June 19, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 19, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 15, 1929.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 1011(1)—Findings of fact on conflicting evidence will not be reviewed.

Findings of fact supported by conflicting evidence will not be reviewed.

2. Sales $\S$ 359(1)—Evidence held to warrant jury finding that representatives of seller knew that representations that tree spray was harmless were untrue (Civ. Code, § 1572, subd. 2; § 1709; § 1710, subd. 2).

In action for price of tree spray, in which defendant filed cross-complaint for damages to trees because of false representations that spray was harmless, evidence held to warrant jury finding that seller's representatives knew that representations were untrue, irrespective of construction of Civ. Code, § 1572, subd. 2, section 1709, and section 1710, subd. 2.

3. Sales $\S$ 359(1)—Evidence of seller's practice to put on containers of tree spray labels warning that seller would not be liable for damages held not to require inference that such labels were on containers delivered to defendant.

Testimony that it was course of seller's business and practice to put labels on all containers of tree spray, warning purchasers that seller would not be responsible for damage or ill effect resulting from use, held insufficient, in view of other evidence, to require inference that such labels appeared on containers delivered to defendant purchaser.

4. Fraud ☞ 11(1)—Representations that spray would not harm citrus trees, regardless of temperature or weather conditions, held actionable representations of quality.

Representations that tree spray would not injure citrus fruit trees, fruits, or foliage, regardless of temperature or weather conditions, held not mere matters of opinion and prophecy, and not actionable, but actionable representations as to qualities of spray.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; Frank Lamberson, Judge.

Action by Harry R. White against the National Bank of Commerce, etc., in which defendant filed a cross-complaint, impleading the California Spray Chemical Company, etc. From the judgment rendered, the impleaded cross-defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Bradley & Bradley, of Visalia, and Wyckoff & Gardner, of Watsonville, for appellant.

H. B. McClure, of Visalia, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The plaintiff brought this action to recover $1,586 alleged to be due for a quantity of tree spray, called "Volck Concentrate," purchased by the defendant. The answer denies that the spray was purchased from the plaintiff, but alleges that it was purchased from the California Spray Chemical Company. The defendant filed a cross-complaint against that company and the plaintiff, alleging that the defendant, as trustee of the estate of Richard Thew, deceased, operates and controls a large orchard of citrus fruits; that by means of deceit and false representations the cross-defendants induced the defendant to purchase the spray in question; that the spray was applied to the trees according to the company's directions; and that the effect thereof was to damage the fruit growing on the trees and the foliage thereof in the sum of $2,300. The court found the allegations of the cross-complaint to be true, but also found that the spray destroyed the scale infesting the trees. Judgment was entered in favor of the defendant against the company for $714, the difference between the amount of the alleged damage and the purchase price of the spray. The company has appealed from the judgment.

[1] Appellant concedes that "under the 'conflict of evidence' rule it must be taken on this appeal that the sale was made by the company directly to the bank through the agency of White (the plaintiff) and (Howard) Houston." Under the same rule, it must be held that there is ample evidence to support all of the findings except the finding that the alleged false representations "were known to be untrue by plaintiff and said California Spray Chemical Company and said agents and representatives at the time the same were made." While the evidence in support of that finding is not so satisfactory as that supporting the other findings, it is deemed sufficient, as will later appear.

The court found that prior to the sale to the defendant, the company, through advertisements of which the defendant had knowledge, represented that said spray "would not burn, scald, or in any way harm citrus fruit trees, their fruits or foliage, regardless of the temperature or weather conditions"; that White and Houston, for the purpose of inducing defendant to purchase the spray, "in their capacity as agents and representatives" of the company, stated and represented "that said spray would kill the scale and other insects, their eggs and larvae which might be upon said citrus trees and their fruits and foliage thereon, without injuring or damaging said trees, their fruits or foliage, * * * regardless of the temperature or other weather conditions"; that the company and its said agents made all of such representations "in a manner not warranted by the information they had of the effect that said Volck Concentrate would have upon citrus trees, their fruits and foliage"; that, by reason of the application of the spray, "said trees were burned and injured and a great many of the oranges then growing upon said trees were burned, injured, destroyed and dropped from said trees, * * * as well as a large part of the foliage of said trees." The court made other appropriate findings which are not material to any question raised by the appeal.

[2] Respondent contends that the finding that the representations were known to be untrue is unnecessary because of the further findings that they were made in a manner not warranted by the information of the cross-defendants, citing section 1572, subd. 2, of the Civil Code, which defines such an unwarranted assertion as actual fraud. Appellant, however, contends that section 1572 relates only to the consent essential to the validity of a contract, and that section 1709 and section 1710, subd. 2, of the Civil Code, are applicable to cases such as this, citing Hoffman v. Kirby, 136 Cal. 26, 68 P. 321; Toner v. Meussdorffer, 123 Cal. 462, 56 P. 39, and Miller v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 6 Cal. App. 395, 92 P. 332. It is unnecessary to decide which of these contentions is correct, because, as stated, there is sufficient evidence to warrant the inference that the representatives of the company knew that the representations were untrue.

The representations made by White and Houston were made about June 17, 1925, and those made through advertisements were published prior to that time during the same year. Volck Concentrate was first placed on the market in December, 1924. Prior to that time the company manufactured and sold a spray now called Volck Standard. Volck Concentrate is composed of 83 per cent. white oil and "17 per cent. of water and other inert matter." It contains an emulsifier which is "considerably less than one per cent." of the admixture. Volck Standard contains 25 per cent. of white oil, 50 per cent. of kerosene, and 25 per cent. of water and emulsifier. The quantity of emulsifier in the Standard ranges from 1½ per cent. to 3 per cent. The white oil "is a highly refined mineral oil, refined up to the purity of medicinal oil." "It is similar in character in purity to Nujol."

R. S. Woglum, an expert of wide experience in the use of insecticides, entomologist of the California Fruit Growers' Exchange, testified: "The oil does not mix readily with water. Therefore, it has been customary in insecticide work to mix something with the oil that would make it unite with the water, what they call an emulsifier. * * * Where you have a very small amount of an emulsion (emulsifier), it binds the oil so—the oil globules with the water—so they will loosen as soon as the spray material hits the tree. Most of the oil remains on the tree, and the spray material that runs off * * * is largely water. But by increasing the amount of emulsifier, it so rightens the emulsion that when it is sprayed on the tree, why less of the oil remains and more goes off on the ground."

The witness stated that the result of spraying with Volck Concentrate was to leave more oil on the tree than in the use of Volck Standard, and that, while for that reason the former was a more effective insecticide than the latter, it was also, for the same reason, more injurious to the fruit and foliage of the tree, and, in the opinion of the witness, it was this excess of oil which caused the injury to the fruit and foliage in the defendant's orchard. While Woglum's first experience with the use of Volck Concentrate was in February or March, 1925, the results of his observations of its effects were such that he sent out a circular, dated May 25, 1925, calling attention to some of the injuries caused by its use, which were of the same character as those in defendant's orchard.

W. H. Volck, the company's director of research, testified: "We endeavor in the Concentrate to make what is known as a quick breaking emulsion, and if you make the emulsifier very large, perhaps you would interfere with that, you wouldn't have it so quick breaking. * * * Q. How long had you been experimenting with and perfecting this Concentrate before you used it commercially? A. About two years."

"Defendant's knowledge of the falsity of his statement may be established by inference from other facts in evidence, provided that the facts proved are such that the inference may legitimately be drawn from them, and are not equally consistent with defendant's innocence. As a general rule, however, scienter cannot be inferred from the mere fact that the statement was false, although it may be so inferred where the subject matter of the representation was so peculiarly within defendant's personal knowledge that he must have known his statement to be untrue." 27 C. J. 70.

The fact that Woglum so readily discovered the injurious effects of spraying citrus trees with Volck Concentrate warrants the inference that the company's experts must have made the same discovery during their two years of "experimenting with and perfecting" the spray. The results of such experimenting were peculiarly within their knowledge and the trial court was not bound to accept their testimony to the effect that they had observed no injurious effects from the application of the spray.

[3] The company's manager testified that it "was the course of business and the practice of the company" to put labels, containing instructions as to the use of the spray, on all packages thereof, and that such labels were put "on all drums that went out." A sample of the label to which the witness referred was introduced in evidence. It contained the following: "This material is guaranteed as to analysis and to quality, but due to conditions beyond our control, such as weather, soil moisture, etc., we will not be responsible for any damage or ill effect resulting from its use." The manager of defendant's orchard, however, testified: "I have never seen any labels on any drums." Attention has not been called to any testimony to the effect that any such label actually appeared on any of the drums of spray which were delivered to the defendant, and the evidence is not such as to require an inference to that effect.

[4] Appellant contends that the "representations were matters of opinion and prophecy and not actionable." It clearly appears that the representations were as to the qualities of the spray and not mere opinions. J. B. Colt Co. v. Freitas, 76 Cal. App. 278, 285, 244 P. 916; Kolberg v. Sherwin-Williams Co. (Cal. App.) 269 P. 975.

The judgment is affirmed.

Proc. § 1847, and, though it should appear to appellate court that other conclusions might fairly and reasonably have been drawn from the evidence, where a substantial conflict exists and conclusions of trial court find reasonable support, its findings cannot be disturbed on appeal.

2. Pleading ⇨364(2)—Allegations as to forgery of deed by defendant held properly stricken out in suit to enforce trust in real property; it being immaterial and irrelevant.

In suit to enforce trust in real property, allegations of complaint as to forging of deed by defendant's surviving partner from deceased partner to defendant as grantee held properly stricken out; it being immaterial which partner held legal title, and not essential to relief sought that validity of deed be determined.

3. Witnesses ⇨344(2)—That defendant forged deed would not be admissible as affecting credibility, in suit to enforce trust.

That defendant surviving partner forged deed from deceased partner to himself would not be admissible, in action to enforce trust as affecting credibility of defendant.

4. Witnesses ⇨344(1)—Character cannot be attacked by evidence of particular wrongful acts.

Character cannot be attacked by evidence of particular wrongful acts, nor may questions with reference to such matters be properly asked.

5. Trusts ⇨365(2)—Laches in enforcement of trust is question of fact, to be determined by circumstances of each case.

The question of laches in suit to enforce trust in real property is one of fact, to be determined by consideration of the circumstances of each particular case.

6. Trusts ⇨365(2)—That suit to enforce trust was not commenced until after death of party to transaction is factor material to determination of question of laches.

While mere delay in enforcement of trust, in absence of prejudice to opposite party, does not constitute laches, that no claim was made until after death of party to transaction whose testimony would explain it is a factor material to determination of question.

7. Trusts ⇨365(2)—Marked appreciation in value of property or outlays for improvement are to be considered in determining laches in enforcement of trust in real property.

A marked appreciation in value of property or outlays in making improvements thereon are elements to be considered in determining question of laches in enforcement of trust in real property.

8. Appeal and error ⇨1010(1)—Weight of testimony and determination whether plaintiffs' claim was barred by laches were questions for trial court, whose findings, reasonably supported by evidence, cannot be disturbed on appeal (Code Civ. Proc. § 2061).

In suit to enforce trust in real property, weight of testimony and determination whether circumstances shown were such as to bar by laches claims of plaintiffs were questions for trial court under Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, and its findings, reasonably supported by the evidence, cannot be interfered with on appeal.

9. Trusts ⇨372(3)—Findings that suit to enforce trust in real property was barred by laches held sustained by evidence.

In suit to enforce trust in real property, findings of trial court that claims of plaintiffs were barred by laches held fairly sustained by the evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Eugene McCarthy, executor of the last will and testament of Harriet McCarthy, deceased, against R. McColgan, also known as Reginald McColgan, and another, in which William N. McCarthy and another filed their complaint in intervention. From the decree, plaintiff and interveners appeal. Affirmed.

J. F. Riley, of San Francisco, for plaintiff appellant.

E. J. Talbott and Glensor, Clewe & Van Dine, all of San Francisco, for appellant interveners.

Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This action was commenced on February 4, 1924, by Eugene McCarthy, as executor of the last will and testament of Harriet McCarthy, deceased, against Reginald McColgan for the enforcement of an alleged trust in certain real property in the city of San Francisco upon which is situated a hotel. Eugene McCarthy is a son of the deceased. Subsequently the other children of the latter, namely, William N. McCarthy and Elizabeth Renstrom, filed their complaint in intervention, and Adelaide McColgan, as administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of Daniel A. McColgan, deceased, was also brought in as a party defendant to the action.

Previous to April 2, 1915, the record title to the property stood in the name of Harriet McCarthy, deceased. On that date she conveyed the same to the Harriet McCarthy Investment Company, a California corporation, all the stock of which she owned. In 1917 the property was subject to three incumbrances, namely, a mortgage to Hibernia Savings & Loan Society (hereinafter referred to as the bank), the amount of which, with other charges, aggregated approximately $100,000; a deed of trust, securing the payment of a note for $8,900 and interest, to M. J. Hines, who subsequently died, this sum being also secured by a chattel mortgage on the furniture in the hotel; and a similar deed, securing the payment to defendant Reginald McColgan and Daniel A. McColgan, who were copartners in the business of lending money, of the sum of $7,163.86 with interest. Mrs. McCarthy also owed on the purchase price of certain furniture in the hotel an amount which was subsequently determined to be $15,000, and, in addition, sums to other creditors, the total amount of which the record does not disclose. During the year 1917, the partners above named purchased from his estate the Hines debt, taking an assignment for their benefit of the security, and at about the same time the bank commenced suit to foreclose its mortgage. Thereupon the partners caused their deed of trust to be foreclosed, the property upon the sale thereunder to be purchased for their benefit, and the record title thereto was subsequently, to wit, June 26, 1917, conveyed to Daniel A. McColgan. Thereafter a new mortgage upon the property was executed by the partners to the bank and the original mortgage satisfied. The partners subsequently paid the amount owing on the furniture, and, in addition to other purchases of furniture, have made improvements upon the property at an expense, according to the testimony of defendant Reginald McColgan, of approximately $26,000. Harriet McCarthy, who devised her interest in the property to her children above named, died in 1920. Daniel A. McColgan died in 1921; his interest therein being devised to defendant Reginald McColgan. The executor averred that, before the deeds of trust were foreclosed, the partners promised Mrs. McCarthy that they would purchase the property upon the sale and arrange in effect for an extension of the mortgage; that they would thereafter hold the property in trust for her and her heirs, manage and conduct the hotel, applying the profit therefrom to the indebtedness, and reconvey the same to her or her heirs, free of incumbrances, at any time she or they might be able to repay the sums owing thereon. The interveners also alleged that like promises were made to them at various times until August, 1922, when for the first time the trust was repudiated by defendant McColgan, and that the promises were made by the partners with the intention of not performing the same, and for the purpose of fraudulently procuring the interest of Mrs. McCarthy in the property. Relying thereon, the deceased and interveners did not attempt to procure other loans upon the property, but permitted the partners to cause the same to be sold and conveyed to Daniel A.

McColgan, and, by reason of the promises, permitted the latter and defendant Reginald McColgan to hold the same in trust and to remain in possession thereof.

Answers denying these averments were filed by Reginald McColgan and Adelaide McColgan, as administratrix.

The court found against the allegations of the complaints, and, in addition, made the following finding, which was in accordance with the allegations of the answers filed by defendants: "Daniel A. McColgan, mentioned in the pleadings herein, was a material and necessary witness with respect to the truth of the allegations contained in the complaint and in the complaint in intervention. Said Daniel A. McColgan died on May 12, 1921. Neither the plaintiff nor the interveners, nor either of them, ever asserted the claims set forth in the complaint or the claims set forth in the complaint in intervention until after the death of said Daniel A. McColgan and until after it became impossible to secure the testimony of said Daniel A. McColgan with respect to such claims by reason of his said death. Since June 26, 1917, and prior to the assertion by the plaintiff or the interveners, or either of them, of the claims set forth in the complaint and the complaint in intervention the defendant Reginald McColgan expended large sums of money in the improvement of the real property described in the complaint and during said time the said real property has greatly increased in value. The plaintiff and the interveners have allowed the defendant Reginald McColgan to make such expenditures and have allowed such increase in value to occur without asserting any such claim, and have delayed for an unreasonable time the assertion of such claim and have abandoned the same, and the defendant Reginald McColgan would be prejudiced by the enforcement of such claim at the present time after such long-continued delay, and the court further finds that the cause of action set forth in the complaint and in the complaint in intervention is barred by the laches of the plaintiff and of the interveners."

The decree entered thereon adjudged Reginald McColgan to be the owner of the property in fee simple, and that neither Mrs. McCarthy at the time of her death nor her children had or have any right, title, or interest therein.

As grounds for the appeal, it is contended that the findings are unsupported, and that the court erroneously struck out appellants' complaint in intervention, and refused to admit in evidence a deed alleged therein to be a forgery.

The executor gave no testimony in support of the matters alleged in the complaints other than his willingness to repay any sums found to be owing to the defendants. The interveners, however, testified to promises made by the partners before the sale that the title should be held and the property managed as alleged, and also to admissions made on subsequent occasions that such was the agreement; further, that C. E. Blanchard, a contractor, had previous to the sale offered Mrs. McCarthy $20,000 for the property subject to the incumbrances which, with the claims of the unsecured creditors, he agreed to pay, and allow her one year to redeem by paying the sums advanced, with interest at 10 per cent.; that, persuaded by the partners, and relying upon their promises as stated above, she rejected the offer. Blanchard corroborated the interveners as to the offer claimed to have been made by him. Their testimony regarding admissions by the partners that they held the property in trust for Mrs. McCarthy and her children was corroborated by other witnesses, who testified to like admissions to them or in their presence. A qualified witness also testified that in his opinion the value of the property at the time of the sale was approximately $238,000. Defendant Reginald McColgan denied the promises and admissions claimed, and also that Mrs. McCarthy had been induced to decline an offer for the property from Blanchard. Evidence was adduced that in 1923 William N. McCarthy admitted that of his own knowledge he knew of no statement having been made by either of the partners that they would under any circumstances reconvey the property to Mrs. McCarthy, and also that he had testified in another action that the partners were the owners of the property, which they were obliged to take over in 1917 to protect their loans. It was also testified by a witness claiming to be familiar with real estate values in San Francisco that there was a marked depression in such values in 1917, and that in his opinion the property was then worth about $125,000.

Appellants insist that, in view of the circumstances and the testimony adduced by them at the trial as above, defendant's evidence afforded no reasonable ground for the conclusions of the trial court, and that findings in accordance with the allegations of the complaints should be made in this court.

The only witnesses who testified to the promises alleged were William McCarthy and Elizabeth Renstrom, the interveners. Six witnesses were called, however, by the plaintiffs to testify to admissions by the partners. Four of these testified that, at a meeting of the creditors of Mrs. McCarthy, held before the sale or the purchase of the Hines note, defendant Reginald McColgan stated that the partners intended to protect Mrs. McCarthy and the Hines heirs against the other creditors, and on this occasion accused one of the witnesses, an attorney representing the Hines estate, of attempting to deprive Mrs. McCarthy of the property. One of the witnesses last mentioned, with a fifth, also testified to subsequent admissions by the partners that they were holding the property for Mrs. McCarthy and her children. The sixth witness, a carpenter, testified that one of the partners made the same statement to him while he was employed at the hotel. Two of the above witnesses admitted that they had previously had litigation with the partners over other property interests. Another was the husband of Mrs. Renstrom, and the relations of the attorney with the partners had manifestly been unfriendly. The two among the number who could fairly be said to have been unbiased were one of the heirs of Hines, whose testimony was confined to what occurred at the creditors' meeting, and the carpenter mentioned. As to the latter, however, the circumstances under which it was claimed the admission was made might reasonably have created a doubt in the mind of the court as to the credibility of the testimony in that respect. Nor does it appear certain, as claimed by appellants, that Blanchard was an unbiased or disinterested witness as, according to appellants' testimony, the partners in another transaction sought unsuccessfully to overreach Blanchard, but the latter was warned of the design by interveners.

[1] The credibility of the witnesses was a question for the determination of the trial court (Code Civ. Proc. § 1847; Badover v. Guaranty Trust & Sav. Bank, 186 Cal. 775, 200 P. 638; Crow v. Crow, 168 Cal. 607, 143 P. 689; Dracovich v. Dracovich, 53 Cal. App. 361, 200 P. 44); and, though it should appear to this court that other conclusions might fairly and reasonably have been drawn from the evidence, yet, where, as here, a substantial conflict exists, and the conclusions of the trial court find reasonable support, the rule is settled that its findings cannot be disturbed on appeal (Waer v. Waer, 189 Cal. 178, 207 P. 891; Webster v. Lowe, 177 Cal. 385, 170 P. 850; Levi v. Chesley, 178 Cal. 145, 172 P. 607; Stransky v. Callan, 81 Cal. App. 476, 253 P. 960).

[2] The complaint in intervention, in addition to the matters stated above, alleged that Daniel A. and Reginald McColgan were copartners, and that, upon the death of his brother, Reginald, the surviving partner, caused the name of the former as grantor to be forged to a deed purporting to convey the property to him as grantee, and that the same was recorded. This deed the interveners sought to have declared void. The allegations respecting the deed were stricken out on motion, and of this appellants complain.

The order was not erroneous, it being immaterial, in view of the other facts alleged, as to which partner held the legal title, nor was it essential to the relief sought that the validity of the deed be determined. The claim of defendant McColgan to his brother's interest in the property rested upon the devise from the latter, and his title to that interest had its inception at the time of the brother's death. Western Pacific Ry. Co. v. Godfrey, 166 Cal. 346, 136 P. 284, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 825. He stated, however, on cross-examination that he caused the above deed to be filed for record, following which the record was offered in evidence by appellants, but, upon objection to its materiality, it was excluded. The purpose of the offer, as stated by appellants, was to impeach McColgan by showing that the deed was forged.

[3, 4] The fact, if true, was not a fraud upon appellants, nor was it relevant to that or any other issue in the case; the only persons affected thereby being those interested in the estate of Daniel A. McColgan. It is nevertheless urged that the fact, if proved, would affect the credibility of the surviving partner, and appellants in support or their contention rely upon the case of Masters v. Seeley (C. C. A.) 138 F. 719. This was an action upon an account, in which the defendant sought to show upon the cross-examination of the plaintiff that a previous action on the claim had been filed, a judgment by default obtained, and that this judgment had been set aside on the grounds of fraud and collusion. It was held that the fact was relevant on the question of the good faith of the plaintiff, and also as tending to show that he had dealt unfairly with the defendant in regard to the subject-matter of the controversy. In the present case, however, the act, although a wrong upon those interested in the estate of the deceased McColgan, was not so as to appellants, nor did it tend to show that the defendant had on previous occasions dealt unfairly with them. Moreover, the rule is well settled that character cannot be attacked by evidence of particular wrongful acts, nor may questions with reference to such matters be properly asked. Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 633, 22 P. 26, 131; Evans v. De Lay, 81 Cal. 103, 22 P. 408; Barkly v. Copeland, 86 Cal. 483, 25 P. 1, 405; Jones v. Duchow, 87 Cal. 109, 23 P. 371, 25 P. 256; Estate of James, 124 Cal. 653, 57 P. 578, 1008; People v. Crandall, 125 Cal. 129, 57 P. 785.

[5-9] The question of laches—the finding on which defense we have quoted—is one of fact (Wolff v. Canadian Pac. Ry. Co., 123 Cal. 535, 56 P. 453), which is to be determined by a consideration of the circumstances of each particular case (10 Cal. Jur. Equity, § 64, p. 526). While mere delay in the absence of prejudice to the opposite party does not constitute laches (Newport v. Hatton, 195 Cal. 132, 231 P. 987; Victor Oil Co. v. Drum, 184 Cal. 226, 193 P. 243), that no claim was made until after the death of a party to a transaction whose testimony would explain it has been held to be a factor material to the determination of the question (Bell v. Hudson, 73 Cal. 285, 14 P. 791, 2 Am. St. Rep. 791; Burke v. Maguire, 154 Cal. 456, 98 P. 21). So, also, a marked appreciation in the value of the property or outlays in making improvements thereon are elements to be considered. Chapman v. State Bank, 97 Cal. 155, 31 P. 896; Stevenson v.

Boyd, 153 Cal. 630, 96 P. 284, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 525; Akley v. Bassett, 68 Cal. App. 270, 228 P. 1057. The record contains testimony sustaining the finding quoted, and its weight was a question for the trial court (Code Civ. Proc. § 2061), as was also the determination whether the circumstances shown were such as to bar by laches the claims of plaintiffs; and its findings, being reasonably supported by the evidence, cannot be interfered with on appeal. Wolff v. Canadian Pacific Ry. Co., supra; Suhr v. Lauterbach, 164 Cal. 591, 130 P. 2.

It is our conclusion that the findings of the trial court against the allegations of the complaints as well as upon the special defenses last mentioned were fairly sustained by the evidence, and that no error has been shown which would justify a reversal of the judgment.

We find no merit in defendants' contention that, by reason of the conveyance by Mrs. McCarthy of her interest in the property to the Harriet McCarthy Investment Company, the present action could not be maintained by her executor or heirs.

The judgment is affirmed.

STERNES et ux. v. SUTTER BUTTE CANAL CO. (Civ. 3712.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California. June 18, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 18, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 15, 1929.

1. Evidence ⇨474(18)—Landowners familiar with land taken for canals and general situation in vicinity could testify as to value thereof.

Landowners familiar with land taken for construction of canals, uses to which it could be adapted, and general situation in immediate vicinity, held competent to testify as to value thereof, in action for damages.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1002—Jury's finding on conflicting evidence as to value of lands taken for canals must stand.

In action for damages by construction of canals across plaintiffs' land, jury's finding on conflicting evidence in respect to values and compensation must stand, in absence of other matters in evidence materially affecting verdict.

3. Trial 260(5)—Refusal of instruction to disregard mortgagee's bid on foreclosure sale in determining value of lands taken for canals held not prejudicial error, in view of instructions given.

In action for damages by construction of canals across plaintiff's lands, refusal of instruction not to consider amount bid for such lands by mortgagee on foreclosure sale in determining value thereof when ditches were constructed held not prejudicial to defendant, in view of instructions not to indulge in speculation, surmise, or conjecture, nor consider remote and conjectural uses of land or opinions as to value thereof, if sold in subdivisions or at forced sale.

4. Appeal and error ⇨882(16)—Defendant injecting mortgagee and foreclosure proceeding into case, and not objecting to stipulation for mortgagee's dismissal, cannot complain of references to such proceeding in argument.

Where mortgagee was made party to, and foreclosure proceeding injected into, action for damages by construction of canals across plaintiffs' land on defendant's motion, and stipulation for dismissal of mortgagee was made without objection by defendant, latter cannot complain on appeal of reference in argument of plaintiffs' counsel to such proceeding.

5. Husband and wife ⇨270(5)—Wife was not necessary or proper party to action for damages by construction of canals across community lands (Civ. Code, § 172a).

While amount of damages, recovered by plaintiffs for construction of canals across land, acquired by them while living together as husband and wife subsequent to enactment of Civ. Code, § 172a, constituted community property, wife was neither a necessary nor proper party to action.

6. Husband and wife ⇨270(3½)—Canal company could offset amount husband agreed to pay toward cost of construction and rights of way against damages recovered for construction of canals across community lands (Civ. Code, § 172a).

Canal company held entitled to offset amount agreed to be paid by husband toward cost of constructing ditches and obtaining rights of way against amount of damages recovered by husband and wife for construction of canals across their community lands, though wife did not sign agreements, as she was not necessary or proper party under Civ. Code, § 172a.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; E. P. McDaniel, Judge.

Action by Floyd G. Sternes and wife against the Sutter Butte Canal Company, a corporation. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Modified, and affirmed as modified.

Isaac Frohman, of San Francisco, and Seth Millington, of Gridley, for appellant.

Arthur Coats, of Yuba City, for respondents.

MONCUR, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from the judgment of the superior court of Sutter county after trial by jury wherein plaintiffs were awarded damages by reason of the construction of certain canals across their lands. This case has been before this court before, and in an opinion rendered by this court (61 Cal. App. 737, 216 P. 66) the facts are fully stated. Therefore, it is deemed unnecessary in this opinion to restate the facts out of which this litigation has proceeded. Following the decision of this court a second trial was had, and, as a result thereof, a jury awarded to plaintiffs compensation for the lands taken in the said action, the acreage thereof being 5.18 acres, amounting to the sum of $1,036, and damages to the lands not taken, being for so-called severance damages, seepage, etc., amounting to the sum of $8,196. The law of the case as settled on the former appeal, so far as values and damages to the land not taken are concerned seems to have been closely followed, but it is contended by appellant that the values and damages awarded are excessive, and not in conformance with the evidence in the case. With the exception of the evidence of the plaintiff Floyd G. Sternes, the values fixed by plaintiff's witnesses are less than the value per acre for the land taken as awarded by the jury. In connection, however, with the amount of the award in this respect, we will quote particularly from the testimony of plaintiff Floyd G. Sternes. This testimony is as follows:

"Q. Do you know the market value of this land? A. Very closely. You meant at that time?

"Q. Yes. Taking it as to the first day of December, 1919. A. Yes, sir. * * *

"Q. Taking it as of December 1st, 1919, and before the construction of the ditches and canals shown upon that map by the Sutter Butte Canal Company, what, in your opinion, would be the market value of that land? * * *

"The Court: The highest price it would bring for cash in the open market at that time, at a public sale.

"Mr. Millington: And giving a reasonable time to find a purchaser.

"The Court: With counsel's explanation as to what the question should be you can reframe it.

"Mr. Coats: "All right. What was, in your opinion, the value of that land, considering its value, and the price that could be obtained in the open market, and giving the seller a reasonable time to make the sale for cash? A. As a whole?

"Q. Yes. A. I should say two hundred and fifty dollars an acre. * * *

"Mr. Coats: Q. What, in your opinion, was the reasonable value of the remainder of the tract of land not included in these ditches, taking the same things into consideration, the price that you could have obtained therefor in the open market for cash, and giving the seller a reasonable time to obtain that price, after the construction of these ditches? A. I was not able to sell it."

The latter answer by order of the court was stricken out. The following then occurred:

"The Court: What would it be, if you had a reasonable time to make the sale—what could it have been sold for? A. About a hundred dollars an acre.

"Mr. Millington: How much? A. One hundred dollars an acre."

[1, 2] It appeared also from the testimony of Mr. Sternes, particularly on cross-examination, that he had in contemplation a subdivision of the property, but a fair reading of the record indicates that his valuation of $250 per acre was not based upon subdivision valuations. It seems to be the idea of appellant that in the testimony of respondents' witnesses to a very large extent at least sufficient foundation was not shown for their testimony to warrant the court in permitting it to go to the jury. However, a careful examination of the record shows that these witnesses were familiar with the land and the uses to which it could be adapted, were owners of lands and were familiar with the general situation in the immediate vicinity. The testimony of defendant's witnesses in respect to values did nothing more than create a conflict in the evidence. The jury heard the evidence and weighed the testimony. We are satisfied that, so far as values are concerned, unless it can be found that other matters of evidence which we will now note materially affect the verdict, the finding of the jury in respect to values and compensation must stand. In this connection we will now refer to a stipulation and testimony of a sale on foreclosure of the property originally involved herein and to the amount received therefor on such foreclosure sale.

[3, 4] Preliminarily, it is to be noted that the Savings Bank of Sutter County held a mortgage upon the lands owned by plaintiffs at the time of the commencement of this action. The Savings Bank of Sutter County was not originally made a party to the action, but subsequently on motion of defendant it was brought in. At the commencement of the second trial the action as against said Savings Bank of Sutter County was dismissed, but, prior to said dismissal, after some discussion between counsel, a stipulation was entered into without objection on the part of the defendant, the colloquy between counsel in respect to said stipulation being as follows:

"Mr. Coats: So far as the bank is concerned, the plaintiffs are willing to stipulate that the mortgage was subsisting at the time the Sutter Butte Canal Company entered upon the land, and that the mortgage was for the amount specified in the Judgment Roll of the case of Savings Bank of Sutter County, plaintiff, v. Floyd G. Sternes and Marian May Sternes, defendants, and which mortgage was previously introduced in evidence in that case, and that the land was sold under the foreclosure proceeding after these men had built their ditches across this land for the price of sixty dollars an acre or thereabouts; and, if that is stipulated to, we have no objection to their going out. Sixty dollars an acre was the price paid by the bank for that land at the foreclosure proceedings.

"Mr. Frohman: The records show that they bought it in for the amount due on the mortgage. It was simply an offset to the amount due the bank, but I do not know how much it was an acre.

"Mr. Coats: The records show that the bank was the bidder at the sale, and whether they bought it in for the amount of the mortgage or not is immaterial, but they bid it in at approximately sixty dollars an acre, if you are willing to stipulate to that—all right.

"Mr. Frohman: For the amount of the judgment the bank held—we will stipulate to that. Nobody asks for any relief against the bank."

We particularly refer to this conversation amounting, in effect, to a stipulation dismissing the bank from the action, for the reason that counsel for appellant predicate misconduct on the part of counsel for the plaintiffs in respect to argument before the jury in connection with this particular matter of the amount for which the property was sold under foreclosure and also predicate error on the part of the court in the refusing of certain instructions in connection therewith. Obviously, and we assume it is a matter of common knowledge that, a sale of property under foreclosure is a forced sale. The court instructed the jury as follows:

"By 'Market Value' is meant, not what the owner could realize at a forced sale, but the highest price estimated in terms of money which the land would bring, if offered for sale in the open market with reasonable time in which to find a purchaser with knowledge of all the uses and purposes as to which it was adapted and for which it was capable, as shown by the evidence."

Also the court instructed the jury as follows at defendant's request:

"In determining what compensation may be payable to the plaintiffs on account of any damages which may have resulted from the construction of said ditches to plaintiffs' land not occupied by said ditches, you are not to indulge in speculation, surmise or conjecture. The law does not require the defendant to pay damages or compensation based upon speculation, surmise or conjecture.

"The uses to which land may be put and which may be considered in determining its value do not include remote and conjectural possibilities.

"Testimony as to what a witness may think is the value of plaintiffs' land based upon what it is assumed by him to be worth if it were sold in subdivisions for cash or on a deferred payment plan, must be disregarded by the jury. (Sacramento, etc., R. R. Co. v. Heilbron, 156 Cal. 408-412, 104 P. 979.)"

The following instruction was requested by defendant, which was refused by the court:

"The price which the Savings Bank of Sutter County, the mortgagee of the plaintiffs' land, bid for said land on the sale thereof under the decree of foreclosure of its mortgage, is not to be considered by you in your determination of the value of said land at the time the defendant constructed or operated its ditches on plaintiffs' land."

This instruction might well have been given, but, in view of the instructions given by the court, particularly wherein they were told that they could not consider values at a forced sale, we are unable to see where any prejudice resulted to defendant by the refusal of the court to give this instruction. In respect to the claim made by appellant that counsel for plaintiffs in his argument to the jury was guilty of misconduct in referring to the price obtained on sale of the property through the foreclosure proceedings and the failure of plaintiffs to effect a sale of the property during the pendency of the foreclosure proceedings, it need only be said that the bank as a party to the action and the foreclosure proceedings in connection with the bank's relation to the action were injected into this case on the motion of defendant, and, the stipulation in reference to the dismissal of the bank having been entered into without objection on the part of the defendant it is not now in a position to complain of any reference whatever in the argument of counsel for the plaintiff in connection with said foreclosure proceeding. We do not hold that this matter was properly admissible before the court or jury, and we simply intend to say that, by reason of its admission before the court and jury in connection with the circumstances disclosed by the record in this case, defendant is in no position to complain thereof.

We are satisfied that, in connection with the verdict and award of the jury, no error of which defendant is entitled to complain is to be found in the record.

[5] We will now consider the alleged counterclaim or cross-complaint of defendant concerning the agreements entered into between plaintiff Floyd G. Sternes and defendant. These agreements are quite thoroughly discussed in Sternes v. Sutter Butte Canal Co., 61 Cal. App. 737, 216 P. 66, hereinbefore referred to, and we deem it unnecessary to lengthen this opinion by any further particular reference to said agreements. So far as the counterclaim or offset of the amount of $2,600 to any judgment by plaintiffs herein is concerned, it should be specifically noticed that plaintiff Marian May Sternes did not sign either of said agreements. The property owned by plaintiffs at the time of the commencement of this action was acquired by them subsequent to their marriage, while they were living together as husband and wife, and subsequent to the enactment of section 172a of the Civil Code of this state in 1917. It therefore was clearly community property, and the amount recovered by plaintiffs by reason of the acts complained of in this case constituted their community property. But, even under said section 172a, plaintiff Marian May Sternes was neither a necessary nor proper party to the action. In the case of McKay v. Lauriston (Cal. Sup.) 269 P. 519, at page 522, it is said:

"At the time said real property was conveyed to plaintiff, section 172a of the Civil Code read as follows:

"The husband has the management and control of the community real property but the wife must join with him in executing any instrument by which such community real property or any interest therein is leased for a longer period than one year, or is sold, conveyed, or incumbered; provided, however, that the sole lease, contract, mortgage or deed of the husband, holding the record title to community real property, to a lessee, purchaser or incumbrancer, in good faith without knowledge of the marriage relation shall be presumed to be valid; but no action to avoid such instrument shall be commenced after the expiration of one year from the filing for record of such instrument in the recorder's office in the county in which the land is situate."

"In the recent case of Stewart v. Stewart, 199 Cal. 318, 249 P. 197, this court after an exhaustive review of the decisions of this court, as well as those from other jurisdictions where the community property law prevails, considered and determined the right of the wife in community property acquired under the laws in force in this state immediately following the adoption of said section 172a and the amendment in the same year of section 172 of the Civil Code, relating, in its amended form, to community personal property. In that case we held that under the laws of this state as in force in the year 1918, relative to the rights of the wife in community property acquired while such laws were in effect, the wife had no present vested interest in the community property during the continuance of the marriage relation, except that she might by resort to appropriate judicial remedies protect and safeguard the community property against the inconsiderate and fraudulent acts of the husband."

In the case of Moody v. Southern Pacific Co., 167 Cal. 786, 141 P. 388, it is held that the husband has the like absolute power to dispose of the community property other than household goods and clothing, that he has of his own separate property, except that he cannot make a gift thereof without the consent of the wife. Civ. Code, § 172. "In general, the husband is the only party entitled to sue in respect to community property and the wife is neither a necessary nor a proper party to such suit." In Caputo v.

Fusco, 54 Cal. App. 191, at page 192, 201 P. 604, it is said:

"Elisa Caputo, the wife, was not a proper party plaintiff in the action to recover the community property. (Spreckels v. Spreckels, 116 Cal. 339, 349, 58 Am. St. Rep. 170, 36 L. R. A. 497, 48 P. 228; In re Burdick, 112 Cal. 387, 393, 44 P. 734.)"

[6] We are satisfied that the trial court was in error in excluding from consideration of the jury the contracts for the payment of the $2,600 as agreed to by plaintiff Floyd G. Sternes, and the defendant was entitled to offset the sum of $2,600 against any amount recovered against it. Counsel for respondents herein to avoid the necessity of a new trial, and, to terminate this litigation, if possible, by way of stipulation in his brief, makes the following statement:

"The court might allow the counterclaim and credit it upon the judgment, and then allow interest thereon from the date of the going in possession, and in case the court did this, respondents expressly waive all right or claim to greater aggregate judgment of principal and interest than that rendered by the jury.

"If the court should allow the counterclaim and credit it upon the aggregate judgment rendered, and also determine that plaintiffs are not entitled to interest on the balance, we also stipulate that the judgment in such case may be so modified. * * *

We are satisfied that respondents are not entitled to recover interest on the judgment appealed from herein prior to the date of its entry. But, in accordance with the stipulation as above set forth, the judgment is modified by deducting from the amount thereof, to wit, $8,196 the sum of $2,600, leaving the amount to be recovered under the said judgment $5,596, and, as so modified, the judgment is affirmed.

Appeal of MURPHY et al.

(Civ. 6646.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 24, 1929.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing July 19, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 22, 1929.

1. Wills ⇨439—Intention of testator governs construction of will, and must be given full effect, if possible.

Primary inquiry in construing will is to determine intent of testator, which must be given full effect, if possible.

2. Wills ⇨660—Interest of coexecutrix, attempting to prevent distribution to legatee, under paragraph in will forfeiting interest of contesting beneficiaries, held not subject to forfeiture.

Where coexecutrix of will during course of probate proceedings attempted to prevent distribution to legatee, who as alleged indirectly contested and aided in contesting will, under paragraph annulling any bequest to beneficiary who objected to probate thereof, or contested or aided in contesting any provision thereof, coexecutrix's share was not subject to forfeiture under such provision, in absence of anything to indicate bad faith, since, if coexecutrix had information which led her to believe that beneficiary had brought himself within exclusionary clause, it was her duty to prevent beneficiary from becoming recipient.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; E. J. Marks, Judge.

Proceedings in the settlement of the estate of John Drury Lavin, deceased. From part of a final decree ordering distribution of part of the estate to Nannie L. Markham, Frank F. Murphy and others appeal. Affirmed.

Henry L. Knoop and Clarence M. Heublein, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

McFadden, Holden & Friis and Leonard Evans, all of Anaheim, for respondents.

THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from that part of the final decree ordering the distribution to Nannie L. Markham of one-fourth of the rest, residue, and remainder of the estate of John Drury Lavin. The facts leading up to and necessary to an understanding of the situation are as follows:

John Drury Lavin died testate on February 20, 1923. By his will he nominated Nannie L. Markham, William A. Dolan, and Wm. J. Siemann to be the executors thereof. Upon the petition of the three so named the superior court of Orange county admitted the will to probate on March 16, 1923, appointing the petitioners executors. Within a year from the time of the order, one of the appellants here, Marcella Lewis, filed her petition praying for a revocation of the probate, the grounds of which it is not necessary to state. It is sufficient to note that the petition was dismissed by the superior court, and that subsequently an appeal therefrom was likewise dismissed. The fiftieth paragraph of decedent's will reads as follows:

"Should any of the beneficiaries under this my will object to the probate thereof, or in any wise, directly or indirectly, contest, or aid in contesting the same, or any of the provisions thereof, or the distribution of my estate thereunder, then and in that event I annul any bequest herein made to such beneficiary, and it is my will that such beneficiary shall be absolutely barred and cut off from any share in my estate, for I now solemnly declare that all property of which I am now possessed has been accumulated by my own efforts, aided and assisted by the prudent and economical management of my household affairs by my sisters, Sarah J. Lavin, now deceased, and Mrs. Mary E. Downing, and that none of the other beneficiaries herein named, or anyone else, has ever contributed anything towards it, or assisted in its accumulation."

There were three petitions for partial distribution filed by the executors of the last will and testament, which were joined in by Michael C., Joseph T., John L., and Marion C. Markham. In each of these three petitions, as well as in that for final distribution, filed by the executors alone, it was alleged that Marcella Lewis had filed a petition for revocation of the probate of the will, and it was further set forth that John B. Murphy (a brother of Marcella Lewis) had actively assisted and promoted the filing of the contest, and had directly and indirectly contested and aided in contesting the will, and all of these petitions asked that no distribution be made to either Mrs. Lewis or Rev. John B. Murphy on account of the acts so alleged. The court found that Mrs. Lewis was not entitled to the legacy left to her by the will, but declared that Rev. John B. Murphy had not directly or indirectly contested the will, and was, therefore, entitled to have distributed to him all sums left him thereby. It is the contention of the appellants that, since Nannie L. Markham attempted to prevent distribution to John B. Murphy, she also cut herself off from any rights as a legatee. The respondents deny the soundness of this assertion, and also reply that appellants have no right to prosecute an appeal from that portion of the decree involved here, for the reason that they are not prejudicially affected thereby.

[1, 2] We shall first consider the argument that Nannie L. Markham brought herself within the terms of the exclusionary clause by her participation in the various petitions for distribution, containing the allegations already recited. The primary inquiry must be to determine the intent of the testator. The authorities declare (see Estate of Major (Cal. App.) 264 P. 542; In re Kitchen, 192 Cal. 384, 220 P. 301, 30 A. L. R. 1008, and Estate of Hite, 155 Cal. 436, 101 P. 443, 21 L. R. A. [N. S.] 953, 17 Ann. Cas. 993), and the principles of equity dictate, that when this shall have been ascertained it is the duty of the courts to give it full effect, if possible.

It is neither difficult in the instant cause to discern the purpose of the testator, nor impossible to extend to that purpose complete accord in the distribution of the estate. It is manifest from a reading of the clause that the testator intended that any beneficiary who should attempt to defeat any of the provisions of his will should take nothing. He was equally clear in discountenancing a direct contest and indirect interference. It cannot be doubted that, had the facts warranted the conclusion, and had the court found that John B. Murphy had aided and abetted his sister, Marcella Lewis, in the contest which she filed, it would have been the duty of the court to declare the legacy to him lapsed and to have refused him distribution. It is also patent that the testator imposed upon his executors the obligation of carrying out the terms of his will, in so far as legally possible. If they had information which led them in good faith to believe that a beneficiary had by his actions brought himself within the exclusionary clause of that instrument, it became their duty in accomplishing the design of the testator, as laid down in his will, to report their information to the probate court and attempt to prevent him from becoming the recipient under an instrument he had indirectly endeavored to overthrow. It cannot, therefore, be seriously argued, in the absence of anything to indicate bad faith, at least, that Nannie L. Markham has in any manner forfeited her right as a beneficiary.

The conclusion to which we have come renders it unnecessary to pass upon any of the questions raised by the respondents.

Judgment affirmed.

CALVERT v. HAMILTON. (Civ. 5360.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 24, 1929.

1. Executors and administrators $\hookrightarrow$ 221 (4)—In action on rejected claim against estate, evidence did not make prima facie case of sale of truck to deceased or of account stated.

In action on a rejected claim against an estate, evidence held insufficient to make prima facie case of sale by plaintiff of automobile truck to deceased or of account stated.

2. Trial $\hookrightarrow$ 163—Motion for nonsuit held to sufficiently state grounds as failure to prove sale and failure to show account stated.

In action on rejected claim against an estate, motion for nonsuit on ground that plaintiff failed to prove cause of action against defendant, and on further ground that evidence did not show that plaintiff at any time sold deceased an automobile for price of $1,088, or any other sum, and did not show that at any time deceased became indebted to plaintiff in sum of $1,088 or any other sum, and did not show an account stated, held to sufficiently state grounds of motion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action upon a rejected claim by Bert Calvert against Virginia E. Hamilton, executrix of the estate of Earl R. Hamilton, deceased. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Cooper & Collings, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

C. E. McDowell, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of nonsuit, in which the appellant asserts that, giving to the testimony introduced its full probative value, he established a prima facie case, and that the grounds stated in the motion for the nonsuit were not sufficiently explicit to authorize the court to grant the motion. The action was one against the respondent in her representative capacity upon a rejected claim, and contained two counts. The first count alleged a balance due, in the sum of $1,088, on account of the purchase by deceased from the plaintiff of an automobile truck, and the other set forth an account stated. The plaintiff introduced testimony to the effect that on November 21, 1921, the deceased sold to the plaintiff upon a lease purchase contract the automobile in question for the total price of $2,250, payable $700 upon execution of the agreement, and the balance at the rate of $155 per month, commencing January 3, 1922; that Calvert made two payments of $155.55 each, and, at a time when he was five months in arrears, Calvert entered into a conditional contract for the sale of the truck to one Paden for the sum of $3,000, $900 to be paid upon execution of the contract and $150 per month; that this contract was assigned to the deceased; that, at the time this second contract was executed, to wit, June 27, 1922, Calvert made a payment on account of the original contract of $400, leaving a balance due, including interest and a hoist, of $1,027. Mrs. Hamilton, called by the plaintiff, also produced a third contract dated November 20, 1922, between the Hamilton Auto Works, under which designation the deceased transacted his business, and one Mike Roselli, calling for a total price of $2,285, the payment of $300, upon execution of the contract and monthly installments of $165 each. She also said that Roselli paid a total of $1,360.91, including a charge of $100 for insurance and $125 on a hoist; that following payment of this amount the truck had been wrecked. The appellant lays considerable stress upon a memorandum in the handwriting of Mr. Hamilton, which he introduced in the trial court, and which reads as follows:

Earl Hamilton

Los Angeles, Cal 7-1-22

M Bert Calvert to Hamilton Auto Works,

Trucks, Tractors, Automobiles, Bodies, etc.
3566 South Park Ave.

Phone South 6369.

Lease Contract Balance due..... 1272

Paid 6/28 400

2100 New Lease
200 Brokerage

1900

872 Due on old lease

1028 B. Calvert

[1] Taken in connection with the testimony which we have recited, does this memorandum establish a prima facie case? It must be borne in mind that title to the truck was at all times in the deceased. Also it must be observed that no payments were made on the new lease subsequent to the initial deposit and Hamilton repossessed himself of the truck and entered into the third contract with Roselli. Counsel argues that, inasmuch as appellant was to receive under the Paden contract the sum of $2,100, and only owed $1,272, it should be assumed that Hamilton had agreed to accept the new contract in lieu of the old and pay appellant the difference. This construction is impossible, however because simultaneously with this new contract Hamilton required appellant to pay, and appellant did actually pay, on account of the old contract the sum of $400. Considering the circumstances of the parties, this payment of $400 gives to the memorandum a definite meaning, and, eliminating the payment it is unintelligible. In view of the payment however, it seems certain that Hamilton had agreed with appellant that, if the latter made a substantial payment on account of the delinquency, he would permit him to pay the balance due on the old contract, plus a brokerage, and realize the difference on the new. It is obvious that there is nothing to indicate that the deceased had agreed to pay appellant anything—in fact, payment of the $400 conclusively establishes the contrary. Therefore, there is no evidence either that appellant sold to the deceased an automobile truck or that there was an account stated.

[2] Turning now to the other contention of appellant that the motion for a nonsuit failed to state the grounds of the motion, we find that counsel stated his grounds as follows: "On the ground that the plaintiff has failed to prove a cause of action against this defendant; and on the further ground that the evidence does not show that plaintiff at any time sold Earl R. Hamilton an automobile for the price of $1,088 or any other sum and does not show that at any time said Earl R. Hamilton became indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $1,088 or any other sum" and "does not show an account stated." Under the state of the testimony in this case, and fully conscious of the rule that the moving party must point out precisely the points upon which he relies, we are of the opinion that the grounds of the motion were properly, although concisely, stated. The respondent relied upon the failure of proof in the respects to which we have already called attention, to wit, the failure to prove in any way the sale of an automobile to the deceased and the failure to show an account stated or any indebtedness upon which to state an account. The motion was sufficiently stated.

Judgment affirmed.

PREO v. ROED et al. (Civ. 6743.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 11, 1929.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 607(1)—Transcript could be used, where notice requesting transcript was not filed within statutory time, but no notice of termination of proceedings for new trial was given (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 660, 953a).

Reporter's transcript was before appellate court and available for use, where notice to clerk requesting transcript was not filed with clerk within 10 days after motion for new trial was denied by operation of law under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 660, but no notice of termination of proceedings for new trial was given under section 953a.

2. Master and servant $\S$ 316(1)—"Independent contractor" is one representing will of employer regarding result only.

An "independent contractor" is one who renders service in course of an occupation representing will of his employer as to result of his work only, and not as to means by which it is accomplished.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Independent Contractor.]

3. Evidence $\S$ 75—Statutes relating to presumptions where evidence is suppressed held inapplicable, where defendant did not produce contract on issue of whether driver injuring plaintiff was defendant's employee (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1963, subds. 5, 6, 2061).

Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1963, relating to presumptions under subdivision 5 that evidence willfully suppressed would be adverse if produced, and under subdivision 6 that higher evidence would be adverse from inferior being produced, and section 2061 relating to introduction of weaker evidence where stronger evidence is within power of party, held inapplicable where defendants did not introduce contract for delivery of milk on issue of whether truck driver injuring plaintiff motorcyclist when delivering milk was employee of defendant.

4. Automobiles $\S$ 242(6)—That truck striking motorcycle was hauling milk delivered to defendant did not create presumption truck owner or driver was defendant's employee.

Fact that truck striking motorcycle was hauling milk which, upon its arrival, was received by defendant corporation, did not create presumption that either truck owner or truck driver was an employee or servant of defendant corporation.

5. Automobiles $\S$ 242(6)—Plaintiff seeking recovery on theory of respondeat superior had burden of proving relation of master and servant.

In action by motorcyclist for injuries sustained in collision with truck, where plaintiff sought to recover against defendant corporation upon theory of respondeat superior, burden of proving relation of master and servant was on plaintiff.

6. Master and servant $\S$ 301(1), 302(1)—To recover on theory of respondeat superior, plaintiff must establish status of master and servant, and that act was within scope of employment.

In order to recover against an employer on theory of respondeat superior, plaintiff must establish, first, status of master and servant, and, second, that act was done within scope of servant's employment.

7. Automobiles $\S$ 194(2)—Owner of truck striking motorcyclist was not "servant" of dairy company, where he was responsible only for gathering milk and took no orders regarding method (Civ. Code, $\S$ 2009).

Owner of truck striking motorcyclist was not servant of dairy company under Civ. Code, $\S$ 2009, where he was responsible only for gathering up milk and delivering it at depot of defendant corporation within hours agreed upon and did not take orders from any one as to manner of doing the work or as to how he was to haul milk, or who was to operate, or drive truck.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Denver S. Church, Judge.

Action by Murle Preo against B. A. Roed and another for damages for personal injuries arising out of a collision between a motortruck and a motorcycle. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed in part, and reversed in part.

Superseding former opinion in 277 P. 145.

Fenston, Williams & Hansen and Frank Kauke, all of Fresno, for appellants.

Gallagher & Jertberg, of Fresno, for respondent.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. In this action the jury found for the plaintiff and against the defendants and assessed plaintiff's damages in the sum of $7,500. From the judgment entered upon this verdict defendants have appealed.

The action grew out of a collision which took place between a truck owned by defendant B. A. Roed, which was being operated by his brother, L. A. Roed, and a motorcycle driven and ridden by plaintiff; it being alleged that defendant B. A. Roed was delivering milk of the Jersey Farm Dairy Company, under which name defendant Frank M. Helm, Inc., was doing business, and the damages awarded were for personal injuries received by plaintiff as the result of such collision.

Appellant B. A. Roed has filed no brief, and appellant Frank M. Helm, Inc., in its brief, contends that the judgment should be reversed for the reason that defendant B. A. Roed, whose truck, which was driven by his brother, L. A. Roed, and which collided with the motorcycle driven and ridden by respondent, was not an employee of defendant Frank M. Helm, Inc., but was an independent contractor. Respondent disputes this contention and urges that the evidence and inferences properly deducible therefrom sufficiently support the allegation that B. A. Roed was at the time of the accident in the employ and acting as the servant and agent of appellant Frank M. Helm, Inc., and further urges that the reporter's transcript on appeal—the appeal having been taken under the alternative method—cannot be considered for the reason that the notice of appellant to the clerk to prepare the transcript under the provisions of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure was not given within the time allowed by law, and this court is without jurisdiction to avail itself of the reporter's transcript, and therefore the clerk's transcript is the only record in the case properly before the court.

[1] This latter contention of respondent is based upon the fact that the notice to the county clerk requesting that the transcript of the testimony, etc., be made up and prepared was not filed with the clerk within 10 days after the motion for new trial was denied by operation of law under section 660 of the Code of Civil Procedure; the motion not having been made nor acted upon by the court within the two months' period prescribed by the statute. No notice of the termination of the proceedings for a new trial was given under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure. In support of his position respondent cites Bernschein v. Whitaker, 175 Cal. 130, 165 P. 523, as holding that under the situation presented here the court is without jurisdiction to avail itself of the reporter's transcript. That case, however, is overruled in the recent case of Amstead v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 201 Cal. 198, 256 P. 209, where the court, in passing on the precise question involved here, says: " * * * Under the provisions of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, when a proceeding upon motion for a new trial is pending, the time of the appellant to give and file his notice and request for a transcript does not expire until 'ten days after notice of decision denying said motion or of other termination thereof.' * * * The case of Bernschein v. [Whitaker] 175 Cal. 130, 165 P. 523, in so far as it is in conflict with the foregoing views, is overruled." Under this authority we must hold the reporter's transcript before us and available for use in determining the point urged by appellant Frank M. Helm, Inc., that defendant Roed was not an employee of defendant corporation, but was an independent contractor.

The facts of the case are as follows: Frank M. Helm, Inc., a corporation, was at the time in question transacting business under the name of Jersey Farm Dairy Company, handling dairy products in the city of Fresno. Several years prior to the accident complained of there was an association of dairymen known as the San Joaquin Valley Milk Producers' Association. The Jersey Farm Dairy Company purchased from the San Joaquin Valley Milk Producers' Association milk delivered at its depot in Fresno, and the defendant B. A. Roed, under an agreement made by him with the association, gathered up milk from the various dairymen producers and hauled or delivered the milk to the corporation. The association went out of business, and, instead of having a contract for the purchase of milk from an association, the corporation made separate contracts with the individual dairymen, respectively, and the defendant B. A. Roed continued to haul milk to the depot of the corporation. According to the testimony of J. S. Canham, manager of the corporation, "there are drivers that had their entire route, when we took them on, same as in the case of Roed, and several others." Each contract made by the corporation with the dairymen contained the provisions that the seller agreed to sell and deliver at the buyer's premises all the milk produced from a certain number of cows or from a certain dairy, and that the milk was to be delivered twice each day at the buyer's premises at 1820 Tulare street, Fresno, Cal., and that payments for all milk delivered during each month were to be made on the 15th of the following month. The rate paid to defendant Roed, according to his testimony, is fixed by the dairymen. The rate when the association ceased and the corporation took the milk direct from the dairymen was the same as formerly paid by the association, but four or five years ago the dairymen complained and the rate was reduced. The corporation each month paid Roed his delivery charges and paid the dairymen the amount due them for milk delivered after deducting the hauling charges paid to Roed. In a few instances dairymen who had contracts for delivery of milk to the Jersey Farm Dairy Company protested to J. S. Canham, manager of the corporation, that the price of delivery was too high. On each of these occasions Mr. Canham referred them to B. A. Roed and notified B. A. Roed of the protest. If a new customer was secured, the manager of the corporation would either tell the driver to call at the new customer's place and get his milk or would tell the dairyman to hail the driver and send his milk in.

[2] From the foregoing facts respondent urges that the inference may be properly drawn that defendant B. A. Roed was the servant of Frank M. Helm, Inc. We question this conclusion. Section 2009 of the Civil Code provides: "A servant is one who is employed to render personal service to his employer, otherwise than in the pursuit of an independent calling, and who in such service remains entirely under the control and direction of the latter, who is called his master." An independent contractor is one who renders service in the course of an occupation, representing the will of his employer as to the result of his work only and not as to the means by which it is accomplished. Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Industrial Accident Com., 191 Cal. 404, 216 P. 578, 43 A. L. R. 1304. In Luckie v. Diamond Coal Co., 41 Cal. App. 468, 480, 183 P. 178, 183, the court says: "The accepted doctrine is that, where the essential object of the employment is the performance of work, the relation of master and servant does not exist unless the employer retains the right to direct the mode and manner in which the job shall be done; or, in other words, not only what shall be done, but how it shall be done. (Labatt on Master and Servant, sec. 64; Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 807, 159 P. 721.) 'The chief consideration which determines one to be an independent contractor is the fact that the employer has no right of control as to the mode of doing the work contracted for' (Green v.

Soule, 145 Cal. 96, 99, 78 P. 337, 339). He is deemed to be the master who has the supreme choice, control, and direction of the servant, and whose will the servant represents, not merely in the ultimate results of the work, but in all the details." The facts in the case of Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 807, 159 P. 721, are somewhat similar to the facts in the present case. Here, as in that case, the manager of the corporation directed the person employed in the matter of the material to be hauled; there was no arrangement whereby the person employed was to personally drive his truck or vehicle; he could place any competent man in charge, and here defendant Roed did in fact employ his brother, who was driving the truck at the time of the accident. Each month Roed received a check from the corporation representing the aggregate amount the various dairymen should pay to him for delivering the milk to the corporation. If in Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury the injured party had been the employee of the owner of the team instead of the driver and owner, the situation would be the same as in the present case. Thus, if L. A. Roed has been injured while in his brother's employ at a monthly wage and while driving his brother's truck as such employee, the corporation would not be liable to him under the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended). If not liable to L. A. Roed in such case, it would seem that the corporation cannot be held liable for his negligence, if any there were, whereby plaintiff was injured. The following language from the opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Holmes in Driscoll v. Towle, 181 Mass. 416, 63 N. E. 922, quoted in Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, supra, is apropos here: "In cases like the present, there is a general consensus of authority that, although a driver may be ordered by those who have dealt with his master to go to this place or that, to take this or that burden, to hurry or to take his time, nevertheless in respect to the manner of his driving and the control of his horse he remains subject to no orders but those of the man who pays him. Therefore he can make no one else liable if he negligently runs a person down in the street."

[3, 4] Respondent argues that since the contracts provide that the dairymen will respectively deliver their own milk, and since B. A. Roed did deliver the milk and was paid by Frank M. Helm, Inc.—even though paid from funds belonging to the dairymen—the conclusion follows that the corporation employed B. A. Roed to deliver the milk purchased by the corporation and the jury was obliged to accept the failure of either of these defendants to produce the evidence of a contract between them made for the delivery of the milk by B. A. Roed as strong evidence that such contract, if shown by the evidence, would be adverse to the contention of defendants, and cites section 1963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, providing that certain presumptions are satisfactory, if not contradicted, as follows: Subdivision 5: "That evidence willfully suppressed would be adverse if produced." Subdivision 6: "That higher evidence would be adverse from inferior being produced." Respondent also cites from section 2061 of the same Code: "That evidence is to be estimated not only by its own intrinsic weight, but also according to the evidence which it is in the power of one side to produce and of the other to contradict; and, therefore, * * * that if weaker and less satisfactory evidence is offered, when it appears that stronger and more satisfactory" evidence "was within the power of the party, the evidence offered should be viewed with distrust." We fail to see the application of these sections to the record here presented. Plaintiff's motorcycle collided with a truck operated by L. A. Roed, which truck was the property of defendant B. A. Roed. Therefore there arose an inference that L. A. Roed was at the time, and in the line or course of his employment, operating the truck as an employee or servant of defendant B. A. Roed, and, if in fact he was not then acting as such employee or servant, it devolved upon defendant B. A. Roed to show the status or relationship at the time of the accident, if that inference was to be dispelled. Maupin v. Solomon, 41 Cal. App. 323, 183 P. 198; Brown v. Chevrolet Motor Co., 39 Cal. App. 738, 179 P. 697. The fact that the truck was hauling milk, which upon its arrival in Fresno would be received by the corporation, did not create an inference or presumption that either defendant B. A. Roed or L. A. Roed was an employee or servant of the corporation any more than a railway company transporting merchandise from one party to another is the servant of the party sending or the party receiving the merchandise, or that a truckman hauling a farmer's wheat to a grain merchant—who may be authorized to pay the truckman and deduct the amount of the cartage from the seller's proceeds—is the servant of the merchant.

[5] The plaintiff sought to recover against the corporation upon the theory of respondeat superior. The burden, therefore, of proving the relation of master and servant or employer and employee was upon plaintiff. The plaintiff called for cross-examination the manager of the corporation and the defendant Roed; and while showing that the milk was being conveyed by a truck to be delivered to the corporation, and that the compensation to be received by defendant Roed would be handed to him by the corporation, the plaintiff by such witnesses also established the fact that the defendant Roed was not an employee or servant of the corporation, but that he was an independent contractor. It is true that these witnesses were called for cross-examination under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure and plaintiff was not bound by their answers, but their testimony, however, is in no manner refuted by any other witness.

[6] The quantum of proof necessary for the plaintiff to produce when relying on the doctrine of respondeat superior is stated in Kish v. California State Automobile Association, 190 Cal. 246, 251, 212 P. 27, 29, as follows: "It is insisted by plaintiff that the evidence adduced having conclusively shown the relation of master and servant a prima facie case was made out of the responsibility of the master which must be overcome by the defendant, and that a nonsuit was therefore improper. But to recover against an employer upon the theory of respondeat superior, it is necessary for the plaintiff to establish the two distinct facts of (1) the status of master and servant, and (2) that the act was done within the scope of the servant's employment."

[7] Defendant Roed did not take orders from any one as to the manner of doing the work, or how he was to haul the milk, whether by team or automobile truck, or who was to operate or drive the truck or vehicle. He was responsible only for gathering up the milk, transporting it safely and delivering it at the depot of the corporation within the hours agreed upon by the dairymen and the corporation, and was therefore not the servant of the corporation.

Stedman v. Stedman, 179 Cal. 288, 176 P. 437, holding under sections 1963 and 2061 of the Code of Civil Procedure that where weak corroboration was offered where stronger evidence was possible, the court was bound to presume under the circumstances that their testimony would be unfavorable and was for that reason suppressed, being a divorce action, where the statute requires the plaintiff to make out his case by sufficient corroborating evidence, has no application here.

As to appellant B. A. Roed, the evidence amply supports the judgment against him, and as against him the judgment is affirmed. It must, however, be reversed as against appellant Frank M. Helm, Inc., and it is so ordered.

ACKLEY v. PRIME. (Civ. 6492.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 21, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 19, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 19, 1929.

1. Attorney and client ⇨78—Attorney engaging another attorney to collect sum, payment of which attorney had guaranteed, was primarily liable for money collected.

Under general rule that, where one is retained as an attorney or who undertakes to perform an act which requires an attorney, himself engages an attorney to perform the act, the latter is but a subagent, and relation of attorney and client does not subsist between him and original employer; attorney who engaged another attorney to collect a sum, payment of which he had guaranteed, was primarily liable for money collected by attorney thus employed.

2. Money received ⇨6(5)—Action for money had and received will lie to recover from attorney money belonging to hospital whose bill for services to clients attorney promised to pay.

Where defendant attorney guaranteed payment of hospital bill for services rendered client, and money came into hands of defendant and his agent as result of settlement obtained in lawsuits sufficient to cover hospital bill, which money in equity and good conscience belonged to hospital and was being withheld from it, held that an action for money had and received will lie.

3. Frauds, statute of ⇨159—Whether promise to answer for obligation of another is original or collateral is question of fact unless there is unambiguous written contract when question is for court (Civ. Code, § 2794).

Under Civ. Code, § 2794, whether or not promise to answer for the obligation of another is original or collateral is question of fact, unless negotiations of party are incorporated in an unambiguous contract, when it is for court to determine, and solution of question is dependent largely on determination of whether direct object of promise is to become liable on default in performance of another, for payment of another's debt, or whether such object is to subserve some purpose of promisor, although effect is to pay debtor's obligation.

4. Frauds, statute of ⇨158(4)—Evidence held to support finding that attorney promising to pay for hospitalization of injured clients incurred primary liability therefor; "guarantee."

Evidence held to sustain finding that promise of attorney incorporated in letter to pay for hospitalization of his injured clients was an original promise incurring primary responsibility and not a collateral promise to incur a secondary liability, and fact that attorney used word "guarantee" in letter does not alter situation, since use of such word does not in itself import contract of guaranty, as it is frequently used in sense of promise or agree, etc., importing an original obligation on part of person executing same.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Guarantee.]

5. Appeal and error ⇨1035—That action should have been founded on contract of guaranty instead of for money had and received will not require reversal where money was admittedly due (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Even though agreement by attorney to pay for hospitalization of injured client constituted a contract of guaranty, a judgment in favor of hospital in an action for money had and received will not be reversed, where it is shown that money sued for is admittedly due, as defense that complaint for its recovery should have declared on special contract instead of on common counts is a technical one, and, in view of Const. art. 6, § 4½, does not require reversal of judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; F. M. Jamison, Judge.

Action for money had and received by Edward Ackley against Spencer G. Prime. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

William F. Herron, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Franklin T. Poore, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an action to recover upon three assigned claims for money had and received, each claim being made the subject of a separate count in the complaint, the first of which was dismissed. The second and third counts are based upon allegations to the effect that defendant received from Samuel R. Allan and Charles Hammer, respectively, the sums of $365.55 and $477.55 to and for the use of the Morton Hospital, a corporation, but refused to pay any part thereof to said corporation or to plaintiff. The trial resulted in a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and the defendant appeals; the sole ground urged for reversal being that the evidence fails to establish a cause of action for money had and received, that defendant's liability, if any, was upon a written contract of guaranty, and that plaintiff's action should have been founded thereon.

[1] It appears that defendant, as attorney for Allan and Hammer, instituted two actions in their behalf to recover damages from the Remington Typewriter Company on account of personal injuries sustained by them in an automobile collision. The injuries necessitated hospital treatment, which was furnished by the Morton Hospital under the following circumstances, as the same were established by the testimony of three members of the hospital staff, namely Drs. Gardner and Morton, and Edith Barnett, the superintendent: Defendant, after explaining the circumstances under which the men were injured, and that as their attorney he had instituted actions for the recovery of damages, agreed that, if the hospital management would receive the men and furnish them with necessary hospitalization, he would pay the cost thereof out of the money received in said lawsuits, and would be "personally responsible" for such payment. Under such agreement the men were admitted to the hospital, and, after being treated there for a short time, Dr. Morton requested defendant to "confirm" his agreement in writing, which the defendant did; the letter to that effect reading as follows:

"March 21st, 1924.

"Supt. Morton Hospital, 1055 Pine Street, San Francisco, Calif. Dear Sir: You have in your hospital as patients, Samuel R. Allen and Charles Hammer, both suffering from injuries as a result of automobile accidents and said cases are under the personal supervision of Doctor George Gardner. Actions for damages in each of the foregoing cases have been filed against alleged persons causing the injuries, and I am the Attorney of record representing the persons herein named. As these cases were placed in your hospital as a result of my solicitation, I wish by this letter to guarantee to your institution the payment of the necessary indebtedness in the case and treatment of both Allen and Hammer and services in connection therewith. Both of these cases are being defended by Insurance Companies, as a result of Policies for Liability issued to the Owners of the Automobiles causing the injuries. Very truly yours, Spencer G. Prime."

Thereafter the men remained in and were treated at the hospital until they recovered from the effects of their injuries. Eventually Allan's case against the typewriter company was settled for $2,500, and a check for that amount was made payable to defendant and Allan jointly, and delivered to defendant. After certain expenses were deducted and Allan was paid his share of the settlement, defendant retained for himself approximately $1,240, but he refused to pay any part of Allan's hospital bill. Before Hammer's case was brought to trial, a disagreement arose between Hammer and defendant, which resulted in a substitution of attorneys, defendant being succeeded by attorney Reed M. Clarke. The case was afterwards brought to trial and a judgment obtained for $13,000. Thereupon two attachments were levied against the judgment. One was issued in an action brought by the defendant Prime against Hammer to recover attorney's fees. The other was issued in an action commenced in the name of the Morton Hospital against Hammer to recover the amount of the latter's hospital bill. The plaintiff in each action was represented by Attorney Herron. Subsequently a settlement was made in each case. Prime received a "substantial sum" in payment of his claim for attorney's fees, the amount not being disclosed by the record; and the full amount of the hospital demand, amounting to $488.84, was paid by check drawn in favor of and delivered to Mr. Herron, who subsequently cashed the same. However, no part of the money received on said check was ever paid to the Morton Hospital. In this connection Mr. Herron testified that the failure to pay the money to the hospital was due to the fact that Dr. Morton was absent in Europe for several months, that he had always kept the money for him, and had never paid any part of it to Mr. Prime. At the time the check was delivered to Mr. Herron, the indorsement thereon read: "In full of all demands in that said action entitled Morton Hospital, Plaintiff, vs. Charles Hammer, Defendant, pending in the Superior Court of S. F. No. 152, 192, in which action payee is attorney for plaintiff."

Defendant admits that he engaged the services of Mr. Herron to commence the action on behalf of the hospital against Hammer, but claims that Dr. Morton authorized him so to do. This latter statement was contradicted by Dr. Morton. He testified, in substance, that defendant, after having obtained a statement of Hammer's account from the hospital, caused said action to be instituted on his own initiative, in order to protect himself under his promise to the hospital to stand personally responsible for the cost of Hammer's treatment, and that, after the attachment had been levied, the defendant informed him that there would be no charge against the hospital for making the collection. Mr. Herron testified that he commenced the action without knowing who had engaged his services; that he got his authority from the papers which were left in his office, the complaint having been verified by Dr. Morton; that he did not know whether his own clerk or some one else's brought the papers to his office; and that he had never seen Dr. Morton prior to the day on which the present action was tried. In view of the foregoing conflict, it must be presumed on this appeal that the trial court accepted as true the testimony of Dr. Morton, and concluded therefrom accordingly that, so far as Mr. Herron's services were concerned, he was acting as defendant's agent and not for the hospital; and that consequently, under the general rule declaring that, "where one is retained as an attorney, or who undertakes to perform an act which requires an attorney, himself engages an attorney to perform the act, the latter is but a subagent and the relation of attorney and client does not subsist between him and the original employer" (6 Cor. Jur. 631), defendant was primarily responsible also for the money collected by Mr. Herron.

[2] It would appear, therefore, that the money thus coming into the hands of the defendant and his agent as a result of the settlements obtained in said lawsuits was sufficient to cover the cost of hospitalization of the defendant's clients, and that in equity and good conscience it belonged to the hospital, and was being withheld at the time of the commencement of this action. Under such circumstances it has been held that an action for money had and received will lie, M. H. Hoffman, Inc., v. Bernstein Film Productions, 42 Cal. App. 12, 183 P. 293; Fox v. Monahan, 8 Cal. App. 709, 97 P. 765.

[3] Aside from the foregoing view, however, and even assuming it to be the law, as defendant contends, that an action for money had and received cannot be maintained where it appears that the defendant's liability is a secondary one only, arising out of a special contract of guaranty, we are of the opinion that the evidence here does not establish such a contract. With reference thereto, section 2794 of the Civil Code provides that a promise to answer for the obligation of another is deemed an original obligation of the promisor and need not be in writing, where the creditor parts with value, or enters into an obligation, in consideration of the obligation in respect to which the promise is made, in terms or under circumstances such as to render the party making the promise the principal debtor, and the person in whose behalf it is made, his surety; and in this connection it has been held that whether or not the promise is original or collateral is a question of fact (Harris v. Frank, 81 Cal. 289, 22 P. 856); or, in case the negotiations of the party are incorporated into an unambiguous written contract, it is for the court to determine, and that the solution of the question is dependent largely upon a determination of whether the direct and leading object of the promise is to become liable upon the default in the performance of another, for the payment of another's debt, or whether such object is to subserve some purpose of the promisor, although the effect is to pay the debtor's obligation (Clay v. Walton, 9 Cal. 328; 13 Cal. Jur. 87).

[4] The facts of the present case, when construed in the light of the authorities above cited, are amply sufficient to support the conclusion that the object of defendant's promise to the hospital was not, as defendant contends, to incur a secondary liability to pay for the care of his injured clients in the event only that they defaulted in making such payment, but that his intention was to create a primary liability to pay for the same out of the proceeds to be received from said lawsuits, in conformity with an agreement he had made with his clients to that effect, and that the hospital management so understood it. And the circumstance of defendant having used the word "guarantee" in said letter or elsewhere during the making of the agreement does not alter the situation, because, as has been held, the use of such word does not in itself import a contract of guaranty; it being frequently used in the sense of promise or agree, etc., importing an original obligation on the part of the person executing the same (Meyer v. Moore, 72 Cal. App. 367, 237 P. 550; 13 Cal. Jur. 87); and, when the context of the letter is considered along with the oral testimony relating to the making of said agreement, it becomes apparent at once that defendant intended to be understood as incurring a primary responsibility, and that it was upon the strength of such primary responsibility that the credit for the hospitalization of Allan and Hammer was extended.

[5] Even though a strained construction of the evidence be given, and it be held that the transactions relating to said agreement constituted a special contract of guaranty and that plaintiff's remedy was restricted to an action founded thereon, it is plain to be seen that, since neither of the original debtors have paid the debts defendant "guaranteed," the bringing of an action for the enforcement of the contract of guaranty would necessarily result in a judgment in favor of plaintiff. That being so, a reversal of the present judgment is not warranted, for, as said in California Jurisprudence, vol. 17, p. 632, where it is shown that the money sued for is admittedly due, the defense that the complaint for its recovery should have declared upon a special contract instead of upon common counts "is a technical one, and in view of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution a judgment for plaintiff on the common count will not be reversed on the ground that there is an executory written contract between the parties where the result would not be changed by sending the case back for a retrial on other pleadings"—citing M. H. Hoffman, Inc., v. Bernstein Film Productions, supra.

The judgment is affirmed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent, v. K. OSAKI and K. Yoshioka, Defendants and Appellants. (Cr. 1079.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California. June 15, 1929.

Appeal by defendants from a judgment of the Superior Court of Sutter County, K. S. Mahon, Judge, of conviction of violating the Alien Land Law and from an order denying motion for new trial. Reversed.

On Rehearing.

For former opinion, see 278 P. 252.

Lloyd E. Hewitt, of Yuba City, W. P. Rich, of Marysville, and Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, of San Francisco, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Dep. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Disregarding the fact that the petition for rehearing was not filed herein within the time required by the rules of this court and the rules of the Supreme Court, being only filed this day, nevertheless we have given the petition such consideration as the limited time allowed us under the Constitution permits. Further consideration convinces us that section 9a of the Alien Land Law, as amended in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 880), placing the burden of proof upon the defendants as to facts necessary to be shown to prove the corpus delicti of the offense charged, is unconstitutional. In the recent case of Manley v. State of Georgia, 49 S. Ct. 215, 73 L. Ed. —, the Supreme Court of the United States, in speaking of presumptions, where the Legislature of Georgia attempted to make certain facts presumptive evidence of guilt, the court said: "Mere legislative fiat may not take the place of fact in the determination of issues involving life, liberty or property. 'It is not within the province of the legislature to declare an individual guilty or presumptively guilty of a crime'—citing McFarland v. American Sugar Refining Co., 241 U. S. 79, 36 S. Ct. 498, 60 L. Ed. 899. The Legislature, in the act under consideration, attempted not only to make proof of certain facts presumptive evidence of that which is necessary to constitute a crime, but also attempted to shift the burden of proof by the simple expedient of inserting certain allegations in the information or indictment. In no other instance has the Legislature attempted to relieve the state from proving all the elements necessary to constitute the corpus delicti of the offense charged. The holding seems to us absolutely necessary that such a proceeding is a denial of due process of law under the Constitution of this state (art. 1, § 13) and of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

JOHNSTON v. GROOM et al. (Civ. 6457.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 18, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨931(1)—Appellate court will assume, where evidence was in sharp conflict, that evidence supporting finding was true.

In suit to foreclose mechanic's lien, where evidence on issue whether certain payment released certain of defendants from claim of lien in that amount on building was in sharp conflict, District Court of Appeal, in accordance with rule that, where evidence appears that supports finding made, finding will be sustained, will assume that evidence payment was to be applied towards diminishing lien was the truth.

2. Mechanics' liens ⇨115(4)—Where payment was made with understanding it was to apply so as to decrease mechanic's lien on building, parties were thereby bound (Civ. Code, § 1479).

Where payment to contractor was made with understanding that it was to be applied toward certain building job, so as to decrease lien thereon, creditor receiving money under those conditions was therefore bound by them, under Civ. Code, § 1479, providing that, if debtor, at or before time of payment, directs application of payment to any particular obligation, and creditor receives money, he is bound by direction.

3. Payment ⇨47(1)—Where payment is understood as applying to particular debt, appropriation by either party cannot be changed to injuriously affect rights of third parties.

Where payment is made with understanding that it is to apply towards payment of particular debt, appropriation by either party cannot be changed, so as to injuriously affect rights of third parties.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by R. E. Johnston against Harry C. Groom and others. Judgment for plaintiff in less amount than prayed for, and he appeals. Affirmed.

David Cosgrave, of Redwood City, for appellant.

Ross & Ross, of Redwood City, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued to foreclose a mechanic's lien in the sum of $1,946. The cause was tried before the court without a jury, and resulted in a judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $946 from which he appeals on typewritten transcripts.

The defendant Groom was a building contractor, and in the course of his business constructed a building for the other defendants in Redwood City. The plaintiff was a cement contractor, who furnished the materials for and performed the cement work on the same building under a subcontract with Groom. At about the same time Groom and the plaintiff were engaged in the construction of other buildings under the same arrangements. Groom admittedly owed plaintiff the sum of $1,946 on account of the work and labor performed on the Redwood City building, while his indebtedness to plaintiff on the other contracts amounted to $2,357. On June 1, 1927, acting under Groom's instructions and his arrangement with the plaintiff, Mrs. Groom deposited with the Bank of Italy in Redwood

City her check for $1,000, with instructions to credit the proceeds to plaintiff's account. This was done, and the whole controversy here is whether this payment should be applied to the Redwood City job, or whether the plaintiff could apply it to the general indebtedness of Groom.

The trial court found that the payment of June 1st was made upon the Redwood City contract, and released the remaining defendants from the claim of lien in that amount upon that building. The lien was ordered foreclosed to the extent of the balance, $946, which sum the remaining defendants paid into court following the judgment. The sufficiency of the evidence to support this finding presents the only question on this appeal.

[1] The evidence on this issue is in sharp conflict, but in accordance with the general rule that, where evidence appears that supports the finding made, the finding must be sustained, we will assume that such evidence is the truth, and we will here recite the facts as outlined by respondents, with the mere statement that it was contradicted in almost every particular. The Redwood City contract was referred to by all parties as the "Beeger job No. 2." In May, 1927, appellant approached Groom and asked for a payment of $1,000 on the Beeger job. Groom was leaving for the East, and instructed his wife to pay appellant $1,000 on the Beeger job. Appellant later asked Mrs. Groom for that sum, and then directed her to deposit it with the Bank of Italy to his credit. On June 1st Mrs. Groom deposited her check for $1,000 in the Bank of Italy, with instructions to credit the proceeds to appellant and noted on the check that it was given on account of the Beeger job. Prior to that appellant had approached the respondent Smith, and asked if he could arrange with Groom so that he, the appellant, could get a payment of $1,000 on this same job. After the deposit had been made to his account in the bank, he again saw Smith and told him everything had been fixed up. On July 7th thereafter the appellant and Groom met to settle their accounts, and thereupon, by arrangement between themselves, agreed that this payment of $1,000 should be credited to other indebtedness of Groom. The latter then gave the appellant his note for $1,357, representing the balance of this other indebtedness, and left appellant free to claim the full sum of $1,946 upon his lien for work done on the Beeger job. This evidence fully supports the finding under attack.

[2-4] But appellant argues that, notwithstanding this fact, the creditor and the debtor had the right to apply the payment to such indebtedness as they agreed upon, and that, they having agreed to apply it to the other indebtedness, appellant should be permitted to enforce his lien to the full amount. The proper application of a payment where several obligations exist between the creditor and the debtor is fixed by section 1479, Civil Code. There it is provided that, if the debtor, at or before the time of payment, directs the application of the payment to any particular obligation, and the creditor receives the money, he is bound by the direction. 20 Cal. Jur. 931. Here the finding is that the payment was made under directions to apply it on the account of the Beeger job. The appellant, having received the money under these conditions was, therefore, bound by them. The rule is uniform that, when this has been done, the appropriation by either party cannot be changed so as to injuriously affect the rights of third parties. Goss v. Strelitz, 54 Cal. 640, 645; 30 Cyc. 1251. When a payment has been made on account of a lienable obligation, the owners are third parties whose rights would be injuriously affected by a subsequent appropriation of the payment to another obligation.

Judgment affirmed.

It is policy of Supreme Court to hear appeals upon merits and to avoid, if possible, all forfeiture of substantial rights upon technicalities.

J. F. Bryant and another were convicted of obtaining money under false pretenses, and they appeal. On motion to dismiss the appeal. Motion denied.

Superseding opinion in 273 P. 795.

Charles W. Ostrom, John Henderson Pelletier, and Elliott H. Barrett, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The defendants were convicted on January 27, 1929, in the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles of the crime of obtaining money under false pretenses. On February 1, 1928, they filed their notice of appeal to the District Court of Appeal, but they failed to comply, technically, with section 1247, Penal Code, in that they did not file with the clerk and present an application to the trial court which stated in general terms the ground of appeal and the points upon which the appellants rely. On January 31, 1928, the day when judgment was pronounced upon the verdict, appellants filed a written notice of appeal and also gave oral notice of appeal from the judgment and order denying their respective motions for new trials. On the following day they filed with the clerk of the court in which the proceedings were had the following notice and request, addressed to the clerk of said court:

"Please take notice that the defendants have appealed from the judgment heretofore rendered in the above-entitled action, and state that in order to properly prepare the appeal, it will be necessary for them to have a phonographic copy of the reporter's transcript, together with all the evidence taken upon the trial and of proceedings had in the case relative to testimony taken before the court at the trial of said action and, as well, the clerk's transcript as required by the Penal Code of this state, including the indictment; a copy of the minutes of the trial; a copy of other minutes of the action, including the proceedings on motion and arrest of judgment and new trial; a copy of the written charges given by the court to the jury; a copy of the instructions requested by the defendants and refused by the court, and a copy of instructions requested by defendants and modified by the court, after given; also transcript of any oral charges; a copy of the judgment and any written or printed exhibits offered in evidence at the trial of the cause, and the defendants hereby request that an order of this court be made accordingly."

After the appellants had completed their record upon appeal, a motion was made by the Attorney General to dismiss the appeal, which motion was granted by the District Court of Appeal. On petition therefor, a hearing in this court was granted, and the motion to dismiss is before us for determination.

The attorneys who prepared the papers on appeal evidently relied upon the act of the Legislature (St. 1927, p. 1048) which practically repealed section 1247, Penal Code, but they also evidently overlooked the fact that, by virtue of section 1246, Penal Code, also enacted in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1047), section 1247 remained in force and effect until such time as the Judicial Council had promulgated rules of procedure governing appeals in such cases, which had not been done at the time this appeal was taken.

This mistake is one which might be made readily, and indeed the number of cases in which it has been made bears evidence of the fact that the form of the legislation conditionally repealing section 1247, Penal Code, was in the nature of a trap to the unwary.

[1] It is the policy of this court, of course, to hear appeals upon the merits and to avoid, if possible, all forfeiture of substantial rights upon technicalities.

[2] In the instant case, there was a substantial compliance with section 1247, for it is not disputed that the record on appeal is sufficient in every respect, excepting the failure on the part of appellants to comply with those particular portions of section 1247, Penal Code, which provide that the application filed with the clerk and presented to the trial court should contain a statement in general terms of the grounds of the appeal and the points upon which appellants rely.

This provision is for the benefit of the appellate court to aid it in deciding the points raised upon appeal, and no one else is prejudiced by the omission in this case. In other words, the appellants substantially complied with section 1247, Penal Code, and the defect worked no injury to any one, but resulted merely in an extra burden being placed upon the appellate court. In view of these facts, and the fact that the legislation conditionally repealing section 1247, Penal Code, is in a form which may readily mislead, we are disposed to take the view that the appeal should be heard upon its merits.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

SEAWELL, J. I dissent. This case was originally decided by this court January 15, 1929 (273 P. 795), and upon a rehearing granted, a majority of the court have joined in the above decision, which holds contrary to said original decision. Nothing said in the main opinion has caused me to depart from the views as set forth in said original decision and I, therefore, adopt so much of said decision as may be necessary to state the situation and the law applicable thereto:

"It is not disputed that the record on appeal is sufficient in every respect, excepting the failure on the part of appellants to comply with those particular portions of section 1247, Penal Code, which we have indicated by symbols of emphasis and which provide that the appellant 'Must, within five days [upon appeal taken], file with the clerk and present an application to the trial court, stating in general terms the grounds of the appeal and the points upon which the appellant relies, and designate what portions of the phonographic reporter's notes it will be necessary to have transcribed to fairly present the points relied upon. If such application is not filed within said time, the appeal is wholly ineffectual and shall be deemed dismissed and the judgment or order may be enforced as if no appeal had been taken.'

"It is not contended by appellants that they complied with that portion of said statute which provides for the filing with the clerk and the presentation to the trial court of an application containing a statement of the grounds of appeal and the points upon which the appellants relied. It is appellants' contention that section 1247, Penal Code, was directly and unqualifiedly repealed by the Legislature of 1927 [St. 1927, p. 1048] and was not effective at the time the appellants attempted to perfect their appeal, to wit, February 1, 1928. The Attorney General, on the other hand, contends that said section remained effective by virtue of the saving clause of section 1246, which by amendment [St. 1927, p. 1047] was made a part of said section by the same act which also conditionally repealed said section 1247. Said amended section 1246 became effective in the latter part of July, 1927, and reads: 'The record on appeal shall be made up and filed in such time and manner as shall be prescribed in rules to be promulgated by the Judicial Council. Until such rules are promulgated, the time and manner provided by statutes in force on January 1, 1927, shall govern.' * * *

"By article 6, § 1a, subd. 5, of the Constitution, as amended, the Judicial Council may adopt or amend rules of practice and procedure for the several courts not inconsistent with laws that are in force. It is conceded that, at the time the motion was made to dismiss the appeal, the Judicial Council had not promulgated any rules on the subject.

"Sections 1246 and 1247, Penal Code, and successive sections amended conditionally or unqualifiedly repealed are in pari materia and have to do with the preparation and perfection or dismissals of appeals and were considered in one act. There can be no doubt that it was the intention of the Legislature to continue in force the rules of procedure then in effect until such times as said procedural rules should become supplanted by a system that would better harmonize with the new order of things, which was assuming shape under the supervision and direction of the Judicial Council. In People v. McClellan (Cal. App.) 263 P. 841, it was held that section 1247, relates to the time and manner of making up and filing the record on appeal, and, if not complied with, the appeal would be subject to dismissal. There can be but little doubt that the Legislature regarded the subject matter of said section as constituting a part of the procedure upon appeal, inasmuch as said section provided not only that 'if such application is not filed within said time, the appeal is wholly ineffectual,' but that it 'shall be deemed dismissed.' This language renders the act self-executing.

"The intent of the Legislature and the object it had in mind must not be lost sight of in interpreting or giving effect to statutes, and, where apparent conflict or uncertainty exists in the several provisions of an act, or where several separate acts promotive of a general plan or system are not harmonious or congruous, it is the duty of courts to look to the purpose or intent of the Legislature and give that construction to the various acts which the reason and sense of the situation manifestly demand. 23 Cal. Jur. 725.

"The question whether a repeal of a prior statute, absolute in terms, can be limited in its operation and effect for any reason has frequently arisen; and the decisions of the courts have been uniform, that while the language of the repealing clause must be accepted as the expression of the will of the Legislature, and effect given to it according to its terms, unless it appears, although the language of the appeal was general and unqualified, that it was intended to be used in a qualified or limited sense; that whenever that intent is discovered effect must be given to it, as in the interpretation of other acts." (Authorities cited.)

"Statutes in pari materia relate to the same subject, the same person or thing, or the same class of persons or things, and are to be read together, for the reason that it is to be implied that a code of statutes relating to one subject is governed by the same spirit, and are intended to be harmonious and consistent. They are to be taken together as if they were one in law, as one statute.' (Authorities cited.) Smith v. People, 47 N. Y. 330, 338.

"While section 4 of chapter 620 of the Statutes of 1927 (p. 1047) purports on its face to repeal, upon the effective date thereof, section 1247 of the Penal Code, yet, if in construing said chapter 620, as a whole, it can reasonably be said that the Legislature intended such repealing clause to become effective only as of the time the Judicial Council might promulgate the rules contemplated by section 1 of said chapter 620, then this court may very properly disregard a literal interpretation of the repealing clause and give effect to the legislative intent. That the courts should not literally construe an express repealing clause contained in a statute, but must, when ascertainable, give expression to the legislative intent as evidenced by other portions of the same or contemporaneous statutes, has long since been judicially determined. Smith v. People, supra; State v. Moorhouse, 5 N. D. 406, 408-411, 67 N. W. 140; State v. Joyce, 307 Mo. 49, 269 S. W. 623, 625; Golden Valley County v. Lundin, 52 N. D. 420, 203 N. W. 317, 319; Hogg v. Bd. of Com'rs, 57 Colo. 463, 141 P. 478, 480; Parshall v. State, 62 Tex. Cr. R. 177, 138 S. W. 759, 764; Attorney General v. Duncan, 76 N. H. 11, 78 A. 925, 927; Indianapolis Union R. Co. v. Waddington 169 Ind. 448, 82 N. E. 1030, 1032. The New York case above cited (Smith v. People, supra) appears to be a leading case upon the subject. The rule announced in the foregoing cases is again well stated in 26 Am. & Eng. Encyclopedia of Law (2d Ed.) 720, § 5, as follows:

"A clause in a statute purporting to repeal other statutes is subject to the same rules of interpretation as other enactments, and the intent, if fairly expressed, must prevail over a mere literal interpretation clearly at variance with such intent. But even where the repealing statute is broad enough in its terms to embrace a particular earlier statute, yet if it is apparent that it is not the legislative intent to repeal such statute, a literal interpretation of the repealing act will not be adopted.'

"As was said in State v. Moorhouse, supra, the repealing clause must be construed 'in the light of the circumstances surrounding its enactment, and also in connection with other statutes passed at the same time as part of the general scheme of legislation of which this repealing statute was only a subordinate feature.'

"While it may be true that the statement provided for in section 1247 of the Penal Code does not, in strictness, constitute a part of the record on appeal, its preparation and filing is a necessary step, not only in the perfection of a criminal appeal but is essential to a proper presentation of the record on such appeal. Rhodes v. Sargent, 17 Cal. App. 54, 57, 118 P. 727; People v. Fleming, 166 Cal. 357, 375, 136 P. 291, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 881. This being so, it is apparent that the Legislature intended the repeal of section 1247, supra, by section 4, c. 620, Stats. 1927, to be suspended until the rules contemplated by section 1 of said chapter should be promulgated and adopted by the Judicial Council.

"Appellants did not file with the clerk and present the application to the court, stating in general terms the grounds of appeal, etc.; nor was it contained in any record on appeal. This being so, the appeal was ineffectual and was properly dismissed if the saving clause of section 1246 was valid and applied to section 1247. No case has been called to our attention by appellants which held that an adoption of rules of procedure by reference is not permissible.

"Acts and statutes, which provide that a method of procedure in effect at a designated past period of time shall be continued in force, are not uncommon, and are generally accepted as being within the power of the Legislature. The amendment of section 1246, Penal Code, and the repeal of section 1247, Penal Code, accomplished in the same act, gave notice as to the procedure that was in effect. If appellants were not informed of the adoption of rules by the Judicial Council in some approved method, they could have safely relied upon the procedure as it formerly stood."

For the foregoing reasons I am constrained to dissent.

I concur: WASTE, C. J.

CRESCENT WHARF & WAREHOUSE CO.
v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES.
(L. A. 9938.)

Supreme Court of California. June 26, 1929.

1. Eminent domain ⇨271—Municipality in taking private property for public use is neither trespasser nor tort-feasor, in absence of negligence.

Municipality, having the right to take private property for a public use, in doing so is neither a trespasser nor a tort-feasor, in the absence of some act of negligence committed in the prosecution of public works.

2. Eminent domain ⇨277—Owner's right to compensation for private property taken for public use by municipality was subject to charter provision requiring claim within six months (Const. art. 1, § 14).

Owner's right to compensation under Const. art. 1, § 14, for private property taken for public use by municipality, was subject to charter provision requiring claim for money or damages to be presented within six months after occurrence from which damages arose or after last item of account or claim accrued.

3. Eminent domain ⇨167(1)—Mode or procedure for taking or payment for property may be provided by statute or charter, in absence of constitutional provision.

Where state Constitution provides neither the mode for the taking nor for the payment for private property taken for public use, the mode or procedure may be provided by either statutory or charter provisions.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben A. Schmidt, Judge.

Action by the Crescent Wharf & Warehouse Company against the City of Los Angeles. Judgment of dismissal, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

O'Melveny, Millikin & Tuller, William W. Clary, and O'Melveny, Tuller & Myers, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., Clyde M. Leach, Asst. City Atty., and Joseph T. Watson, Deputy City Atty., all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J. This appeal is taken from a judgment of dismissal entered upon demurrer sustained without leave to amend. The demurrer was based upon general grounds and upon the more specific ground that the alleged claim sued upon was not presented to the defendant city of Los Angeles "within six months after the occurrence from which the alleged damages arose or within six months after the claim accrued," as provided by the charter of said city.

The property involved has its situs at and upon San Pedro bay, city and county of Los Angeles, and is a part of the tidal lands held in trust by the city of Los Angeles for the use and benefit of the people of the state. Said property alleged to have been taken and actually physically destroyed by plaintiff without compensation therefor having first been made and to recover which compensation this action was commenced, as hereafter described, was granted to said city of Los Angeles by act of the Legislature May 1, 1911. Stats. 1911, p. 1256. See, also, People v. California Fish Co., 166 Cal. 576, 138 P. 79. The complaint segregates or classifies said property as follows:

(1) A wharf 304.75 feet in length, situate on leased property; (2) a certain leasehold estate arising from a lease executed by Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, a corporation, as lessor, and appellant herein, as lessee, dated December 23, 1901, for a term of 50 years; (3) all rights, interest, and privileges granted to appellant by virtue of an ordinance adopted by the board of supervisors of the county of Los Angeles January 22, 1904, for the term of 20 years, beginning February 15, 1904, which ordinance authorized appellant to construct a wharf upon lands fronting upon and extending into the waters of San Pedro harbor and to collect and take tolls thereon during said term of 20 years.

It will not be necessary to determine whether appellant, at the time respondent caused said wharf to be destroyed as an incident to the dredging and widening of the main channel of San Pedro harbor, owned any interest in or right to said wharf or the soil upon which said wharf had its support, for the reason that no demand was presented to said city sooner than two years and eleven months after the claim for money or damages accrued. Plaintiff alleged that during "the months of June, July, August and September, 1923, defendant took the property of plaintiff * * * and appropriated it for public use, namely, for widening the main channel of San Pedro Harbor." No demand was made upon said city of Los Angeles until August 3, 1926, on which day a demand in writing was made for the payment of the sum of $40,445.35. Thirteen days thereafter the demand was disallowed in toto.

Section 376, Los Angeles City Charter, contains the provision with which appellant failed to comply. It reads as follows: "No suit shall be brought on any claim for money or damages against the City of Los Angeles, or any officer or board of the city until a demand for the same has been presented as herein provided, and rejected in whole or in part. If rejected in part, suit may be brought to recover the whole. Except in those cases where a shorter period of time is otherwise provided by law, all claims for damages against the city must be presented within six (6) months after the occurrence from which the damages arose, and all other claims or demands shall be presented within six (6) months after the last item of the account or claim accrued."

Appellant takes the position that since its right to compensation springs directly from the Constitution (art. 1, § 14) it cannot be barred by any charter provision or any statute of limitation short of the period required by law for acquiring property by adverse possession.

Such a claim can only find support upon the theory that the guaranty of the Constitution to the citizens that the state or its agencies may not take or damage private property for public uses without making provision for the just compensation therefor to the owner, as provided by said article 1, section 14, State Constitution, ex proprio vigore, immunizes the owner of property so taken from the bar of the statute of limitations, and perhaps other statutory requirements, which affect the investment and divestment of title to real property generally. A distinction is assumed to exist as to the extent and stability of property rights conferred by statutes and those conferred by the express mandate of the Constitution. In order to accept appellant's conclusion it is necessary to start with the premise that a property right which arises from the express command of the Constitution vests a right or title in the grantee superior to any right or title that may be founded upon statute in the absence of such a constitutional pronouncement. The Constitution does not attempt to make a distinction between the ownership of property acquired by any of the methods provided by law, and there is no such thing as degrees of security by which real property shall be held and enjoyed. All that the framers of the Constitution meant to do was to protect the citizen in his ownership of property against the state or its agencies appropriating private property to public uses against the will of the owner without making just compensation for all damages which the owner should sustain by the exercise of governmental power. It was not intended to remove the subject-matter beyond the operation of reasonable statutory enactments which affect property rights generally, such as the bar of the statute of limitations.

[1-3] Appellant has cited decisions of other jurisdictions which have given expression to the doctrine that where land is taken under the right of eminent domain "there can be no question about their [owners'] right to recover the damages sustained, if the same have not been paid, for no statute of limitations can bar their constitutional right to actual compensation for the land so taken from their ancestor. * * *" Carter v. Ridge Turnpike Co., 208 Pa. 565, 57 A. 988. In the state of Pennsylvania a rule of evidence obtained to the effect that after the lapse of twenty years from the time the damages accrued it would be presumed that said damages had been paid. Included in the list of cases relied upon by appellant—most of which are within the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania—are McFarlan v. Morris, 44 N. J. Law, 471; Faulk v. Missouri River, etc., R. Co., 28 S. D. 1, 132 N. W. 233, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1130; Clark v. Water Commissioners, 148 N. Y. 1, 42 N. E. 414; Kineaid v. City of Seattle, 74 Wash. 617, 134 P. 504, 135 P. 820. To this list may be added the most recent case decided by the Washington state Supreme Court, Wong Kee Jun et ux. v. Seattle, 143 Wash. 479, 255 P. 645, 52 A. L. R. 625. The case last cited is the latest in point of time (1927) which may be offered in support of appellant's contention. Because of a condition of confusion and uncertainty existing in the law of that state, a review of all former decisions was made as to whether damages for injury to private property caused by the improvement of a highway, if there is in fact an exercise of the power of public domain, could be limited to such damages as accrued within the time limited by the municipal ordinance for giving notice of claims. In that case the plaintiffs sought to recover damages to their real property caused by a slide resulting from the removal of lateral support by the city in its regrade of certain adjacent streets some years before the action was commenced. The question whether the plaintiffs were limited, as prescribed by the city charter, in their action for damages to such damages only which may have been sustained within a period beginning 30 days prior to the filing of the claim, was decided in the negative and a charter provision requiring the presentation of a claim as a prerequisite to bringing said action was held to be inoperative. The holding of the courts upon which appellant relies as authority for its contention is that a claim for "compensation" or for "damages" to the owner of real property resulting from an appropriation of his property is in its nature the price of the land taken and is not an ordinary contract claim, and therefore the claimant may not as a condition precedent be required to present it to the city and to require the claimant to do so is a violation of the constitutional provision that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation first being made to its owner; that the city does not go upon the lands as a trespasser. Having the right to take, a municipality is neither a trespasser nor a tortfeasor in the absence of some act of negligence committed in the prosecution of public works. It is further contended that the right to compensation is not dependent upon an implied promise to pay, a doctrine which we think is not only contrary to the great weight of authority as expressed in the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, notably United States v. Great Falls Mfg. Co., 112 U. S. 645, 5 S. Ct. 306, 28 L. Ed. 846, and many subsequent decisions, and in the decisions of various state courts, but also contrary to the fundamental principles of the rules of equity. When a state Constitution such as ours provides neither the mode for the taking or for the payment of private property, the mode or procedure may be provided by either statutory or charter provisions. The following quotation taken from 16 Cal. Jur. 396, 397 is supported by the decisions of this state: "The power to impose reasonable periods of limitation is unquestioned, for a statement of a right in a constitution is always subject to reasonable statutory limitations of the time in which such right may be enforced, unless the constitution itself declares otherwise. The legislature may prescribe the different periods of time within which different species of obligations may be enforced and may prescribe that as to some obligations there shall be no limitation of time. And it has been said that it is competent for the legislature to declare that there shall be no limitation of time against the enforcement of any obligation of a foreign corporation; its declaration that upon the failure to file a designation of a person upon whom process may be served, the corporation shall be denied the benefit of the statute of limitations is only an exercise of this power. The time for presenting claims against municipalities may be prescribed by their charters."

The case of Bancroft v. City of San Diego, 120 Cal. 432, 52 P. 712, is not only in point on the question urged by appellant, but it is peculiarly applicable for the reason that it arises out of the same situation found to exist in the cases relied upon by appellant. Mrs. Bancroft owned property in the city of San Diego fronting on a street which suffered damages by reason of the changing of the street grade. She failed to present a claim for damages to the common council within the six months' period prescribed by the city charter or at all. The policy of a charter adopting a six months' period in which claims for damages to property, which is in a sense a taking of the property, is held to be beyond question. The reason for the rule was thus stated by Mr. Justice Wilbur in Western Salt Co. v. City of San Diego, 181 Cal. 696, 186 P. 345:

"The reason for this type of legislation, requiring claims to be first presented to the legislative body of a city or county before suit is brought is thus stated in an early case in this state: 'We think the intention of the legislature was to prevent the revenue of the county from being consumed in litigation, by providing that an opportunity of amicable adjustment should be first afforded to the county, before she could be charged with the costs of a suit.' * * * This reason applies with like force to all claims against a city, however originating.

"It is, however, claimed that this provision of the charter is invalid for the reason that the freeholders' charter conflicts with the general law, and is only supreme in 'municipal affairs.' * * * This contention is predicated upon the proposition that by the general law a complaint for damages is a sufficient presentation of a demand against an individual or private corporation. The question involved here, however, is an entirely different one, namely, the method of securing payment of claims against a municipality, an agency of the state. There is no general law upon that subject, but the charter of each municipality prescribes the method for such payment. The charter controls and, as the plaintiff has failed to present his claim for damages within the time provided by the charter, the demurrer was properly sustained."

We may add to what is above said that it is important to municipalities in making preparations for carrying cities through each fiscal year to be informed within a reasonable time in advance as to the indebtedness or liability that they are expected to meet. Otherwise claims which should have and could have been provided for, had a demand been made within a reasonable time after liability had accrued, may accumulate to the disadvantage of the claimant as well as to the financial embarrassment of the city. The policy of such ordinances is sound as applied to the affairs of municipalities, and there can be no constitutional objection to the enactment of charter provisions which require demands to be presented within a reasonable period after their accrual.

Other cases of this jurisdiction which sustain the ruling of the trial court are: Bigelow v. Los Angeles, 141 Cal. 503, 75 P. 111; Spencer v. Los Angeles, 180 Cal. 103, 179 P. 163; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Rolph, 184 Cal. 557, 194 P. 1005.

In re HEULER'S ESTATE.

HEULER v. HEULER.

(L. A. 10528.)

Supreme Court of California. June 21, 1929.

1. Wills ⚭87—Intent of testator is determinative whether instrument is testamentary in character.

The intent of testator is the important question in determining whether instrument proposed as will was testamentary in character.

2. Wills ⚭93—Acquiescence of wife in marriage agreement is immaterial in determining whether instrument was testamentary disposition of testator's property.

Acquiescence of testator's wife in marriage agreement is immaterial in determining whether instrument setting forth such agreement was testamentary disposition of testator's property.

3. Wills ⚭87—Marriage agreement giving life estate in one-third of income with remainder to testator's children by first marriage, who also took residue in equal shares, held testamentary in character.

Marriage agreement between testator and wife, executed before marriage, which stipulated that wife should enjoy life income of one-third of testator's property with remainder to testator's children by former marriage, who were also given residue of estate in equal portions, held testamentary in character in view of other evidence.

4. Wills ⚭179—Marriage contract testamentary in character must be given effect, where later will was defectively executed.

Where testamentary disposition revoking disposition made by marriage agreement failed because of defective execution, the earlier disposition made by marriage contract testamentary in character must be given effect.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter J. Desmond, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of George T. Heuler, deceased. Proceeding by George E. Heuler to have admitted to probate as decedent's will a certain marriage contract, contested by Christina Heuler. From an adverse judgment, contestant appeals. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion of District Court of Appeal in 272 P. 301.

Merriam, Rinehart & Merriam, of Pasadena, for appellant.

Horace S. Wilson and Constan Jensen, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. This is an appeal by Christina Heuler, wife of deceased, from an order admitting to probate as the last will of George T. Heuler, deceased, a certain document in the handwriting of George T. Heuler, deceased, which reads as follows:

"Marriage Contract.

"The following agreement between George T. Heuler, on the one part, and Christina Wagner on the other part, was executed on Monday, the 4th day of January, 1909. George T. Heuler is entering the state of matrimony on Tuesday the 5th day of January, 1909, after this mutual and legally witnessed agreement. If George T. Heuler departs from this life first, so shall Christina Wagner receive her legal third share only under the following conditions. After an honest, conservative estimate shall the third part of my estate be converted into cash and given over to a trust company where Christina Wagner may draw the interest thereof after six months until the end of her life.

"The other two-thirds shall be divided equally among my three children of my first marriage, or their heirs, or their survivors. Also shall my three children George, Leo, Erna after the death of the above mentioned Christina Wagner receive the above mentioned capital.

"If, on the other hand Christina Wagner departs from this life before George T. Heuler so shall George T. Heuler, her husband, inherit all moveable property which she now owns or shall own, without reservation, without interference from her relatives.

"[Signed] George T. Heuler
"Christina Wagner."

[1, 2] The only question upon the appeal is whether or not deceased intended this document as a testamentary one.

It is difficult to cite cases which may serve as precedents, as each case is decided upon its own peculiar facts, and there is a wide variety in the surrounding facts and circumstances of each case. The governing inquiry, of course, is as to the intention of the deceased. We think the language of the foregoing instrument clearly indicates testamentary intent, and that the surrounding facts and circumstances in evidence suggest that the deceased, at the time he wrote out the foregoing document in his own handwriting, intended to dispose of his property after his death. The document disposes of all of deceased's property, leaving it, ultimately, to his children and their descendants. These children were the issue of a first marriage. That marriage and a second marriage of Heuler had resulted in a divorce, and he was about to enter upon his third marriage with appellant here at the time the foregoing document was executed. He made a reasonable provision for his third wife in the event of his death by giving her a life interest in the income from one-third of his estate. He not only provided for his children after his death, but mailed a copy of the document involved here to each of these children. The document was signed by the woman who was to be his wife, thus showing her acquiescence, which, however, is immaterial.

[3,4] The only fact in the instant case which would seem to justify the position of appellant that the document set forth herein is not a will is that years after the execution of this so-called "marriage contract," the deceased attempted to make a will leaving to his wife a life interest in all his property, while by the "marriage contract" she had been given a life interest in but one-third of the property. This later document was ineffective because of defective execution. However, even this circumstance, when considered with all the attendant conditions, does not make the holding of the trial court erroneous. Indeed, it seems but a natural occurrence and entirely consistent with the view that the earlier document was intended as a testamentary disposition of the property of deceased. It will be remembered that deceased had entered into two prior marriages, both of which had resulted disastrously. He was about to make a third venture in matrimony. He was nearly 60 years old and had three children of his first marriage. He wished to provide for these children and also to make some provision for his wife. He entered into a testamentary disposition of his property to meet these desires, and the wife agreed to this. Later, after over 15 years of married life and after educating one of his sons as a physician and after a quarrel with the husband of his daughter, all of which appears from the language of the will defectively executed or from the testimony in the record, he changed his views as to what was an equitable distribution of his property and attempted to give his wife a life interest in all the property and the balance to be divided among his children, with the exception of the son, whom he had sent to college, and he assigned, as a reason for his exclusion, the fact that he had received his share in the expense of his education. It seems clear to us that the deceased made a will, the document under consideration here, upon entering into his marriage with the appellant. Later, he attempted to make another will by which she would have received a larger share of his estate. This second will would have been, perhaps, a more equitable distribution of his property, but that problem is not before us. The decedent having executed one testamentary disposition of his property, this court is bound by the terms thereof in the absence of a legal revocation thereof. In this case, a revocation was attempted by drawing a new will, but, unfortunately, that attempt failed to comply with the statute and so had no force and effect. The law requires, then, that the earlier disposition of the property be given effect.

The judgment is affirmed.

HEULER v. RINEHART.

(L. A. 10527.)

Supreme Court of California. June 21, 1929.

Rehearing Granted July 18, 1929.

Executors and administrators ↔ Appointment of administrator is erroneous, where deceased left valid will.

The appointment of an administrator of an estate is erroneous, where deceased left a valid will.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter J. Desmond, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of George T. Heuler, deceased. On the petition of George E. Heuler, letters of administration issued to Jay D. Rinehart were revoked, and the administrator appeals. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion 272 P. 304.

Merriam, Rinehart & Merriam, of Pasadena, for petitioner.

Horace S. Wilson and Constan Jensen, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. This is an appeal from an order revoking letters of administration and the appointment of Jay D. Rinehart as the administrator of the estate of George T. Heuler, deceased. If the deceased left a valid will which was properly admitted to probate, the order involved upon this appeal, appointing an administrator of the estate of an intestate, is, of course, erroneous. In the companion case of Heuler v. Heuler (L. A. No. 10528 of the records of this court), this day decided (278 P. 1031), it is held that the deceased died testate and that the document offered for probate as his last will was properly admitted to probate. That decision disposes of this appeal.

The order and judgment appealed from are affirmed.

MURRAY et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA, IN AND FOR MARIN COUNTY et al. (S. F. 13372.)

Supreme Court of California. June 20, 1929.

1. Wills ⚡269—Children of mother's sisters and brothers named as class in will were not entitled to notice of probate proceedings as "legatees named" (Code Civ. Proc. § 1304).

Where will bequeathed personal property to children of mother's sisters and brothers as a class, it was not necessary, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1304, to serve notice of time appointed for probate of will upon such legatees named as class, since words "addressed to legatees named," within such statute requiring notice, means that persons, either natural or artificial, whose names appear on face of will as legatees, must be notified by mail if their names appear in such manner that they may be addressed by names so appearing with reasonable assurance that envelope so addressed would reach addressee in due course of mail.

2. Wills ⚡281—Failure to set forth in petition for probate specific names and addresses of legatees included within class did not deprive court of jurisdiction to try will contest (Code Civ. Proc. § 1300).

Where will bequeathed personal property to children of mother's sisters and brothers, if petitioners for probate of will were required to set forth in petition, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1300, specific names and addresses of legatees included within class mentioned if such names and addresses were known to petitioners, failure to perform that duty, if it existed, did not deprive court of jurisdiction to try contest.

3. Wills ⚡269—Names and residences of heirs not mentioned in petition for probate must be deemed unknown, and clerk need not mail copies of published notice (Code Civ. Proc. § 1300).

Where petition for probate of will under Code Civ. Proc. § 1300, is silent as to names and residences of heirs, they must be deemed by clerk to be unknown to petitioner, and he is not required to mail copies of published notice.

4. Executors and administrators ⚡1—Wills ⚡203—Probate of will and administration of estate is in nature of proceeding in rem.

Probate of a will and the administration of an estate is in the nature of proceeding in rem.

5. Wills ⚡269—Upon filing of petition, publication of notice, and production of will, power to proceed with probate of will attaches (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1300, 1303).

Power to proceed with probate of will attaches upon production of will, filing of petition for probate pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1300, and publication of notice provided by section 1303.

6. Wills ⚡320—Proof of mailing notices of probate proceedings being insufficient, court has power to continue hearing until sufficient proof is produced (Code Civ. Proc. § 1304).

If, upon hearing of application to admit will to probate, proof of mailing notices required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1304, is insufficient, court has power to continue hearing until sufficient proof of mailing be produced.

7. Wills ⚡263—In will contest, contestant is plaintiff, and petitioner for probate is defendant, but only those desiring to oppose contest become parties litigant in such opposition (Code Civ. Proc. § 1312).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1312, the contestant of a will is plaintiff, and petitioner for probate thereof is defendant, and only those who desire to oppose contest become parties litigant in such opposition.

Application by William P. Murray and another for writ of mandamus prayed to be directed to the Superior Court of Marin County, D. M. Young, Judge, to compel respondent to proceed with the trial of a contest of the will of Robert P. Rathbun, deceased. Peremptory writ issued.

Thomas P. Boyd, of San Rafael, and Knight, Boland & Christin, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Thomas, Beedy, Presley & Paramore, of San Francisco, for respondents.

SHENK, J. This is an application for a writ of mandamus to compel the respondent court to proceed with the trial of a contest, before probate, of the will of Robert P. Rathbun, deceased. The will, together with a petition for the probate thereof in the county of Marin, was filed on April 24, 1928. All of the estate of the testator was left to his mother, Emelie Chapman Ashe, with the exception of that portion bequeathed to specifically named legatees, and those coming within the class mentioned in the following provision of the will: "My personal property is to be divided share and share alike among the children of my mothers sisters and brothers. * * * This upon my mothers death."

The petition for the probate of the will set forth the names and addresses of the heirs and legatees of the decedent and stated that the individuals therein named were of lawful age, all in compliance with the requirements of section 1300 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that the petition for the probate of the will must, among other things, show: "3. The names, ages, and residences of the heirs, legatees, and devisees of the decedent, so far as known to the petitioner." Notice of the time set for the hearing of the petition was duly published. Copies of this "notice" were mailed to each of the heirs and to the legatees of the testator specifically named in the will and in the petition at the addresses therein shown. The decedent's surviving widow, Jane Williams Rathbun, one of the legatees specifically named, instituted a contest of the will on numerous grounds. The contest came on for hearing on February 4, 1929, before the respondent judge sitting with a jury. On the second day of the trial the contestant moved the court for an order denying probate on the ground that it did not appear from the affidavit of mailing that notice of the time and place of hearing the petition for the probate of the will had been mailed to the "children" of the decedent's "mother's sisters and brothers" named as a class in the will, and who, it appears, are 21 in number. The court concluded that sufficient notice had not been given, discharged the jury, and refused to proceed further with the hearing of the contest, on the ground of lack of jurisdiction so to do. Whereupon the present proceeding was instituted.

As a return to the alternative writ the respondent judge filed a general and special demurrer to the petition and likewise an answer. It may fairly be said that the issues joined or tendered by both pleadings present questions of law only.

[1] The parties have centered their argument on the proper construction of section 1304 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which, so far as pertinent, provides: "Copies of the notice of the time appointed for the probate of the will must be addressed to the heirs of the testator and the devisees and legatees named in the will at their places of residence, if known to the petitioner. * * * If their places of residence be not known, the copies of the notice may be addressed to them, and deposited in the post office at the county seat of the county where the proceedings are pending. * * *" The petitioners urge that the court had jurisdiction to proceed with the contest for the reason that there was on file an affidavit showing that notice had been mailed to all persons specifically named in the will. It is especially stressed that if the names of the legatees be not shown on the face of the will, notice need not be mailed to them. The respondents insist that when the will designates as legatees the nephews and nieces of the decedent's mother as a class they are named in the will and must each have the statutory notice by mail in order that the court acquire jurisdiction to hear the petition for probate. It is conceded that no notice of the hearing of the application for the probate of the will was mailed to the nephews and nieces of the decedent's mother. The question is squarely presented: Under section 1304 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is it necessary to serve legatees not specifically named in the will but designated therein as a class with copies of the notice of the application for the probate of the will in order that the court have jurisdiction to proceed with a contest of the will before probate?

This question must be answered in the negative. The Code section provides that copies of the notice must be "addressed" to the legatees "named" in the will. This requirement plainly means that the persons, either natural or artificial, whose names appear on the face of the will as legatees, must be notified by mail if their names appear in such manner that they may be addressed by the name so appearing with reasonable assurance that an envelope so addressed would reach the addressee in due course of mail. In a broad sense it may be said that the "children of my mother's sisters and brothers" are named in the will as legatees, but a communication addressed to them under that designation and deposited in the post office at the county seat of the county wherein the proceedings are pending would be entirely futile as affording any notice. It may be assumed that before distribution it will be necessary for the court, on proper evidence, to ascertain who the nephews and nieces of the decedent's mother are by name, but when evidence as to the identity of said persons is necessary the assertion that they are named in the will would seem to be negated.

[2-6] It may also be assumed that it was the duty of the petitioners to set forth in the petition for the probate of the will the specific names and addresses of the legatees included within the class mentioned if such names and addresses were known to the petitioners, but a failure to perform that duty, if it existed, did not deprive the court of jurisdiction to try the contest. Indeed it was said in Nicholson v. Leatham, 28 Cal. App. 597, 153 P. 965, 155 P. 98, that the omission from the petition of a statement of the names, ages, and residences of the heirs, legatees, and devisees of the decedent, even if known to the petitioner, could not operate to deprive the court of jurisdiction, and that when the petition is silent as to the names and residences of the heirs they must be deemed by the clerk to be unknown to the petitioner and he is not required to mail copies of the published notice. The probate of the will and the administration of the estate is in the nature of a proceeding in rem. King v. Chase, 159 Cal. 420, 425, 115 P. 207; 11 Cal. Jur. p. 236. The power to proceed therewith attaches upon the production of the will and the filing of the petition pursuant to section 1300 of the Code of Civil Procedure and the publication of the notice provided for in section 1303 of that Code. Nicholson v. Leatham, supra. If upon the hearing of the application to admit the will to probate the proof of mailing the notices required by said section 1304 be insufficient, the court would have the power to continue the hearing until sufficient proof of mailing be produced. Curtis v. Underwood, 101 Cal. 661, 669, 36 P. 110. It has been held that upon the institution of the contest before probate the offer to prove the will is arrested, and the probate thereof cannot be decreed until the contest is determined. Estate of Gregory, 133 Cal. 131, 65 P. 315; 26 Cal. Jur. p. 1078. However, in Estate of Black, 199 Cal. 257, at page 261, 248 P. 1015, 1016, it was said: "That the order of procedure upon the hearing of the petition for probate and the trial of the contest of the will is within the discretion of the trial court. Some of the cases cited hold that the better practice is to withhold the hearing of the petition for probate until after the trial of the contest of the will in which event, as above indicated, the court need only hear evidence on all the points required by the statute for the validity of a will which were not raised by the contest. * * * Other cases hold that the better practice is to require the proponents of a will to establish a prima facie case preliminarily to the hearing of the contest. * * * Other of the cases simply hold that it is a matter entirely within the discretion of the trial court." But discretion to disturb the order of proof may not be confused with or interrupt jurisdiction to proceed in the exercise of such discretion.

[7] On the contest of a will the contestant is the plaintiff and the petitioner for the probate thereof is the defendant. But only those who desire to oppose the contest become parties litigant in such opposition. Section 1312, Code Civ. Proc.; Estate of Relph, 192 Cal. 451, 221 P. 361; 26 Cal. Jur. p. 1078. In the contest before the respondent court involved in the present proceeding, the petitioners for the probate of the will are resisting the contest. The subject-matter of the controversy and the proper parties are before the court and no satisfactory reason appears to sustain the position of the respondents. The peremptory writ should therefore issue. It is so ordered.

Supreme Court of California. June 27, 1929.

1. Chattel mortgages ⇨172(1)—Mortgagee, having right to reduce property to possession for default, may employ action for claim and delivery (Civ. Code, § 2967).

Where right to reduce property to possession in case of default is conferred upon mortgagee by contract, an action for claim and delivery may be employed to secure possession of it, regardless of which of methods of foreclosure specified in Civ. Code, § 2967, mortgagee intends to employ.

2. Chattel mortgages ⇨290—Mortgage authorizing mortgagee to sell property in manner provided by law and pay costs, including counsel fees, allows reasonable attorney's fees in foreclosure by action (Civ. Code, §§ 2967, 3005; Code Civ. Proc. § 694).

Chattel mortgage, providing that on mortgagor's default mortgagee could take possession of property and proceed to sell property in manner provided by law and from proceeds pay amount of note and all costs of sale including counsel fees, held to allow an attorney's fee in reasonable amount, whether mortgage be foreclosed by action under Code Civ. Proc. § 694, or by summary sale under Civ. Code, §§ 2967, 3005.

Curtis, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

Action by Abner Podrat and others against Oscar Oberndorff, Carrie Belle Watson, and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, Carrie Belle Watson and other defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion in 271 P. 755.

Walters & Mauk and C. S. Mauk, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Max Schleimer, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

O'Melveny, Tuller & Myers and Albert Parker, all of Los Angeles, amici curiæ for defendants and appellants.

PRESTON, J. An appeal in this cause was taken by certain defendants from the whole of the judgment in favor of plaintiffs, foreclosing a chattel mortgage and ordering a sale of the property covered thereby. Since the said appeal the judgment has been satisfied in all respects except as to the item of $517.67 allowed plaintiffs as attorneys' fees and the item of $140.04 allowed as taxes paid. The relationship of the various parties to the issues involved in the action is such that considerable space would be required to explain the situation, but this, if done, would throw no light upon the questions now remaining, and a further statement in this respect is deemed unnecessary. Furthermore, as the appeal is on the judgment roll alone, and the pleadings and findings support the allowance of the item of taxes paid, there is no ground for review of the court's action on this item.

This leaves as the sole question for discussion the power of the court to allow said or any attorney's fee. This question recurs solely upon the following provision of the chattel mortgage: "It is also agreed that if the mortgagor shall fail to make any payment, as in the promissory note provided, then the mortgagee may take possession of the said property, using all necessary force so to do, and may immediately proceed to sell the same in the manner provided by law, and from the proceeds pay the whole amount of said note specified, and all costs of the sale, including counsel fees and not exceeding — per cent. upon the amount due, paying the overplus to the said mortgagor, all of said costs, including said counsel fees, being hereby secured."

Appellants insist that under this clause attorney's fees are allowable only when a sale of the mortgaged premises under foreclosure is made by the summary method provided in the chapter on pledges, Civil Code, §§ 2967 and 3005, and that inasmuch as this method was not followed but the regular method provided by the Code of Civil Procedure was employed, no attorney's fees can be allowed in the action. Admittedly attorney's fees may not be allowed if no warrant is found for such action in the contract of the parties; hence the correct interpretation of the above language of the instrument is required of us.

At the outset reference must again be made to section 2967 of the Civil Code, from which we ascertain that upon default, the mortgagee has either one of two remedies—one by a summary sale as under the chapter on pledges, and the other under the chapter of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to foreclosure proceedings by court action. We should also note the fact that sales had under either method must be conducted in the manner of sales had under execution (Civ. Code, § 3005; Code Civ. Proc. § 726), at which the personal property, if capable of manual delivery, must be present. Section 694, Code Civ. Proc.; Ely v. Williams, 6 Cal. App. 455, 92 P. 393; Wixom v. Davis, 57 Cal. App. 620, 623, 207 P. 694. We should also note the fact that the taking of possession by the mortgagee under his contract with the mortgagor does not give him title, but merely increases the value of his security. Harper v. Gordon, 128 Cal. 489, 61 P. 84; Blodgett v. Rheinschild, 56 Cal. App. 728, 737, 206 P. 674.

[1] If the right to reduce the property to possession in case of default is conferred upon the mortgagee by the contract, an action for claim and delivery may be employed to secure possession of it, and this too whether the mortgagee intends to employ the one method or the other of foreclosure. Indeed, the claim and delivery action may be prosecuted while the action for foreclosure is pending in the court. Ely v. Williams, supra; Ashcroft Estate Co. v. Nelson, 26 Cal. App. 400, 401, 147 P. 101; Blodgett v. Rheinschild, supra; Wixom v. Davis, supra; Harper v. Gordon, supra.

[2] We may now give closer consideration to the language of the mortgage " * * * may immediately proceed to sell the same in the manner provided by law." Is not a sale conducted by either method a compliance with this provision of the contract? The chattel mortgage contains no other language respecting foreclosure than that above set forth. The two methods are not separately identified. Consequently there is no reason to say that a sale under the pledge law is meant and a sale under the foreclosure proceeding provided by the Code of Civil Procedure excluded for each is surely a sale in the manner provided by law. It seems clearly to be the true meaning of the clause that a foreclosure by either method is contemplated and that any such sale conducted under either warrants the allowance of an attorney's fee. Moreover, it would seem that the general language was employed in order to cover both methods.

In the case of Brickell v. Batchelder, 62 Cal. 623, 630, we find the following language: "It would be difficult to detect any difference between a stipulation empowering a mortgagee to proceed to foreclosure on such default, and one giving authority on like default 'to proceed to sell' 'in the manner prescribed by law.' The law prescribes but one mode of sale in the case of mortgaged property, and that is at public outcry, by virtue of an execution issued on a judgment of foreclosure. (Code Civ. Proc., §§ 684, 726, 744.) The power given in the mortgage by the clause just above quoted is to proceed to sell in the manner prescribed by law—which, in our judgment, is in substance the same as a power to proceed to sell by means of an action to foreclose. The power to sell in the manner prescribed by law being given, all means given by law to render such power effectual are also conferred; that is, all means necessary to effectuate a sale in the mode established by law are given. The power to use the lawful means necessary and proper to carry out the express power is conferred and given by an implication as strong and clear as if it was expressed in so many words. (Civ. Code, § 1856.) This is a familiar and well-established rule in the construction of powers. (See Story on Agency, secs. 55, 56, 58, 59, 60, 73; Wharton on Agency, sec. 187.)"

While the above language was used with reference to a real estate mortgage, we see no reason for putting a different construction on the same words when applied to the same subject where personal property is involved. The quotation above set forth was approved in Mercantile Trust Co. v. San Joaquin, etc., Corp. (Cal. App.) 265 P. 583. See, also, Maddox v. Wyman, 92 Cal. 674, 28 P. 838, where the provisions of section 726 et seq. were made applicable to a chattel mortgage with practically the identical language found in the chattel mortgage here.

It is said that certain early cases in Michigan and South Carolina support a conclusion contrary to the one here announced. The basic facts necessary to determine the applicability of these cases are not before us, and what investigation we have been able to make does not confirm a conclusion that the situations there were parallel with the one before us. For example, in the Michigan cases real estate mortgages were referred to which did not contain the language here under consideration. The South Carolina cases cite no authority to sustain them, and the facts contained in the opinions are so meager and the discussions so brief that the reasoning upon which the conclusions are based cannot be fully discerned. And at any rate, we are better satisfied with the interpretation here announced.

Lastly, no reason can be suggested for a mortgagee to have an attorney's fee allowed him where the mortgage is foreclosed by the summary method, where the services of an attorney are not needed, and denied him when foreclosure is by the regular method—a case in which the services of an attorney are usually indispensable. Common reason would also suggest that a debtor in default would prefer to have the foreclosure proceeding conducted according to the method provided by the Code of Civil Procedure, for in such case the element of time would enter as well as a chance to be heard as to the ascertainment and adjudication of the true amount of the indebtedness and fixation of the proper fee.

These facts argue for the broader construction of the language. We therefore conclude that the language of the mortgage in question should be so construed as to allow an attorney's fee in a reasonable amount whether the mortgage be foreclosed by the one method or the other provided by law.

It follows that the judgment appealed from should be in all respects affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; LANGDON, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; SHENK, J.

CURTIS, J. I dissent. There are two distinct and separate methods provided by the Civil Code for the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage, one "in the manner and upon the notice prescribed by the title on 'pledge,'" and the other "by proceedings under the Code of Civil Procedure." Civ. Code, § 2967. The method of foreclosure in the manner and upon the notice prescribed by the title on pledge is a short and summary proceeding, and is one in which the services to be performed by an attorney are very simple, and consequently the charges of such attorney would be small. On the other hand, when the mortgagee resorts to proceedings under the Code of Civil Procedure, he must institute an action in court and prosecute the same until judgment is rendered and a sale under order of court had. These proceedings are much more extended, often quite complicated, and frequently occupy a long period of time in the courts. It is apparent that the charges of an attorney to conduct such proceedings would be far greater than if he were employed to conduct a simple sale of the mortgaged property as a pledge. A mortgagor may be willing, and may agree, to pay a reasonable attorney's fee for the services of an attorney to conduct this less expensive method of foreclosing on the mortgaged property, and may be unwilling to obligate himself to pay the larger attorney's fee incident to a foreclosure of the mortgage by an action in court. The obligation to pay an attorney's fee is a matter governed solely by contract. Boob v. Hall, 107 Cal. 160, 40 P. 117; Clemens v. Luce, 101 Cal. 432, 35 P. 1032. Therefore, where a mortgagor has agreed to pay an attorney's fee simply for services rendered in foreclosure of the mortgage as a pledge, there is no authority on the part of the court, in which an action is instituted to foreclose said mortgage, to enter judgment against him for an attorney's fee in said action.

As before noted, these two methods of foreclosing a chattel mortgage are separate and distinct. In the one the mortgaged property is taken possession of by the mortgagee and sold as a pledge. This method is the one and the only one mentioned or referred to in the chattel mortgage in this action. The clause giving the mortgagee authority to "take possession of the said property, * * * and may immediately proceed to sell the same in the manner provided by law, and from the proceeds pay the whole amount of said note * * * including counsel fees" can only refer to the method of foreclosure in the case of a pledge. For in the foreclosure by an action at law the mortgagee does not take possession of the mortgaged property, but in the decree of foreclosure, the officer named therein is empowered to seize the mortgaged property and sell the same under said decree of foreclosure. Pacific Investment Co. v. Ross, 131 Cal. 8, 63 P. 67. The words "may immediately proceed to sell the same in the manner provided by law" must be read in connection with the words which precede them, and as thus read these words can only mean that the property, after the same has been taken possession of by the mortgagee, must be sold in the manner as provided by law for the sale of pledged property. The majority opinion cites the case of Brickell v. Batchelder, 62 Cal. 623, 630, as containing a contrary holding. It was there held that the words "proceed to sell in the manner prescribed by law" in the mortgage there under consideration, empowered the mortgagee to institute an action to foreclose the mortgage and sell the mortgaged property under execution sale. The mortgage involved in that action, however, was a real estate mortgage, and the decision was based expressly upon the law relative to foreclosure of mortgages upon real property which "prescribes but one mode of sale in the case of mortgaged [real] property." The law is entirely different, as has before been pointed out, regarding mortgaged personal property, concerning which the law expressly and definitely prescribes two modes of sale. That being the case, the words used in the present mortgage can only refer to the mode of foreclosure indicated in the context in which these words are used, and this as indicated above means a foreclosure by the mortgagor taking possession of the mortgaged property and immediately selling the same,

"in the manner and upon the notice prescribed by the title on 'pledge.'"

While this case appears to be one of first impression in this state, the question involved has frequently been before the courts of other jurisdictions. Jones on Mortgages enunciates the rule as follows: "Under a provision in a power of sale for an attorney's fee in case of foreclosure by (seizure and sale) no allowance can be made, if the mortgage is foreclosed in chancery instead." 3 Jones on Mortgages, p. 520, § 2060, citing Van Marter v. McMillan, 39 Mich. 304; Sage v. Riggs, 12 Mich. 313, and Hardwick v. Bassett, 29 Mich. 17. All these cases are directly in point. For instance, as was said in the case of Sage v. Riggs, supra: "The error complained of in this decree is the nonallowance of $100 attorney's fee for foreclosing the mortgage, provided for in the power of sale. It is insisted complainant is entitled to the $100, whether the foreclosure is in chancery, or at law by advertisement and sale under the power. It is not in a separate clause of the mortgage, standing by itself and providing a fee for foreclosing the mortgage generally, but in the power of sale of which it is a part. The language of the power is, 'rendering the surplus moneys, if any there be, to the parties of the first part, their heirs, executors or administrators, after deducting the costs and charges of such vendue and sale aforesaid, and also one hundred dollars as an attorney fee, should any proceedings be taken to foreclose this indenture.' The meaning of the words, 'should any proceedings be taken to foreclose this indenture,' relied on by appellant, is easier asked than answered—nor is it necessary to decide. For they must be understood and construed with reference to the subject-matter of the power, that is, a foreclosure by advertisement and sale of the mortgaged premises, and not a foreclosure in equity, of which no mention is made in the power or in any part of the mortgage." In the case of Hardwick v. Bassett, supra, the opinion was rendered by Judge Cooley, and in part is as follows: "This is a foreclosure case in which a bill has been taken as confessed against all the defendants, and decree entered for the amount due on the mortgage, including seventy-five dollars for an attorney's fee, the power of sale having provided that in case of foreclosure 'a reasonable number of dollars' might be deducted from the proceeds of sale for an attorney's solicitor's or counselor's fee. The allowance of this sum was erroneous, as the clause which permitted it could only have reference to a foreclosure under the power of sale. Sage v. Riggs, 12 Mich. 313." In the case of Van Marter v. McMillan, supra, the identical question was involved and the court on the authority of Sage v. Riggs, supra, struck out the allowance for attorney's fees. This same question has been before the Supreme Court of South Carolina in two well-considered cases. In the case of Brown et al. v. Kolb, 92 S. C. 309, 75 S. E. 529, it is said: "The mortgage provided that on default the mortgagee might seize and sell the property, and that upon the sale 'he shall apply the proceeds of such sale, after deducting all expenses and charges, including attorney's fees, toward the payment and discharge of the indebtedness,' etc. Under a similar contract it was held in Walker v. Killian, 62 S. C. 482, 40 S. E. 887, that the mortgagee could not claim the fees if he foreclosed by action, and not by seizure under the power." In this action the judgment was modified by striking therefrom the attorney's fees.

My attention has not been called to a single case, in any jurisdiction supporting the rule enunciated in the majority opinion. In the face of the well-considered cases above mentioned, in which some of our most eminent American jurists, including Judge Cooley of Michigan, have participated, it seems ill advised for this court to prescribe a rule in conflict with all the adjudicated cases to be found in the reports, and contrary to the views of our most reputable text writers. Besides, it does not seem either equitable or just that the court should fasten on the unfortunate mortgagor, who has been unable to meet the payments called for by his mortgage, an obligation to pay the necessarily larger fee to which an attorney would be entitled in a foreclosure action, when his only contract was to pay the nominally small charge incident to summary proceedings to foreclose said mortgage as a pledge. In my opinion the judgment in this action should be modified by striking therefrom the provisions thereof allowing plaintiff an attorney's fee for foreclosing said chattel mortgage.

Supreme Court of California. June 25, 1929.

I. Mortgages ☞33(5)—Usury ☞18—Agreement that defendant should take title to property, and that plaintiff should have right to repurchase, held a usurious loan and the conveyance a mortgage.

Agreement under which defendant was to put up the amount necessary to release building site from lien of trust and take conveyance thereto, and building was to be erected from proceeds of mortgage to be placed thereon, and plaintiffs were to have privilege of repurchasing for a specified amount, held a loan at a usurious rate of interest and the conveyance a mortgage.

2. Appeal and error ⇨231(2)—General objection to filing of amended complaint is insufficient claim of error.

A general objection to the filing of an amended complaint at the trial was an insufficient claim of error.

3. Pleading ⇨248(2)—Amended complaint based on same state of facts as original, did not introduce new cause of action because it sought equitable, instead of legal, relief.

Where original and amended complaints were both based on the same state of facts, the amended complaint did not introduce a new cause of action merely because the original complaint prayed for a money judgment and the amended complaint for equitable relief.

4. Dismissal and nonsuit ⇨54—Plaintiff may not be dismissed because of mistake as to relief to which entitled.

There is but one form of action in California, and plaintiff may not be dismissed merely because he is mistaken in the nature of the relief to which he is entitled.

5. Election of remedies ⇨7(1)—Change from law to equity side of court does not bring about election when opposing party is not prejudiced.

Change from law to equity side of court by amendment of prayer for relief does not bring about election of remedies, if the change involves no prejudice to opposing party.

6. Compromise and settlement ⇨18(3)—Offer to restore was not necessary when plaintiff received nothing under compromise agreement sought to be canceled (Civ. Code, § 1691).

Where plaintiffs who had caused land to be conveyed to defendant as security, in order to facilitate sale to third party, entered into compromise agreement under which they executed quitclaim deed and permitted decree to be entered quieting title in defendants, but defendants failed to carry out the compromise agreement, and claimed to own the property, notice of rescission and offer to restore, as contemplated by Civ. Code, § 1691, was not necessary to authorize cancellation of the compromise agreement, as plaintiff received nothing under the agreement.

7. Mortgages ⇨8—Transaction may be both a mortgage and a resulting trust.

It is possible for a transaction to be at one and the same time a mortgage and a resulting trust.

8. Mortgages ⇨8—Foreclosure is ordinarily necessary, though transaction gives rise to resulting trust.

So long as transaction retains features of mortgage, foreclosure is ordinarily necessary, even though transaction may also give rise to a resulting trust.

9. Mortgages ⇨8—That conveyance was by third person instead of alleged mortgagor did not make it a resulting trust rather than a mortgage.

Where plaintiffs caused real estate to be conveyed to defendant as security, fact that deed was not made directly by plaintiffs, but by bank which held legal title, did not alone make transaction a resulting trust instead of a mortgage.

10. Compromise and settlement ⇨8(3)—Party's acts held fraudulent as respected right to cancel compromise agreement.

Where plaintiffs caused real estate to be conveyed to individual defendant as security, and, to facilitate sale to third party, entered into compromise agreement under which they executed quitclaim deed, and permitted decree to be entered quieting title in corporate defendant to which individual defendant had conveyed, defendants' acts held to show fraud, as respected cancellation of the compromise agreement.

11. Mortgages ⇨608½—Where decree ordered accounting and reconveyance, defendants who had conveyed to corporation controlled by them could not complain because required to join in reconveyance.

Where decree declared conveyance to individual defendants a mortgage, and directed an accounting, and ordered reconveyance on payment of amount found due, individual defendants who had conveyed to corporation controlled by them could not claim error in requirement that they join in the deed of conveyance.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Stephen G. Long, Judge.

Action by the Rosemead Company, a common-law trust, and others, against the Shipley Company and others for an accounting. From a decree in favor of plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Edward Judson Brown, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Charles W. Fournl, Ingle Carpenter, and Edward W. Tuttle, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PRESTON, J. By it the plaintiff, Rosemead Company, a common-law trust, is declared the owner of the property in suit. As incidental to this relief, the defendant Shipley Company, a corporation, is found to be the alter ego of its grantor, the defendant Don P. Jones, and is declared to hold the conveyance of said property as security only. The decree also declares the transaction resulting in the conveyance of said property as security to be usurious, and the right to interest is thereby denied. An accounting is had between the parties, and a reconveyance is directed upon payment of the true amount loaned and unpaid as found therein; also, as further incidental relief, an agreement of compromise between the parties as to the division of the proceeds of a prospective sale is impeached and canceled for fraud, and, as incidental to the last-named relief, a quitclaim deed, in furtherance of said agreement, of the property to defendants by plaintiffs is canceled, as is also a decree taken for the same purpose, quieting title to said property in the defendants. The decree is an apt illustration of the scope and efficacy of the powers of a court of equity.

The salient facts needful for the purposes of this discussion are: Plaintiffs, a common-law trust and its trustees and beneficiaries, owned, subject to a trust in the Security Trust & Savings Bank of Los Angeles, a subdivision of land known as Rosemead Gardens. Desiring to promote activity in the sale of lots in this tract, plaintiffs conceived the idea of erecting on lot 1 and a portion of lot 2 thereof a store building. The court found the building site to have been at the inception of this transaction of the value of $4,500. Plaintiffs in this emergency sought the defendant Don P. Jones, a presumed friend, and entered into with him an elaborate agreement in writing, intended doubtless to hide, rather than to elucidate, the true intent of the parties.

[1] The writing bore date of January 22, 1923, but was executed in March following. It provided in substance that Jones should put up $1,866.67, the amount necessary to release the said site from the trust held by the bank, and should take a deed of conveyance of the property; that a brick store should be erected thereon at a cost not to exceed $9,600, which sum was to be obtained by a mortgage upon the property. Plaintiffs were to procure the builder, agree with him on the terms, and were to supervise the construction without charge to Jones. This latter covenant Jones exacted by a special writing. Plaintiffs were to have one year after construction to repurchase the property and improvements for the sum of $3,000 and interest on $2,000 at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the date of the deed, the balance of $1,000 to draw no interest. Plaintiffs likewise were to secure tenants for the property, but Jones was to receive all rentals, and was to apply them to the payment of the contemplated mortgage and interest, taxes, insurance, and interest on the $2,000 to himself and to hold the remainder if any, to be adjusted and accounted for at the time of the exercise of the option by plaintiffs to repurchase. It was further provided, however, that, if said rentals were insufficient for all or any of these several purposes, plaintiffs would make such deficiency good. The contract further provided that, if at any time during the coming five years the mortgage should be foreclosed, and Jones should lose the amount advanced by him, or any part thereof, plaintiffs were to pay him the said deficiency, with interest.

Jones put up the said sum and took a deed from the bank. A builder was procured by plaintiffs and the building started, but the party proved unfaithful, and the parties to this agreement got together and decided to finish the building by each putting up a portion of the sum required over and above the sum of $5,000 that had been raised by a mortgage on the property and had gone into the construction of the building. Under this new arrangement, plaintiffs put up the sum of $2,200, and Jones put up the balance. The building was finished in the summer of 1923, and plaintiffs immediately secured tenants for it. Various rentals were from that time forward received by Jones.

The court below on this contract as construed by it, on the conduct of the parties with respect thereto, and on the oral testimony of plaintiffs and their witnesses, found this arrangement to be a loan and the conveyance to Jones a mortgage. This finding is so evidently correct that comment is unnecessary. It is a plain case of a loan of $1,866.67 and an agreement to pay a bonus of $1,133.33, besides lawful interest on the sum of $2,000. The disguise in which the transaction is clothed only emphasizes the fact that it is a loan, and a loan at a grossly usurious rate of interest. Several writings of defendant Jones were introduced in evidence showing his exorbitant interest demands and demands for bonuses. One witness testified that Jones said he was getting 28 per cent. interest from others, and would exact the same rate from plaintiffs.

It is true that within the one year provided for in said writing plaintiffs did not exercise the so-called option to repurchase nor repay said defendant for the sums advanced by him, but this requirement, if material, was waived by the unsatisfactory statements of account given by Jones to plaintiffs and the above-mentioned other executed oral modifications of said contract made to finish said building. However, after the year had expired, Jones did render a statement of his account, in which he claimed advances to the amount of $6,135.66, on which he demanded a bonus of $3,691.40, coloring the transaction, nevertheless, by the assertion that it was an offer to sell at such figures.

The court, after declaring the transaction a loan, and after decreeing the agreement respecting interest to be usurious, stated the account between the parties, and found that Jones had actually advanced over and above the rents received by him the true sum of $3,073.37. If it was proper to deny interest, no criticism of this item can be made.

But the story must be carried further—early in the proceedings, the defendant Jones and his wife deeded said property to defendant corporation, a concern in which they owned practically all the stock, and of which Jones was the president and controlling spirit. It is not claimed, nor could it be claimed, that this corporation is in the position of an innocent purchaser for value. On February 1, 1925, this corporation brought a suit against plaintiffs to quiet title to the property, which suit was answered by plaintiffs by the setting up of the transaction presumably as hereinabove outlined. A suit for the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien in the sum of $750 was also pending at this time. Plaintiffs, seeking to extricate themselves from this maze of difficulties, essayed to sell the property, and to that end procured a bona fide purchaser who was willing to pay the sum of $17,000 for it and to go into escrow arrangements to this effect, which he did on his part by putting up the full proposed purchase price. Plaintiffs then sought out defendants, and finally agreed with them in writing upon a division of this purchase price.

This agreement was, in substance, that defendants should deliver in escrow the necessary conveyance to pass title to the purchaser and accept the sum of $9,291.67, paying therefrom the sum of $1,441.67, and receiving a net amount to themselves of $7,850. The remainder was to be used in satisfying the mortgage on said property and the final balance was to go to plaintiffs. Fearing that the existence of litigation respecting the title might interfere with the sale, it was agreed that plaintiffs should facilitate matters by giving to defendants a quitclaim deed to said property and by stipulating that a decree might be entered in said suit to quiet title in favor of defendants and against themselves, all of which was done. But defendants failed and refused to execute and/or deliver the necessary deed in escrow or at all.

The court in this behalf found that defendants acted fraudulently, in that their design was to procure said decree and said quitclaim deed without any intention on their part of ever executing the conveyance necessary to complete the sale. The evidence is amply sufficient to support this finding. Among other circumstances shown by the record, the real estate broker in the transaction testified that Jones "put his hand in his pocket like this and he says, 'I am sitting pretty; I am all right now; the property is mine.'"

The court in an admirably incisive manner sought and found the basis of the transaction, stripped it of the entanglement surrounding it, and gave the clear-cut decree summarized above. Defendants have appealed and assigned various technical grounds of error, which we shall now consider.

[2-5] The court permitted, "over the objection of defendants," the filing at the opening of the trial of an amended complaint. A general objection of this kind is an insufficient claim of error. It is urged, however, that a new cause of action was introduced. This is not the case. Both complaints count upon the same state of facts; the difference is in the prayer for relief, the original prayer being for a money judgment and the amended prayer being for the equitable relief given. There is but one form of action in this state, and a plaintiff may not be dismissed by the court merely because he is mistaken in the nature of the relief to which he is entitled. Zellner v. Wassman, 184 Cal. 80, 88, 193 P. 84.

A change by amendment from one kind of relief to another is not a change in the cause of action, if the transaction is the same. Frost v. Witter, 132 Cal. 421, 64 P. 795, 84 Am. St. Rep. 53; Doolittle v. McConnell, 178 Cal. 697, 174 P. 305; Cox v. McLaughlin, 76 Cal. 60, 18 P. 100, 9 Am. St. Rep. 164; Schaad v. Barceloux, 42 Cal. App. 337, 183 P. 716; Ford v. Ford, 44 Cal. App. 415, 186 P. 164. The fact that the change is from legal to equitable relief is immaterial. J. I. Case T. M. Co. v. Copren Bros., 45 Cal. App. 159 187 P. 772; Walsh v. McKeen, 75 Cal. 519, 17 P. 673. Nor does such change from the law to the equity side of the court bring about an election of remedies, if the change involves no prejudice to the opposing party. Roulard v. Rosenberg Bros. & Co., 193 Cal. 360, 366, 224 P. 449, and cases therein cited. Here not only was no such objection made, but no showing of injury is attempted.

[6] It is next urged that the complaint failed to state a cause of action, because the compromise agreement, the quitclaim deed, and the decree quieting title, all or either of them, constituted, if valid, a cancellation of all previous contracts and covenants, and could not be canceled without an allegation of a previous notice of rescission and offer to restore, as contemplated by section 1691 of the Civil Code. Certain exceptions to this general rule of the Code have been specified in actions in equity. In Kelley v. Owens, 120 Cal. 502, 510, 511, 47 P. 369, 371, these exceptions are stated as follows:

"There are exceptional cases where restoration or an offer to restore before suit brought is not necessary—as, for instance, where the thing received by the plaintiff is of no value whatever to either of the parties; or where the plaintiff has merely received the individual promissory note of the defendant; or where the contract is absolutely void; or where it clearly appears that the defendant could not possibly have been injuriously affected by a failure to restore; or where, without any fault of plaintiff, there have been peculiar complications which make it impossible for plaintiff to offer full restoration, although the circumstances are such that a court of chancery may by a final decree fully adjust the equities between the parties—and it will be found that such instances, or others similar to them in principle, are those to which the authorities cited by appellants generally relate. The substance of the distinction will be found to be based, not upon the form of the action, but upon the difference between the cases which are within the rule, and those which, owing to peculiar facts, are exceptions to the rule. And the real facts and rights arising thereon cannot be kept out of sight by the device of a particular form of action. Sections 3406-3408 of the Civil Code do not establish any new rule upon the subject."

These exceptions are approved and others added in California, etc., Co. v. Schiappa-Pietra, 151 Cal. 732, 739-741, 91 P. 593, 596, and the court there finally says: "Another exception recognized by this court is that of the case where the taking of an account is necessary for the ascertainment of the sum to be repaid, or the sum is to be liquidated by an adjudication based on evidence of facts independent of the terms of the contract itself. In such a case, as the plaintiff cannot determine in advance of the suit the amount by him to be repaid, an offer to refund such sum as shall be decreed is a sufficient offer to do equity. (Sutter-St. R. R. Co. v. Baum, 66 Cal. 44, 4 P. 916.) The authorities fully sustain the proposition that an offer to restore before action is not essential where the rights of the other party can be fully protected by the decree, and such restoration cannot be made without injuriously affecting the rights of the party seeking rescission, or the relative rights of the parties in the event of a rescission cannot be determined without an accounting. The statute itself dispenses with the necessity of such an offer where the other party is himself unable to restore what he has received. In such event an offer on the part of the rescinding party would be a vain thing, and the respective rights of the parties can be fully guarded by the decree."

Enough appears to conclusively show that a notice of rescission and offer to restore prior to suit was not necessary in this case, as the plaintiffs received absolutely nothing under any of the writings sought to be annulled. The institution of the suit or the allowance of the amendment was sufficient notice of rescission in a case such as this. Zeller v. Milligan, 71 Cal. App. 617, 236 P. 349. This is especially true in equity, where fraud is the basis of the claim, and no legal prejudice to the defendants could have resulted.

[7-9] It is next urged that the transaction is at most but a resulting trust in which the defendants are trustees, and error has resulted because the decree does not so declare and provide a time within which the amount due from plaintiffs must be paid, and that failure to pay would work a forfeiture of plaintiffs' rights, and thus obviate the possible necessity of a foreclosure proceeding. The transaction is not a mortgage, it is said, because conveyance to defendants was made by the bank and not by plaintiffs. This is not the test. It is quite possible for a transaction to be at one and the same time a mortgage and a resulting trust. Campbell v. Freeman, 99 Cal. 546, 34 P. 113; Banta v. Wise, 135 Cal. 277, 279, 67 P. 129; Windt v. Covert, 152 Cal. 350, 353, 93 P. 67. But, so long as the transaction retains the features of a mortgage, foreclosure is ordinarily necessary, even though the transaction may also give rise to a resulting trust. Byrne v. Hudson, 127 Cal. 251, 59 P. 597; Windt v. Covert, supra; Lockhart v. McDougall Co., 190 Cal. 308, 212 P. 1; Campbell v. Freeman, supra. The fact that the deed was not made directly by plaintiffs, but by the bank, which held the legal title, does not alone make the transaction a resulting trust instead of a mortgage. Prefumo v. Russell, 148 Cal. 451, 83 P. 810; Lockhart v. McDougall Co., supra; Campbell v. Freeman, supra. Moreover, this feature of the present case seems unimportant, as under the decree the plaintiffs may not have the relief they seek, except upon payment of all sums due defendants.

[10] It is also urged that the evidence does not support the finding that, in queering the efforts of plaintiffs to sell the property by failure to co-operate with them by depositing a properly executed deed in escrow, defendants were acting fraudulently. This claim deserved little discussion. Repudiating the trust by conveying the property to defendant corporation and the institution of the suit to quiet title was acting fraudulently. Demanding exorbitant interest and bonuses in violation of the trust were acts of the same character. No sufficient reason whatever appears other than an intention to defraud for refusing to deposit the deed in escrow. In fact the contention now made that the quitclaim deed and decree are and were binding notwithstanding their failure to comply with covenants on their part to make them binding is proof abundant that defendants were acting fraudulently.

[11] The claim that the evidence is insufficient to justify the finding that the deed was a mortgage deserves no further discussion than is contained in the recital of facts. The same observation applies to the claim that usury was not present in the transaction, and that it did not forfeit the right to interest. Haines v. Commercial Mortgage Co., 200 Cal. 609, 254 P. 956, 255 P. 805, 53 A. L. R. 725. The defendants Jones and wife are in no position to claim error in directing them to join in the deed of reconveyance because they had theretofore decided away their interest in said property to a corporation in their control. Jones v. Jones, 140 Cal. 587, 591, 74 P. 143.

Further discussion we deem unnecessary.

OATMAN v. NIEMEYER. (Sac. 4110.)★

Supreme Court of California. June 25, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 25, 1929.

Reformation of Instruments §§ 11, 13(1)—Deed could be reformed by inserting description of property omitted by mistake and by correcting grantee's name (Civ. Code, § 3399).

Where deceased grantor endeavored to execute deed in accordance with agreement to convey property to plaintiff in consideration for her services, and deed signed and witnessed purported to grant certain lot in city of W., county of Y., but through mistake no description appeared and grantee's name was misspelled, such deed could be reformed by inserting description of property and by correcting grantee's name under Civ. Code, § 3399.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by Alice Lee Oatman against H. A. Niemeyer, as administrator of the estate of A. N. Garrison, deceased. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion in 273 P. 567.

W. P. Rich, of Marysville, for appellant.

Lawrence Schillig, of Yuba City, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. On rehearing in bank, we adopt the statement of facts as set forth in the department opinion:

"This is an appeal from the judgment of the trial court in favor of the plaintiff granting reformation of an instrument purporting to be a deed, by inserting therein a description of certain real property which was owned by the deceased, but which, it was claimed, was omitted by mistake from said instrument, and also quieting plaintiff's title to the real property after said purported deed had been reformed. The appeal was taken on the judgment roll alone.

"The facts found by the court show: That on the 4th day of June, 1922, in the city of Wheatland, county of Yuba, state of California, one A. N. Garrison employed plaintiff to care for him, nurse him, and keep house for him at his residence in said city of Wheatland, county of Yuba, state of California, which service was to be continuous to the date of his death; that said A. N. Garrison was of the age of 80 years or thereabouts, at said time. In consideration of such service, said Garrison, promised and agreed to and with plaintiff that he would give her all his property, both real and personal, on hand at the time of his death. In pursuance of such agreement plaintiff, on said 4th day of June, 1922, began such service and continued to and did render all of such service to be given by her to said A. N. Garrison to the date of his death, to wit, on the 18th day of October, 1926. On the 4th day of October, 1926, the said A. N. Garrison informed plaintiff that he wished to comply with his said agreement and execute the necessary papers giving her his property and sent for one S. D. Hicks, who was then and there and for some time previous had been a justice of the peace of the territory in which the said city of Wheatland was situated; that thereupon the said S. D. Hicks went to the residence of said A. N. Garrison in said city of Wheatland and the said A. N. Garrison then and there instructed the said S. D. Hicks to draw the necessary papers which would invest plaintiff with all of his property and thereupon the said S. D. Hicks prepared a deed and the same was signed and executed by the said A. N. Garrison and the said A. N. Garrison requested said S. D. Hicks and one Ira Rowland to sign as witnesses thereto; that, after the signing and witnessing of said deed, the same was then and there by the said A. N. Garrison delivered to said plaintiff Alice Lee Oatman. The deed so signed and witnessed is set out in the findings. It purports to grant, bargain and sell to the plaintiff, her heirs and assigns forever, 'all the certain lot, piece or parcel of land situate, lying and being in the city of Wheatland, County of Yuba, State of California, and bounded and particularly described as follows, to wit.' No description of the property sought to be conveyed appears in the deed. The trial court found that the real property intended to be conveyed was the only real property owned by said A. N. Garrison, and the same constituted one compact piece or tract of land which was fenced and on which was a dwelling house where the said A. N. Garrison resided and where the plaintiff rendered such services. The description of the property is inserted in the findings of the court.

"It was also found that through the mistake of the scrivener, the plaintiff's name was improperly spelled and the description of the property intended to be conveyed was omitted and that such mistake and omission was not brought to the attention of the plaintiff until after the death of A. N. Garrison on the 18th of October, 1926. It was further found that the plaintiff had not been paid by the said A. N. Garrison, for her services aforesaid nor has she been paid since his death therefor, except by the conveyance of said real property hereinbefore described and which was intended by the said A. N. Garrison to convey to said plaintiff the real property described in the findings in payment for such services. The plaintiff is now and ever since the date of the delivery of said deed or instrument to her has been in the actual possession of said real property hereinbefore described, together with the dwelling house thereon and all things therein.

"The trial court entered a decree reforming and correcting the said deed so that plaintiff's name would appear therein properly and inserted the description of the property which had been omitted, and quieted plaintiff's title against the administrator of the estate of A. N. Garrison, deceased, to the property so described."

Appellant contends that the lack of description in the instrument before the court, or of any reference to the property by which it could be located, constituted a patent ambiguity, and that it was error for the trial court to hear extrinsic evidence by which it was sought to locate and describe the property, that the purported deed was wholly inoperative and void because of the want of any description or designation of subject-matter, and that, being void, it cannot be reformed.

There can, of course, be no question but that the deed was void in law, that is, that it failed wholly as a conveyance of property, since no property was described. But the contention that, for that reason, it cannot be reformed, fails to distinguish between a contract which is void for some fundamental reason and an instrument or writing which is void because of mistake in its preparation. If the contract itself is void, as, for example, because it is immoral or because the parties have not agreed on all of its terms, and there is, for that reason, no final contract or understanding between them, or, because the contract lacks consideration, reformation is impossible, since there is no valid contract to reform. But this is entirely different from a case where there is a valid contract and the parties have endeavored to put it in writing, and have made a mistake in writing down its terms, or have endeavored in accordance with the contract to execute an instrument, such as a deed, for the purpose of carrying it out and, through mistake in the preparation of the instrument, the document fails, either wholly or partially, to accomplish such purpose. The instrument may be void in such a case because of the mistake, but there is still a valid contract; and, the contract being valid, equity will reform the instrument to make it what it should be, and would have been except for the mistake. There is no making of a new contract in such a case. There is but the making of a new instrument, either to correctly express the contract or to carry it into effect. Civ. Code, § 3399; House v. McMullen, 9 Cal. App. 664, 100 P. 344; Merkle v. Merkle, 85 Cal. App. 87, 258 P. 969.

The judgment is affirmed.

Supreme Court of California. June 26, 1929.

1. Physicians and surgeons ⇨18(8)—Facts showing physician's treatment of injured hip held to sustain inference that physician did not exercise reasonable care in treating patient.

Facts showing physician was called to treat and attend woman 69 years of age for injury to hip, which he diagnosed as dislocated hip and for which he treated her about three months and at no time caused X-ray picture to be taken to determine nature of injury, and patient on failure to improve sought other medical advice and had X-ray pictures taken, which revealed fracture of hip bone which had made fibrous instead of bony union, resulting from improper treatment, held to sustain inference that physician did not exercise reasonable and ordinary care and diligence in treating patient and in applying such learning and skill to case.

2. Physicians and surgeons ⇨18(4)—Complaint in action for malpractice charging improper diagnosis and treatment without using word "negligent," but alleging facts constituting negligence, held sufficient.

In action for malpractice in treating injury to hip, complaint charging improper diagnosis and treatment by physician and fully setting forth facts constituting negligence held sufficient without using word "negligent," which is immaterial.

3. Trial ⇨296(3)—Instruction, in action for malpractice, not limiting skill and care required to that of physicians in same locality, held not reversible error under evidence and in view of another instruction.

In action for malpractice, giving instruction which did not limit requirement of skill and care of physician to that possessed by persons practicing profession in same locality, though improper, held not reversible error, where persons testifying as experts and reciting usual practices were all practicing profession in immediate vicinity and all testimony on subject had relation to that vicinity, and in another instruction jury was told physician was required to exercise skill and diligence ordinarily exercised by those practicing under same conditions.

S. V. Wright, of San Luis Obispo, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment against him for $1,200 in an action in which the plaintiff alleged she had employed defendant as a physician to treat and attend her after an injury to her hip, and that, by reason of improper diagnosis and treatment by said defendant, plaintiff had become a cripple for life.

It is argued by appellant that the evidence does not sustain the verdict; that the evidence fails to disclose that the defendant was guilty of any negligence in diagnosing or in the methods employed by him in arriving at his diagnosis of plaintiff's condition.

Plaintiff, a woman 69 years of age, while running with children at her home at Atascadero, Cal., fell and injured her hip. She was in great pain and could not put her foot upon the ground. She was carried to her home and the defendant was called. He administered an anæsthetic and the following day he treated her for a dislocated hip. Defendant testified that after administering the anæsthetic, and after proper manipulation, he reduced the dislocation and the limb went back into its natural position with no shortening of the leg, and he advised the patient to be quiet in bed. He also told her that she had merely a dislocation of the hip and that she would be walking about within nine days. There is a sharp conflict in the testimony with reference to what was said about X-ray pictures. Plaintiff and her family testified that defendant said he was glad that no X-ray pictures would be necessary, because the nearest apparatus was at San Luis Obispo, a distance from Atascadero of about 25 miles, and its use would necessitate a long, hard, expensive journey for plaintiff. Defendant testified that he advised X-ray pictures, but the suggestion was resisted by the family of plaintiff because of the expense involved. Since this matter is vital to the findings and verdict, we must accept the testimony in the record with reference to it which is in accord with the conclusion reached by the jury. For about three months defendant treated plaintiff for a dislocated hip and had her walking about, pushing a chair before her, and later had her walk with crutches, and he at no time caused an X-ray picture to be taken, nor did he cause the hip to be incased so as to restrain its movement and keep broken bones in place. After this period of time had elapsed, plaintiff became apprehensive, because of her failure to improve, and sought other medical advice. X-ray pictures were taken, which revealed that there had been a fracture of the hip bone, which had made a fibrous instead of a bony union; that the leg was shortened; and that it was then too late to secure a bony union of the broken bones. It is also in evidence, on behalf of defendant, that, due to the age of the patient, a bony union was very unlikely under any form of treatment and that the majority of patients under the same conditions become crippled for life regardless of the treatment used. On the other hand, the record contains the testimony of the physicians who took the X-ray pictures to the effect that the pictures revealed a fractured hip which had been improperly treated; that "the leg was in a position of external rotation and was shortened and it would not have been that way if it had been properly treated." This testimony we must accept, also, rather than the testimony offered by defendant upon this question, in view of the conclusion of the jury. This testimony comes from an expert; the witness giving it was a graduate physician and surgeon from the medical school of Stanford University, state of California, and with a large and varied experience in the study and practice of taking X-ray pictures.

Appellant contends that because the expert medical witnesses for plaintiff did not testify that the defendant failed to use the degree of skill and care ordinarily possessed and exercised by members of his profession in good standing, practicing in the same or similar localities, the verdict cannot stand; and that the testimony that the treatment employed was improper is insuticient. Reliance is placed upon the case of Hesler v. California Hospital Co., 178 Cal. 764, 174 P. 654. That case contains the following language: "The law, as above stated, does not require that the instructions and advice given by a physician to a patient should be at all events and beyond question 'proper,' or that his treatment should be certainly such as to obtain an approximately perfect result. It requires only, first, that he shall have the degree of learning and skill ordinarily possessed by physicians of good standing practicing in that locality; and, second, that he shall exercise reasonable and ordinary care and diligence in treating the patient and in applying such learning and skill to the case."

[1] Conceding that the record does not disclose, affirmatively, that the defendant did not have the required degree of skill and learning, it is certainly sufficient to sustain the inference that he did not "exercise reasonable and ordinary care and diligence in treating the patient and in applying such learning and skill to the case." For if we accept the testimony favorable to respondent, as we must do, we are forced to the conclusion that the defendant, knowing an X-ray machine was to be had in the place where the injury occurred, did not make use of it nor mention its existence to plaintiff and her family because he had had some unpleasant or unfriendly relations with the institution controlling this apparatus, and that he did not advise a journey to San Luis Obispo where another X-ray machine could have been found. We must also accept the testimony that plaintiff complained constantly of pain and of a sensation as though a "lot of little bones were sticking into" her, and of a grating of the bones when she attempted to move, and that when plaintiff's leg was placed upon a pillow on the bed, the foot would fall outward repeatedly, indicating a broken bone in the leg. Expert testimony appears in the record to the effect that, under such conditions, and in view of the fact that no improvement occurred in the limb under the treatment for dislocation of the hip, the next step, logically and scientifically, was to investigate further the nature of the injury by taking X-ray pictures. Indeed, this would seem so obvious as to be a permissible inference without expert testimony on the subject, as would be the conclusion that a failure to do this was negligence.

[2] But it is objected by appellant that the complaint does not charge negligent treatment, but only improper diagnosis and treatment, by defendant. While the complaint does not use the word negligent, that circumstance is immaterial. The facts constituting the negligence are what is required in a pleading, and they are fully set forth in the complaint.

[3] It is also contended that error was committed in giving a certain instruction to the jury. The instructions, as a whole, fairly state the law applicable to the facts. The instruction under attack by appellant is to the effect that "the law requires one who holds himself out as a practicing physician and surgeon to possess and bring to the work he performs as such the care and skill ordinarily possessed by persons following such profession, and the law also requires one who practices such profession to exercise in the practice thereof that skill and care and good judgment which is ordinarily possessed and exercised by persons following that profession." It is objected that the foregoing instruction should have limited the requirement of skill and care to that possessed by persons practicing the profession in the same locality. The objection is well taken, but it does not compel a reversal of the judgment, because it does not appear nor seem likely that the jury was misled by the omission to so qualify the instruction. The persons testifying as experts and reciting the usual practices were all practicing their profession in Atascadero or in the immediate vicinity and all testimony on the subject has relation to that vicinity; and also in another instruction, the jury was told that the defendant was required to exercise such reasonable skill and diligence as is ordinarily exercised and used in the practice of the profession of defendant by those who practice under like conditions.

There are no other matters involved upon the appeal that require discussion, and the judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Charles H. Layne against Edmund Kirby. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

John Ralph Wilson and Everette C. McKeage, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

George R. Andersen, of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff filed a complaint in which he alleged that the defendant had published a libel against him. The defendant appeared and filed a general demurrer. The demurrer was sustained, the plaintiff declined to amend, and from a judgment entered in favor of the defendant the plaintiff has appealed and has brought up the judgment roll.

[1-3] Prior to January 31, 1928, there was maintained in San Francisco a United States engineer office. The plaintiff, Charles H. Layne, was chief clerk. The defendant, Edmund Kirby, was a subordinate clerk. Colonel T. H. Jackson, Corps of Engineers, was the superior officer. Commencing on the 21st day of December, 1927, a correspondence was commenced between the defendant and his superior officers regarding an order placing the defendant on furlough without pay. Under date of January 30, 1928, the defendant wrote and transmitted an extended letter and inclosed therewith several inclosures. The alleged libel is based on statements contained in that letter. Some of the statements were to the effect that the ruling about to be enforced would deprive this defendant of his statutory rights; that the plaintiff was derelict in the performance of his duties; that he used government property for his own personal use; that he was engaged in private enterprises when he should have been rendering official service; that plaintiff at one time ordered defendant to render a false statistical report; and that the plaintiff knowingly allowed false statistical reports to be rendered to his superior officers. Both the plaintiff and the defendant hold their appointments from the Secretary of War. U. S. Code Ann. title 10, § 187. The Secretary of War, having the power to appoint, in the absence of a statute to the contrary has the power to remove. U. S. v. Taft, 24 App. D. C. 95, 98-99. Although civil service employees, either could be removed for cause, and it is the duty of the head of the department from time to time to determine the fitness of his appointees. U. S. v. Taft, supra. Before a civil service employee may be removed for cause, he is entitled to be served with a writing stating the reasons and of the charges preferred against him, and to be allowed a reasonable time for answering the same in writing. U. S. Code Ann. title 5, § 652. It appears that the letter was addressed to the person who had the right to hear and determine all of those charges.

One of the points presented by the record is the element of privilege. The plaintiff contends that the communication, if privileged at all, was only qualifiedly privileged. So contending, he claims that the trial court could not rule on the subject until the evidence was all in. If, on the other hand, the communication was absolutely privileged, it will be unnecessary to discuss any other point. In 1860 the Supreme Court of New York wrote an exhaustive opinion on the subject before us in the case of Perkins v. Mitchell, 31 Barb. 461. On page 471 the court said: "These cases leave no room to doubt that in England and in the courts of this state, the rule has been very steadily adhered to which protects parties and witnesses for statements pertinently made by them in the assertion of their rights, or the discharge of their duties as such. I see no reason why this protection should be confined to the trial of issues in suits or indictments, or to oral examinations, so as to exclude affidavits even if voluntarily made, if otherwise regular and pertinent. The phrase employed by the judges and the text writers, in speaking of this sort of privileged communications, is 'judicial proceedings.' This is not confined to trials of civil actions or indictments, but includes every proceeding before a competent court or magistrate in the due course of law or the administration of justice, which is to result in any determination or action of such court or officer." When the commissioners were preparing our Codes, which were adopted in 1872, basing their action in part on what was said in that case, they framed section 47 of the Civil Code. As adopted, the section at that time, among other things, provided: "A privileged communication is one made: * * * 2. In testifying as a witness in any proceeding authorized by law to a matter pertinent and material, or in reply to a question allowed by the tribunal. * * *" Following the rule in the Perkins Case, it will be noted that the statute is limited to sworn statements, and, furthermore, that it is not limited to court proceedings. In 1874 the statute was amended to read as follows: Sec. 47. "A privileged publication is one made: * * * 2. In any legislative or judicial proceeding, or in any other official proceeding authorized by law. * * *" Since that date that language has not been changed.

A statute similarly worded was under consideration in Sanford v. Bennett, 24 N. Y. 20. At page 26 Mr. Justice Denio said: "I am persuaded that the transactions embraced in the purview of the statute are such as resemble judicial and legislative proceedings; such as the transactions of administrative boards in which the subjects dealt with are liable to be considered, deliberated upon, discussed and determined." (Italics ours.) In the case of Public Service Com'n v. Iroquois Natural Gas Co., 103 Misc. Rep. 587, 170 N. Y. S. 692, the question arose as to when the "proceeding" might be said to be pending. Commencing at the bottom of page 695, 170 N. Y. S. (103 Misc. Rep. 593), the court said: "The defendant files schedules providing for an increased rate; a complaint is made by the mayor of the city of Buffalo, and steps are taken through the Public Service Commission to investigate the reasonableness of the suggested new rate. Of course, there might well be occasions in which a 'proceeding' would be initiated by a written complaint as to the price of gas, etc., when no schedule of proposed new rates had been filed. However, in the situation here involved, even though the schedule of new rates was filed before any complaint was made and such filing was the cause of the complaint, and even though the effectuating time of such schedule has been postponed from time to time, a complaint has been made, and an investigation is under way, and a 'proceeding' is therefore on, which in this instance, as it appears to me, was initiated and caused by the filing of the schedule of proposed increased rates." In Duncan v.

Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (C. C. A.) 72 F. 808, the language complained of was contained in an answer which the defendant had filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission. On the trial of the alleged libel the defendant claimed the publication was privileged. The court so found. On appeal to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals that finding was attacked. At page 811 the court held that it was privileged, at least under Civil Code, § 47, subd. 2. Oklahoma has a statute which is almost a verbatim copy of our statute. In Tuohy v. Halsell, 35 Okl. 61, 128 P. 126, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 323, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 1110, the Supreme Court of Oklahoma was considering the contents of an affidavit made in Oklahoma to be used before one of the committees of the United States Senate. The court quoted with approval from Sanford v. Bennett, supra, and held that the affidavit fell within the language "any other proceeding authorized by law." Continuing, the court said: "No case can be found exactly in point, but in Duncan v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 19 C. C. A. 202, 44 U. S. App. 427, 72 F. 808, the court said: 'Section 47 of the Civil Code of California declares that "a privileged communication is one made * * * (2) in any legislative or judicial proceeding, or in any other official proceeding authorized by law." In Ball v. Rawles, 93 Cal. 222, 236, 28 P. 937, 941 (27 Am. St. Rep. 174), the Supreme Court, in construing this section, said: "The effect of this provision is to make a complaint, in a court of justice which has jurisdiction of the offense charged, an absolute privilege, for which the complainant is not liable in a civil action. Hollis v. Meux, 69 Cal. 625, 11 P. 248, 58 Am. Rep. 574." Tested by the provisions of this statute, the conclusion of law arrived at by the circuit court, "that all of the matters and things herein complained of were and are privileged," and the judgment rendered thereon, were clearly correct; for, conceding that the Interstate Commerce Commission is not a court of civil jurisdiction, it is nevertheless manifest that the pleadings herein complained of were filed in an "official proceeding authorized by law"'. And in the syllabus: 'Alleged libelous statements contained in an answer filed in proceedings before the Interstate Commerce Commission are absolutely privileged, under the California statute, which declares a privileged communication to be "one made * * * in any legislative or judicial proceeding, or in any other official proceeding authorized by law."'"

In the case of Burgess v. Turle & Co., 155 Minn. 479, 193 N. W. 945, the Supreme Court of Minnesota was considering a case involving the following facts: Plaintiff was the vendee and defendant was the vendor in a contract for the sale of land in North Dakota. The vendee defaulted in his payments. By the statutes of North Dakota the vendor was authorized to terminate the contract by giving the vendee a certain notice. Under the statute, if the defaulting party was outside of the state, provision was made for the publication of the notice. The vendor published the notice. The vendee filed an action charging the vendor with libel. The statute on libel in the state of Minnesota contained a clause regarding privilege which was in the same language as the California statute. The court held that the notice was given in a "proceeding authorized by law" and that, "The alleged defamatory statements were absolutely privileged, and cannot be made the foundation for an action for libel."

In Harris v. Huntington, 2 Tyler, 129, 4 Am. Dec. 728, the Supreme Court of Vermont had under consideration a charge of libel based on a petition which the defendants had addressed to the Legislature asking for the removal of the plaintiff as justice of the peace. On page 733, 4 Am. Dec. (2 Tyler 138), the court said: "An absolute and unqualified indemnity from all responsibility in the petitioner is indispensable from the right of petitioning the supreme power for the redress of grievances; for it would be an absurd mockery in a government to hold out this privilege to its subjects, and then punish them for the use of it. And it would be equally destructive of the right, for the courts of law to support actions of defamation grounded on such petitions as libelous. Petitions for redress of grievances will generally point to officers of the government, who have, or may be supposed to have abused its confidence by maladministration; and although the government should refrain from prosecuting the petitioners criminally, yet it would operate as effectual a restraint upon them to expose them to an action for damages at the suit of those of whose conduct they have complained to government."

[4] In Larkin v. Noonan, 19 Wis. 82, the alleged libel was addressed to the governor, asking the removal of the plaintiff as sheriff. It was shown that it was the statutory duty of the governor to receive such a charge, hear the facts, and determine the truth or falsity and act thereon. On page 88 the court said: "Upon this question we cannot better express our views than by adopting the just and forcible language of Senator Clinton, used by him in giving his opinion in Thorn v. Blanchard, 5 Johns. [N. Y. 508] 507-530: 'There is a certain class of cases where no prosecution for a libel will lie, when the matter contained in it is false and scandalous; as in a petition to a committee of parliament; in articles of the peace, exhibited to justices of the peace; in a presentment of a grand jury; in a proceeding in a regular course of justice; in assigning, on the books of a Quakers' meeting, reasons for expelling a member; in an exposition of the abuses of a public institution, as in the case of the deputy governor of Greenwich hospital, addressed to the competent authority to administer redress. The policy of the law here steps in and controls the individual rights of redress. The freedom of inquiry, the right of exposing malversation in public men and public institutions, to the proper authority, the importance of punishing offenses, and the danger of silencing inquiry and of affording impunity to guilt, have all combined to shut the door against prosecutions for libels, in cases of that, or of analogous nature.'” It thus appears that there is authority to the effect that the facts of the instant case might justify a ruling that the defendant's correspondence was a step in a “judicial proceeding,” but be that as it may, it clearly appears that it was a step in “an official proceeding authorized by law.” The trial court did not err in sustaining the demurrer.

The judgment is affirmed.

PALMER et al. v. McARTHUR et al.
(Civ. 6813.)

District Court of Appeal, First District Division 2, California. June 19, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1011(1)—Evidence as to making of payment on land contract held so conflicting as to require acceptance of trial court's finding.

In vendor's suit to quiet title as against purchasers on theory that contract had been forfeited, evidence as to alleged payment by defendant on contract held so conflicting that appellate court must accept finding of trial court as controlling.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⇨101—When course of conduct amounts to waiver of provisions as to time, vendor cannot forfeit without giving reasonable notice of election.

When entire course of conduct between vendor and purchaser has amounted to waiver by vendor of portion of contract making time of the essence, vendor may not declare forfeiture unless vendee has been given reasonable notice of election to insist upon terms of contract.

3. Vendor and purchaser ⇨100—Reasonable time before forfeiture after waiver of provisions as to time is question of fact.

Reasonable time to be given purchaser before forfeiture of contract after waiver by vendor of provisions of contract making time of the essence is primarily a question of fact for the trial court, and dependent upon particular facts.

4. Appeal and error ⇨1071(5)—Number of days within which notice of election to forfeit demanded compliance was of no significance when court found willful and intentional breach (Civ. Code, § 3275).

Under Civ. Code, § 3275, denying relief from forfeiture under contract for purchase of real estate if forfeiture was result of willful or fraudulent breach of duty, number of days within which notice of election to forfeit demanded compliance with terms of contract was of no significance, where trial court found that breach of contract was willful and intentional.

5. Appeal and error ⇨1040(10)—Error in overruling general demurrer held harmless, when question was put in issue by cross-complaint and fully tried.

In vendor's suit to quiet title as against purchasers on theory of forfeiture of contract, any error in overruling general demurrer to complaint on ground that it did not allege land was worth price paid or that price was in fair proportion to value was harmless, where question of value was put in issue by cross-complaint and fully tried without objection.

6. New trial ⇨101—Motion for new trial for newly discovered evidence was properly denied, when evidence was known to moving parties before cause was determined.

In vendor's suit to quiet title as against purchasers, motion for new trial for alleged newly discovered evidence as to alleged payment on contract was properly denied for lack of diligence, where evidence was known to defendants long before the cause was determined.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lake County; M. S. Sayre, Judge.

Suit by R. J. Palmer and another against Susan McArthur and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Henry Holsinger, of Sacramento, for appellants.

Herbert V. Keeling, of Lakeport, Clarence W. Morris, of San Francisco, and W. D. L. Held, of Ukiah, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiffs sued to quiet title to certain real property on the theory that the defendants had forfeited their interest under a contract of sale. The cause was tried before the court without a jury and resulted in a judgment for plaintiffs, from which the defendants have appealed on type-written transcripts.

The plaintiff Palmer, who is the real plaintiff in interest, was doing business under the fictitious name of the Clear Lake Beach Company. On November 29, 1924, this company executed with the defendants a contract of sale of lot 141 in the town site of Lucerne, Lake county, for the sum of $2,000. On August 19, 1925, a similar contract for the sale of lot 140 in the same townsite was executed by the same parties. Both contracts called for the payment of $733.33, with the balance to be paid, with interest, at the rate of $50 a month. Both contracts contained the usual stipulations as to time being of the essence, delivery of possession, and the manner and conditions under which the seller might exercise the right of forfeiture in case of default in payment. Both contracts also contained a stipulation that the buyer could not assign his interest without the seller's consent. The original payments were made as required and subsequent payments of $50 followed generally within the times specified during the first eight months, and four or five of these monthly installments were received after the due dates fixed in the contracts.

On August 9, 1926, defendant York assigned to his codefendant his interest in lot 140, and, at the same time, the defendant McArthur assigned her interest in lot 141 to him. Both assignments were made without the consent of the seller and at a time when the buyers were actually in default. Both assignments were made for the express purpose of enabling each defendant to obtain exclusive title to a single lot. On the same day that these assignments were made, the defendant York deposited with the Lake County Title & Abstract Company the sum of $700 to clear his title to lot 141. The title company deducted $10 for expenses and forwarded to the seller $690, which was the full amount then due upon the purchase of that lot. The seller credited this amount on its books as paid upon the contract covering lot 140, but nevertheless noted lot 141 as paid in full and thereafter issued its deed conveying to defendant York clear title to lot 141.

[1] The disputed question of fact arises from the testimony of the defendant McArthur that on August 28, 1926, she left Lucerne for Los Angeles, arriving there on the 29th; that on the 30th she personally appeared at the main office of the Clear Lake Beach Company in Los Angeles and paid over the counter $690 in cash on lot 140. There was received in evidence a printed receipt bearing the printed signature of the company and the typewritten signature of A. J. Dixon, who was a company employee. This receipt acknowledged payment of $690 on the contract covering lot 140 and was dated August 30, 1926. Opposed to this is the testimony on the part of the employees of the company that the money was not paid into the Los Angeles office, or at all; that only one payment of $690 was received at any time on account of the contracts for both lots; and that the receipt was not issued to Mrs. McArthur by Mr. Dixon or by any one in the company's employment. The trial court found adversely to defendants on this issue, and the testimony is in such conflict that we must accept the finding as controlling on this appeal.

If this payment had been made, as claimed by the defendants, the subsequent tender of the balance, which would then have been due, would have protected defendants' interest in the property; but without that payment the defendants were unquestionably long in default and the plaintiffs were entitled to enforce the forfeiture clause of the contract. With the court's finding on the issue of payment it follows as of course that the tender was insufficient in amount, notwithstanding any question as to the time within which it was made, and it is unnecessary to discuss the attack upon this finding.

[2-4] It is argued that the seller had waived its right to claim a forfeiture by accepting numerous payments on both contracts after such payments were due. The rule is that when the entire course of conduct between the parties has amounted to a waiver by the vendor of the portion of the contract making time of the essence, the vendor may not declare a forfeiture unless the vendee has been given reasonable notice of the election to insist upon the terms of the contract. Adams & McKee Land Co. v. Dugan, 68 Cal. App. 226, 231, 228 P. 681. But what is a reasonable time is primarily a question of fact for the trial court, the determination of which must depend upon the facts of each particular case. Hoppin v. Munsey, 185 Cal. 678, 684, 198 P. 398. In making its finding adverse to appellants on this issue the trial court had before it all the facts and circumstances of the business transactions between the parties, including the asserted claim of the appellants that they had paid on the contract $690 on August 30, 1926. Having found that this payment was not made, and that appellants' breach of the terms of the contract was willful, intentional, and with full knowledge of the amount actually due, the inference naturally follows that the matter of days within which the notice of election demanded compliance with the terms of the contract was of no significance. We may not, therefore, say that the trial court was in error in holding that a reasonable time for compliance had been given the appellants, or in refusing to relieve them from the forfeiture under the authority of section 3275, Civil Code, because the facts here show that the forfeiture was the result of appellants' willful or fraudulent breach of duty, in which case relief from forfeiture is expressly denied by the terms of that section.

[5] Complaint is made of the order of the trial court overruling appellants' general demurrer to the complaint on the ground that it did not allege that the land was worth the price paid, or that such price was in fair proportion to the value of the land. Cases supporting the rule that such allegations are necessary in actions for specific performance of contracts for purchase of land are cited to the point. If this rule were applicable in any sense to an action to quiet title, such as we have here the appellants have not been harmed by the ruling, because the question of value was put in issue by their cross-complaint and was fully tried without objection on their part. Tietke v. Forrest, 64 Cal. App. 364, 367, 221 P. 681; Stein v. United R. R., 159 Cal. 368, 370, 113 P. 663.

[6] Finally, it is argued that the trial court should have granted appellants' motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. The motion was based on affidavits alleging that two affiants entertained Mrs. McArthur in Los Angeles August 29th and 30th; that she showed them a large roll of bills, totaling in all "about $690"; and that on August 30th she showed them a receipt of the Clear Lake Beach Company for payment of $690 "on account of contract No. 5366." The affidavits of the appellants disclosed that this evidence was known to them long before the cause was determined. Aside from the fact that the proffered evidence was merely cumulative, and came in such a way as to be viewed with grave suspicion, the appellants failed to show the diligence in producing the evidence which the cases require must be shown.

The judgment is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 13, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 13, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 12, 1929.

1. Automobiles ⇨245(80)—Contributory negligence of automobile driver, having right of way in crossing intersection, without stopping for approaching car, held for jury (Motor Vehicle Law, § 131, as amended by St. 1925, p. 412, § 15).

Contributory negligence of automobile driver, having right of way, under Motor Vehicle Law (St. 1923, p. 517) § 131, as amended by St. 1925, p. 412, § 15, over approaching car, and proceeding across intersection without stopping to permit other car to pass ahead of him, held for jury.

2. Continuance ⇨51(6)—Denial of second continuance on simple request of counsel held not erroneous (Code Civ. Proc. § 595).

Denial of second application for continuance, made on simple request of counsel, without compliance with Code Civ. Proc. § 595, requiring affidavit showing materiality of evidence, held not erroneous, particularly in absence of showing or attempt to show any efforts to secure presence of witness or affidavit setting forth or stating any facts which could be substantiated by testimony of absent witness.

3. Evidence ⇨222(10)—Statement of motorist at time of collision was admissible as against him.

Statement made by driver of automobile at time of collision relative to speed at which he was driving, and to effect that he was trying the car out for purpose of locating certain noises or squeaks, was admissible as against him, when properly limited as applicable only to him, and not as to codefendant employer.

4. Automobiles ⇨246(58)—Evidence warranted instruction that choosing unsafe way in emergency was not negligence.

Evidence in action to recover damages for injuries received in automobile collision held to warrant instruction that person in imminent danger is not negligent in case he chooses the wrong or unsafe way.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; John F. Pullen, Judge.

Action by O. J. Olsen, also known as Carl Julius Olsen, against the J. J. Jacobs Motor Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Butler, Van Dyke & Desmond, of Sacramento, for appellants.

Frank L. Murphy, George E. McCutchen, and Ralph H. Cowing, all of Sacramento, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. Plaintiff had judgment against the defendants for injuries received in an automobile collision, from which judgment the defendants appeal.

Upon this appeal the defendants assigned four grounds upon which reversal is asked: First, that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law; second, that the court abused its discretion in refusing a continuance of the date of trial; third, that the court erred in admitting certain testimony; fourth, that the court improperly instructed the jury.

The transcript discloses that between the hours of 2 and 3 p. m. on the 12th day of March, 1927, the plaintiff was driving westward on that certain street in the city of Sacramento, known as and called W street, and that Howard Brown, an employee and agent of the defendant, J. J. Jacobs Motor Company, was driving southerly on that certain street in the city of Sacramento, known as and called Fifteenth street, which street intersects the street just mentioned and known as W street. Fifteenth and W streets intersect at right angles, each street being 50 feet in width. The measurements mentioned in the transcript and the distances referred to by the witnesses relate to the center line of the intersection of said streets. At the time mentioned there were no buildings or obstructions on the quarter block adjoining the northeast corner of the intersection of the streets mentioned. The injury upon which the plaintiff obtained judgment resulted from a collision between an automobile driven by Olsen and an automobile belonging to the J. J. Jacobs Motor Company, driven by Howard Brown, the collision occurring at the intersection of the two streets mentioned. The record shows that as the plaintiff was driving westward, at a speed of between 12 and 15 miles per hour, and when he was at a point about 75 feet from the center of the two streets mentioned, which would place the plaintiff about 50 feet east of the easterly curbline of Fifteenth street, he observed the defendant's car coming from the north on Fifteenth street at a distance northerly from the intersection of approximately 350 feet, and that the defendant's car appeared to be traveling at a speed of between 35 and 40 miles per hour; that the plaintiff paid no further particular attention to the defendant's car until he, the plaintiff, had reached the easterly line of the intersection of Fifteenth street with W street, when he again observed the defendant's car at a distance of about 175 feet from the intersection; that the plaintiff proceeded westerly until he reached the center of the intersection of the two streets, when he again paid attention to the defendant's car, and then observed that the driver of the defendant's car "was driving at an enormous speed, like a maniac, at an awful speed, at least 40 or 45 miles an hour"; and that at this instant of time the plaintiff, to use his expression, stepped on the accelerator of his car and moved westerly sufficiently far to escape a direct impact, but that the rear of his car was struck by the automobile belonging to the J. J. Jacobs Motor Company, with the result that the injuries, on account of which this action is prosecuted, ensued. No question is raised as to the judgment being excessive, nor would a further detail of the incidents of the collision aid in elucidating any of the issues raised upon this appeal.

Upon plaintiff's own testimony it is insisted that the plaintiff was shown to be guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. While the testimony of the plaintiff is set out extensively in the briefs, the point in issue is contained in a very few questions and answers, to wit: That the car driven by the defendant Brown was 350 feet from the intersection when first observed by the plaintiff, at which time the plaintiff was 50 feet east of the east line of Fifteenth street, or 75 feet from the point of intersection; that the second time the plaintiff observed the car driven by Brown, the plaintiff was at the east line of Fifteenth street and the car driven by Brown was 175 feet away; that the third time the plaintiff took note of the Brown car was, when the plaintiff was at the center of the intersection of the two streets as stated, he observed the manner in which the car was being driven. The transcript further shows that the plaintiff was not watching the car being driven by Brown, continuously from the time he first saw him until the time of the collision. The terrific rate of speed at which the plaintiff states that the car was being driven by Brown was at the instant just preceding the actual collision.

At the time of the occurrences with which we are dealing, section 131 of the Motor Vehicle Law read as follows: "When two vehicles approach an intersection of public highways at approximately the same time, the vehicle approaching from the right shall have the right of way, provided such vehicle is traveling at a lawful speed." St. 1923, p. 560, § 131, as amended by St. 1925, p. 412, § 15. Under this section, while the defendant's car was approaching from the right, the circumstances show that the plaintiff had the right of way. At the instant of time when the plaintiff reached the east line of Fifteenth street where it intersected W street, the defendant's car was 175 feet distant from the center line of W street, where it intersects Fifteenth street. This would give the plaintiff the right of way if we disregard the additional fact that the defendant's car was being driven at an unlawful rate of speed, which, under the terms of the section referred to, would itself exclude the defendants from any claim of having the right of way. However, admitting that under ordinary circumstances the plaintiff would have the right of way, with cars placed in the position indicated by the foregoing, it is insisted that, by reason of the fact that the plaintiff observed the defendant's car being driven southerly at a rate of between 35 and 40 miles an hour, when it was distant 350 feet from the intersection, and again observed the defendant's car when it was only 175 feet from the intersection, and also in view of the fact that he might have observed the car between the two points just referred to, the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law in entering the intersection and proceeding westerly, and therefore cannot recover.

[1] As a matter of law the plaintiff had the right of way; as a matter of law the plaintiff had a right to presume that the driver of the car belonging to the motor company would observe the law; as a matter of law the plaintiff had a right to enter the intersection at the time he did; as a matter of law the motor company's car was at all times being driven at an unlawful rate of speed and had no right to enter the intersection at the time it did. As a matter of fact, we think it was a question for the jury in this case to determine whether the plaintiff exercised such reasonable diligence for his own safety as the law requires one to exercise when so circumstanced, and if the jury, upon the facts which we have just recited, had reached the conclusion that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in not stopping his car and remaining without the intersection of the two streets until after the car driven by Brown had passed by, we would feel bound to uphold such verdict. In the recent case of Flores v. Fitzgerald (Cal. Sup.) 268 P. 369, we have circumstances almost identical with the case at bar. In the Flores Case a motorcyclist was traveling southerly on Buchanan street at its intersection with Fulton street in the city of San Francisco. The motorcyclist "did not stop before entering the intersection but was traveling at a speed of about 8 miles per hour, and testified he could have stopped his machine at any time within one foot; that just before he entered the intersection he noticed appellant's machine about 150 feet westerly on Fulton street approaching the intersection at a rapid rate of speed, between 35 and 40 miles per hour; that he proceeded to cross the intersection but did not look toward appellant's machine until he was 10 feet beyond the center of the intersection, when he looked to his right and appellant's automobile was right on him." Thus the respondent in that case had the right of way, notwithstanding the fact that the appellant's machine was approaching from the right, just as is the case before us. In the Flores Case the appellant was driving at an unlawful rate of speed, between 35 and 40 miles per hour. The respondent in that case saw the appellant's machine when it was 150 feet distant, and noticed the speed, but did not notice it again until it was right upon him in the intersection. The court then proceeds in its opinion to detail the circumstances of what resulted from the collision, which are immaterial to be mentioned. Just as in this case, the results of the collision have no bearing upon anything we are called upon to decide, but, after stating the results of the collision, the court disposes of the legal questions involved as follows: "Contributory negligence is a question of law only when the court is impelled to say that from the facts reasonable men can draw but one inference, and that an inference pointing unerringly to the negligence of the plaintiff contributing to his injury" (citing Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co., 189 Cal. 335, 208 P. 125; Smith v. Southern Pacific Co., 201 Cal. 57, 255 P. 500). "In all other cases the question of contributory negligence is a question of fact for the jury" (citing Wahlgren v. Market Street Ry. Co., 132 Cal. 656, 62 P. 308, 64 P. 993; Jansson v. National S. S. Co., 189 Cal. 192, 208 P. 90).

The court, in its opinion in the Flores Case, supra, also quotes from the case of Donat v. Dillon, 192 Cal. 426, 221 P. 193, as follows: "A motorist must at all times use due care to avoid colliding with another; he must be ever alert and watchful, so as not to place himself in danger, and while he may assume that others will exercise due care, he cannot for that reason omit any of the care which the law demands of him. Assuming, therefore, that the defendant had the right of way, he was required to proceed across the intersection in a careful and prudent manner, ever watchful of the direction in which danger was most likely to be apprehended. He could not close his eyes so far as south-bound traffic on Chester avenue was concerned. To the contrary, having observed Riddle's car approaching at an exceedingly fast rate of speed for that vicinity, the defendant was no longer entitled to rely upon the presumption that the driver of this machine would comply with the rules of the road, and he was bound to take such reasonable measures as he could, under the circumstances, to prevent the injury. It was, therefore, a question [of fact] for the trial court to determine upon all the evidence and the reasonable deductions therefrom whether the defendant, after having seen the approaching machine, continued to exercise the care and prudence which a reasonable man would have exercised under the circumstances. And as we cannot say that the trial court reached an unreasonable conclusion we are bound by its finding of the ultimate fact which determined the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury." This statement of the law taken from the case of Donat v. Dillon, supra, is peculiarly applicable to this case, and shows that the question of the plaintiff's contributory negligence was a question of fact to be determined by the jury. The plaintiff in the case at bar would correspond to the position of the defendant as referred to in the opinion of Donat v. Dillon.

In the case of Whitelaw v. McGilliard, 179 Cal. 349, 176 P. 679, we find language which we think applicable here upon the question as to whether the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. It is there said: "The plaintiff could not be expected to yield the right of way to one so far away, whose duty it was to slow down in crossing the intersection. When the defendant's son drove the vehicle upon that space he was going at an unlawful rate of speed, which he maintained. The rule regarding right of way does not impose upon the person crossing the street the duty of assuming that the other will continue across an intersecting street without slowing down, as required by law. It is clear that if the defendant's son had been going at a lawful rate of speed, or had slowed down as required by law, there would have been ample opportunity for the safe passage of the motorcycle." Under section 113 of the Motor Vehicle Act it was lawful for the parties involved in this proceeding to drive a motor vehicle at a speed not exceeding 20 miles per hour at the intersection of Fifteenth and W streets, and if the driver of the Motor Company's car had observed this requirement, there would have been no collision. It is true that had the plaintiff stopped his car and allowed the Motor Company's car to be driven past him, there would have been no collision, but the plaintiff was where he had a legal right to be, and whether, under the circumstances, his being where he had a legal right to be was the result of contributory negligence on his part, as a matter of fact was a question for the jury to determine.

As bearing upon the questions here involved in supporting the view which we have here stated, we may cite the cases of Commonwealth Insurance Co. v. Riverside-Portland Cement Co., 69 Cal. App. 165, 230 P. 995, and Carbaugh v. White Bus Line, 51 Cal. App. 1, 195 P. 1066. Other cases might be cited, but the foregoing establish the rule which we think applicable to this case, to wit, whether the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence was a question of fact for the jury to determine, and having been determined adversely to the appellant's contention, we are bound by the verdict of the jury.

[2] Was it an abuse of discretion for the trial court to deny the defendant's motion for a new trial? The record discloses that the denial of the defendant's motion for a continuance was a denial of the second application which was presented to the court about ten days subsequent to the granting of the first continuance. Upon the making of the second application for a continuance, counsel for appellants stated to the court, in substance, the following: "The driver of his car, Mr. Howard Brown, who is also one of the defendants here, was in the employ of the Jacobs Motor Company, and some time before the trial was set, I believe, about ten days, a week or so before, that we had been under the impression that Mr. Brown was working for the Powell Machinery Company, where he had been employed for four or five months succeeding the date of this accident, and we had been communicating with him off and on, and he assured us that he would not change his address or depart from the city without letting us know where he would be located. However, he did not do that, and I am afraid that Mr. Brown is financially irresponsible and perfectly willing to slide out of the picture. We endeavored to locate him, and being unable to do that, we asked for a continuance which was granted by the court." This was a recital of what occurred at the first continuance of the trial based upon the motion of the defendant.

Upon the present motion, counsel stated that they had employed a man to search for Mr. Brown; that they had not been able to locate him; that the testimony of Mr. Brown was very important in behalf of the defendants. The motion for a continuance was not supported by any affidavit. There is nothing in the record to show what the defendants expected to prove by Howard Brown. There is nothing in the record to show that the defendants had subpoenaed Howard Brown as a witness, or had made any endeavor to subpoena him as a witness. There is nothing in the record to show that Howard Brown would have testified to anything helpful to the cause of his codefendants. The motion does not appear to have been made in behalf of the defendant Mr. Brown, for any reason that he could not be present. There was nothing before the court to show that Howard Brown would be present if a continuance of the trial was granted. If the motion had been made on the ground of the absence of a party, the case of Beckman v. Waters, 161 Cal. 581, 119 P. 922, would constitute a complete answer, where it is said: "It is also claimed that the court erred in denying the motion for a continuance on the ground of the absence of the plaintiff. The court did not abuse its discretion in this ruling. The affidavits offered to support the motion showed, at most, that the plaintiff was unable to be present at the time set for the trial. But there was nothing to indicate that he would be able to appear at any later time, nor was there any sufficient showing of an excuse for the failure to take his deposition in proper form before the trial."

Section 595 of the Code of Civil Procedure, so far as pertinent here, reads as follows: "A motion to postpone a trial on the ground of the absence of evidence can only be made upon affidavit showing the materiality of the evidence expected to be obtained, and that due diligence has been used to procure it." The motion having been made upon the simple request of counsel, it would seem that, in view of the section of the Code to which we have referred, citation of cases showing the correctness of the ruling of the trial court would be unnecessary. However we may refer to the following: Canty v. Pierce & Anderson, 173 Cal. 205, 159 P. 582; Sheldon v. Landwehr, 159 Cal. 778, 116 P. 44; Harper v. Lamping, 33 Cal. 641; Watson v. Columbia Basin, etc., Co., 22 Cal. App. 556, 135 P. 511; Marcucci v. Vowinkel, 164 Cal. 693, 130 P. 430.

It may be further stated that the record shows that the defendants' motion for a new trial was not supported by any affidavits showing, or attempting to show, any efforts to secure the presence of Howard Brown, nor any statement to the effect that he would probably be present if a new trial was granted; nor was the motion for a new trial supported by any affidavit setting forth or stating any facts which could be substantiated by the testimony of Howard Brown. Under similar circumstances it was held in the case of Pilot Rock, etc., Co. v. Chapman, 11 Cal. 161, that an appellate court would not interfere with the discretion of the trial court in denying a new trial nor in denying a continuance. This rule was followed in the case of People v. De Lacey, 28 Cal. 590, where it was held that the rule should apply to criminal as well as civil cases. The record in this case, we think, conclusively shows that the trial court did not err in refusing to grant the second postponement of the trial.

[3] The third ground urged for reversal relates to the order of the trial court admitting in evidence statements made by the defendant Howard Brown. This statement related to the speed at which Brown was driving the motor company's car, and also that he was trying it out for the purpose of locating certain noises or squeaks. When this testimony was offered the defendants objected thereto and the court, in admitting the testimony, limited the same to the defendant Howard Brown, and instructed the jury as follows: "Ladies and gentlemen of the jury: There are two defendants in the case, a man named Jacobs and a man named Brown. Now, as to Jacobs, this objection is sustained, but as to Mr. Brown, one of the parties to the action, who made the statements and who was present, the objection is overruled; as to him, you may consider it as evidence, but not as to Jacobs." In support of their contention that the statements of Brown, one of the codefendants, should not have been admitted in evidence as against him, a number of cases are cited where a principal only is sued, and it was sought to introduce statements of employees made after the occurrences involved and not constituting a part of the res geste.

We do not need to review the cases cited by appellant for the simple reason that while they state the law applicable to the circumstances involved in the respective cases cited, they are not pertinent here. In the case at bar, Howard Brown is and was one of the defendants. Any statement made by him was admissible as against him and properly limited as admissible against him by the court in this case. Instead of quoting from the cases supporting this statement, we will simply cite them. Lampton v. Davis Standard Bread Co., 48 Cal. App. 116, 191 P. 710; Voorman v. Voight, 46 Cal. 392; Vallejo, etc., Ry. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 169 Cal. 545, 147 P. 238; Keyes v. Geary St. P. & O. R. Co., 152 Cal. 437, 93 P. 88; Jeslow v. Duncan, 125 Wash. 492, 216 P. 868. Other cases might be cited, but those referred to establish the rule in California applicable to circumstances similar to those involved in the case at bar. It therefore follows that the trial court did not err in admitting the testimony referred to, limiting it as applicable only to the defendant Howard Brown.

[4] It is finally contended that the trial court improperly instructed the jury in that the following portion of the charge was not pertinent to any of the issues presented. The instruction just referred to is numbered 5 and reads as follows: "The jury is instructed that when a person is in imminent danger he is not called upon to exercise that intelligence and judgment he would be expected to exercise, were he not in such danger; so if a party in imminent danger has two ways open to him, but has not the time to stop and investigate, and determine which is the right or safe way, and which is the wrong or unsafe way, his choosing of the latter is not, under the circumstances, negligence on his part." Prior to giving this instruction the trial court had fully advised the jury as to the law relating to contributory negligence. In fact, the instructions given to the jury by the court are singularly clear and free from any ambiguity, conflict, or uncertainty, and fully advised the jury as to the law involved in this case. Appellants do not complain that the portion of the charge just quoted is not a correct statement of the law, but simply question its applicability. The testimony of the plaintiff in this case was to the effect that he did not appreciate the danger which threatened him until he had reached the center of the intersection of Fifteenth and W streets. At this moment of time he observed that he was about to be run down by the rapidly approaching automobile belonging to the motor company, and that in order to escape he stepped on the accelerator in the hope of getting his car entirely free from the path of the motor company's automobile.

Two courses were open to the plaintiff: He might have set the brakes with all the force possible, or he might attempt, by speeding up his own machine, to get out of the way. Either course was hazardous. If the plaintiff set the brakes of his automobile, he was confronted with the possibility of stopping in the path of the defendant's automobile and being crushed by the force of the impact. On the other hand, if he speeded up his machine, so that he at least partly escaped the force of the impact, and as actually resulted in this case, his machine received the force of the blow to the rear of his machine, the consequences that would ensue would probably be less serious. With these circumstances in view, which we think should be reasonably considered by an automobile driver circumspect as the plaintiff was in this case, it makes the instruction which we have quoted applicable. Up until this moment of time we think the plaintiff by his testimony showed that he had a right to assume that the driver of the Motor Company's car would observe the law. As was said in Moreno v. Los Angeles Transfer Co., 44 Cal. App. 551, 186 P. 800: "Contributory negligence cannot be predicated upon an omission to assume that another will violate the law" (citing Medlin v. Spazier, 23 Cal. App. 242, 137 P. 1078; Raymond v. Hill, 168 Cal. 473, 143 P. 743).

Again, the appellants' contention in this case is that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in not observing that the car driven by Howard Brown would not be slowed down as it approached the intersection, so as to admit of a safe crossing by the plaintiff, and that it was the duty of the plaintiff, under the circumstances, to have stopped his car before reaching the point where the paths of the two machines would intersect, and that his failure to do so constituted contributory negligence. The jury, of course, found against this contention on the part of the appellants; but this statement shows that even if the charge of the court, as to one acting in an emergency, be held inapplicable, section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution would prohibit reversal on that account, for the reason that it could not have worked any prejudice to the appellants because the question of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, urged by the appellants, and found adversely to them by the jury, rested upon incidents, occurrences, and opportunities preceding the time when the plaintiff found himself in imminent danger.

Finding no cause for reversal, the judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

WHITE v. TULLETT et ux. (Civ. 6765.) ★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 26, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 23, 1929.

Appeal and error ⇨ 1011 (1)—Weight and inferences from conflicting evidence held for trial court, whose conclusions could not be disturbed on appeal.

Where evidence was conflicting, and conclusions other than found by trial judge might reasonably have been drawn therefrom, weight to be given evidence as well as inferences to be deduced were questions for trial court, and its conclusions could not be disturbed on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; R. L. Thompson, Judge.

Action by W. J. White against A. Tullett and wife. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Otto G. Kuklinski, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Aaron Turner, of Oakland, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. An action by a broker to recover a commission for services alleged to have been rendered in procuring an agreement for the exchange of certain real estate owned by defendants. Defendants denied that plaintiff performed his agreement or that they agreed to exchange on the terms alleged, and averred fraudulent representations by the plaintiff and the party procured by him. Judgment was entered for plaintiff, from which defendants appealed.

According to the findings, defendants, on January 14, 1925, employed the plaintiff to procure a sale or exchange of their property, for which service they agreed to pay a commission. On April 3, 1925, C. R. Scott was the owner of certain real property in Oakland, Cal., and from him the plaintiff procured an offer in writing to exchange this property for that of defendants, which offer the latter accepted. Defendants independently of plaintiff examined the Oakland property before they accepted the offer, and knew its value, condition, and the income therefrom, which the plaintiff at no time misrepresented. The offer from Scott contained a provision that the same should not be effective if within ten days from its date he should exchange the Oakland property for certain property owned by a third person with whom he was then negotiating. This prospective exchange was not made, and defendants were so advised. Scott thereupon tendered to them a conveyance sufficient to convey title in accordance with the exchange agreement, which defendants refused, stating that they declined to perform. It was further found that defendant A. Tullett read and fully understood the contract; that neither its contents nor legal effect was misrepresented to defendants; that all statements made to them by Scott and another were true; that Scott was at all times ready, willing, and able to perform the exchange agreement; and that plaintiff had performed his contract.

Defendants, as grounds for their appeal, claim that portions of the above findings are unsupported. After a careful examination of the record, we are satisfied that the findings are fully sustained. While the evidence was conflicting and other conclusions might reasonably have been drawn therefrom, the weight to be given thereto, as well as the inferences to be deduced, were questions for the trial court, and its conclusions cannot be disturbed on appeal. Sherman v. Sandell, 106 Cal. 373, 30 P. 797; Waer v. Waer, 189 Cal. 178, 207 P. 891; Aronson & Co. v. Pearson, 199 Cal. 295, 249 P. 191.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. COHEN. (Cr. 1752.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. June 19, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 1, 1929.

1. Criminal law ⇨ 741 (6)—Whether or not particular evidence or circumstance was necessary link in state's chain of circumstantial evidence was question for jury.

Whether or not a special piece of evidence or circumstance was a necessary link in state's chain of circumstantial evidence tending to connect defendant with commission of crime was matter for jury to decide.

2. Criminal law ⇨ 787 (2)—Requested general instruction on effect of defendant's failure to testify was properly refused, where defendant took stand for limited purposes only.

Requested instruction that defendant was not required to testify, and fact that he had not testified, was not to be taken into consideration, was properly refused, where defendant took the stand for limited purposes only, since it was not duty of judge to rewrite instruction to make it conform to facts of case.

3. Criminal law ☞169(5)—Admission of evidence was not prejudicial, in view of court's subsequent withdrawal thereof and admonition to disregard it, which jury is assumed to have heeded.

Admission of evidence cannot be said to have prejudiced defendant, where after lapse of some time trial court ordered evidence stricken from record and admonished jury to disregard it, as it is to be assumed that jury heeded admonition and disregarded evidence.

4. Indictment and information ☞37—Information following statutory form was sufficient to charge murder (Pen. Code, § 951, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1043).

Information following form prescribed by Pen. Code, § 951, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1043, held sufficient to charge crime of murder.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

Morris Cohen was convicted of murder, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Grant B. Cooper and Herman D. Greenschlag, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

YORK, J. Appellant was convicted of the crime of murder and sentenced to life imprisonment, and he appeals from the order denying his motion for a new trial and from the judgment of conviction.

The record discloses sufficient circumstantial evidence to sustain the conviction of the defendant by the jury, and in his appeal brief appellant raises the following points:

(1) That the evidence is insufficient to sustain or justify the verdict.

(2) That the court erred in refusing to give a certain instruction requested.

(3) That the court erred in allowing testimony as to weight and contents of certain cans of cyanide.

(4) That the court erred in permitting the prosecution to give evidence of the contents of a certain stomach, in absence of legal evidence to identify it.

(5) That the information fails to charge the crime of murder.

[1] 1. Appellant maintains, in connection with the first point, that there was an absolute break in the state's chain of circumstantial evidence, in that it failed to connect the defendant with the whisky or sack found by Mr. Lipsitz, and that the evidence discloses an equal or greater opportunity on the part of Lipsitz to have placed poison in the whisky, and that thus, as a matter of law, the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict.

It was a matter for the jury to decide whether or not this special piece of evidence or circumstance was a necessary link in the chain. People v. Ah Jake, 91 Cal. 98, 100, 27 P. 595.

[2] 2. The court refused to give the following instruction requested by appellant: "The defendant is not required by law to testify on his own behalf, nor is he bound to explain his actions or conduct. The strongest presumption of law is that the defendant is innocent and he may rest upon this presumption. The fact that the defendant has not testified on his own behalf in this case is not, according to the law, any evidence at all as to his guilt or innocence, and you will not take such fact into consideration nor draw any inferences therefrom in arriving at your verdict."

Appellant assigns refusal of the court to give this instruction as error. As a matter of fact, appellant did take the stand. It is true, it was for a limited purpose only—in order to identify and prove his signature to certain hospital records—but it was not the duty of the court to rewrite the instruction requested in order to make it conform to the facts in the case. Under the circumstances, it was not error for the court to refuse to give the instruction.

[3] 3. In connection with appellant's third point, he maintains that the only evidence by which guilt could have been inferred by the jury in this case was the alleged possession of the cyanide by the defendant. Over the objection of appellant, the trial court admitted into evidence the testimony of one Forster, foreman of the Western Wholesale Drug Company, to the effect that he had, within 10 days preceding the trial, opened 17 cans of cyanide, counted the number of eggs in them, and weighed them, and that these cans were similar to the can in evidence; the purpose of this testimony being to show that the can of cyanide returned by appellant to the druggist had been opened for the express purpose of extracting a portion of its contents. In other words, it was just another link in the chain of circumstantial evidence by which it was sought to connect the defendant with the crime. However, the trial court ordered this evidence stricken from the record, after a lapse of some time, and admonished the jury to disregard it. As it is to be assumed that the jury heeded the admonition of the court and disregarded the evidence, we are of the opinion that no prejudice resulted to appellant.

4. The appellant contends that there was not sufficient identification of the body of deceased to admit in evidence the testimony of the autopsy surgeon or the testimony of the chemist who examined the stomach.

After a careful examination of the record, we are of the opinion that there was sufficient identification of the body of deceased, and that no error was committed by the admission of the evidence complained of.

[4] 5. The information in the instant case follows the form prescribed by section 951 of the Penal Code. In the case of People v.

Coen, 271 P. 1074, the Supreme Court in passing upon the sufficiency of the information there, which was in the same form as the one used in the instant case, recognized the force and effect of section 951 of the Penal Code, as amended in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1043), and held that an information, which followed substantially the language of the code section in question, was sufficient to charge the crime of murder.

For the reasons hereinabove set forth, the order denying the motion for a new trial and the judgment of conviction are affirmed.

FERGUSON v. GREEN. (Civ. 6426.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 27, 1929.

1. Animals §23(2)—Plaintiff, in action for failure to redeliver cattle pastured for him by defendant and claimed by defendant to have been destroyed, held required only to allege and prove their delivery and failure to return on demand.

Notwithstanding the contractual relations between the parties, plaintiff, in action for failure of defendant to redeliver part of the cattle which he agreed to pasture for plaintiff, was not required to allege or prove performance of contract, which required payment by him for pasturage, but it was enough to allege and prove delivery with failure to return on demand; defendant having at all times claimed that the animals were destroyed without his fault, and not that he refused to redeliver till his demands for pasturage were paid.

2. Animals §23(2)—Defendant who received cattle to pasture must show their loss or destruction occurred through cause consistent with his due care.

Defendant, seeking to justify his failure to redeliver cattle which he had received from plaintiff to pasture by showing that they were lost or destroyed, had the burden of showing that this occurred through some cause consistent with due care on his part.

3. Animals §23(2)—Finding of destruction of animals through fault of one who had received them to pasture held supported by evidence.

Conclusion that destruction of animals which defendant received to pasture was through his fault held supported by the evidence.

4. Appeal and error §1011(1)—Findings of trial court on conflicting evidence cannot be disturbed.

Findings of trial court having sufficient support in the evidence cannot be disturbed on conflicting evidence.

5. Animals §23(2)—Allowance of defendant's claim for pasturage held not inconsistent with conclusion that he had not excused failure to redeliver part of cattle.

Allowance of claim of defendant for pasturage in action for his failure to redeliver part of the cattle delivered to him to pasture held not in conflict with the conclusion that he had failed to excuse noncompliance with his obligation to redeliver, he in any event being entitled to payment for services rendered under the contract.

6. Appeal and error §117, 713(1)—Order striking affidavit from reporter's transcript is not appealable, and affidavit, though in clerk's transcript, will be disregarded.

An order that affidavit be stricken from the reporter's transcript is not appealable, and the affidavit, though included in the clerk's transcript, must be disregarded.

7. Appeal and error §533(1)—Trial court's statement of theory of decision at close of argument for new trial is not properly part of record on appeal.

Statement by trial court as to theory on which case was decided, made at close of argument on motion for new trial, is not properly a part of the record on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; C. E. Beaumont, Judge.

Action by W. R. Ferguson against C. E. Green. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Theodore M. Stuart, of Fresno, for appellant.

G. L. Aynesworth and Frank Kauke, both of Fresno, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This action was brought to recover damages for the failure to redeliver certain cattle, being part of a herd owned by the plaintiff which the defendant agreed to pasture. The latter filed a counterclaim for pasturage and commissions together with labor furnished and money expended for plaintiff's benefit.

According to the findings the defendant failed to redeliver or account for 57 head of stock of the value of $2,233.25. It was also found that defendant was entitled to $844.75 under his counterclaim, and judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff for the difference, viz., $1,388.50.

The defendant, who has appealed from the judgment and an order denying a motion to set aside the judgment and enter a judgment upon the findings in his favor, contends that the findings in favor of the plaintiff are unsupported; that the theory on which the case was tried and decided was erroneous; and also that the court erred in striking a certain affidavit from the reporter's transcript on appeal.

The complaint alleged the delivery of the cattle to the defendant pursuant to a contract in writing whereby the latter, in consideration of the payment of certain amounts per head, agreed to keep the cattle on a range where they would have sufficient to eat and drink, and to return and account for them in a manner satisfactory to the plaintiff. It further alleged performance by the plaintiff, a demand, and defendant's failure to return a number in excess of that found by the court. Defendant admitted the receipt of the missing cattle, which were shipped to him from New Mexico, but alleged that when received they were suffering from disease from which they later died, and that he had fully performed the contract.

The plaintiff, after adducing evidence in support of the allegations of his complaint, with the exception of that of performance of the contract on his part, rested. Defendant contends that the action stated was one in contract; that in order to recover it was necessary that the latter allegation be proved; and that sums being due for pasturage and commissions at the time of the demand, as found by the court, he was within his rights in refusing to redeliver the missing cattle.

[1-4] In view of the undisputed facts the allegation and proof of performance by the plaintiff were not essential to a recovery, the record showing that the defendant at all times claimed that the missing cattle were destroyed without his fault, not that he refused to redeliver until his demands for pasturage and commissions were paid. This defense he undertook to prove, and the case was tried on the theory that the question of his negligence was an issue. Under the circumstances, and notwithstanding the contractual relations between the parties, it was only necessary for the plaintiff to allege the delivery with a failure to return the property on demand (Dieterle v. Bekin, 143 Cal. 683, 77 P. 664), and the presumption arising from the proof of these facts was sufficient prima facie to sustain the action (Wilson v. Southern Pacific Co., 62 Cal. 164). Upon such proof being made it was then incumbent upon the bailee to excuse his failure to redeliver (Kier Singh Doot v. Skirving, etc., Co., 202 Cal. 75, 259 P. 81); and where he sought to justify the failure by showing that the cattle were lost or destroyed the burden was upon him to show that this occurred through some cause consistent with due care on his part (Wilson v. Crown Transfer, etc., Co., 201 Cal. 701, 258 P. 596). The defendant adduced evidence in support of his defense; but, on the other hand, there was evidence showing that the stock were placed in a pasture several thousands of acres in extent, in which it was difficult to care for or water them and from which escape was easy; that the range was traversed by deep canyons into which the cattle if they became sick would probably fall, and into which in several cases the evidence tends to show that they did fall; that the pasture, to the knowledge of the defendant, contained growths of poisonous buckeye and black fern which were likely to be eaten by cattle strange to the locality. It was also shown that the defendant neglected for considerable periods to visit the cattle, and in addition to the above there was evidence tending to impeach the accuracy of entries claimed to have been made at various times in defendant's books of account with respect to the number of cattle which died from disease. The record also contains other evidence tending to support the case for the plaintiff which it will be unnecessary to review. Sufficient appears to support the conclusion of the trial court, and the evidence being conflicting its findings cannot be disturbed. 2 Cal. Jur., Appeal and Error, § 543, p. 921.

[5] Appellant contends that the court having allowed his claims for pasturage and commissions, this was tantamount to a finding that he had fully performed the contract, and consequently was not liable for the loss of the cattle, and that judgment should have been entered upon the findings accordingly.

We find no merit in this contention as the defendant was in any event entitled to payment for services rendered under the contract, and the finding to that effect was not in conflict with the conclusion that appellant had failed to excuse noncompliance with his obligation to redeliver the stock and his consequent liability for their value.

[6, 7] Appellant sought to have incorporated in the transcript on appeal an affidavit filed by his attorney setting forth certain statements made by the judge of the trial court at the close of the argument upon appellant's motion for a new trial as to the theory on which the case was decided. The affidavit upon motion was ordered to be stricken from the reporter's transcript, and it is claimed that this order was erroneous.

The order was not appealable, and the affidavit, although included in the clerk's transcript, must be disregarded. Lake v. Harris, 198 Cal. 85, 243 P. 417. Nor was the statement by the trial court properly a part of the record on appeal. De Cou v. Howell, 190 Cal. 741, 214 P. 444.

The judgment is affirmed.

GLENSOR, CLEWE & VAN DINE v. ANDRIANO et al., Board of Sup'rs. (Civ. 6731.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 26, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 26, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 22, 1929.

1. Municipal corporations. C-177—Board of election commissioners is department of city government, which cannot function independently from other city departments.

The board of election commissioners of the city and county of San Francisco is a department of city government, and its powers are not such as to make it function independently from other departments of city government.

2. Municipal corporations. C-214(3)—Board of election commissioners held unauthorized to employ attorney in controversy with board of supervisors as to expenditures for election purposes.

The board of election commissioners of city and county of San Francisco was without authority to employ special counsel to represent board in suit to compel board of supervisors to allow in annual budget amount estimated to be necessary by board of election commissioners for the then ensuing year, and attorney so employed cannot recover fees and costs from city.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Action for writ of mandamus by Glensor, Clewe & Van Dine, a copartnership consisting of H. W. Glensor, Ernest Clewe, and Melvin E. Van Dine, against Sylvester Andriano and others, composing and comprising the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Harold H. Price, of San Francisco, for appellants.

John J. O'Toole, City Atty., and Walter A. Dold, Chief Deputy City Atty., both of San Francisco, for respondents.

KOFORD, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment for defendants following the sustaining of a demurrer to plaintiffs' complaint. The action was for a writ of mandamus to compel the payment by the city and county of San Francisco of a claim of plaintiffs for attorney fees and costs. The board of election commissioners had employed plaintiffs to represent it in a proceeding by which it was sought to compel the board of supervisors to allow in the annual budget the amount estimated to be necessary by the board of election commissioners for that department for the then ensuing year. That action was unsuccessful. Griffin v. Boyle (Jackson v. Badaracco) 202 Cal. 95, 259 P. 729.

The question presented on this appeal is whether the board of election commissioners had authority to employ attorneys in that proceeding and make the expense thereof chargeable against the treasury of the city.

The city attorney, having ruled against the contention of the board of election commissioners, appeared for and represented the respondents in that proceeding. The appellants cite the provisions of law and the charter giving the election commissioners general management and power over registrations and the holding of elections. They cite authorities which sustain the power of general legislative bodies of various municipal corporations (such as city councils, boards of supervisors, and we may add in some cases boards of education) to employ special counsel in certain cases. No direct authority is cited supporting the action of the board of election commissioners in employing plaintiffs as counsel to represent it, but it is claimed that the board has this power as an implied one.

[1, 2] The authorities cited by appellants we deem not to be in point because not dealing with controversies between two departments of the same municipality. This is not a case where counsel were employed to represent the municipality in an action with another party, but is an interdepartmental controversy. The board of election commissioners is a department of the city government, and its powers are not such as to make it function independently from the other departments of the city government. Griffin v. Boyle (Jackson v. Badaracco) supra, and Fitzgerald v. Badaracco, 202 Cal. 18, 258 P. 937, illustrates this point. While there are authorities which permit the employment of special counsel instead of the city attorney or district attorney under special circumstances making such action necessary, we have been referred to none which apply that rule to a controversy between two departments of the same municipal corporation. Cases in which implied power to employ special counsel has been denied one department in a controversy with another are Rafael v. Boyle, 31 Cal. App. 623, 161 P. 126; State v. Gorman, 117 Minn. 323, 136 N. W. 402; Higginson v. City of Fall River, 226 Mass. 423, 115 N. E. 764, 2 A. L. R. 1209.

If it should be conceded that in certain emergencies the board of election commissioners could employ special counsel to represent itself as a board as distinguished from the city and make the expense chargeable against the city treasury, the petition in this case does not show such an emergency. The controversy appears to have been only a difference of opinion or judgment as to how much money would be necessary for election purposes for the fiscal year. The amount necessary to be allowed in the budget has been held to be a matter which is by law confided to the board of supervisors rather than to the other departments of the municipality. Griffin v. Boyle (Jackson v. Badaracco) supra;

Fitzgerald v. Badaracco, 202 Cal. 18, 258 P. 937. In the case last cited it is said: "To hold otherwise would be not only to nullify in a large measure the provisions of the charter with relation to the preparation of the annual budget by the Board of Supervisors, but would also be to place it within the power of the Board of Public Works and certain other departments of the city government to provide for expenditures within their several departments in excess of the tax limit provided for in the * * * charter, and in so doing to be and act beyond the control of the legislative body of said city, whose duty it is to keep the expenditures of its government within such limit of taxation."

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

Automobiles ⚙️ 359—Vehicle Act prohibits court from imprisoning defendant under probation order for longer period than fixed by jury's verdict (California Vehicle Act, § 112, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1436; Pen. Code, § 1203).

Under California Vehicle Act, § 112 (St. 1923, p. 553, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1436), providing that court shall have no authority to impose sentence greater than that recommended by jury, held that court is without authority to imprison defendant for longer time than period fixed by jury, either by direct judgment of sentence, or under guise of a probation order, under Pen. Code, § 1203.

Application by John I. Montague for writ of habeas corpus prayed to be directed to the Sheriff of Los Angeles County to secure the release of the petitioner from custody. Petitioner discharged.

Wm. Christensen and J. H. O'Neill, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Buron Fitts, Dist. Atty., and Tracy Chatfield Becker, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. By section 112 of the California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, pp. 517, 553, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1436) penalties are imposed upon persons violating the provisions of said section. These penalties include either fine or imprisonment, within certain stated limits. It is further provided: "And upon every verdict of 'guilty' under this section, the jury shall recommend the punishment and the court in imposing sentence shall have no authority to impose a sentence greater than that recommended by the jury." Section 1203 of the Penal Code contains an elaborate series of provisions of law relating to admission of convicted persons to probation. It is provided that the court may suspend the imposing of sentence, and (among other things), in the order granting probation, and as a condition thereof "may imprison the defendant in the county jail for a period not exceeding the maximum time fixed by law in the instant case."

In the present proceeding it appears that the petitioner, Montague, was tried upon a charge of violation of section 112 of the California Vehicle Act, and that the jury, as a part of its verdict of guilty, fixed the penalty as imprisonment in the county jail for a period of 90 days. Thereafter on the 21st day of January, 1929, the court granted probation, and ordered "that proceedings herein be suspended and the defendant granted probation for a period of five years under the following conditions: the first year of said probation period, defendant shall serve at the county road camp. * * *" Under this probation order the defendant remained in the county road camp until the 20th of February, when he escaped, but was arrested on the following day, and has since remained in the custody of the sheriff. In the meantime, he was prosecuted and convicted of the crime of escape, on which conviction he was admitted to probation, without any order of imprisonment. In this proceeding the writ of habeas corpus was issued on the 25th day of April, 1929.

It is manifest that at the time of the issuance of the writ the defendant had been in custody for the full period of 90 days under the probation order, unless the district attorney is correct in his contention that the time during which defendant was in custody under the additional charge arising out of his escape should not be counted as a part of the period of confinement under the probation order. But at all events the defendant now has been in custody for more than 90 days under the probation order, and we think this matter can properly be determined solely upon one question; that is to say, whether or not, in view of the terms of the statutes to which we have referred, the superior court in its probation order, had jurisdiction to subject the defendant to a term of imprisonment beyond the 90-day period fixed by the jury. It is pointed out by the district attorney that the limitation upon the authority of the court in the language of section 112 of the said Vehicle Act is stated as a limitation of the court's authority "in imposing sentence." It is also true that the authority given the court in section 1203 of the Penal Code, to impose imprisonment in the county jail for a limited term in connection with granting probation, is part of a proceeding in which the court "may suspend the imposing, or the execution of the sentence." The power to admit to probation may be exercised upon application of the defendant, or of the people, or upon its own motion. Taking all of these statutory provisions together, it is manifest that, where the court in granting probation orders the imprisonment of a defendant in the county jail, such imprisonment is involuntary on the part of the defendant, just as much as if he were held in custody under direct judgment of imprisonment. It is our opinion that the Legislature, in enacting section 112 of said Vehicle Act, intended that, when the jury, in a case coming under that section, recommends a definite limit of imprisonment, the court shall thereby be left without authority to imprison the defendant for a longer period of time, either by direct judgment of sentence, or under the guise of a probation order. In other words, we think that the phrase, "authority to impose a sentence," in section 112, as amended, includes not only the technical judgment, which is the usual form of sentence, but also includes a sentence contained in a probation order.

The petitioner is discharged from custody.

HELBUSH v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. 6974.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 19, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 19, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 15, 1929.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 74—Generally order refusing to vacate final judgment is not appealable, if grounds therefor were available on appeal from judgment.

Generally, order refusing to vacate final judgment is not appealable, if grounds on which party sought to have judgment vacated existed before entry of judgment, and were available on appeal from judgment, since appeal, if allowed from such order, would in effect allow two appeals from same ruling.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 74—Appeal lies from order refusing to set aside final judgment, if appellant has no other method of presenting case to appellate court.

Appeal from order refusing to set aside final judgment will lie where there is no method by which right of appellant to relief sought can be presented to appellate court, and facts on which he bases his claim to relief do not appear from an inspection of the judgment roll.

3. Divorce $\S$ 175—Wife could move to set aside final decree of divorce and appeal from order denying motion, where appeal from final decree would be valueless, and was not entitled to certiorari to review order granting final decree (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 953a, 1068, 1086; Judicial Council Rule 26).

Where final decree of divorce was merely restatement of interlocutory decree, and was granted ex parte without opportunity to wife to resist same or to make record for appeal under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 953a, and alleged error in granting final decree or want of jurisdiction did not appear from judgment roll, since affidavit required by Judicial Council Rule 26 need not be made part of judgment roll, and record of proceedings pursuant to interlocutory decree could not be made part of record on appeal from final decree, appeal from final decree would be valueless, since record would not show alleged error or want of jurisdiction, but wife could move to set aside final decree, and, if motion was denied, could appeal from order denying motion, and hence wife was not entitled to writ of certiorari to review order granting final decree of divorce under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1068, 1086, limiting right of certiorari to case where there is no appeal.

4. Certiorari $\S$ 5(1)—Certiorari lies only where there is no appeal nor adequate remedy (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1068, 1086).

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1068, 1086, certiorari lies only where there is no appeal, nor, in judgment of court, any plain, speedy, and adequate remedy.

Certiorari by Gwyneth Helbush to review an order of the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and Hon. T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge thereof. Writ denied.

Harry I. Stafford, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. Petitioner has applied for a writ of certiorari to annul a final decree of divorce granted ex parte on April 10, 1929, by the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco. The facts upon which the application is based, as they are set forth in the petition, are as follows: On January 18, 1924, petitioner obtained an interlocutory decree of divorce from her husband upon the ground of extreme cruelty. After a lapse of five years, to wit, on February 15, 1929, she presented a motion to vacate said decree upon the ground, as stated in the affidavit filed in support of the motion, that shortly after the entry of the interlocutory decree the parties became reconciled, and afterwards cohabited with each other openly, notoriously, and continuously as husband and wife from July, 1924, until January, 1929, a period of nearly five years. The motion was contested, and on April 5, 1929, was denied. Five days thereafter, to wit, on April 10, 1929, petitioner's husband, being at the time represented by counsel who had not theretofore appeared of record in the divorce proceeding, applied ex parte to another department of said court for a final decree of divorce. At that time the record of the proceeding to set aside the interlocutory decree was brought to the court's attention, including the contents of the affidavit filed therein, showing that the parties had become reconciled and lived together for a period of nearly five years immediately preceding January, 1929; and counsel for petitioner's husband then stated that, for the reasons set forth in said affidavit, their client was unable to comply with rule 26 of the Judicial Council regulating the business of superior courts, which provides, in substance, that, as a prerequisite to the granting of a final decree of divorce, the applicant shall file and present an affidavit setting forth that since the rendition of the interlocutory decree the parties have not become reconciled, nor lived or cohabited together; but it was claimed that it was beyond the power of the Judicial Council to adopt such a rule. The final decree of divorce was granted, and petitioner now contends that, by reason of the court's knowledge, imparted by said affidavit, as to the reconciliation of the parties, and the non-compliance with said rule 26 of the Judicial Council, the court was without jurisdiction to grant said final decree.

With reference to the exercise of the power of this court to grant a writ of certiorari, it is pointed out by the case of Stoddard v. Superior Court, 108 Cal. 303, 41 P. 278, that, even though a court be without jurisdiction to make an order or decree, if such order or decree "is appealable, certiorari will not lie, because it lies only where 'there is no appeal.' Code Civ. Proc., sec. 1068. In this respect," says the court, "it differs from mandamus and prohibition, which lie 'in all cases where there is not a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law' (Code Civ. Proc., secs. 1086, 1103). With respect to certiorari, the language of the code is: 'when * * * there is no appeal, nor in the judgment of the court, any plain, speedy, and adequate remedy' (Code Civ. Proc., sec. 1068). In Stuttmeister v. Superior Court, 71 Cal. 322 [12 P. 270], the authorities on the point are collated; and it was there declared that: 'the writ (certiorari) will not lie when there is an appeal from the action complained of;' and 'the writ is not given in lieu of an appeal, but only to review errors in excess of jurisdiction, for which an appeal does not lie.' (See cases cited in opinion of Searles, C., also In re McConnell, 74 Cal. 217, 219 [15 P. 746]; Hayne on New Trial and Appeal, sec. 307)."

The determinative question presented by the petition herein is, therefore, whether petitioner has a remedy by appeal either from the final decree of divorce or from any adverse order which might be made pursuant to a motion to set aside the final decree. That an appeal will lie generally from a final decree of divorce was held in the case of Reynolds v. Reynolds, 191 Cal. 435, 216 P. 619. There the trial court concluded from the facts found that neither party was entitled to a divorce, and entered its decree accordingly; subsequently, on motion of the defendant, and after the time for appeal from the decree had expired, the court vacated the decree, set aside its conclusions of law, and granted defendant an interlocutory decree of divorce; and at the expiration of one year entered the final decree in accordance with the terms of the interlocutory decree. Thereafter the plaintiff in the action moved to vacate both the interlocutory and final decrees upon the ground that the decree denying the divorce became final before application was made to set it aside, and that consequently the court lost jurisdiction to alter said decree. The motion was denied, and plaintiff appealed. It was held that the order denying the plaintiff's motion was not appealable "because both the interlocutory and final decrees were appealable"—citing among other authorities Estate of Baker, 170 Cal. 578, 150 P. 989. A qualified rule is declared in the case of Huneke v. Huneke, 12 Cal. App. 199, 107 P. 131 (hearing by Supreme Court denied). There it was held that, if the final decree is in effect merely a restatement and reaffirmance of the provisions of the interlocutory decree, no appeal lies from the final decree, because the interlocutory decree is appealable. In this regard the court said: "The mere fact that the final decree restated and reaffirmed the previous judgment made and entered at the time of the trial and included in the interlocutory judgment, conferred no right of appeal as to matters involved and finally determined by the original interlocutory judgment, even though it should be said that the effect of section 131, Civil Code, is to hold in abeyance the execution of the final judgment as to the property rights until the entry of the final decree of divorce."

[1, 2] It is a general rule also that an order refusing to vacate a final judgment is not appealable, if the grounds upon which the party sought to have the judgment vacated existed before the entry of the judgment, and were available on an appeal from the judgment, the main reason for the rule being that, if such an appeal be allowed, it would be virtually allowing two appeals from the same ruling, one from the judgment and the other from the negative action of the court declining to disturb the judgment. 2 Cal. Jur. 164. But, as indicated by the statement of the rule, there are certain exceptions to its general application, one of them being that an appeal from an order refusing to set aside a final judgment will lie, where there is no method by which the right of the appellant to the relief sought by him can be presented to the appellate court and the facts on which he bases his claim to relief do not appear from an inspection of the judgment roll. De La Montanya v. De La Montanya, 112 Cal. 101, 44 P. 345, 32 L. R. A. 82, 53 Am. St. Rep. 165; Estate of Baker, supra. In the former case, which was one for divorce, wherein the decree was obtained upon a constructive service of summons and the trial court made certain provisions as to the care and custody of the minor children, the Supreme Court said: "It is also claimed that no appeal lies to this court from an order refusing to set aside the judgment because the judgment was appealable. To this proposition many decisions of this court are cited. I do not care to review these cases. No doubt it has been held, and I think correctly, that when a motion is made to vacate an order under such circumstances that it merely calls upon the court to repeat or overrule the former ruling on the same facts, the last order is not appealable, not because the last order is not within the terms of section 963 of the code [Code Civ. Proc.] allowing appeals, for it may be; but because it would be virtually allowing two appeals from the same ruling, and would, in some cases, have the effect of extending the time for appealing contrary to the intent of the statute. Nor will such practice be allowed merely to permit a litigant to take an exception, or get a bill of exceptions, which he has neglected to do at the proper time. But I see no reason why this appeal should not be entertained. It is plainly within the terms of the statute allowing appeals, and no other method is suggested in which the right of the appellant to the relief sought could be considered here. An appeal upon the judgment roll would not present all the facts upon which the motion is based—even if one may have a bill of exceptions when he has not been in court, and has taken no exceptions. Besides, it is a case in which it was eminently proper, if not necessary, that relief should first be asked from the trial court. Its action could not have been asked in any other mode. The defendant was not in court, and had no opportunity to be heard."

The Estate of Baker, supra, which, as will be noted, was cited in Reynolds v. Reynolds, supra, in support of the rule there announced, is to the same effect. In that case the contestant to a will died before the trial of the contest, and on the day set for trial the fact of her death was made known to the court, whereupon the proponents of the will moved for and obtained a dismissal of the contest upon the ground that the right to contest a will did not survive the death of the contestant. About two months later an administrator of the estate of the deceased contestant was appointed, and he moved for an order vacating the judgment of dismissal and for a substitution of himself as the contestant. The motion was denied, and he appealed from the order of denial. The proponents of the will then moved for the dismissal of the appeal upon the ground that said order was not appealable, contending that the only appeal afforded was one from the judgment of dismissal, and that, since no such appeal was taken, an appeal from the subsequent order would not lie. In ruling adversely upon the motion, the court first recognized the existence of the general rule that no appeal lies from an order refusing to vacate an order or judgment, stating that, if the rule were otherwise, a losing litigant would be afforded two appeals, one from the final judgment and the other from the order denying the motion to vacate said judgment. "But," says the court, "there are a large number of cases arising under an entirely different state of facts where the reason for the rule being otherwise, the rule itself is otherwise. In those cases two appeals are not permitted, but, to the end that justice may be done, one appeal is permitted from an order refusing to vacate a judgment or decree when, for reasons involving no fault of the appealing party, he has never been given an opportunity to appeal directly from the judgment or decree. These are cases where one's rights or interests are injuriously affected by a judgment or by an appealable order in litigation to which he is not formally a party, or in which, if a party, he has not received due notice, so that as to him the judgment or appealable order is made ex parte. In such cases it is always permissible for the one injured to make himself a party to the litigation, if he has not been a party, and, after he has thus submitted to the jurisdiction of the court, to move the vacation of the decree or appealable order injuriously affecting his interest, and to appeal if the motion be denied. The same right is open to one who is a party to the litigation and against whom such an order or decree has been given improperly and ex parte. These cases, of course, arise when the motions are made after the time limited by law for the appeal has expired. The moving parties, for the indicated reasons, have not been able to avail themselves of the right to appeal. And only by this method can they be protected in this valuable right. Our cases so holding are numerous. Says this court in Elliott v. Superior Court, 144 Cal. 501, [77 P. 1109, 103 Am. St. Rep. 102]: 'He may make himself a party by moving to set aside such judgment or order, and, if his motion is denied, may, on appeal from that order, have the proceeding of which he complains reversed, not only for excess of jurisdiction, but for error.' And in Pignaz v. Burnett, 119 Cal. 157 [51 P. 48], this court further declares: 'As to every order finally disposing of the rights of the parties, as to any matter involved in the litigation—orders, final in the sense that the question cannot be again considered in the case—the parties affected have a right to be heard. When they are made ex parte, the right to move to vacate the order, and upon such motion to show cause against the order, is implied. In such case, the only appeal which can avail is an appeal from the order refusing to vacate. In no other way, where evidence is submitted, can the appellant present to this court his showing against the order. To say he cannot do this is to deny him his right of appeal.'” Continuing, the court says that the class of cases above mentioned “* * * is so widely different from the generality of cases that it may not even be fairly said to constitute an exception to the general rule. * * *”

A case which might be cited as not falling within the foregoing exception is Spitzer v. Superior Court, 74 Cal. App. 494, 241 P. 270 (hearing denied by the Supreme Court). There the petitioner sought a writ of prohibition to prevent the granting of a final decree of divorce, but, it having appeared from the facts that petitioner had made a showing in opposition to the granting of the final decree, the writ was denied upon the ground, among others, that, if the final decree were granted, he would be afforded a full remedy by appeal therefrom.

[3] Summarizing the situation in the present case, it appears, first, from a comparison of the terms of the final decree with those of the interlocutory decree, that the former is merely a restatement and reaffirmance of the latter; secondly, that, owing to the fact that the final decree was granted ex parte, petitioner was given no opportunity to resist the granting of the same, and consequently was afforded no opportunity to lay a record for an appeal to be taken by way of a bill of exceptions or pursuant to the alternative method provided by section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure; thirdly, that the alleged error or want of jurisdiction does not appear from the judgment roll, because there is no statutory requirement that the affidavit which shall be made pursuant to rule 26 of the Judicial Council as a prerequisite to obtaining a final decree of divorce shall be made a part of the judgment roll; and, fourthly, that the record of the proceeding had pursuant to the motion to set aside the interlocutory decree cannot serve as a record on appeal from the final decree because the motion upon which that proceeding was based was directed against a different decree, and was heard before and determined by a different judge. In that state of the record, it is evident that any appeal which might be taken from the final decree of divorce would be valueless, because, without fault on petitioner's part, there would be no record showing the alleged error or want of jurisdiction in granting such final decree. That being so, and in view of the rule declared in De la Montanya v. De la Montanya, supra, and Estate of Baker, supra, we are of the opinion that petitioner may, if she has not already done so, move to set aside the final decree upon the grounds urged herein for its annulment, and, if the motion be denied, may appeal from the order made in that behalf. Therefore, being given such right of appeal, she is not entitled to a writ of certiorari to serve the purpose of such appeal.

[4] In further support of the application herein, it is alleged that, unless the latter be granted, petitioner's husband will dissipate, secrete, and dispose of the community property, valued at more than $1,000,000, and that as a consequence petitioner will be deprived of her legal right to share therein. But, as held in the case of Stoddard v. Superior Court, supra, it is only where “there is no appeal, nor in the judgment of the court, any plain, speedy, and adequate remedy,” that a writ of certiorari will lie. Therefore, since, as shown, petitioner is afforded such a remedy, the question of whether it may or may not be a speedy and adequate remedy becomes an immaterial matter.

For the reasons stated, the application for the writ must be denied, and it is so ordered.

YUBA RIVER POWER CO. v. NEVADA IRR. DIST. et al. (Sac. 4157.)★

Supreme Court of California. July 5, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 1, 1929.

1. Quieting title ☞19—Word "property" in statute authorizing action to determine adverse claims includes every species of estate, real and personal, and everything which can be owned and transferred (Code Civ. Proc. § 738).

Term "property," used in Code Civ. Proc. § 738, authorizing action to determine adverse claims to property and defined in Civ. Code, §§ 654, 655, is sufficiently comprehensive to include every species of estate, real and personal, and everything which one person can own and transfer to another, and extends to every species of right and interest capable of being enjoyed as such, upon which is practicable to place a money value, and, as applied to lands, comprehends every species of title, inchoate or complete, embracing those rights which lie in contract, whether executed or executory.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Property.]

2. Waters and water courses ☞133—Since granting of permit to appropriate water is merely confirming evidence of right theretofore existing, application cannot be arbitrarily rejected (Water Commission Act).

Under Water Commission Act (St. 1913, p. 1012), granting of a permit to appropriate water for power and irrigation purposes is not the right itself, but merely confirming evidence of the right theretofore existing, and application for permit cannot be arbitrarily rejected, since to do so would deprive applicant of valuable property right without due process of law.

3. Waters and water courses ☞133—Alleged right to arbitrarily deny water permit, existence of water subject to appropriation, and priority among permittees, are judicial questions (Water Commission Act).

Under Water Commission Act (St. 1913, p. 1012), alleged right to arbitrarily deny issuance of permit to appropriate water for irrigation and power purposes, existence of water subject to appropriation under permit, and priority among permittees, whatever the stage of operations thereunder, are judicial questions.

4. Quieting title ☞19—Power company, prior to issuance of permit to appropriate water, held entitled to bring action to determine adverse claims to water rights (Water Commission Act; Code Civ. Proc. § 738).

Where power company had fully complied with every provision of Water Commission Act (St. 1913, p. 1012), entitling it to receive preferential right to appropriate water from river for beneficial use, and there was unappropriated water sufficient to comply with applications, power company prior to issuance of permit acquired valuable property right, and was authorized, under Code Civ. Proc. § 738, to bring action in equity in nature of suit to quiet title to determine adverse claims to use of water so sought as between itself and upper claimant threatening to invade right of priority claimed.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action to quiet title by the Yuba River Power Company against the Nevada Irrigation District and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

William F. Humphrey and Hadsell, Sweet & Ingalls, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

C. F. Metteer and H. J. March, both of Sacramento, and Thos. J. Straub and Leo H. Susman, both of San Francisco (Orrick, Palmer & Dahlquist, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

PRESTON, J. This case arises under the Water Commission Act (St. 1913, p. 1012) now being administered by the department of public works, division of water rights. To the issue made by the complaint, a demurrer was interposed and sustained without leave to amend, followed by judgment for defendants. Three propositions are to be taken as true in disposing of the question in controversy: First, that appellant has fully complied with each and every provision of the above-mentioned act entitling it to receive preferential right to appropriate certain amounts of water from the Yuba river; second, that unappropriated water sufficient to comply with the applications flows in the stream; third, that appellant is prepared to put the water sought to be appropriated to a beneficial use.

[1-4] The question, then, for decision, is this: Is appellant, who seeks to appropriate available water and in the status above described, authorized under section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure, prior to the issuance of a permit, to bring an action in equity in the nature of a suit to quiet title to determine the adverse claims to use of the water so sought as between itself and an upper claimant who threatens to invade the right of priority thus claimed?

Admittedly plaintiff has four applications pending and in good standing, one dated February 17, 1920, one dated September 10, 1920, and two dated April 9, 1923, to appropriate large quantities of the water of the Yuba river to be used for power and irrigation purposes. The allegations of the complaint are that the waters claimed are available in the stream, and that plaintiff has the ability to make beneficial use of them; that defendants assert the right to appropriate and use said waters by diverting them from the stream at a point above plaintiff's points of intended diversion; that defendants assert and claim said rights in hostility and priority in time and right to plaintiff's applications, but that said rights, if any such exist, are subsequent and subject to the applications of plaintiff; that said defendants are proceeding to divert and use the waters of said Yuba river sought by plaintiff, claiming that their rights are prior in time and right to said applications of plaintiff; that there are not enough unappropriated waters in said stream to satisfy the applications of plaintiff and at the same time to satisfy the asserted rights of defendants to appropriate and use said waters.

Section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "An action may be brought by any person against another who claims an estate or interest in real or personal property, adverse to him, for the purpose of determining such adverse claim. * * *" The word "property," found in this section is a broad term, and is specifically defined in sections 654 and 655 of the Civil Code. The word is also defined as follows: "The term 'property' is sufficiently comprehensive to include every species of estate, real and personal, and everything which one person can own and transfer to another. It extends to every species of right and interest capable of being enjoyed as such upon which it is practicable to place a money value. As applied to lands the term comprehends every species of title, inchoate or complete. It is supposed to embrace those rights which lie in contract—those which are executory as well as those which are executed." 22 R. C. L. p. 43, § 10.

In McKeon v. Bisbee, 9 Cal. 137, 142 (70 Am. Dec. 642), dealing with a mining claim upon public lands, this court as early as 1858, said: "Property is the exclusive right of possessing, enjoying, and disposing of a thing; it is 'the right and interest which a man has in lands and chattels, to the exclusion of others,' and the term is sufficiently comprehensive to include every species of estate, real or personal." The court there sustained the execution sale of the interest of a miner in his mining claim.

In People v. Eddy, 43 Cal. 331, 336, 337 (13 Am. Rep. 143), it is said: "The word 'property' is used in that section of the Constitution in its ordinary and popular sense, and this is the general rule in the interpretation of Constitutions and statutes, unless the context shows that the words are used in a technical or in some arbitrary sense."

Respondents admit that, by the filing of said applications, plaintiff received "procedural priority," and conceded that this "procedural priority" may itself be property, in that it may be assigned or transferred, but it is insisted that such property right is a different right from an interest or estate in the use of the water applied for. This concession goes a long way towards demonstrating that the position of appellant herein is the correct one. But respondents contend that, inasmuch as a broad discretion is reposed in the division of water rights by the statute in the matter of applications of this character, having the power at will, it is said, to approve, modify, or reject them, the mere filing of an application is insufficient upon which to claim a right in either real or personal property. Moreover, it is contended that were a court of equity in a suit of the character here to attempt to determine the rights of a mere claimant, it would assume to itself administrative functions, which it cannot constitutionally do.

The effect of an application in proper form has been declared by the statute to be as follows: "* * * And any application so made shall give to the applicant a priority of right as of the date of said application to such water or the use thereof until such application shall have been approved or rejected by said commission; provided, that such priority shall continue only so long as the provisions of law and the rules and regulations of the water commission shall be followed by the applicant. * * *" Section 17, Water Commission Act (St. 1913, p. 1022).

Respondents seem clearly to have mistaken the status of appellant, who has complied with all the requirements of law and has found available water to appropriate. The granting of a permit is merely confirming evidence of the right theretofore existing. It is not the right itself. The application cannot be arbitrarily rejected. This is the plain holding of this court in Tulare Water Co. v. State Water Com., 187 Cal. 533, 537, 202 P. 874, 876, wherein this court sustained a proceeding in mandate to compel the state water commission to entertain a complaint having the purpose to direct the commission to issue the permit, saying that: "To conclude the rights of would-be appropriators by the extrajudicial and perhaps arbitrary action of a board of water commissioners would be to deprive such applicant of a valuable property right without due process of law." See, also, Rich v. McClure, 78 Cal. App. 209, 248 P. 275.

The court in said cause (Tulare Water Co. v. State Water Com., supra) further clearly intimated that neither the question of priority between claimants nor the existence or nonexistence of unappropriated waters in a stream were questions to be finally determined by the water commission. The effect of this holding was sought to be obviated by the enactment of a new section, known as 1b (St. 1923, p. 162), providing for a hearing by the superior court upon applications for permits to appropriate water. This court, in Mojave River Irr. Dist. v. Superior Court, 202 Cal. 717, 262 P. 724, declared said enactment invalid and sustained the pronouncements of the court in Tulare Water Co. v. State Water Com., supra, to the effect that no judicial power had been or could be lawfully conferred upon the state water commission or its successor. This doctrine is also set forth in Department of Public Works v. Superior Court, 197 Cal. 215, 239 P. 1076.

From the admitted facts of the complaint before us, plaintiff could have compelled the issuance of a permit, and certainly, by virtue of section 17 of the act, is entitled to enjoy for all practical purposes, pending the action upon its application, the status of a permittee. In fact the allegations of the complaint, if true, show a trespass upon the preferential rights of appellant.

From another standpoint we have a precedent sufficient to control our action in this case. Prior to the enactment of the Water Commission Act, we had in existence sections 1410-1422, inclusive, of the Civil Code, which furnished a method of controlling the question of priority in the appropriation of unappropriated waters of the state. The present law was not enacted to abolish the right of appropriation of water. No attributes are added to constitute the right. The new legislation is designed "merely to regulate and administer this privilege." Therefore the pronouncement of this court on the question of priority in the appropriation of waters should and does shed light upon, if not control, the issue before us.

In the case of Inyo Cons. Water Co. v. Jess, 161 Cal. 516, 119 P. 934, where the court had under consideration the rights of a claimant by virtue of five notices of appropriation, posted and recorded as provided in section 1415 of the Civil Code and appellant brought an action under section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure to determine conflicting claims between himself and defendant to the right to use the waters of Cottonwood creek in Inyo county, the court sustained the demurrer to this count of the complaint upon the theory that it did not show that plaintiff owned any subsisting interest in or right to said water or the use thereof. It was respondent's contention that the right was not a vested right and was not property, and that it would not be protected against adverse claimants by a statute of this character. The court said, in discussing certain previous California cases:

"They lay down the rule that a right to the use of running water does not vest in possession at common law, until there has been an actual diversion and beneficial use of the water. But they all recognize, and some of them declare, that, before any actual diversion or use of the water, a claimant may acquire an incipient, incomplete, and conditional right to the future use of the water, by beginning the construction of the works necessary for such diversion and use, and, in good faith, diligently prosecuting the same toward completion. * * *

"The purpose of the code was to afford a more perfect protection for such rights and to facilitate the subsequent acquisition of the title to the use. Previously, the incomplete right could be acquired only by some open, visible work to that end, upon the ground, accompanied by a declaration of the intent. Disputes would naturally arise as to priority between different diversions from the same stream at places far apart. The code endeavors to avoid this by providing for the posting of a notice at the proposed dam, and declaring that such notice secures a prior right, without any work, for the period of sixty days thereafter. (Wells v. Mantes, 99 Cal. 586, 34 P. 324). Thus there is given that which it is said did not exist before (Kelly v. Natoma Water Co., 6 Cal. 105), a constructive right to the use of the water, a right existing only by publicly declared intent, and which may be made a perfect and complete title, as against all except prior users and riparian owners, by beginning the work within sixty days, diligently prosecuting it to completion, and thereupon actually using the water. This incomplete right, although not as yet a title, is an interest in the realty. Under section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure the person who has an interest in real property may maintain an action to determine the validity of a conflicting claim which is adverse to his own claim. It follows that the first count states a cause of action and that the general demurrer thereto should be overruled."

In the case of Merritt v. City of Los Angeles, 162 Cal. 47, 120 P. 1064, the court, referring to the same subject and in discussing the form of relief allowable, used this language: "Such judgment, of course, should not declare the plaintiff absolutely entitled to the water, nor enjoin the defendant from taking or using it during the intervening time prior to the completion of plaintiff's works to a stage which will enable him to divert and use it. It should only declare and describe the plaintiff's contingent right to use the water and enjoin adverse claims or uses injurious thereto. If the plaintiff's right shall have terminated at or before the time of trial, the judgment should be for the defendant. If the defendant's right is paramount, but does not include all the waters of the stream, the judgment may so declare and fix the plaintiff's contingent right in the surplus at such time as there is an excess over defendant's use."

We cannot distinguish these cases from the situation before us. The right being protected and administered is the same. A period of priority was provided, and the protection given there was during such statutory period and prior to any actual construction of diversion works.

If it be conceded that all the division of water rights may do is of a ministerial and not of a judicial character, it does not follow that justiciable questions may not arise from the action or inaction of that body as well as from the rights conferred by the statute itself. We have already seen that the alleged right to arbitrarily deny the issuance of a permit raises a judicial question; also that the existence of water subject to appropriation under a permit is a judicial question. Priority among permittees is also a judicial question, whatever the stage of operations thereunder. These deductions follow because of the plain provisions of our general remedial law.

Counsel is confusing the power of the division, which of necessity is not judicial, with the rights conferred by the statute, which give rise to judicial questions.

The determination of the issues tendered by this complaint may be of incalculable value to both sets of litigants; likewise through this action information useful to the division of water rights may be acquired. Not only may the question of priority be determined, but upon the issue, if controverted, may also be determined the amount of water subject to appropriation flowing in the stream, as well as the restrictions, if any, which surround its use. The division of water rights can finally dispose of none of these questions. Neither can it act judicially upon any of them.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the court below to overrule the demurrer and to permit defendants to join issue on the allegations of the complaint.

IN RE CATE. (Cr. 2734.)

Supreme Court of California. June 26, 1929.

1. Statutes ☞263—Statutes are not given retrospective operation, unless it is clear such was legislative intention (Civ. Code, § 3).

Under Civ. Code, § 3, statutes are not to be given retrospective operation, unless it is clearly made to appear that such was legislative intention.

2. Attorney and client ☞61—Statute giving board of governors of state bar power to pass on petitions for reinstatement as attorneys did not divest court of jurisdiction to determine pending application (State Bar Act, § 26; Civ. Code, § 3).

State Bar Act (St. 1927, p. 38), § 26, giving board of governors of state bar power to pass upon all petitions for reinstatement as attorneys at law, held not to divest court of jurisdiction to further entertain, hear, or determine pending application for reinstatement in view of Civ. Code, § 3, providing that no part of statute is retroactive unless expressly so declared.

3. Attorney and client ☞61—Statute giving board of governors of state bar power to pass on petitions for reinstatement as attorneys applies only to proceedings thereafter initiated before board (State Bar Act, § 26).

State Bar Act (St. 1927, p. 38), § 26, giving board of governors of state bar power to pass upon all petitions for reinstatement as attorneys at law, applies only to such proceedings relative to reinstatement of disbarred attorneys as should thereafter be initiated before board of governors of state bar.

4. Attorney and client ☞61—Finding of board of bar examiners regarding moral and social rehabilitation of petitioner for reinstatement, supported by evidence, should be affirmed.

Finding of board of bar examiners touching moral and social rehabilitation of petitioner applying for reinstatement as attorney at law, supported by evidence, should be affirmed.

In Bank.

In the matter of the application of Clyde E. Cate, a disbarred attorney, for readmission as an attorney at law. Referred to Board of Bar Examiners.

Alfred E. Cate, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Hewitt, McCormick & Crump, of Los Angeles (Guy Richards Crump, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent Los Angeles Bar Ass'n.

RICHARDS, J. This matter is before this court for determination after a decision by the District Court of Appeal in and for the Second Appellate District, Division 2, denying the application of the petitioner herein for reinstatement and readmission to practice as an attorney and counselor at law, filed in said court on September 26, 1928 (see 270 P. 968; 273 P. 617), and upon which a petition for hearing herein was granted. Clyde E. Cate was admitted to practice his said profession after examination by said District Court of Appeal on June 14, 1912, and thereupon entered and for some years engaged in the practice of the law. On or about April 23, 1918, an accusation was filed against him, on behalf of the Los Angeles Bar Association, in the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles, wherein he was charged with certain violations of his oath and duties as an attorney and counselor at law, and an order for his disbarment was sought, and on June 6, 1918, after due hearing, obtained by a judgment to that effect, duly made and entered in said court. Thereafter, and during the year 1921, the petitioner filed an application for reinstatement in said court, which was, by order of said court, denied. 54 Cal. App. 401, 201 P. 964. During the year 1922 the petitioner renewed his application for reinstatement before said court, which application was also denied. 60 Cal. App. 279, 212 P. 694. In the year 1924 he again applied to said court for reinstatement, which application was referred by said court to the then existing board of bar examiners to take testimony thereon and report to the court. Upon receiving the report of the board of bar examiners, which apparently was favorable to the applicant, upon the matter of his rehabilitation as to his moral status, said court nevertheless denied his application for reinstatement upon the ground that he had presented no formal application for re-examination as required by one originally seeking admission to practice under the provisions of sections 276 and 279 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In so doing said court erroneously relied upon and applied certain expressions in the case of Danford v. Superior Court, 49 Cal. App. 303, 193 P. 272. A petition for hearing in this court in that matter, and also in the companion proceeding entitled In re Stevens, also pending similarly decided in that court, was granted, and both of these matters came before this court for determination in the latter part of the year 1925; the decision in the Stevens Case, which constituted the main opinion, being handed down on November 6, 1925 (197 Cal. 409, 241 P. 88); the decision of the Cate Case (197 Cal. 796, 241 P. 95), briefly adopting the Stevens opinion, being filed on the same date. In deciding these two matters this court disapproved the language in the Danford Case upon which the aforesaid appellate tribunal had placed reliance, holding that the requirement of a re-examination as to the mental qualifications of applicants for restoration to practice was not an indispensable prerequisite to such restoration to the profession, but was a matter which rested in the discretion of the judicial tribunal finally passing upon such application, depending upon the circumstances of the particular case. This court thereupon made an order in the Cate Case (197 Cal. 796, 241 P. 95), based upon the Stevens decision, to the effect "that the matter be transferred to the District Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division Two, for further proceedings in accordance with the terms therein expressed." The said court thereupon resumed jurisdiction over the Cate application and on April 20, 1926, again referred the matter to the state board of bar examiners for further investigation and report. The said board held the matter under investigation for more than a year, during the course of which hearings were had and much evidence elicited which, it should be frankly conceded, largely preponderated in the petitioner's favor as to his moral rehabilitation. The report of said board of bar examiners was filed in said District Court of Appeal upon August 18, 1927, and after certain recitals of fact it embraced the following findings:

"From all the evidence we find:

"First: Applicant is possessed of such moral qualifications as entitle him to reinstatement.

"Second: There is such doubt as to the mental qualifications of applicant that an examination is necessary to determine them; and the nature and extent of the examination should be the same as is given other applicants seeking to be admitted to practice law in this state upon examination. Dated August 8, 1927."

Thereafter, and on or about April 9, 1928, the petitioner moved said court that the cause be submitted for decision upon the aforesaid report and findings of the board of bar examiners, which motion was granted by said court. In the meantime, and on July 29, 1927, that certain act of the Legislature known as the "State Bar Act" (Stats. 1927, p. 38) became effective, whereupon a question arose in said court as to whether it still had jurisdiction over this matter in view of the provisions of said State Bar Act or any further power to make any order in the premises. The said court gave its earnest and most exhaustive consideration to that subject, and on September 26, 1928, handed down its decision thereon (270 P. 908), wherein it was held that it still possessed jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the proceeding, notwithstanding the provisions and the taking effect of the State Bar Act. It is not, for reasons hereinafter to be stated, necessary that this court should enter upon a review of the basic principles undertaken to be set forth in said opinion and to be given application to the instant proceeding. The said court, however, holding that it had jurisdiction so to do, denied the petitioner's application, whereupon two petitions for a hearing in this court upon the merits of said decision were presented to this court, one on behalf of the petitioner, assailing the conclusion of said court in denying his petition, and one on behalf of the Los Angeles Bar Association, representing in interest, if not expressly, the board of governors of the state bar of California, created under the terms of said act and charged with its administration, assailing the position taken by said District Court of Appeal in upholding its jurisdiction to further consider and determine said proceeding after the effective date of the State Bar Act. Both of said applications for a further hearing in this court were granted, and after such further hearing the merits of each have been submitted to this court for decision.

Addressing ourselves to the consideration of these questions thus submitted to us for decision in the inverse order of their foregoing statement, we may state upon the threshold thereof that if it shall be determined that the District Court of Appeal retained jurisdiction to finally hear and determine this matter after the adoption and effective date of the State Bar Act, this court has also jurisdiction to hear and determine this matter upon the granting by it of the petition for such hearing under the powers with which it is invested by the Constitution as expounded in the case of In re Stevens, 197 Cal. 408, 414, 241 P. 88, holding that a proceeding of this character was a "cause" which, if pending and decided in a District Court of Appeal, this court was given jurisdiction under section 4 of article 6 of the Constitution to transfer for hearing and determination in the Supreme Court.

[1-3] We thus address ourselves to the question as to whether by the passage, provisions, and occurrence of the effective date of the State Bar Act, the said District Court of Appeal was thereby divested of jurisdiction to further entertain, hear, or determine the application of Cate for reinstatement as an attorney and counselor at law, which application upon the effective date of the State Bar Act was, and, for several years prior thereto had been, properly pending before said tribunal, and which upon said date had been so far advanced as to be practically ready for submission and determination by and before said tribunal. The solution of this primary problem rests, in our opinion, upon the answer to the inquiry as to whether the State Bar Act is to be interpreted as being retroactive in respect to the particular provision which relates to the matter of the reinstatement of attorneys and counselors at law who have theretofore been disbarred. The sole provision in the State Bar Act which directly relates to the subject of reinstatement is that single sentence embodied in section 26 of the act, wherein, after setting forth in general terms the power with which the board of governors of the state bar is invested to disbar or to discipline the members of the State Bar Corporation, to be formed under the provisions of the act, proceeds to state that "The Board shall have power to pass upon all petitions for reinstatement." We have examined most carefully the provisions, separately and in their entirety, of the State Bar Act for this as for other purposes, and we look in vain through its provisions, as we also vainly seek in the general intent and purposes of said act, to find anything in either indicating any intent upon the part of the state Legislature to provide that the act was to be retroactive in either its general operation or in its particular effect upon the matter of the reinstatement or readmission to practice of those members of the legal profession who had suffered disbarment under previously existing laws, and who had made timely application for such reinstatement or readmission prior to the law becoming effective. It is a canon of interpretation that statutes are not to be given a retrospective operation unless it is clearly made to appear that such was the legislative intention. Our Civil Code contains the express provision that "No part of it is retroactive, unless expressly so declared" (Civ. Code, § 3), and this court has frequently decided that a like rule is to be applied generally to statutory construction. Bascomb v. Davis, 56 Cal. 152; Estate of Richards, 133 Cal. 524, 65 P. 1034; Estate of Frees, 187 Cal. 150, 156, 201 P. 112, and cases cited; Cooley, Const. Limitations (7th Ed.), p. 539; Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, p.

362. Applying this well-established principle to the terms in general of the State Bar Act, and particularly to the foregoing very briefly worded provision thereof, we deem it most unreasonable to conclude that the Legislature thereby intended to so far divest judicial tribunals of a power and jurisdiction which from time almost immemorial they had exercised over the matter of the reinstatement of members of the legal profession as to snatch from their hands the disposition of causes of this character over which such courts had actually acquired and were then engaged in exercising jurisdiction. The embarrassing, if not positive evil, results of such an interpretation of this brief and very general sentence in the State Bar Act could not have a better illustration than that afforded by the facts of the instant proceeding as above seriatim set forth and with respect to which a deprivation of jurisdiction of said court to crown its years of investigation of the facts and law from time to time developed in the cause pending before it by a decision upon the merits thereof, would involve an entire loss to the court and all parties concerned of the time, cost, and labor expended in the endeavor to reach a righteous conclusion in this long-pending controversy. And a like result would attend other causes of a similar nature over which the appellate courts, or even this court, had already acquired jurisdiction and which were in their several stages of procedure toward final disposition. We are entirely satisfied that no such consequences were in the contemplation of the Legislature in its adoption of the State Bar Act, and that, at least as to this provision thereof, it is entirely prospective in its operation, having application only to such proceedings relative to the reinstatement of disbarred attorneys as should thereafter be initiated before the board of bar governors.

[4] The conclusion thus arrived at relieves the instant proceeding of its most serious and perplexing problems and places this court in a position to pass upon the merits of the application of the petitioner herein for reinstatement or readmission to the ranks of the legal profession. We have given careful consideration to the record before us in its entirety, including the reported transcripts of the several investigations into the merits of the petitioner's several applications for readmission to practice law. We are satisfied from such examination that the final finding of the board of bar examiners, which is above set forth, touching the moral and social rehabilitation of the petitioner herein, is fully supported by the evidence educed before said board and that such finding should be, and the same is hereby, sustained and adopted by this court. As to the other finding of the said board of bar examiners to the effect that the petitioner herein should be required to submit himself to an examination as to his mental qualifications to be again admitted to the practice of the legal profession, whatever procedural difficulties might have arisen in giving effect to this finding in view of the changed conditions created by the adoption of the State Bar Act, these we think have been removed by the expressed satisfaction of the petitioner with such finding and his declared willingness to submit himself to its suggested recourse of the like examination as to mental qualifications as that which those seeking original admission to the bar are required to undergo. This expressed attitude places the petitioner in the category of an original applicant for admission upon examination whose qualifications as to moral character have been satisfactorily shown.

It is therefore ordered that the further proceedings in this matter be, and they are hereby, referred to the board of bar examiners as presently constituted, for action by said board in accordance with the views expressed in this opinion.

NEWPORT et al. v. HATTON et al.*
(Sac. 4047.)

Supreme Court of California. July 1, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 29, 1929.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 1195(1)—Appellate court's decision respecting essential matter became law of case binding on trial court in subsequent proceedings, in absence of different pleading and proof.

Where question of law as to whether judgment in another case was void on its face was essential to decision on a former appeal, decision of appellate court in that regard became law of case binding on trial court in all subsequent stages of the case, in absence of pleading and proof of an entirely different state of facts.

2. Judgment $\S$ 660½—Judgment not void on its face cannot be assailed as fraudulently obtained without showing that subsequent purchasers took with knowledge of fraud.

Judgment quieting title which is not void on its face, but merely voidable, cannot be assailed by those who insist that it was fraudulently obtained, in absence of showing that subsequent purchasers of property involved took property with knowledge of the fraud.

3. Appeal and error $\S$ 1050(1)—Any errors in admitting evidence to explain uncertainties in deed, though former appeal determined judgment involving title was not void on face, held not to require reversal.

Any errors committed by trial court in admitting evidence to explain uncertainties in description in deed on ground that judgment in another case involving such title was void on its face because of such uncertainties, though law of case established on former appeal that said judgment was not void on its face, held not to require reversal, where trial court found that defendants took property in good faith and for valuable consideration without knowledge of fraud.

4. Railroads $\S$ 81—Deed excepting and reserving land for railroad purposes held to reserve fee, not easement.

Where deed from railroad of land granted to railroad in fee under patent from United States excepted and reserved for railroad purpose a strip of land, held, that it excepted and reserved to grantor a fee, and not an easement.

WASTE, C. J. This is an appeal from the judgment of the trial court in and for the county of Stanislaus, upon the merits, and in favor of the defendants in the action. Alleging themselves to be the owners in remainder of a quarter section of land in Stanislaus county, subject to a life estate in their mother, the plaintiffs instituted this action to establish their claim, remove an alleged cloud upon their title, and to recover the proceeds derived from sales of the land made by the adverse claimants. In support of their claim of ownership of the land in remainder, the plaintiffs set forth at length in their complaint certain events which transpired during their minority, and which culminated in a tax sale of the premises and the entry of a fraudulent and collusive judgment in an action entitled Plato v. Newport, and having for its purpose the quieting of the title of the purchaser at the tax sale as against the mother, the life tenant, and the plaintiff remaindermen, these minors. The facts are so fully set out in the opinion of this court in Newport v. Hatton, 195 Cal. 132-157, 231 P. 987, that they need not be restated here.

The cause was before this court upon a prior appeal from a judgment rendered by the trial court after demurrer sustained without leave to amend. It was upon that appeal twice argued before this court, and twice decided. By the first decision the demurrer was held to have been properly sustained as to the defendants other than W. H. Hatton and Ora D. Hatton, upon the ground that the allegations of the complaint were insufficient to show that the subsequent purchasers of the property affected by the original judgment in the case of Plato v. Newport had notice or knowledge of the defects in that judgment and of the fraudulent means by which the same had been obtained. Upon petition for rehearing, the appellants strenuously contended that the judgment in the case of Plato v. Newport was void on its face by reason of certain alleged patent defects in the description of the property affected thereby, and that, for that reason, they were entitled to assail the present title of the respondents without reference to whether or not they were purchasers in good faith and without notice. A rehearing was granted for the purpose of dealing with the question thus presented and for a further consideration of the cause. Upon the rehearing this court held that the judgment in the case of Plato v. Newport was not void upon its face for the reason advanced by the appellants, the opinion in that regard reading as follows: "Applied to judgments, the rule is that the description in a judgment affecting real property should be certain and specific, and that an impossible, wrong, or uncertain description, or no description at all, renders the judgment erroneous and void. 33 Cor. Jur., p. 1209, par. 147. The same work is authority for the declaration that the judgment may be aided by intendments and additional data drawn from the pleadings and other parts of the records, or even, in some cases, by extrinsic documentary evidence. We do not see how a judgment can be pronounced a nullity for uncertainty of description unless the court can see that nothing is described. Those claiming under it must rely on the description, it is true, but whether or not the description is defective must be tested by rules of evidence ordinarily applied to the subject. De Sepulveda v. Baugh, 74 Cal. 468, 474, 16 P. 223, 5 Am. St. Rep. 455; Smith v. Biscailuz, 83 Cal. 344, 360, 21 P. 15, 23 P. 314; 14 Cal. Jur., p. 957; 15 R. C. L., p. 595. The plaintiffs in this case have not made it clear that the land described in the judgment quieting title is so uncertain that the property cannot be identified and established with sufficient certainty, by the application of the ordinary rules of evidence, to define the rights of the parties." 195 Cal. at page 156, 231 P. 996.

[1] The court also held that the allegations of the complaint were sufficient to put in issue the question whether the defendants were purchasers in good faith and without notice. It will thus appear that the question of law as to whether or not the judgment in the case of Plato v. Newport was void upon its face was essential to the decision of the case upon that former appeal. This being so, the decision of this court in that regard became the law of the case, and binding upon the trial court in all subsequent stages of the case in the absence of pleading and proof of an entirely different state of facts. 2 Cal. Jur. p. 1042, par. 620 et seq. The case went back for a trial upon the merits, and resulted in the judgment from which this appeal has been taken.

In entering upon the trial of the cause upon the merits, the trial court disregarded the decision of this court to the effect that the judgment in the case of Plato v. Newport was not void upon its face, and, on the contrary, held that such judgment by reason of the uncertainties of the description of the property contained therein was void upon its face, and proceeded to take evidence for the purpose of eking out the purported uncertainties in the description of the land.

As certain of the defendants herein deraign title under the Plato judgment, the plaintiffs upon the trial urged that by reason of the fraud practiced in its procurement that judgment was and is void. The court below so found, but further found that the defendants claiming thereunder were bona fide purchasers for value without notice, and therefore entitled to protection in the assertion of their respective claims to the land. This latter finding is not assailed. Both upon the prior appeal and now, the plaintiffs concede that any person acquiring title to any part of the property in good faith, under a judgment not void upon its face, and without knowledge of the fraud, would be fully protected, notwithstanding the interests of the plaintiffs, whose rights to assail such judgment cannot prevail over those of innocent purchasers in good faith and for value. Stern v. Judson, 163 Cal. 726, 735, 127 P. 38; Doyle v. Hampton, 159 Cal. 729, 734, 116 P. 39.

[2, 3] The principal question presented upon this appeal is as to whether or not the trial court was in error in the admission of the evidence which it did admit for the purpose of showing that the description of the land contained in said original judgment was sufficient. We are of opinion that, in view of the former holding of this court to the effect that the judgment in the case of Plato v. Newport was not void upon its face, such conclusion became the law of the case. See the comprehensive list of cases cited in note 17 to par. 620 of 2 Cal. Jur., supra. Whether right or wrong, it was binding upon the trial court, in the absence of a showing that the defendants, who were the subsequent purchasers and are the present owners of the property, had acquired the same with knowledge of the fraud which the plaintiffs alleged had been perpetrated in the procurement of such judgment. The trial court was therefore bound in the absence of such showing to follow the ruling of this court in that regard, and to apply the same to all stages of the trial of this cause upon the merits. Had the trial court done so, there would have been no occasion for the introduction of any evidence in the case with reference to the alleged latent uncertainties in the description of the real property in the judgment rendered in Plato v. Newport. A judgment which is not void upon its face, but merely voidable, cannot be assailed by those who insist it was fraudulently obtained, in the absence of a showing that the subsequent purchasers of the property took the same with knowledge of the fraud. This being so, any evidence that might have been introduced upon that subject was immaterial to the case as then presented. No matter what errors the trial court committed in that regard, they would not suffice to work a reversal of this judgment, in the presence of the law as laid down by this court in its former decision, that the judgment was not void upon its face, and on the facts as found by the trial court, that the aforesaid defendants took the property in good faith and for a valuable consideration, and without knowledge of the fraud.

[4] There is also an appeal by these appellants from the new and different judgment entered in favor of the defendant railroad companies. Section 29, about which this controversy has arisen, was acquired by the predecessors of the present railroad defendants in fee under patent from the United States. It was, in turn, granted by the predecessor of these respondents to James M. Conley, predecessor of appellants, by deed dated February 12, 1874. The deed excepted and reserved for railroad purposes a strip of land extending through the section and "four hundred feet wide lying equally on each side of the track of the railroad of said company [which track, we understand, had been constructed at that time] or any branch railroad now or hereafter constructed on said lands and the right to use all water needed for the operating and repairing of said railroad." Appellants claim that the judgment in favor of the railroad companies is erroneous, on the ground that they, the appellants, hold by adverse possession as against the railroads the remainder interest in a strip 150 feet wide, which is part of the four hundred-foot strip excepted by the above deed.

It seems to be well settled that the railroad company predecessor of the respondents acquired a fee, so long as the railroad should be maintained, through the congressional grant in aid of the construction of railways, and thereafter held in fee simple. Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. Townsend, 190 U. S. 267, 23 S. Ct. 671, 47 L. Ed. 1044. The clause in the deed to Conley, quoted above, excepted and reserved to the grantor a fee, and not an easement. The findings of the trial court support this view, and also the view that appellants are not entitled to claim any interest in this reserved fee by adverse possession.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. HAWLEY et al. LOS ANGELES ROCK & GRAVEL CO. v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al. SAME v. CRYER et al. (L. A. 9173-9175).★

Supreme Court of California. June 24, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 22, 1929.

1. Nuisance ⇨75—In suit to abate excavating as public nuisance, court had power to enjoin such excavating (Code Civ. Proc. § 731).

In suit, under Code Civ. Proc. § 731, to abate as public nuisance excavations by defendants of rock, sand, and gravel from bed and banks of arroyo in residential district, court had power to render an injunction enjoining and prohibiting defendants from excavating upon such lands, if it was found that excavating would become public nuisance.

2. Appeal and error ⇨884—Defendants acquiescing in portion of judgment responding to allegations of complaint cannot contend complaint does not state cause of action (Code Civ. Proc. § 731).

In suit under Code Civ. Proc. § 731, to enjoin excavations of rock, sand, and gravel from bed and banks of arroyo in residential district as public nuisance, defendants, by acquiescing in portion of judgment which, in response to allegations of complaint, decreed abatement of nuisance, cannot contend that complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute cause of action.

3. Nuisance ⇨75—Findings in suit to enjoin excavation of rock, sand, and gravel, as to protection of adjacent lands, held not inconsistent (Code Civ. Proc. § 731).

In suit under Code Civ. Proc. § 731, to enjoin defendants from excavating rock, sand, and gravel from bed and banks of arroyo in residential district as nuisance, general findings of trial court that defendants proposed to furnish adjoining land proper lateral support, and further finding that particular lands could not be excavated and adjacent land properly protected by wall, held not inconsistent, since latter finding, which is a special finding, would control.

4. Nuisance $\S$ 75—In suit to enjoin excavating of arroyo, evidence held not to support finding that certain leased lands could not be excavated and adjacent lands protected by wall (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 731).

In suit, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 731, to enjoin defendants from excavating rock, sand, and gravel from bed and banks of arroyo in residential district as nuisance, evidence held not to support finding that no regulation of excavation of portion of lands leased by defendant by means of steel and concrete walls or otherwise could be made which would afford protection to property in streets adjoining such leased lands equal to or superior to protection now afforded by the loose rock, sand, and gravel which defendants proposed to excavate.

5. Nuisance $\S$ 75—Defendant cannot recover in injunction suit damages sustained by reason of issuance of injunction.

Damages, if any, sustained by defendant by reason of issuance of injunction restraining it from excavating rock, sand, and gravel from bed and banks of arroyo in residential district, cannot be recovered in the injunction suit, but are recoverable, if at all, in independent action brought for that purpose.

6. Appeal and error $\S$ 781(4)—Defendant's appeal from judgment enjoining excavation of land under lease was not dismissed as moot because defendant's rights under lease had terminated.

Defendant's appeal from injunction restraining it from excavating land under lease will not be dismissed on ground that controversy has become moot because defendant's rights under lease had terminated by lapse of time, since it cannot be said that reversal of judgment granting injunction would prove fruitless.

7. Nuisance $\S$ 75—Pleading $\S$ 364(2)—Pleadings, findings, and evidence in suit to enjoin excavation of arroyo as nuisance as to Los Angeles flood control district should have been stricken out and excluded (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 731).

In suit under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 731, to enjoin defendants from excavating rock, sand, and gravel from bed and banks of arroyo in residential district as nuisance, pleadings, findings, and evidence, referring to the Los Angeles flood control district, and that lands involved were situated within such district, should have been stricken out and excluded.

8. Municipal corporations $\S$ 625—Ordinance forbidding excavating operations in residence districts established by zoning ordinance held unreasonable and void.

Ordinance enjoining and prohibiting excavation of rock, sand, and gravel in residential district established by zoning ordinance held void as unreasonable restraint on use by defendant of its property and unwarranted interference with right of defendant to carry on a lawful business, in view of trial court's finding that to permit defendant to continue its excavation operations subject to conditions imposed would not result in any substantial injury to adjoining property or persons residing on or owning such property.

9. Municipal corporations $\S$ 601—Zoning must be reasonably necessary and related to health, safety, morals, or general welfare of community.

The right to zone may be resorted to by municipality on proper invocation of the police power, but such zoning must be reasonably necessary and reasonably related to health, safety, morals, or general welfare of community.

10. Municipal corporations $\S$ 63(1)—Ordinances regulating useful business enterprises are subject to judicial investigation to determine whether they are lawful exercise of police power.

Municipal by-laws and ordinances undertaking to regulate useful business enterprises are subject to investigation in courts with view to determining whether law or ordinance is lawful exercise of police power, or whether, under guise of enforcing police regulations, there has been an unwarranted and arbitrary interference with right to carry on lawful business, to make contracts, or to use and enjoy property.

11. Municipal corporations $\S$ 622—Excavating rock and gravel by owner from lands is useful occupation which cannot be prohibited except where necessary for protection of legal rights of others.

The business of excavating rock and gravel by owner from lands belonging to him is a lawful and useful occupation, and cannot be prohibited by legislation except in cases where enactment of such legislation may be found necessary for protection of legal rights of others.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Victor R. McLucas, Judge.

Separate actions by the People against H. W. Hawley and others, by the Los Angeles Rock & Gravel Company against the City of Los Angeles and others, and by the Los Angeles Rock & Gravel Company against George E. Cryer and others, tried at the same time and submitted on the same evidence. Judgment for plaintiff was entered in each case, and defendants appeal separately on one and the same transcript of evidence. Portion of judgment appealed from in first case reversed and judgments in second and third cases affirmed.

Superseding opinion in 272 P. 1076.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., Jerrell Babb, Deputy City Atty., and Frederick Von Schrader, Deputy City Atty., all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Guy Eddie and Charles H. Mattingly, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CURTIS, J. These three actions were tried at the same time, and were submitted for decision to the trial court upon the same evidence. They are before us upon three separate rate appeals, but upon one and the same transcript of the evidence. It is conceded that the facts governing these three cases, as well as the legal questions involved, are closely related, and that all three appeals may properly be decided in one opinion.

The first of these actions (No. 9173) was instituted by the city attorney of the City of Los Angeles under section 731 of the Code of Civil Procedure in the name of the people of the state of California to abate an alleged public nuisance maintained by the defendants, in said action. While there are other persons named in said actions as defendants, the principal defendant in interest is the Los Angeles Rock & Gravel Company. The defendant H. W. Hawley has no interest in said action, except as a stockholder in, and president of, said company. The other defendant is an employee or subcontractor of the company. The nuisance sought to be abated by this action was the result of certain operations and excavations then being carried on by the Los Angeles Rock & Gravel Company in the bed of the arroyo Seco in the city of Los Angeles. The arroyo Seco, as its name signifies, is a dry water course. It has a defined channel with steep banks, and, while dry a large portion of the year, in the winter months, and particularly in periods of heavy rainfall, a large amount of flood and storm waters flows in its channel. These waters originate from an extensive watershed in the mountains north and east of the city of Los Angeles, and are conducted through and in said water course in a southeasterly direction until they reach the Los Angeles river. The bed and banks of the arroyo Seco are of loose earth, sand, rock, and gravel, and, by reason of the large amount of flood water at times flowing therein and the character of the materials comprising its bed and banks, said flood waters cause the said banks and bed thereof to be undermined and washed away whenever the natural conditions of the surface and contour of said bed and banks are destroyed by digging, excavating, or otherwise removing the material thereof. The nature and character of the nuisance complained of in the complaint were, first: The smoke, noise, and dust created by a steam shovel engaged in excavation of the lands of the Los Angeles Rock & Gravel Company, situated in the bed and along the banks of the arroyo Seco; second, the nuisance resulting from stagnant pools of water which had gathered in certain excavations made by said company on its said lands, which pools of water, when left standing, bred mosquitoes and were otherwise detrimental to the health of those residing in the near vicinity; and, third, the danger from flood waters resulting from the excavations already made by said company and those which said company planned to make in the future. In its decree, the trial court ordered the stagnant water complained of drained off or otherwise disposed of and the holes or depressions wherein this water had gathered filled up and the surface thereof made level with the adjoining land, and made the future operations of the company dependent upon a compliance with said requirements, and the substitution of an electric for a steam shovel, with the excavations to be kept sprinkled to avoid the smoke, dust, and noise complained of. Said decree further provided: "That said defendants shall at all times make any and all excavations permissible hereunder in such manner as to provide a channel in the bed of the Arroyo Seco sufficient to carry a flow of 19,000 second-feet of water, and in such manner as to provide complete and adequate protection to property adjoining said channel from erosion thereof, and so as to afford subjacent and lateral support thereto." As to this part of the decree the defendants make no complaint. The court further found, however:

Finding XI, "That the defendants are the owners of all the land described in the complaint and amendments thereto and Plaintiff's Exhibit 1, and designated as the 'McNeil Lease.' That defendants are in possession of said 'McNeil Lease' and by the terms of said lease have the right to excavate all rock, sand and gravel upon it during the period of said lease, in accordance with the terms thereof, without restriction. That said lease expires on September 16th, 1925. That according to the terms of said lease all rock, sand and gravel remaining upon said leased land at the expiration of said lease on September 16th, 1925, will be the property of the lessor, and will be forever lost to and forfeited by said lessee, the defendants herein."

Finding XIV, "The property constituting the McNeil lease described in the complaint and Plaintiff's Exhibit 1, both inside and outside of the channel of the Arroyo, is composed of loose rock, sand and gravel of the same general nature and character as that of all of the land along the bed and banks of the Arroyo Seco. The court finds there is no objection to the excavation of that portion of the McNeil lease constituting the channel of the Arroyo Seco, provided such excavation in, along and adjacent to such channel is of sufficient width and depth to carry at least 19,000 second-feet of water. The court further finds that no regulation of the excavation of the McNeil lease outside of the Arroyo Seco channel by means of concrete walls or otherwise, can be made which will afford protection to property and streets adjoining the McNeil lease outside of the channel, equal to or superior to the protection now afforded by the loose rock, sand and gravel which defendants propose to excavate down to the level of the channel of the Arroyo Seco, unless enjoined by the court."

Predicating its judgment upon these findings, the court further decreed that the defendants, their successors and assigns, be restrained and enjoined from making any excavations in the earth, rock, sand, and gravel constituting the flat or table land known as the McNeil lease, which said land constitutes the easterly bank of the arroyo Seco.

To this portion of the judgment the defendants make most vigorous protest, and from this portion, and this portion alone, have they appealed, as appears from their notice of appeal herein.

[1] The first point made by appellants in their appeal is that the court is without jurisdiction to render any injunction whatever absolutely enjoining and prohibiting defendants from excavating upon their said lands. They base this contention upon the fact that the action is instituted and prosecuted by the city attorney of the city of Los Angeles in the name of the people of the state of California solely under the authority conferred upon said official by section 731 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that this section of the Code confers no jurisdiction upon the court in which an action is brought under its authority to issue an injunction. In other words, appellants contend that the sole power given by the court in such an action is to abate a public nuisance, and that it confers no power upon the court to issue an injunction. It is true that this section of the Code refers only to an action brought "to abate a public nuisance," but it is often, and we might say generally, necessary, in order to abate a nuisance, to direct that those guilty of maintaining the same be enjoined from doing certain acts, which, if done, would amount to a continuance or maintenance of such nuisance. This precise question was decided adversely to appellants' contention in the case of People v. Selby Smelting & Lead Co., 163 Cal. 84, 124 P. 692, 1135; Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1267. That action was brought by the district attorney of Solano county under a statute providing that "The district attorney of any county of this state in which a public nuisance may now or hereafter shall exist, may * * * bring a civil action in the name of the people of the state to abate said nuisance." St. 1899, p. 103. The language of said statute is to all intents and purposes the same as that found in section 731 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It was held by this court in that action that the court had power to enjoin the defendants maintaining a smelter from permitting the injurious fumes emitted from its works to blow over and upon the premises affected thereby, even though the remedy of abatement is the only one specifically provided by the statute. In that case the court stated that "An abatement of a nuisance is accomplished in a court of equity by means of an injunction proper and suitable to the facts in each case" and held that "The judgment rendered was within the power conferred by the statute in reliance upon which the district attorney instituted the action." Appellants also assert, as all the nuisances complained of, such as the smoke, noise, and dust created by the use of the steam shovel, and the stagnant pools of water left standing by reason of the excavations, were abated by the decree and judgment and provision was further made therein that the channel of the arroyo Seco be left open so as to carry the largest amount of water ever known to have flown therein, that the court could not, in addition to the abatement of these nuisances, enjoin the defendants from excavating upon their lands, and particularly those within the McNeil lease. But among the nuisances complained of was that of danger from flood waters resulting from the excavations of appellants' land, and if such excavations upon proper and sufficient evidence were found by the court to result in exposing the private and public property in that vicinity to danger from flood waters, then such excavations would become a public nuisance and could be abated by said court, even to the extent of enjoining in said action all excavations upon appellants' said land. We are satisfied that the court in said action had the power to issue an injunction restraining the defendants from the commission of any act or acts which the evidence showed would contribute to or result in the maintenance or creation of the nuisance complained of.

[2] Appellants next contend that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and therefore their general demurrer should have been sustained. There is absolutely no merit in this contention, and we think appellants have conceded that to be so by their acquiescence in that portion of the judgment which in response to the allegations of the complaint decrees the abatement of the nuisances complained of.

[3] Appellants contend that the findings are inconsistent with, and do not support, the judgment, and that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings, and particularly said finding XIV. We will consider these objections together, and, in doing so, a few further details as to the facts may be recited in the interest of a better understanding of appellants' position. The Los Angeles Rock & Gravel Company is the owner of a rock-crushing plant situated in the arroyo Seco some distance, perhaps a mile or two, below the McNeil lease. The company is also the owner in fee of a number of irregular tracts of land, amounting in all to approximately 130 acres in the bed and along the banks of the arroyo Seco, which irregular pieces of land extend from said plant up to and beyond the McNeil lease. These lands do not include the McNeil lease. For some years prior to the commencement of this action, the company has obtained sand, gravel, and rock for the operation of its said plant from these lands located along and in the channel of said arroyo, and was so doing at the time of the commencement of this action. The complaint was aimed, not particularly at the excavations which were then being made on the McNeil lease, but generally to all operations and excavations made by the company upon any of its holdings located in or along the channel of said arroyo and within the limits mentioned in the complaint. Upon the issues as made by the pleadings regarding the effect of these excavations, the court found:

Finding VI. "That as their excavations progress defendants propose to give to the adjoining land and streets the lateral subjacent support, which said land and streets received from defendants' adjoining lands, and defendants propose to give to all adjoining lands and streets, protection against flood waters and lateral support equal if not superior to that afforded said adjoining lands, property and streets by any and all lands excavated or removed by defendants. That defendants propose to conduct the business and excavations in such a way as to create no menace to public health, peace, safety or morals."

Finding VIII. "That the effect of the excavations defendants propose and intend to make in the operation of its said business will be to widen and deepen the channel of the Arroyo Seco. That all of the land described in the complaint is composed of loose rock, sand and gravel. That defendants propose to at all times and places furnish to adjoining land and streets ample protection, equal to or superior to that afforded such adjoining land and streets by any land excavated by defendants along such adjoining land and streets."

We think there is nothing necessarily inconsistent in the findings of the court taken as a whole. In the last two findings the court found that, in the work and excavations which the appellants planned to make in their said land, they proposed to give to adjoining property equal if not superior lateral support enjoyed by said lands in their natural state, while in finding XIV, above quoted, the court found explicitly that "no regulation of the excavations of the McNeil lease outside of the Arroyo Seco channel by means of concrete walls or otherwise, can be made which will afford protection to property and streets adjoining the McNeil lease outside of the channel, equal to or superior to the protection now afforded by the loose rock, sand and gravel." Findings V and VIII may be said to constitute general findings, and refer to the lands generally in which the appellants are carrying on their excavation operations, while finding XIV refers explicitly to those excavations being made upon the McNeil lease. In such a case the special findings would control, and there is no inconsistency. Estate of Ross, 187 Cal. 454, 202 P. 641; McCormick v. National Surety Co., 134 Cal. 510, 66 P. 741. We are thus brought to the consideration of finding XIV and to the evidence in the case in relation to its sufficiency to support said finding.

[4] This appeal is before us on the so-called alternative method, the reporter's transcript consisting of over 3,000 typewritten pages. The appellants in a supplemental brief have set forth the testimony of a number of witnesses, both lay and expert, upon the question of the size of the channel required to carry the flood and storm waters of the arroyo Seco and of the character of the walls or embankments necessary to protect adjoining lands. They have also printed in their said brief the joint report of four engineers, two representing each side of this controversy, upon these questions. The respondent makes no reference practically to any evidence in its brief, nor has it printed either in its brief or any appendix thereto any of the evidence taken during the trial. In the appeal taken in the other two cases, the appellants therein have presented a supplement to their brief, in which they have printed the judgment roll alone in said cases. No evidence, however, is printed in said supplement. The four engineers, who filed the joint report above referred to, acted, in preparing said report, at the suggestion of the trial court. The trial court had previously stated to the attorneys of the parties hereto that a much more satisfactory result might be obtained by the selection of two engineers by each of the parties to this action, who, after their selection, might confer among themselves and report to the court their joint conclusion upon the questions then before the court, than to proceed in the usual manner by the production and examination and cross-examination of witnesses for the purpose of establishing the contentions of the respective parties hereto. Acting upon this suggestion of the court, each side to this controversy selected two engineers, whose qualifications were admitted. These four engineers thereafter filed a written report signed by all four of them as to the size and character of the channel necessary to carry the flood waters of said water course and the character and height of the walls necessary to protect said channel and adjoining lands. One of said engineers, W. C. Steele, who represented the respondent herein, while signing said report, reserved the right to submit a supplemental report, which he afterward prepared and submitted, and which the appellants have printed in their supplemental brief. The pertinent portions of said joint report are as follows:

"Engineer's joint conclusion as to channel to safely carry for all time all flood waters of the Arroyo Seco.

"1. The channel should have a safe capacity of 19,000 second-feet.

"2. The general cross section of such a channel would be, 150 feet wide and 12 feet deep, the lower 6½ feet of the channel being occupied by the water, and the upper 5½ feet 'freeboard.'

"3. The sides of the channel to be protected by proper walls. The depth of the foundations of the side walls to be such, from point to point, as safety shall prescribe having due regard to all local conditions and possible scour.

"4. The velocity in such channel would be such that the bottom would scour and require protective measures and maintenance."

Engineer Steele, while he signed this joint report as we have seen, reserved the right to submit a supplemental report. In the supplemental report submitted by him he disagreed with the joint report on the ground that it was "inadequate and therefore misleading." In this report he states that: "Nothing but a concrete-lined channel, continuous from the Devil's Gate Dam (a dam constructed in the upper reaches of the Arroyo Seco) to the Los Angeles River, or a channel lined with concrete on the bottom and riprap on the sides, will satisfy the requirement of permanence. A channel with concrete side walls and gravel bottom will inevitably erode and scour below the footings of the protective side walls and thus renew the problem presented to the court for settlement."

While the requirements specified by Engineer Steele are much more drastic than those proposed by the joint report, he nowhere in his report or elsewhere suggests that adequate provision cannot be made for confining the flood waters of said stream within its channel and thus affording permanent protection to adjoining lands and streets. There is no testimony of any witness to which our attention has been directed, or which is legally before this court for its consideration, which tends to establish the impossibility or impracticability of protecting adjoining lands and streets by means of concrete and steel walls from being injured or damaged by excavations made in lands within said channel. Neither is there any such evidence which tends to prove that such artificial support as may be given by walls of the character just described, may not be equal to the protection afforded said lands and streets by the natural rock, sand, and gravel in place prior to any excavation being made. All the evidence in the case goes to show that the bed and banks of the arroyo Seco are composed of rock, sand, and gravel of the same general character throughout the whole course of the channel as it runs through the lands in the possession of appellants. We have not been directed to any evidence, and we have been unable to find any ourselves that indicates that the character of the land embraced within the McNeil lease is any different in character from the lands owned by the appellants along the channel of said water course. We are at a loss to understand the reason which prompted the trial court in permitting excavations to be made in any and all of the lands owned by them, but denied it the right to make such excavations on the land held by it under the McNeil lease and lying east of the channel thereof. We are therefore of the opinion that the record before us is without any evidence to support the finding of the trial court "that no regulation of the excavations of the McNeil lease outside of the Arroyo Seco channel by means of concrete walls or otherwise can be made which will afford protection to property and streets adjoining the McNeil lease outside of the channel equal to or superior to the protection now afforded by the loose rock, sand and gravel which defendants propose to excavate down to the level of the channel of the Arroyo Seco."

[5] Appellants make the further claim that the judgment is erroneous in that it fails to provide for the payments to the Los Angeles Rock & Gravel Company of the sum of $675,000. This contention is made upon the following theory: The court found that the gravel deposits upon the land designated as the McNeil lease contains approximately 900,000 cubic yards of rock, sand, and gravel of the value of approximately 75 cents per cubic yard, or $675,000. The McNeil lease was dated September 16, 1920, and was for a term of five years from its date. It therefore would expire on September 16, 1925. The company acquired it July 21, 1923, and began to make excavations upon the land covered by said lease in December, 1923. There was evidence to the effect that, if permitted to do so, the company could have taken all of the rock, sand, and gravel out of the McNeil lease in less than one year. The temporary injunction in this action was issued in January, 1924, and was followed by a permanent injunction. In each of these injunctions the company was restrained from making any excavations of rock, sand, or gravel upon the McNeil lease. Appellants therefore argue that, as the company was enjoined and restrained from excavating the rock, sand, and gravel upon the McNeil lease from January, 1924, to September 16, 1925, when the term for which the company held said lease expired, and as the deposits therein were of the value of $675,000, said company was entitled to judgment for this sum against the city of Los Angeles. It is only necessary to say, in answer to this argument, that whatever damages, if any, the company has sustained by reason of the issuance of the temporary and permanent injunctions cannot be recovered in this action. Such questions must be determined, if at all, in an independent action brought for that purpose.

[6] Neither are we in accord with the contention of the respondent that, as the company's rights under the lease to the McNeil land has now terminated by lapse of time, this appeal should be dismissed. We are not prepared to say that a reversal of the judgment would prove fruitless and that therefore the controversy has become moot.

[7] The pleadings, findings, and evidence contain many references to the Los Angeles flood control district, and the claim is made that, as all the lands involved herein are situated within said district, that fact has a bearing upon the rights of the respective parties to this action. Such a claim is absolutely without any foundation in law or reason, and the trial court should have struck out of the pleading all allegations therein referring to said district and should have excluded all evidence that the lands involved herein were within said district. We think this disposes of all the questions arising in the action of People v. Hawley et al., referred to in the briefs of counsel as the nuisance case.

[8] The other two actions involve the validity of certain provisions of two ordinances enacted by the city of Los Angeles, and, for the purpose of conveniently distinguishing them from the previous action, they will, as occasion requires, be referred to as the ordinance cases. The first of these two cases (No. 9174) was instituted by the Los Angeles Rock & Gravel Company against the city of Los Angeles and certain of its officers to enjoin them from interfering with plaintiff in its excavation and removal of rock, sand, and gravel from lands belonging to said company and located in the channel and along the banks of the arroyo Seco. The lands involved in this action are the same lands as those described in the nuisance case as belonging to or in the possession of the Los Angeles Rock & Gravel Company, including the lands covered by said McNeil lease. It was alleged in the complaint that the city of Los Angeles had enacted an ordinance numbered 32769, and that it was by reason of the provisions of this ordinance that the officers of the city of Los Angeles threatened to prosecute and arrest the officers, agents, and employees of the Los Angeles Rock & Gravel Company unless the latter ceased to make the excavations complained of and which were then being carried on by said company in its said lands in the arroyo Seco. The provisions of Ordinance No. 32769, in so far as they are pertinent to this action, are that: "It shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation to dig, excavate, screen or dredge for sand, gravel, earth, rock, stone, minerals or any substance below the official grade of the abutting street upon any premises within the residence district as said district is described in the ordinance of the city of Los Angeles except only and so far as necessary for the erection, construction or alteration of a building thereon, and after first obtaining a building permit."

The second of these two actions (No. 9175) is substantially the same as action No. 9174. It asks for the same relief against practically the same set of officials, as is prayed for in action No. 9174. The only difference in the two actions is found in the allegations as to ordinances under which said officers are alleged to have been acting when they threatened the company with arrest and prosecution unless it ceased its excavation operations in the arroyo Seco. In the first of said two actions, as we have seen, it was alleged that the said officers were acting under Ordinance No. 32769, which purported to prohibit all excavations for rock and other materials within any residence district of said city. In the second of said two actions it was alleged that the said officers were acting under the authority given them by the terms of Ordinance No. 33761, and its various amendments. This was a so-called zoning ordinance, and by it there was established a residence district in said city of Los Angeles in which the lands hereinbefore referred to as belonging to and in the possession of the Los Angeles Rock & Gravel Company, including the lands within the McNeil lease, were included and made a part of said residence district. This last-mentioned ordinance further contained a provision prohibiting excavations for rock and other materials in any land within said residence district, substantially the same as that contained in Ordinance No. 32769, and which we have quoted above. It will thus be seen that the two actions are to all intents and purposes identical. The trial court held that each of said ordinances was void in so far as it purported to affect the said lands of which the Los Angeles Rock & Gravel Company was the owner, and enjoined the said officers of the city of Los Angeles from enforcing, or seeking to enforce, said ordinances against the Los Angeles Rock & Gravel Company, and enjoined and prohibited the city of Los Angeles and its officers from interfering with said company, its agents, servants, and employees in the operation of its excavations in the arroyo Seco "upon its land described in the complaint * * * with the exception of that portion of its leased land, described therein as the 'McNeil lease' lying east of the channel of the Arroyo Seco." It will thus be seen that in the first of these three actions the Los Angeles Rock & Gravel Company was enjoined from making any excavations upon that part of the "McNeil lease" lying east of the channel of the arroyo Seco, and that the officers of the city of Los Angeles were enjoined in the other two of said actions from interfering with the Los Angeles Rock & Gravel Company in making excavations upon any of its said lands except that part of the McNeil lease lying east of the channel of the arroyo Seco.

From the judgment declaring the provisions of said ordinances invalid and restraining and enjoining the city of Los Angeles and its officers from interfering with the excavation operations of said company, the defendants in each of said actions have appealed. It is apparent from the foregoing that the one question presented by the appeal in these two ordinance cases is the validity of the provisions of these ordinances making it illegal to excavate for rock, sand, gravel, or other materials upon the lands of the Los Angeles Rock & Gravel Company within the residence district of the city of Los Angeles. If these provisions of said ordinances are valid, then it was the duty of the city officials of the city of Los Angeles to enforce the same, and no injunction would lie to restrain them from performing this duty. On the other hand, if said provisions of said ordinances are void, then the action of said city officials in attempting to enforce them against the Los Angeles Rock & Gravel Company was illegal, and the judgment enjoining such action was valid and binding upon said officials.

By the ordinances of the city of Los Angeles above referred to the lands of the company located in the channel and along the banks of the arroyo Seco are zoned as residence property, and excavations for rock, gravel, sand, and other materials are prohibited to be made therein. The court found that these lands were chiefly valuable for the deposit of rock, sand, and gravel contained therein, and that these deposits were of the value of approximately $1,125,000. While it found that the territory in the vicinity of and contiguous to said arroyo Seco throughout the greater portion thereof was built up with homes, dwellings, and other buildings, it also found that the Santa Fé, Union Pacific & Pacific Electric Railways run in a northerly and southerly direction, being the same direction in which said arroyo Seco runs, "in close proximity to the property of the company described in the complaint, with the usual noise, smoke and dust accompanying such operation." The court further found that the excavations being carried on by the company under the conditions imposed in the case of People v. Hawley would have the effect of widening and deepening the channel along the arroyo Seco so as to permit the flood and storm water to flow freely through and down the same, that the company, in carrying on its excavation development, will provide adequate lateral support to adjoining lands, and that the company "proposes to conduct the business and excavations in such a way as to create no menace to public health, safety or morals." As conclusions of law, the court found that said ordinances were "unreasonable, oppressive, unconstitutional and void" in their application to the plaintiff and its said property. We think that there can be no question but that these findings of fact justify said conclusions of law, and that the judgments declaring said ordinances void in their application to the said lands of the Los Angeles Rock & Gravel Company are supported by said findings.

[9, 10] In this state the law governing the power of municipalities to enact reasonable zoning legislation has been definitely settled by the recent decisions of this court, notably the cases of Miller v. Board of Public Works, 195 Cal. 477, 234 P. 381, 38 A. L. R. 1479; Zahn v. Board of Public Works, 195 Cal. 497,

234 P. 388; In re White, 195 Cal. 516, 234 P. 396; and Pacific Palisades Ass'n v. City of Huntington Beach, 196 Cal. 211, 237 P. 538, 40 A. L. R. 782. These decisions, with others of this and the several District Courts of Appeal, establish without question that the right to zone may be resorted to by municipalities upon a proper invocation of the police power. "But such zoning must be reasonably necessary and reasonably related to the health, safety, morals, or general welfare of the community." Pacific Palisades Ass'n v. City of Huntington Beach, supra, 196 Cal. 216, 237 P. 539. Further, the court in the opinion in that case says (page 217 of 196 Cal. [237 P. 540]): "Ordinances having that effect must be reasonable, and must be for the purpose of protecting the public health, comfort, safety, or welfare. Every intendment is to be made in favor of the lawful exercise of municipal power making such regulations, and it is not the province of courts, except in clear cases, to interfere with the exercise of that authority. But, as was recently said by the Supreme Court of the United States, 'while property may be regulated to a certain extent if regulation goes too far it will be recognized as a taking.' (Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Mahon, 260 U. S. 393, 415, 28 A. L. R. 1321, 67 L. Ed. 322, 43 S. Ct. 158; see, also, Rose's U. S. Notes.) Therefore, notwithstanding this general grant of power, it is a thoroughly well-settled doctrine that municipal by-laws and ordinances undertaking to regulate useful business enterprises are subject to investigation in the courts, with a view to determining whether the law or ordinance is a lawful exercise of the police power; or whether, under the guise of enforcing police regulations, there has been an unwarranted and arbitrary interference with the right to carry on a lawful business, to make contracts, or to use and enjoy property. (Dobbins v. Los Angeles, 195 U. S. 223, 49 L. Ed. 169, [25] S. Ct. 18; In re Application of Throop [Ex parte Throop] 169 Cal. 93, 99, 145 P. 1029; Curtis v. City of Los Angeles, 172 Cal. 230, 234, 156 P. 462.)" This same doctrine is enunciated in the case of Dobbins v. Los Angeles, 195 U. S. 223, at page 238, 25 S. Ct. 18, 21 (49 L. Ed. 169), a case which arose in this state, in the following language: "It may be admitted as being a correct statement of the law as held by the California Supreme Court that, notwithstanding the grant of the permit, and even after the erection of the works, the city might still for the protection of the public health and safety, prohibit the further maintenance and continuance of such works, and the prosecution of the business, originally harmless, may become, by reason of the manner of its prosecution or a changed condition of the community, a menace to the public health and safety. In other words, the right to exercise the police power is a continuing one, and a business lawful today may in the future because of the changed situation, the growth of population or other causes, become a menace to the public health and welfare, and be required to yield to the public good. Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, 97 U. S. 659 [24 L. Ed. 1036]; New Orleans Gas Co. v. Louisiana Light Co., 115 U. S. 650, 672 [6 S. Ct. 252, 29 L. Ed. 516]. But the exercise of the police power is subject to judicial review and property rights cannot be wrongfully destroyed by arbitrary enactment. It was averred that the works would be so constructed so as not to interfere with the health or safety of the people. No reasonable explanation for the arbitrary exercise of power in the case is suggested."

[11] No authority is required to support the proposition that the business of excavating rock and gravel by the owner from lands belonging to him is a lawful and useful occupation, and cannot be prohibited by legislation except in cases where the enactment of such legislation may be found necessary for the protection of the legal rights of others. If authority were necessary, we have but to refer to a decision of this court. In re Kelso, 147 Cal. 609, 82 P. 241, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 796, 109 Am. St. Rep. 178. That case we think sheds some light upon the general aspect of the present action. An ordinance of the city and county of San Francisco was there under consideration, wherein the attempt was made to prohibit the operation of any rock or stone quarry within certain prescribed limits of said municipality. This court, in declaring said ordinance unconstitutional and void, said (page 612 of 147 Cal. [82 P. 242]): "Applying these well-recognized principles to the ordinance before us, we are unable to perceive any ground upon which it may be sustained as a legitimate exercise of the police power. It is in no sense a mere regulation as to the manner in which rock or stone may be removed from the land by the owner thereof, but is an absolute prohibition of any such removal. However valuable the rock or stone may be if removed, and however valueless if not removed, the owner must allow it to remain in its place of deposit. Such a prohibition might be justified, if the removal could not be effected without improperly invading the rights of others, but it cannot be doubted that rock and stone may under some circumstances be so severed from the land and removed as not in the slightest degree to inflict any injury which the law will recognize. So far as such use of one's property may be had without injury to others it is a lawful use which cannot be absolutely prohibited by the legislative department under the guise of the exercise of the police power." This court has even gone so far as to hold an ordinance void which prohibited the operation and maintenance of a rock crusher in this same arroyo Seco and situated only a short distance from the lands of the present plaintiff, the Los Angeles Rock & Gravel Company. Ex parte Throop, 169 Cal. 93, 145 P. 1029. It will be noted, however, that in the present action the rock crusher of the company is not located or operated upon any of the lands herein involved. The record shows that the company owns and maintains a rock crusher on land situated to the south of the lands involved in the present action, and that it only seeks to excavate by means of an electric shovel rock, gravel, and sand from its said land, which materials when so excavated are loaded upon trucks and transported to said rock-crushing plant of the company, where they are treated and prepared for commercial uses. We have already referred to the fact that, in the action of People v. Hawley, the trial court abated all nuisances of which complaint was made and which it was alleged and found were caused by the Los Angeles Rock & Gravel Company in their excavations upon the lands owned by it and comprising approximately one hundred and thirty acres. The trial court found that to permit the company to continue its excavation operations upon said lands subject to the conditions imposed upon said operations by the judgment and decree in People v. Hawley et al. would not result in any substantial injury to adjoining property or to persons residing or owning property in the near vicinity of the lands of said company. Any ordinance of said city which would enjoin and prohibit the company from thus using its property is therefore void, as an unreasonable restraint upon the use by it of its property and an unwarranted interference with the right of said company to carry on a lawful business and to use and enjoy its own property.

For the reasons expressed herein, that portion of the judgment in the case of People v. Hawley et al. (L. A. 9173), appealed from, is hereby reversed, and the judgments in Los Angeles Rock & Gravel Co. v. City of Los Angeles et al. (L. A. 9174), and Los Angeles Rock & Gravel Co. v. George E. Cryer et al. (L. A. 9175), are, and each of said judgments is, hereby affirmed.

PEOPLE v. LAZARUS et al. (Cr. 3189.)★

Supreme Court of California. July 1, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 29, 1929.

1. Criminal law $\S$ 655(4)—Court's statement on voir dire examination that all participants in robbery wherein person is killed are equally guilty of murder held not erroneous (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1078, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1039).

Trial court's statement during voir dire examination of juror under Pen. Code, $\S$ 1078, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1039, that all participating in robbery in course of which a person is killed by one of them, even though accidentally, are equally guilty of murder, held not erroneous as creating impression in jurors' minds that defendants were to be held to same degree of punishment if found guilty of same degree of crime.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 1166½(12)—Court's statement on voir dire examination that all participants in robbery wherein person is killed are equally guilty of murder held not prejudicial, in view of prompt change of statement, and final instruction (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1078, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1039).

Trial court's statement during voir dire examination of juror under Pen. Code, $\S$ 1078, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1039, that all participating in robbery in course of which a person is killed, even though accidentally, are equally guilty of murder, held not prejudicial to defendants, even if erroneous as creating impression in jurors' minds that all defendants should be held to same degree of punishment, if convicted of same degree of crime, in view of court's prompt statement, when defendants' counsel objected, that all persons engaged in attempt to commit robbery, as result of which one of them kills an innocent person, are equally guilty of first degree murder, and final instruction entirely clarifying court's meaning and intent in use of word "equally."

3. Criminal law $\S$ 1166½(12)—Court's references to "demand" for death penalty during voir dire examination held not prejudicial error, in view of final instructions (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1078, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1039).

Trial court's references to district attorney's "demand" for imposition of death penalty in preliminary instructions and questions to jurors on voir dire examination under Pen. Code, $\S$ 1078, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1039, held not prejudicial error, in view of full and fair final instructions with respect to measure of punishment.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 1035(3)—Court's references, without objection, to demand for death penalty during voir dire examination, held not available error (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1078, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1039).

Prejudicial error, if any, in court's references to district attorney's demand for imposition of death penalty in preliminary instructions and questions to jurors on voir dire examination under Pen. Code, $\S$ 1078, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1039, held not available to defendants on appeal, where no objection was urged thereto at the time.

5. Jury $\S$ 131(4)—Appellants whose counsel were offered opportunity to, and did extensively, examine prospective jurors, could not complain that they were not afforded adequate opportunity to examine them (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1078, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1039).

Defendants, whose counsel were offered opportunity to examine each prospective juror after trial court completed its own inquiry into their qualifications under Pen. Code, $\S$ 1078, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1039, and took advantage thereof by examination occupying better part of two days, in course of which court permitted him to proceed at length whenever any serious question arose as to whether juror had been sufficiently interrogated, could not complain on appeal that they were not afforded adequate opportunity to examine jurors.

6. Criminal law $\S$ 823(2)—Instruction to decide fact questions solely on evidence and instructions held not invading jury's province, in view of other instructions.

Court's admonition at inception of charge to decide all questions of fact solely on evidence in accordance with instructions as to law held not erroneous as invading jury's province in murder trial to determine both law and facts by general verdict, in view of other instructions, including charge that judge has nothing to do with questions of fact, weight of evidence, or credibility of witnesses, but that such matters are entirely within jury's province.

7. Homicide $\S$ 312—Form of verdict, "we * * * find the defendant * * * guilty of * * * murder in the first degree 'as charged in the indictment,'" held not erroneous.

Form of verdict, "we, the jury, * * * find the defendant * * * guilty of felony, to wit: murder in the first degree as charged in the indictment," held not erroneous; "as charged in the indictment" meaning no more than that jury are to render judgment conformable to particular offense and degree thereof with which defendant is charged.

8. Homicide $\S$ 338(1)—Admission of evidence of defendant's mental condition long before crime, under plea of "not guilty by reason of insanity" only, held not prejudicial error.

In murder trial, wherein one defendant tendered plea of "not guilty by reason of insanity," as well as plea of "not guilty," the court committed no prejudicial error in admitting evidence of his mental condition long before crime under former plea only.

9. Criminal law $\S$ 1213—Death penalty for first degree murder is not "cruel punishment."

Infliction of the death penalty for first degree murder does not constitute a cruel punishment within the meaning of the state and federal Constitutions.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Fred V. Wood, Judge.

Louis Lazarus, George Costello, and William O'Brien, alias Joseph Murray, were convicted of first degree murder, and they appeal. Affirmed.

Nathan C. Coghlan, of San Francisco, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and William F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

RICHARDS, J. The defendants were convicted of murder in the first degree without recommendation by the jury and were each sentenced to suffer the extreme penalty of the law. The offense of which they were found guilty arose out of the following state of facts, which are practically undisputed: On the 25th day of July, 1928, at or about the hour of 11:40 a. m., the three defendants entered a branch bank situated on Seventh street, in West Oakland, within which at the time there were five persons who were either officials in charge of said branch bank or were engaged in the transaction of business with it. Upon entering the bank the defendant O'Brien drew a pistol, and, going to a window where one Charles McFarlin was acting as teller and was engaged in a business transaction with a customer, ordered McFarlin and the customer to throw up their hands. In the meantime the other two defendants exhibited weapons and gave like orders to the other employees and customers in the bank. McFarlin did not obey promptly the order of O'Brien, whereupon the defendant Lazarus fired a shot which penetrated McFarlin's head, from the effects of which he died. The three defendants immediately fled, but were presently apprehended while in flight and were positively identified as being the three men who had taken part in the attempted holdup of the bank. They were each charged with murder by an information filed by the district attorney of the county and were in due course brought to trial thereon jointly.

[1, 2] Upon the examination of the jurors upon their voir dire the trial court undertook to conduct an examination of the prospective jurors under the provisions of the recently enacted section 1078 of the Penal Code (St. 1927, p. 1039), and in the course of such examination to give such preliminary instructions to them as would enable them to respond intelligently to the questions touching their qualifications to be propounded to them by the court, and in the course thereof made the following statement to and inquiry of the jurors who were undergoing such examination in a body: "In all criminal cases the law is that all persons concerned in the commission of a crime are equally guilty whether they directly commit the offense or with guilty intent aid and abet it in any way. You will follow that provision of the law, won't you?" The jurors responded, "Yes." A little later, while examining a particular juror, the court stated: "You heard me explain where there is an attempt to perpetrate a robbery, if in the course of the perpetration of the crime a person is killed, even though accidentally, by one of those participating in the robbery they are all equally guilty under the law of the crime of murder." To this statement counsel for the defendants offered an objection which apparently was aimed at the use of the word "equally" by the court; whereupon the judge thereof restated his question as follows: "Where two or more persons are engaged in an attempt to commit robbery and as a result of that attempt one of the defendants kills an innocent person, all are equally guilty of murder of the first degree." To the statement of the court as thus made, with a view apparently to conforming to the objection urged by defendants' counsel, no further objection was urged, and thereafter in the examination of such new jurors as were called to the box the court employed the latter form of statement, to which no further objection at the time was made. In its final instructions to the jury which tried the cause the court gave an instruction touching this subject which entirely clarified its meaning and intent in the use of the word "equally" in its earlier statement to the jury, and upon this particular subject the defendants offered no other or further instruction. Notwithstanding this state of the record, counsel for the appellants strenuously insists that the members of the jury were prejudicially affected by the use of the word "equally," and that they and each of them gained and retained the impression therefrom that it was the intent of the court to inform them by the use of said term that the defendants under that form of statement were to be held to the same degree of punishment in the event of being found guilty of the same degree of crime. We are entirely satisfied that no such intentment was reasonably derivable from the preliminary statement of the court to the jury in which the aforesaid term was employed, and that even had such intentment been possible it was entirely removed not only by the prompt change of statement made by the trial court, but was further obliterated by the final instruction given to the jurors, as well as by the very full and fair body of instructions which the court gave, and from which no such prejudicial injury could reasonably have resulted.

[3-5] Counsel for the appellants urges as a further objection to the language of the court in its preliminary instructions to and inquiries made of the jurors upon their voir dire examination that it made frequent reference to what it stated to be the "demand" of the district attorney for the imposition of the death penalty in the event the jurors should find the defendants to be guilty of the crime of murder in the first degree. It is true that the trial court did at times refer to the attitude of the prosecution upon that subject as a "demand." But it is also true that such was the attitude and insistence of the prosecution with respect to this aggravated and indefensible crime. It is also true that no objection was urged at the time by counsel for the defendants against the use of that term by the trial judge, and we are unable to perceive how any prejudicial error could be predicated thereon or could now be available to the defendants under the fully proven circumstances of this particular case. With respect to the measure of punishment to be meted out to them by the verdict of the jury or sentence of the court, the final instructions of the trial judge were eminently full and fair to these defendants, and whatever erroneous impressions the jury, or any member thereof, might have gained in the course of their voir dire examination, we are satisfied were entirely explained and removed. The foregoing statement has particular application to the objection which is now urged by the appellants to the general form and course of the voir dire examination, but which was not presented and urged while such examination was in progress, which is that the defendants were not afforded an adequate opportunity to conduct an examination on their own behalf of the prospective jurors. An examination of the record, however, discloses that after the trial court had conducted and completed its own inquiry into the qualifications of the jurors through a series of questions directed to them as a whole, and also through a series of particular inquiries addressed to each individual juror, counsel for defendants was offered an opportunity to examine each prospective juror as to his or her qualifications, and that he took advantage of that opportunity by an examination which occupied the better part of two days and in the course of which whenever any serious question arose as to whether the juror had not been sufficiently interrogated the trial court permitted counsel for the defendants to proceed at length with his examination of the juror, and that in no instance was he unduly hampered or interfered with in the course of such examination. With respect to any other objections which the appellants now urge to the conduct of the voir dire examination, we do not deem them to be of sufficient importance or significance to require particular designation or treatment in this opinion.

[6, 7] The further objections which the appellants urge to the proceedings under the defendants' plea of "not guilty," and the trial thereon, related to the instructions which were finally given by the trial court. It is urged that the court at the beginning of its charge to the jury admonished it "to pass upon and decide all questions of fact solely and entirely upon the evidence in accordance with the instructions as to the law." It is argued that by this statement at the inception of its charge the trial court undertook to invade the proper province of the jury in the course of a murder trial to determine by its general verdict both the law and the facts. We do not, however, find that the instructions of the trial court, when read as a whole, are subject to this obnoxious criticism, since the trial judge again and again instructed the jury not only that it was the exclusive province of each member thereof to pass upon the facts of the case, but that as to the law of the case the trial court was more than fair to the defendants in allowing the jury the fullest latitude in determining the extent to which they would give application of the law to the facts in their verdict. This is exemplified by the following statement of the court to the jury: "Gentlemen of the jury: It is my duty to state to you the law applicable to this case. It is your duty, as jurors, without any suggestion from me, to pass upon and decide all questions of fact, solely and entirely upon the evidence in accordance with these instructions as to the law. The judge of this court has nothing to do with the questions of fact, the weight of evidence, or the credit you should give to any witness sworn in this case. These are matters entirely within your province and which you, as jurors, determine for yourselves. In the charge now being given to you the judge of this court in no manner or form intends or desires you to understand that he is expressing any opinion as to the guilt or innocence of any of these defendants, or upon the weight of evidence or as to the truth or falsity of the statement of any witness in this case, or as to any inference you should draw from any of the testimony, or as to whether any fact is or is not proven." Notwithstanding the foregoing statement of the court at the inception of its charge to the jury, it is insisted by counsel for the defendants that the effect thereof was removed by the forms of the verdict which the court submitted to the jury at the close of its instructions, one of which was the following: "We, the jury in the above-entitled cause, find the defendant * * * guilty of felony, to-wit: murder in the first degree as charged in the indictment." The obnoxious phrase which appellants' counsel finds in this form of verdict is "as charged in the indictment"; but we are unable to discover in this phrase the evil effects or consequences which are sought to be assigned to it. It is a phrase which is almost universally in use in the forms of verdicts, and means no more than that the jury, in returning their verdict, are to render the same conformable to the particular offense and to the degree thereof with which the defendant has been charged and put upon his trial. In this, as in other respects, the instructions already given to the jury had fully clarified the duty which was about to be laid upon them in their consideration of both the form and extent of their verdict with relation to each of the defendants who were upon trial before them.

[8] The remaining objections which we deem of sufficient importance to require particular comment relate to the case of the defendant O'Brien, who, in addition to his plea of "not guilty," was the only one of the defendants who also tendered the plea of "not guilty by reason of insanity." It is urged on behalf of this defendant that he was entitled under his said pleas to offer upon his trial upon the first of said pleas evidence as to his mental condition prior to the commission of the offense charged as bearing upon his intent at the time of his commission of said crime. The record discloses, however, that the evidence which said defendant thus desired to offer upon his plea of "not guilty" did not in any way involve the facts and circumstances immediately attending the commission of his crime, but related wholly to mental states and their causes existing and affecting the defendant during a period long preceding the date of his crime. As to this evidence the record discloses that he was allowed the fullest opportunity to present the same upon his trial upon the plea of "not guilty by reason of insanity," and his case in that respect is thus brought directly within and is fully disposed of under the recent decisions of this court in the cases of People v. Troche, 273 P. 767; People v. Fook, 273 P. 779; and People v. Coen, 271 P. 1074. We therefore find no prejudicial error on the part of the trial court in confining said defendant with relation to such evidence to his proofs under his plea of "not guilty by reason of insanity." Neither do we find that the district attorney was prejudicially guilty of misconduct in the respects alleged upon this appeal during either the trial of the defendants jointly under their plea of "not guilty" or during the trial of the defendant O'Brien individually under his plea of "not guilty by reason of insanity."

[9] The final contention of the appellants is the old and time-worn one that the court had no right under the law to inflict the death penalty upon defendants charged with capital crimes for the reason that the infliction of such penalty constitutes a cruel if not unusual punishment within the meaning of both the state and federal Constitutions. It is not necessary to cite authorities for the purpose of showing that this contention has uniformly been held to be unmeritorious.

We have examined this record most carefully, in view of the elaborate argument of counsel for the defendants presented by both his original and supplementary briefs, and in view also of the enormity of the defendants' alleged offense against the law. As a result of such examination we arrive at the conclusion that no prejudicial error was committed by the trial court in the course of the trial or by the jury in the form and application of their verdict of guilty without recommendation as to each and all of the defendants.

It follows that the judgment should be, and is hereby, affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; LANGDON, J.; CURTIS, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.

PRESTON, J. (concurring). I concur in this judgment, but I do so solely because the evidence produced on the second hearing failed to show the existence of legal insanity. However, I am unable to come to the conclusion that a defendant may show intoxication for the purpose of reducing the degree of the crime but may not show idiocy or total insanity as a complete defense to it. It seems that on this issue of insanity we are being compelled to assume illogical and incongruous positions.

WALLNER v. BARRY et al. (L. A. 9934.)★

Supreme Court of California. June 28, 1929.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing July 25, 1929.

1. Waters and water courses ☞171(2)—Storm, not unusual, washing out fill around culvert and releasing waters impounded and flooding property, held not act of God which could not be anticipated.

Contention that storm, causing outflow of waters in stream to such an extent as to result in temporary impounding behind culvert and fill destroying fill and flooding property of lower proprietors, was such an exceptional occurrence as to be deemed an act of God, which could not be anticipated, held without merit, where evidence showed that storm, while torrential, was not unusual, and therefore should have been anticipated and provided against in the capacity of culvert and in permanent resistant properties of fill.

2. Dedication ☞31—Mere offer of dedication does not amount to dedication relieving dedicators from future liability, in absence of very definite acceptance.

Mere offer to dedicate streets, avenues, drives, ways, walks, sewers, or culverts in connection with proposed subdivision does not amount to dedication thereof, so as to relieve would-be dedicators from future liability from proper construction or care thereof, in absence of very definite acceptance of such dedication on part of municipality.

3. Dedication ☞35(1)—City approving map of proposed subdivision did not accept dedication of streets and assume liability for imperfect construction of culvert and fill.

Where property owner built culvert and fill and roadway thereover with approval of city engineer and thereafter made offer to dedicate same and city accepted map of proposed dedication, city through informal action of officials in approval of map of proposed subdivision did not assume nor relieve would-be dedicators from responsibility for damages from imperfect construction or inadequate maintenance of culvert and fill.

4. Release ⇨29(3)—Lower proprietor releasing city from liability for flood caused by impounding waters behind culvert and fill in process of dedication did not release upper proprietors.

Where property of lower proprietor was injured by flood caused on release of waters impounded by culvert and fill erected by upper proprietors over which street was constructed, lower proprietor, by accepting aid of city officials in restoring house to foundations and signing release to city, did not release upper proprietor from responsibility for effects of flood, since city could not be held joint tort-feasor with upper proprietors because city as matter of law was in no degree liable for injuries to private persons or property of character complained of.

5. Municipal corporations ⇨745—Public corporations are not liable for negligence of officials or agents, in absence of statute or charter imposing liability.

Public corporations are not liable for injuries suffered by individuals through negligence of its officials or agents, in absence of express provision in statute or charter thereof imposing such liability.

6. Release ⇨29(1)—Release of one joint tort-feasor will not discharge other, unless release is accepted in full satisfaction of injury.

Before one joint tort-feasor can be held discharged from liability through release of other, consideration for such release must have been accepted by injured person in full satisfaction of injury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; F. M. Jamison, Judge.

Action by Anna Wallner against John F. Barry and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

James H. Howard, of Pasadena, for appellants.

O. H. Myrick and C. W. Pendleton, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This appeal is from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants in an action for damages caused by flood water along a stream upon the banks of which the plaintiff was a lower proprietor and the defendants were upper proprietors. The stream in question carries the water from what is known as Eagle Rock Valley in the northwestern part of the city of Los Angeles to a lower outlet. The defendants in the year 1923 were engaged in subdividing a tract of land lying along or near said stream, but found themselves unable to record their tract map without providing access to Glassell avenue, sometimes called Eagle Rock boulevard, which lies along the northwesterly side of the stream; the tract itself being upon the southeasterly side thereof, and the ordinances of the city of Los Angeles requiring provision for such access to a main avenue. The defendants accordingly acquired a strip of land 50 feet in width which would enable them to extend their most westerly street, Avenue Forty, northerly across the stream, thereby making contact with Glassell avenue. It thus became necessary for them to construct a fill of said width across the ravine of said stream and to provide a culvert therein for the passage of its water, and to construct a roadway along the top of the fill, thus making the required contact with Glassell avenue. The defendants constructed such fill and culvert during the months of May and June of 1923 and thereupon submitted their map to the officials of the city of Los Angeles, together with an offer of dedication to the public use of all of the streets, avenues, drives, ways, and walks of their said tract as shown upon such map. The city, upon the recommendation of the city engineer, at its meeting on October 11, 1923, adopted a resolution approving said map. The property of the plaintiff was located about five blocks below the location of said fill, abutting on the southwesterly side of the stream. On March 4, 1924, a heavy storm occurred in the region of Eagle Rock and along the upper courses of said stream, causing a very considerable flood of water, amounting to a torrential flow, to collect and come down the stream, the extent and menace of which is set forth in a finding of the trial court reading as follows: "That on said 4th day of March, 1924, * * * and during and on account of the showers and fall of rain, aforesaid, a large body of water collected, and was caused and permitted to be impounded by defendants on said day, immediately above and back of said fill and embankment, and against and because of said fill and embankment; and while so collected and impounded in the place and time and manner aforesaid, said impounded water, being of great volume, weight and pressure, destroyed and swept away said fill and embankment, and then and there rushed down and along said storm drain ditch with great force and momentum to and over plaintiff's said premises, and swept plaintiff's house and home, which was then and theretofore occupying her said premises from its foundations and into said ditch and into the current of said flood, whereupon water, thick with mud, silt, rubbish, and filth, flowed into and over said house, and over and upon plaintiff's said household furniture, effects and personal property contained in said house." On the day following said flood the plaintiff applied for relief from the immediate effects thereof to the city engineer, who with other officials and employees of the city went out and replaced the plaintiff's house upon its foundations and thereupon secured from the plaintiff some sort of release for any liability which might have arisen as against the city on account of said flood. Later on the plaintiff commenced this action against the defendants for the recovery of the damages caused to her aforesaid property by reason of said flood, the items of which, as set forth in her complaint, aggregated the sum of $2,047.75. The defendants in their answer denied responsibility for the occurrence of the overflow which had invaded the plaintiff's premises and for the damage caused thereby, and denied that the same had been caused by reason of any carelessness, negligence, unskillfulness, or unworkmanlike manner in the construction and maintenance of the fill or of the culvert which penetrated the same and through which the waters of the stream were at all times supposed to flow. They further set forth as a separate defense that their plans for the construction of the fill and culvert across the ravine occupied by the stream had been submitted for approval to the city of Los Angeles and had been, prior to the construction thereof, approved by the officials of the city, and that the culvert and fill and the roadway thereover, after the construction thereof in accordance with said approved plan, had been dedicated to the city of Los Angeles, which had accepted the dedication and had thereby assumed control over and responsibility for the future maintenance thereof, and that the defendants had thus been relieved of all further responsibility therefor, and were therefore, after the dedication, no longer liable for any floods occurring along the course of said stream or form and damage caused thereby or in consequence of any defective construction of the culvert and fill. In an amendment to their answer the defendants also pleaded that the plaintiff, in consideration of the restoration of her house and residence to its former foundations after the flood, had released the city of Los Angeles from liability and had thereby also released the defendants from liability. The cause came on for trial before the court upon the issues thus framed, sitting without a jury. Whereupon a considerable volume of evidence was presented on behalf of both parties to the action respecting the construction of the fill and the size and manner of the construction of the culvert, and also relating to the severity of said storm with its resultant flood and the accumulation of the waters thereof above and about the fill, and the inadequacy of the culvert to carry off said waters and the giving away of the fill with the consequent overflow and destruction or damage caused to the plaintiff's property. Upon the submission of the cause the court made its findings of fact and conclusions of law, setting forth in the former with considerable detail the facts as above stated, finding that the plaintiff's version thereof as set forth in her complaint and supporting evidence was true, and that the allegations of the defendants' answer were untrue, and also finding that the special defenses urged therein were unsupported by the evidence in the case. As conclusions of law based upon such findings, the court found that the injury caused to the plaintiff by the occurrence of said overflow was the result of the negligence of the defendants in the construction and maintenance of the culvert and fill, and that plaintiff was entitled to judgment in the sum of $927.75, for which sum judgment was accordingly entered. The defendants have appealed from such judgment, and urge in support of their appeal several contentions which we shall now proceed to consider.

[1] The appellants' first and second contentions are that the finding that the damage occurring to the plaintiff's property was caused by the release of impounded water, and that the fill and culvert were so negligently designed or constructed as to cause the impounding of such water, was unsupported by the evidence in the case. We have examined the record bearing upon this contention and, without attempting to restate the evidence in detail, we are satisfied that the finding of the trial court touching this subject finds full support therein. It is argued by the appellants that the torrential storm which caused the outflow of waters in said stream to such an extent as to result in their temporary impounding behind the culvert and fill was such an exceptional occurrence as to be deemed an act of God, and was of such a character as that which the defendants were not required to anticipate or provide against the construction of their culvert and fill. The evidence in the case does not, however, support this contention, since it shows that the storm, while torrential was not unusual to that region, and hence should have been anticipated and provided against in the capacity of the culvert and in the permanent resistant properties of the fill. There was substantial evidence before the court to the effect that the culvert was so constructed that the bracing timbers thereof were placed inside rather than outside of the culvert, and thus offered an obstruction to the free passage of storm waters through the same, even if it were to be conceded that the culvert were otherwise of such interior proportions as would suffice to carry off such storm waters. There was also substantial evidence to the effect that the position of the culvert was such that instead of being in the direct course of the stream where the waters thereof could easily approach and enter it, the culvert was set over against the bank of the ravine where the waters would be compelled to turn from their direct channel in order to enter the culvert, and that such deflection of the storm waters upon the occasion in question caused a whirlpool at the point of their attempted entrance into the culvert, which finally resulted in their breaking through the fill, with the consequent downflow of their accumulated flood upon the plaintiff's property.

[2, 3] The appellants' third contention is that when they built the culvert and fill and the roadway thereover with the approval of the city engineer, and thereafter made their offer to dedicate the same in common with the other streets, drives, ways, and walks of their said subdivided tract of land as the same appeared upon the map thereof, the city by its approval of said map had thereby accepted such dedication and by so doing had relieved the defendants from responsibility for any future damages resulting from the construction and maintenance of the culvert and fill. The authorities do not support the appellants' contention that a mere offer to dedicate the streets, avenues, drives, ways, walks, sewers, or culverts in connection with a proposed subdivision amounts to a dedication thereof so as to relieve the would-be dedicators from future liability for the proper construction or care thereof, in the absence of a very definite acceptance of such dedication on the part of the municipality. The mere filing, recording, or even approval of the map of such subdivision will not suffice to establish such accepted dedication as would either impose upon the municipality any of the obligations which the dedicators had theretofore been under to properly construct, or keep in repair such portions of their property as they were proposing to devote to a public use, nor operate to relieve the latter therefrom. The early cases of Stone v. Brooks, 35 Cal. 489, and Archer v. Salinas City, 93 Cal. 43, 28 P. 839, 16 L. R. A. 145, would seem to have settled this question contrary to the appellants' contention, and it would seem to be clear that in the instant case the city of Los Angeles through the rather informal action of its officials in the mere approval of the map of the defendants' proposed subdivision neither assumed, nor relieved the defendants from, responsibility for any damages arising from the imperfect construction or inadequate maintenance of said culvert and fill.

[4, 5] The fourth and final contention of the appellants is that the plaintiff in applying to the city officials for relief from the immediate consequences of the disaster to her home and property, and in receiving such relief by the return of her house to its foundations and by thereupon signing some sort of release of the city from liability, had thus also released the defendants from their responsibility to her for the effects of the flood.

The argument of the appellants in this behalf is apparently predicated upon their contention that the city was a joint tort-feasor with the defendants, and that being such it was the law that a release by the plaintiff of one of such joint tort-feasors also released the others from their liability for such damages as they had jointly caused. There are several difficulties in the way of an acceptance or approval of this contention, but an all-sufficient one is to be found in the fact that the city of Los Angeles cannot be held to be a joint tort-feasor with these appellants, since, as a matter of law it was in no degree liable for injuries to private persons or their property of the character complained of here. The law is well settled in this state that public corporations are not to be held liable for injuries suffered by individuals through the negligence of its officials or agents in the absence of an express provision in the statutes or in the charter thereof imposing such liability. It is conceded by the appellants that no such liability has been thus imposed upon the city of Los Angeles, and this being so it could not become a joint tort-feasor with the appellants in occasioning the injuries of which the plaintiff complains.

[6] A further equally complete answer to the appellants' contention in the foregoing regard is to be found in the fact that in whatever release from liability the plaintiff signed at the suggestion of the city officials or employees for restoring her house to its foundations, she did not purport to admit or accept the temporary relief from her disaster thus afforded as a recompense for the whole sum of injury which had been caused by the overflow of her home and property as these are enumerated in detail in her complaint herein and are found to be sustained by the findings of the trial court. Even if it were to be conceded that the city of Los Angeles was a joint tort-feasor with these appellants and that the same liability rested upon it as such for her injuries, it is well-settled rule that before one joint tort-feasor can be held to be discharged from liability through the release of another, the consideration for such release must have been accepted by the plaintiff in full satisfaction of the injury. 1 Cyc. 318, and cases cited; Ellis v. Esson, 50 Wis. 138, 6 N. W. 518, 36 Am. Rep. 830; Chamberlin v. Murphy, 41 Vt. 110; Smith v. Gayle, 58 Ala. 600; Snow v. Chandler, 10 N. H. 92, 34 Am. Dec. 140; Whiting v. Plumas County, 64 Cal. 65, 28 P. 445.

We therefore arrive at the conclusion that there is no merit in any of the contentions of the appellants upon this appeal.

This being so, the judgment must be, and is hereby, affirmed.

MORRIS v. WARNER. (L. A. 9983.)

Supreme Court of California. July 1, 1929.

1. Landlord and tenant ⇨152(5)—Provision requiring lessor to rebuild did not apply where fire was proximately caused by lessee's negligence.

Lessor under lease requiring lessor to rebuild in case of fire was not under obligation to rebuild, where fire which destroyed building was proximately caused by lessee's negligence, though lease further provided that lessee should keep premises in good repair and condition at his own expense, damage by fire or elements excepted.

2. Landlord and tenant ⇨154(3)—In lessee's action for damages under lease permitting termination if building could not be restored within reasonable diligence within 60 working days, finding that such period was insufficient held justified.

In action by lessee against lessor for damages for lessor's termination of lease and failure to rebuild building damaged by fire, under lease requiring lessor to rebuild, but providing for termination of lease if building could not be restored within reasonable diligence within 60 working days, finding of trial court that building could not with reasonable diligence be rebuilt within that time held sustained by evidence.

3. Set-off and counterclaim ⇨29(1)—Lessor's claim for destruction of building by fire through lessee's negligence held subject of counterclaim as arising out of same transaction, in lessee's action for damages for termination of lease (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 438, 442).

In action by lessee against lessor for damages for termination of lease and lessor's refusal to rebuild after fire, under lease requiring restoration of building but permitting termination if building could not be restored with reasonable diligence within 60 working days, cross-complaint of lessor for damages for value of building, based on claim that building was destroyed through lessee's negligence, held proper subject of counterclaim as arising out of same transaction under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 438, 442; destruction of building by fire being considered as the transaction.

4. Set-off and counterclaim ⇨29(1)—Lessor's claim for lessee's negligent destruction of premises by fire, under lease requiring that lessor be saved harmless from lessee's neglect, held subject of counterclaim in lessee's action for damages for termination of lease (Code Civ. Proc. § 438, subd. 2, § 442).

In action by lessee against lessor for damages for termination of lease after fire and failure to restore premises in accordance with provisions of lease requiring restoration by lessor if premises could be restored within reasonable diligence within 60 working days, claim of lessor for damages for lessee's negligent destruction of premises held proper subject of counterclaim under Code Civ. Proc. § 438, subd. 2, and section 442, as another cause of action arising upon contract, where lessee covenanted to keep premises reasonably safe from destruction and to hold lessor harmless from any damages resulting from misuse or neglect of premises.

5. Landlord and tenant ⇨154(3)—Finding that burning of leased building was proximate result of lessee's negligence held justified.

In action by lessee against lessor for damages for failure to rebuild after fire, in which lessor asserted counterclaim for lessee's negligent destruction of premises by fire, evidence of lessee's burning debris and inflammable materials from his furniture factory in lot adjoining leased premises, and leaving fire unattended, smoldering, and smoking, held sufficient to sustain finding that fire was direct and proximate result of lessee's negligence.

6. New trial ⇨101—After lessor's recovery for lessee's negligent destruction of building by fire, refusal of new trial for newly asserted claim that lessor had received insurance held not reversible error.

Where lessee learned from deposition of lessor that lessor carried insurance on building, but failed to bring that matter to court's attention during trial involving claim of lessor for damages for lessee's negligent destruction of building by fire, lessee could not predicate reversible error on trial court's refusal to grant new trial by reason of fact that lessor received insurance, though lessee might have compelled joinder of insurance companies at the trial.

7. Pleading ⇨168—Uncontroverted allegation in cross-complaint must be deemed admitted.

Allegation in cross-complaint which is not controverted must be deemed to have been admitted, and court is justified in finding such allegation to be true.

8. Pleading 377—Cross-complainant need not produce evidence in support of admitted allegations of cross-complaint.

Cross-complainant is not required to produce evidence in support of allegations of cross-complaint which are admitted by plaintiff's failure to deny them.

9. Appeal and error ⇨173(2)—Judgment for lessee's negligent destruction of building should not be disturbed on newly asserted claim that lessor held only leasehold.

Judgment for lessor for damages for lessee's negligent destruction of leased building by fire should not be disturbed on claim, asserted for first time on appeal, that lessor was not the fee owner of the property but held premises under lease from another, where allegation of lessor's ownership was not denied and only evidence that lessor was not the fee owner was by reference to prior lease introduced as exhibit, wherein it was recited that lessor held leasehold interest in premises and that lease was subject to terms of original lease.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; F. C. Valentine, Judge.

Action by Edward S. Morris against Phil Warner, in which defendant interposed a counterclaim. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Murphy & Cohen, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fred W. Morrison and W. W. Hindman, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J. Plaintiff, Edward S. Morris, and defendant, Phil Warner, entered into an agreement on July 28, 1922, whereby defendant leased industrial property in the city of Los Angeles to plaintiff for a term of five years, commencing on August 1, 1922, at an average monthly rental of $300. The premises, upon which was located a large frame building of rough construction, were to be used by the lessee for the purposes of manufacturing, storing, and dealing in furniture. On December 25, 1923, the building was completely destroyed by fire. The lease contained the following provision, the alleged breach of which by the lessor is the basis of the cause of action set forth in plaintiff's complaint:

"If the building hereinbefore referred to is so badly damaged by fire, earthquake or other unusual action of the elements or any contingency beyond the control of the lessor, as to render it wholly unfit for lessee's occupancy, and if it cannot be restored with reasonable diligence within sixty (60) working days after the commencement of actual work, then this lease may be terminated within the period of ten (10) days after such disaster (by either party, upon written notice to the other), whereupon lessee shall surrender the premises and shall not be liable for any further rental, and lessor shall refund any unearned rent paid by lessee, calculated at a daily rate based on the regular monthly rental. In case of any lesser damage by any of the above causes, the premises shall be restored with all reasonable speed by the lessor at the latter's own expense, and the lessee shall pay a reasonable rent during the period of such restoration, for such part of the premises as shall be fit for occupancy by the lessee. * * *

(Italics supplied.)

In his complaint plaintiff alleged that the building was damaged by fire to the extent that it was entirely and wholly untenable, but that a reasonable time for the restoration of the building was less than 60 working days, to wit, not in excess of 50 working days; that defendant refused plaintiff's demand that he restore and repair the building, in accordance with the provision contained in the lease, and on December 31, 1923, said defendant served notice in writing on plaintiff that by reason of said fire he considered the lease terminated. Plaintiff claimed that by defendant's refusal to rebuild he was unlawfully evicted from said premises to his damage in the sum of $17,148.

Defendant, answering, denied that the building could be restored within 60 working days, and alleged that it would require considerably more than 60 working days to rebuild, and that he had notified plaintiff of the termination of the lease, as authorized by said contract of lease. He further denied that plaintiff had suffered damage in any sum whatsoever by reason of the termination of the lease. He also filed a cross-complaint in which he alleged that the fire was caused by the negligence of plaintiff and his violation of covenants in the lease whereby he agreed to keep said premises and all appurtenances thereto in a clean and wholesome condition and to comply faithfully with all ordinances of the city of Los Angeles. The city ordinance claimed to have been violated prescribed requirements designed to reduce the fire hazard to a minimum. The prayer of the cross-complaint was for damages for the value of said building, which was first alleged to be $18,000, and later by an amendment alleged to be $25,000.

The trial court, sitting without a jury, denied plaintiff any relief upon his complaint, and entered judgment for defendant and cross-complainant for $19,500. Plaintiff appeals from said judgment.

[1] Considering first the cause of action set forth in the complaint, by the express terms of the lease defendant was not obligated to reconstruct the building unless it could be rebuilt within sixty working days after the commencement of actual work. Nor was defendant required to rebuild if the fire which destroyed the building was proximately caused by the negligence of the lessee. Neither the rebuilding clause nor the provisions of the lease to the effect that the lessee should keep said premises in good repair and condition at his own expense, damage by fire or elements excepted, and at the end of the term quit and surrender said premises to the lessor in good repair, damage by fire and ordinary use excepted, can reasonably be construed as relieving the lessee from liability to the lessor for a fire caused by his own negligence or as requiring the lessor to rebuild in the event that the premises should be destroyed by a fire thus caused by the negligence of the lessee.

Defendant, however, does not rely upon negligence on the part of plaintiff as a defense in his answer, but only sets it forth in his cross-complaint as the basis for recovery of the value of the building. Whether such negligence, found by the court to exist, would be available as a defense to the cause of action set forth in the complaint, although not pleaded in the answer, it is not necessary to here decide, for the court's finding that the building could not with reasonable diligence be rebuilt within 60 days, but that a period of 70 working days was a reasonable time for its restoration, is sustained by the evidence.

[2] The building contained more than 24,000 square feet of floor space and was of frame construction, roughly finished. Portions of it were two stories in height. It was built upon cement piers or blocks so that the floor of the building and the exterior platform on the west side of the building were several feet above the ground in order to facilitate loading merchandise into freight cars on the spur railroad track which adjoined the property on the west. Witnesses testified that approximately 600 cement piers would be required in reconstruction. Two witnesses, Gitelson and Pennell, builders, who testified on behalf of plaintiff, stated that the building could be rebuilt in 40 working days, using reasonable diligence. The witnesses who testified on behalf of defendant gave estimates varying between 73 and 85 days. Said witnesses do not appear to have been lacking in qualifications to express an opinion, nor does their examination, in the course of which they were required to itemize the periods of time they deemed necessary for the accomplishment of the various phases of the reconstruction, contain anything which would require the trial court as a matter of law to reject their testimony and accept that of plaintiff's witnesses, who were not shown to have had any dealings with defendant or to have made any offers to him to rebuild in less than 60 days. No reason appears why the trial court should have accepted the testimony of plaintiff's two witnesses as against the testimony of the witnesses offered by the defendant. There being a flat contradiction as to the issue of fact, we would not be justified in disturbing the court's finding.

[3] We pass now to a consideration of the judgment entered for defendant upon his cross-complaint awarding him damages for the value of the building alleged to have been destroyed by fire caused by the negligence of his lessee, the plaintiff herein. Plaintiff contends that the cause of action set forth in the cross-complaint is not a proper subject of counterclaim or cross-complaint. We cannot agree with this view. Proof of a destruction caused by the negligent acts or omissions of the lessee would, as noted above, be a proper defense to the cause of action set forth in the complaint to recover damages for breach of the covenant to rebuild. It would also afford the lessor a cause of action for damages against the lessee. The question is: May said lessor recover herein upon such cause of action by cross-complaint or counterclaim? We are satisfied that he may. Although plaintiff's action is brought upon the lease contract, it is necessary to the existence of said cause of action that the building should have been destroyed by fire. Therefore, in a proper sense, the destruction of the building by fire is the "happening" or "accident" upon which the action is brought within the meaning of section 442, Code of Civil Procedure. The cause of action set forth in the cross-complaint or counterclaim to recover damages for the destruction of the building relates to and depends upon the same happening or accident. The destruction of the building by fire may also be considered as the "transaction" set forth in the complaint as the foundation of plaintiff's claim within the meaning of the language of section 438, Code of Civil Procedure, as said section read at the time of the filing of the pleadings herein, and defendant's cause of action, alleged in the cross-complaint, certainly arises out of said transaction. The negligent destruction of the building by plaintiff would be a bar to any damage or loss he might attempt to create by his own act of negligence, and plaintiff having brought an action to recover damages which has as a basis the destruction or loss of the building which his own negligence caused, the defendant, who is the legal sufferer, is unquestionably authorized by the provisions of section 442, Code of Civil Procedure, to file a cross-complaint.

[4] Furthermore, the acts of negligence relied upon by cross-complainant were violations of the lessee's covenants in the lease to keep said premises in a clean and wholesome condition and reasonably safe from destruction, and to comply faithfully with all ordinances of the city of Los Angeles. The action may well be considered as based upon the lessee's covenant in the lease "to hold the lessor and said premises harmless from any damages of any kind resulting from the misuse or neglect of said premises." In this view, the matter set forth in the pleading denominated a "cross-complaint" to the plaintiff's cause of action arising upon contract, is another cause of action arising upon contract within the meaning of subdivision 2 of section 438, Code of Civil Procedure, as well as under section 442, Code of Civil Procedure.

Glide v. Kayser, 142 Cal. 419, 76 P. 50, and Meyer v. Quiggle, 140 Cal. 495, 74 P. 40, relied upon by plaintiff, in which it was held that claims for monetary damages could not be recovered upon cross-complaint or counterclaim in actions for the recovery of possession of personal property and to quiet title to real property, respectively, for the reason that the relief sought would not affect, modify, or change in any way the decree to which the plaintiff would be entitled, are not controlling here. In those cases two different types of relief were sought. But in the case here before us the prayer of both complaint and cross-complaint is for monetary damages. A money judgment upon a cross-complaint offset against a money judgment necessarily reduces the amount plaintiff may recover by the amount of the judgment upon the cross-complaint.

[5] We do not agree with cross-defendant's contention that the court's finding that the building was totally destroyed by fire as a direct and proximate result of the carelessness and negligence of cross-defendant is unprop-ported by the evidence. Cross-complainant and witnesses who testified on his behalf, both employees and others, stated that plaintiff was accustomed to burn debris from his furniture factory, consisting of shavings, excelsior, sacks, bags, sawdust, and other highly inflammable materials in the lot adjoining the leased premises on the west, and that said combustible materials were also scattered through the building in a disorderly fashion. The testimony of said witnesses indicates that the fire was left unattended, smoldering, and smoking, through all hours of the day and night on frequent occasions. An ordinance of the city of Los Angeles provided that it should be unlawful to burn rubbish, paper, shavings, boxes, or other combustible materials in any lot in the district where the building was located except between the hours of 6 and 9 a. m. Cross-complainant and his witnesses also testified to having observed fire burning briskly in said rubbish pile on the afternoon of December 24, the day before the fire, and on the 23d. Cross-complainant testified that he remonstrated with plaintiff concerning the maintenance of said fire and directed him to extinguish it before leaving the premises on both December 23 and 24 and on other occasions in 1922 and 1923. The witness Trimble stated that he observed fire in the pile on the morning of December 25. Said testimony, accepted by the court as true, will support a conclusion of negligence, and indicates a sufficient degree of probability that the fire destroying the building originated from the fire so negligently maintained on the vacant lot to support a judgment against cross-defendant. Witnesses for cross-defendant gave evidence that the premises were maintained in a condition that would not favor the spread of fire and that the burning rubbish pile was not so maintained as to constitute a fire menace. The court resolved the conflict in cross-complainant's favor. Nor can we accede to the view that cross-complainant had conferred a license upon his lessee to maintain the fire in the adjoining lot.

[6] Plaintiff contends that the judgment for cross-complainant for the full value of the building is excessive for the reason that said cross-complainant, prior to the trial of the action, had collected $13,000 in fire insurance. Assuming, but not deciding, the correctness of this proposition of law, the point was raised for the first time upon the motion for a new trial. It appears from an affidavit filed by one of the attorneys for cross-complainant, in opposition to the motion for a new trial, that prior to the trial of the action plaintiff took the deposition of said defendant and cross-complainant, and that therein defendant stated that he carried insurance on the building and that the insurance companies had adjusted the loss for him. Although plaintiff might upon the trial have compelled cross-complainant to join the insurance companies paying the loss as either cross-complainants or cross-defendants (Fairbanks v. S. F. & N. P. Ry. Co., 115 Cal. 579, 47 P. 450; Offer v. Superior Court, 194 Cal. 114, 228 P. 11), or, perhaps, in the absence of such joinder have limited plaintiff's recovery to the value of the building less the insurance, the pleadings and evidence are absolutely silent on the insurance feature. Having knowledge of the insurance and having failed to bring the matter to the court's attention during the trial in any manner whatsoever, plaintiff and cross-defendant cannot now claim that the trial court committed reversible error in refusing to grant a new trial by reason of the payment of said insurance. Aside from the concrete instance of notice that the building was insured, the common business practice of carrying fire insurance on buildings such as the one described in the evidence should have put plaintiff upon his inquiry as to whether insurance was carried on said building.

[7-9] Petitioner also urges for the first time upon this appeal that it was improper to allow the cross-complainant to recover as damages the full value of the building destroyed for the reason that he was not the owner in fee thereof, but himself only a lessee, plaintiff being a sublessee. The cross-complaint contains an allegation that cross-complainant was the owner of the property. This allegation is nowhere controverted, and hence must be deemed to have been admitted. The court found said admitted allegation to be true. No evidence upon the question of ownership was introduced by either party upon the trial. In view of the admission made by the pleadings, the defendant and cross-complainant was not required to produce such evidence. The only indication that cross-complainant was not the owner is a reference in the lease executed prior in time between the parties, which was introduced in evidence as an exhibit, wherein it is recited that the lessor therein is a lessee, and the lease subject to the terms of the original lease. This intimation is entirely too weak to alter the decision in the case. Although cross-complainant may have been a lessee when he executed the lease in favor of cross-defendant in July, 1922, he may subsequently have acquired ownership in fee. There is no evidence contradicting such a contingency. Furthermore, we can readily conceive of situations where a lessor, himself the lessee of another, would be entitled to recover from his lessee the value of a building destroyed, as, for example, where the sublessor had assumed liability to his lessor for the value of said building.

Appellant, on motion for new trial, offered a number of affidavits tending to show that the fire which destroyed the building started from within, rather than from without. We have examined said affidavits and find them, as doubtless did the trial court, lacking in impressiveness. No abuse of discretion is shown to have existed on the part of the trial court in denying the motion for a new trial.

Judgment affirmed.

CHUN KAM v. MYERS. (Sac. 4312.)★

Supreme Court of California. June 25, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 25, 1929.

Money received — Action for money had and received lies to recover sums wrongfully retained from proceeds of crops raised by plaintiff under share contract.

Action for money had and received will lie to recover sums wrongfully retained by agent for decedent's estate from proceeds of crops raised by plaintiff under contract entitling him to percentage thereof.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by Chun Kam against L. J. Myers. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Rehearing denied; WASTE, C. J., and SHENK, J., voting for a rehearing.

Superseding opinion of District Court of Appeal in 274 P. 377.

W. H. Hatfield and V. L. Hatfield, both of Sacramento, for appellant.

Gaffney & Zagoren, of Sacramento, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. Action for money had and received. Defendant had judgment. Plaintiff appeals. The question presented is whether this cause of action will lie under the facts shown.

Defendant, L. J. Myers, as agent for the estate of L. W. Myers, deceased, made a cropping contract for the years 1924 and 1925 in behalf of said estate, with plaintiff, a Chinese. The estate was operating its farm property under a special order of court. The finances for and from these operations were carried in a special account in the bank upon which defendant alone had the right to check. Under the cropping contract plaintiff was entitled to a percentage of the fruits and vegetables produced. For each of these years he delivered the whole crop to said estate through defendant as agent. The crops were sold and the proceeds deposited in this special account. Defendant was to disburse to plaintiff the portion thereof due him. It appears that for the year 1924 he arbitrarily retained from the amount due plaintiff the sum of $481.90. In the same manner for the year 1925 he retained the sum of $417.37, the aggregate of these sums constituting the amount sued for here.

The evidence shows no justifiable excuse for the retention of said sums. The sole contention upon this appeal is that a cause of action for money had and received will not lie. No claim is made by defendant that said amounts were not on deposit in the said special account; neither is there any claim by him that his liability should be limited in any way.

There is no merit in the contention that a cause of action for money had and received will not lie. Such claim was answered adversely to defendant in the recent case of Irvine v. McGregor (Cal. Sup.) 265 P. 218. Upon authority of that case and the cases upon which it is predicated, the judgment in this cause is reversed.

We concur: CURTIS, J.; RICHARDS, J.; LANGDON, J.; SEAWELL, J.

SHENK, J. I dissent. The action is for money had and received in the usual form. On the facts the action is grounded on the alleged deceit of the defendant in withholding the amount sued for as a portion of the plaintiff's share of the crops of 1924 and 1925, upon the representation that the estate of which the defendant was the agent had expended or incurred said amount as charges properly payable to the California Pear Growers' Association when in truth it is claimed by the plaintiff that the estate was not a member of said association during the years in question. The defendant filed a general demurrer to the complaint and also a special demurrer on the ground of uncertainty, etc., which, after argument thereon, was overruled. The answer was merely a denial of the allegations of the complaint. At the trial the defendant contended first that the wrong form of action had been instituted and, secondly, that, if any one were liable, it was the estate and not the defendant, its known agent. The findings were as brief as the allegations of the complaint and the denials of the answer, merely finding that the allegations of the complaint were not true.

The same contentions made at the trial are now urged on appeal with the further contention on the part of the defendant that on the evidence the findings are supported.

Since the case of Minor v. Baldridge, 123 Cal. 187, 55 P. 783, it has been the law of this state that an action grounded in fraud may be stated in the form of the common count and that the pleading is good as against a general demurrer, but is not sufficient as against a special demurrer. Whether the demurrer in the present case should have been overruled need not be determined. On the trial the plaintiff offered evidence to establish his charge of fraud and deceit. The defendant offered evidence to meet the charge, contending that the amount sued for was represented by legitimate offsets against the plaintiff, including the settlement for a sum in excess of plaintiff's demand of a claim against the estate on the part of the Pear Growers' Association under a contract executed by the decedent with the association whereby the decedent agreed to sell and deliver to the association all Bartlett pears produced or acquired by him during the years 1921 to 1927, inclusive. The findings of the court, necessarily implied, negative the charge of fraud, or deceit on the part of the defendant, and there is evidence to support the express as well as the implied findings.

On the second point, viz., that the suit should have been brought against the estate upon a rejected claim, it appears that the defendant was the agent of the administrator and known by the plaintiff to have been such. It is the general rule that an agent may be liable for his tortious act notwithstanding the principal may also be liable. Perkins v. Blauth, 163 Cal. 782, 127 P. 50; 1 Cal. Jur. 817. But since the court found in favor of the defendant on the fraud charge this rule would not be applicable. In any view of the case I am satisfied that the judgment should be affirmed.

I concur: WASTE, C. J.

99 Cal. App. 645

Ex parte LEACH et al. (Cr. 1816.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California. June 27,
1929.

1. Infants ☞18—Municipal court of Los Angeles held to have exclusive jurisdiction of misdemeanor of contributing to delinquency of minor committed outside city but within county (Const. art. 6, § 5, as amended [see St. 1927, p. 2390]; Const. art. 6, §§ 11, 13; Municipal Court Act 1925; Pen. Code, § 1462; Juvenile Court Law, § 21).

Under Const. art. 6, § 5, as amended (see St. 1927, p. 2390); Const. art. 6, §§ 11, 13; Municipal Court Act 1925 (St. 1925, p. 648); and Pen. Code, § 1462, creating, regulating, and defining jurisdiction of municipal courts, municipal court of the city of Los Angeles had sole right and exclusive jurisdiction to hear information charging offense under Juvenile Court Law, § 21 (St. 1915, p. 1247), defining offense of contributing to delinquency of minor, a misdemeanor, committed outside city of Los Angeles, but in county thereof, and superior court had no jurisdiction to try offense.

2. Infants ☞16—Proceedings under Juvenile Court Law, except for offenses by persons other than wards of court, are not of criminal nature (Juvenile Court Law, § 21 (St. 1915, p. 1247)).

Proceedings under Juvenile Court Law, § 21 (St. 1915, p. 1247), are not of a criminal nature, except those for offenses by persons other than wards of court.

Habeas corpus by Henry Leach and another to secure release of petitioners from custody on the ground of lack of jurisdiction. Petitioners discharged.

Arthur B. Rose, John A. Deweese and Josiah Coombs, all of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

Buron Fitts, Dist. Atty., and Florence M. Woodhead, and B. J. Scheinman, Deputy Dist. Atts., all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

YORK, J. This is an application for a writ of habeas corpus on behalf of petitioners Henry Leach and Forrest Huggins, who were charged by information filed by the district attorney, and were convicted thereon in the superior court of the state of California in and for the county of Los Angeles, juvenile department, and sentenced to imprisonment for the offense of contributing to delinquency, a misdemeanor. The charge was of the character defined under the Juvenile Court Law, § 21 (St. 1915, p. 1247).

[1] In this proceeding, apparently both the petitioners and the parties appearing in opposition to the petition desire the court to pass upon the question as to whether or not the constitutional amendment, section 5, article 6 (see St. 1927, p. 2390), and sections 11 and 13 of article 6 of the Constitution, and the Municipal Court Act of 1925 (St. 1925, p. 648), have entirely taken from the jurisdiction of the superior court and placed in the municipal court the sole right and exclusive jurisdiction to hear informations charging offenses under the Juvenile Court Act, and particularly as to the offense of contributing to delinquency, a misdemeanor.

It is stated, however, by the parties appearing as respondents to the writ of habeas corpus, and is not denied by the petitioners, that the offense charged was not committed in the city of Los Angeles, but committed outside the said city, in the county. In fact, the petition does not allege that this act was committed in the city of Los Angeles, or that it was charged that the act was committed within the city of Los Angeles. Therefore the matter will be determined upon the hypothesis that the offense charged in the information was charged as having taking place outside of the city of Los Angeles and in the county of Los Angeles.

The Constitution (article 6, § 11, as amended November 4, 1924, provides that "municipal courts shall have original jurisdiction, except as hereinafter provided, * * * in all criminal cases amounting to misdemeanor punishable by fine and imprisonment in the city or city and county or county jail, or punishable by fine or such imprisonment. * * * The legislature shall provide by general law for the constitution, regulation, government and procedure of municipal courts, and for the jurisdiction thereof, except in the particulars otherwise specified in this section. * * * " The Constitution further provides (article 6, § 13, as amended in November, 1925): "Notwithstanding any provision contained in this article, the legislature may fix by law the jurisdiction of municipal courts and inferior courts in cities having municipal courts which may be established in pursuance of this article, and may fix by law the powers, duties, qualifications and responsibilities of judges thereof. Any action heretofore taken by the legislature in fixing exclusive jurisdiction of municipal courts in cases at law is hereby ratified and confirmed." See St. 1927, p. 2391.

The Municipal Court Act, § 4, as amended in 1925, provides: "In each city or city and county, in which a municipal court is established as herein provided, there shall be no other court inferior to the superior court unless it be a court having jurisdiction in cases in which the claim or demand is fifty dollars or less. Upon the establishment of a municipal court as herein provided all existing inferior courts, except as above provided, in the city or city and county wherein such municipal court is established and in a township situated wholly within such city or city and county, shall be superseded by the municipal court. * * * " St. 1925, pp. 648, 650.

Section 28 provides: "Each municipal court shall have original jurisdiction in all criminal cases amounting to misdemeanor, punishable by fine or imprisonment in the city or city and county, or county jail, or punishable by fine or such imprisonment where the offense charged was committed within the county in which the municipal court is established." St. 1925, pp. 648, 658.

The new section of the Penal Code, § 1462, adopted in 1925 (St. 1925, p. 948), provides: "Jurisdiction of Municipal Courts in Misdemeanor Cases. Whenever a municipal court shall have been established, as provided by law, such court shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all misdemeanors punishable by fine or by imprisonment, or by both such fine and imprisonment, committed in the city, or city and county where such municipal court is held; and of all proceedings for violation of any ordinance of said city, both civil and criminal, and of all actions for the collection of any license required by any ordinance of said city or city and county. In all cases in which the said municipal court has jurisdiction, it shall have the power to try and determine the same, convict or acquit, pass and enter judgment and carry such judgment into execution, as the case may require, according to law. In each city wherein a municipal court shall have been established, such courts shall also have jurisdiction over any misdemeanor committed in the county in which such city is located."

It will be noted that the last paragraph of this section specifically provides that, in each city where a municipal court shall have been established, such courts shall have jurisdiction over any misdemeanor committed in the county, while in the first part of said section it is provided that, wherever a municipal court is established, as provided by law, such court shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all misdemeanors punishable by fine or by imprisonment, or by both such fine and imprisonment, committed in the city, or in the city and county, where such municipal court is held.

By the use of the term "exclusive" in the first paragraph of this section, and by the use of the words "shall also have jurisdiction over any misdemeanor committed in the county," etc., it is apparent that such section intends to give to the municipal court jurisdiction as to any misdemeanor committed in the county, concurrent with the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, or other inferior courts, when the particular misdemeanor is one within their various jurisdictions; but it does not necessarily follow that a concurrent jurisdiction is retained in the superior court. In re Luna, 201 Cal. 405, 257 P. 76, the Supreme Court held, in effect, that the superior court of Los Angeles county, since the creation of the municipal court, had no jurisdiction whatever over any misdemeanor.

[2] We do not share the fears of counsel for respondents that the plan and purpose of the Juvenile Court Law will be frustrated or impeded by an interpretation of the law whereby the municipal court, in any county wherein such court exists, is given exclusive jurisdiction over misdemeanors committed in violation of section 21 of the Juvenile Court Law. Proceedings under that law (except those which constitute offenses by persons other than the wards of the court) are not of a criminal nature. Matter of Damon Edwards (Cal. App.) 278 P. 910, and cases there cited. It is our opinion that the jurisdiction and powers of the juvenile court, aside from prosecutions under said section 21, are not involved in this decision.

The petitioners, Leach and Huggins, are discharged from custody.

HOUGLAND et al. v. ROTH BLUM PACKING CO. (Civ. 3809.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 26, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 26, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 22, 1929.

1. Sales ⇨81(2)—Where contract for purchase of sheep was silent regarding time of performance, law writes in reasonable time (Civ. Code, § 1657).

Where contract for purchase of sheep was silent as to time of performance, law writes into contract reasonable time for performance under Civ. Code, § 1657, providing that, if no time is specified for performance of an act required to be performed, a reasonable time is allowed.

2. Sales ⇨81(2)—In determining reasonable time for delivery of wethers sold, court should consider condition at time of contract and time usually required to fatten them and make delivery (Civ. Code, § 1657).

In determining what was reasonable time under Civ. Code, § 1657, for delivery of wethers contracted for, where no time for delivery was specified in purchase contract, court should consider their condition on date of sales contract and time ordinarily and usually required to enable sellers to fatten wethers and make delivery, and also kind of feed and care usually given to sheep in locality where contract was entered into.

3. Sales ⇨81(2) — Where purchase contract was silent regarding sellers' duties, law writes into contract obligation to take customary means to fatten sheep within reasonable time and tender delivery.

Where contract for purchase of sheep was silent as to any duties being imposed on sellers, law writes into contract obligation on part of sellers to take reasonable and customary means and methods to fatten sheep within reasonable time and tender delivery thereof to buyer.

4. Sales ⇨87(3)—Where purchase contract was made February 3, evidence did not show parties contemplated delivery of sheep March 15.

Where contract for purchase of sheep, not specifying time for delivery, was made February 3, 1925, evidence in action for breach of contract did not show that date of March 15, 1925, was contemplated by parties as time when performance should have been completed, and court properly rejected buyer's contention to that effect.

5. Sales ⇨81(2)—Reasonable time for delivery of sheep purchased was reasonable time necessary to fatten sheep and have them ready for market (Civ. Code, § 1657).

Reasonable time under Civ. Code, § 1657, for delivery of sheep under purchase contract not specifying time for performance, was reasonable time necessary to fatten sheep and have them ready for market, irrespective of fact that spring lambs usually came upon market on certain date.

6. Appeal and error ⇨1170(3)—Overruling demurrer to complaint not alleging performance of contract by plaintiff held not prejudicial, where issues were tried out as though allegations were contained in complaint (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

In action for breach of contract to purchase sheep, court's overruling demurrer to complaint not alleging performance on part of plaintiff held not prejudicial error under Const. art. 6, § 4½, where questions at issue were as fully tried out as though complaint had contained such allegations.

7. Sales ⇨384(7)—Where sheep refused by buyer were sold at auction within reasonable time, sellers were entitled to difference between price obtained and contract price (Civ. Code, §§ 3049, 3311, subd. 1).

Under Civ. Code, §§ 3049, 3311, subd. 1, where buyer refused to accept sheep when tendered and sellers resold sheep at auction within reasonable time, sellers were entitled to judgment against buyer equal to difference in price obtained and price contracted to be paid.

8. Sales ⇨383—Evidence did not show seller failed to exercise reasonable diligence in reselling sheep refused by buyer.

In action for breach of contract to purchase sheep, evidence held not to show that seller failed to exercise reasonable diligence to resell sheep so as to require reduction of his damages.

Appeal from Superior Court, Colusa County; Ernest Weyand, Judge.

Action for damages for breach of a contract to purchase sheep, by G. W. Hougland and another, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of the Valley Sheep Company, against the Roth Blum Packing Company, in which defendant filed a cross-complaint. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Leon E. Morris, of San Francisco, Atran & Sheets, of Colusa, and Barnett Sumski, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Alva A. King and Rutledge & Rutledge, all of Colusa, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. The plaintiffs had judgment in the sum of $3,531.76 for and on account of the alleged failure of the defendant to fulfill its contract for the purchase of certain sheep.

It appears from the record that on or about the 3d day of February, 1925, the plaintiffs and the defendant entered into a contract for the sale and purchase of sheep, which contract is in the following words and figures: "This is to certify that Valley Sheep Co. of Colusa, have this 3d day of Feb., 1925, bargained and sold to Roth Blum Packing Co. or order, the following described livestock, and do hereby guarantee the title thereto, viz.: 1,550 yearling wethers to receive as they get fat, price per pound 14 cents. Shrink drive of 9 miles. Delivery f. o. b. cars Colusa, take off the deposit of $1.00 per head as delivered. Stock guaranteed to be fat and free from all disease. All cattle and sheep bought subject to Federal or State inspection. Received in part payment for above mentioned stock $1,500." Said contract was made in duplicate, each party subscribing separate copies.

In pursuance of this contract it appears that on or about February 17, 1925, 126 head of the sheep referred to were delivered by the plaintiff to the defendant, accepted by the defendant, and paid for; that thereafter, and on or about the 18th of March, 1925, an additional delivery was made of said sheep to the number of 168 head; these deliveries were accepted and paid for by the defendant according to the contract price, an allowance being made of the sum of $300 on account of the $1,500 deposit made by the defendant to the plaintiff at the time of the entry into the contract, leaving a balance in the hands of the plaintiffs on account of the original deposit in the sum of $1,200; thereafter, and on April 28, 1925, the plaintiffs notified the defendant that they were ready to deliver approximately 500 head more of said sheep; the defendant rejected the tender of said sheep, refusing to accept or pay therefor; on or about June 1, 1925, the plaintiffs tendered all of the balance of the wethers of said band of sheep; acceptance was refused by the defendant, and thereafter, and on or about the 14th day of July, 1925, the plaintiffs sold said sheep at auction, crediting the defendant with receipts of such sale, and also crediting the defendant with the value of the wool that had been sheared from the said band of sheep. No controversy is made over the value of the wool, the only question being as to whether tender of said sheep was made according to the terms of the contract. At the time of the last tender made by the plaintiffs to the defendant, the defendant, by its attorney, wrote to the plaintiffs as follows: (1) That performance was not made within the time contemplated by the parties or within the usual time for the fattening of sheep in your territory. (2) That the wethers were not fat and in a deliverable condition within the time contemplated by the parties. (3) That the said wethers are not now in a deliverable condition for the following reasons: (a) That the said wethers are not now fat; (b) that the said wethers are now shorn of their wool, which is contrary to the custom in these transactions, also to the understanding of the parties. (4) That by your conduct in shearing said wethers, you have put them in a condition which makes it impossible for you to perform according to the terms of the contract and the understanding of the parties. (5) That the defendant elects to treat your conduct in shearing the wethers as a repudiation of your obligations under the contract. (6) That the sale by you of said wool is taken by the defendant as a repudiation of your obligations under the contract.

(We have not followed the exact wording of these objections but have given their substance.) As stated above, no objection is urged on account of the shearing and sale of the wool, it being practically conceded that it was necessary to shear the sheep and sell the wool, and that the wool was sold for the best market price obtainable.

[1-4] The contract in this case is silent as to time of performance, and under such circumstances section 1657 of the Civil Code is controlling. That section reads, so far as applicable here, as follows: "If no time is specified for the performance of an act required to be performed, a reasonable time is allowed." This portion of the section was taken up and considered in 6 Cal. Juris, pp. 346 and 347, and the authorities there cited, showing that under a contract such as the one we are here considering, the law writes into it the idea of a reasonable time for performance. This reasonable time takes into consideration the condition of the objects or merchandise with which the parties are dealing. It also admits the testimony as to what is a reasonable time for deliverance, taking into consideration the subject of the contract and the condition of the merchandise for the sale and delivery of which the contract is made. In other words, this contract being silent as to time of performance, the law writes into it terms which require a reasonable performance, having in view the subject of the contract and the place and condition of the objects concerning which the contract was made. Thus, in determining what was a reasonable time for the delivery of the wethers constituting the subject of the contract between the parties to this action, a court would take into consideration their condition on the 3d day of February, 1925, and the time ordinarily and usually required to enable the plaintiffs to fatten the wethers and make delivery. The court would also take into consideration the kind of feed and care usually given to sheep in the locality where the contract was entered into. While the contract is silent as to any duties being imposed upon the sellers, the law would write into the contract the obligation on the part of the sellers to take the reasonable and customary means and methods to fatten the sheep within a reasonable time, and tender delivery thereof to the defendant. These principles are all supported by the authorities cited in 6 Cal. Juris. et seq., and need not be further stated herein. On the part of the appellant it is insisted that it was the understanding of the parties, at the time of entering into the contract, on February 3, 1925, that the wethers would be ready for delivery by March 15, 1925. This argument is based upon the fact that spring lambs are usually coming upon the market about March 15, or very shortly thereafter, and that when spring lambs come into the market, prices usually decline. This contention, however, is not supported by anything in the record, other than the fact that we have stated, that when spring lambs are placed upon the market, prices usually decline. There is no testimony in the record upon which any such understanding can reasonably be predicated. The record shows that R. T. Carey, the agent of the defendant, inspected the sheep, the subject of the contract being considered, on or about February 3, 1925, and after inspecting the sheep, wrote out the contract. The testimony of this witness is to the effect that it would require from 60 to 70 days to fatten the sheep after the date of the contract. The record further shows that a second delivery of sheep was made and accepted on March 17, 1925. The testimony of the agent of the defendant being as we have just stated, the trial court, outside of the testimony of other witnesses who testified to the same effect, was justified in rejecting the contention of the appellants that the date of March 15 was contemplated by the parties as the time when performance should have been completed.

[5] The whole question as to what was a reasonable time was for the trial court to determine under the testimony submitted to it to establish what was a reasonable time. So far as the appellants were concerned, they seem to have relied simply upon the testimony as to when spring lambs would come upon the market, and that the reasonable time for the delivery of the sheep contracted for would be before the spring lambs were ready for market. This reasoning, of course, is untenable. The reasonable time, as applied to this contract and as applied to the sheep purchased, would be a reasonable time necessary to fatten the sheep constituting the subject of the contract, and have them ready for market, irrespective of spring lambs. The condition of the sheep purchased was known to the defendant on March 3, 1925. The manner of feeding sheep in that locality appears also to have been known. That the defendant may have desired delivery of the sheep before spring lambs came upon the market is an entirely different question. That subject is not in the contract.

So far as there is any testimony in the record on the subject, it is to the effect that the sheep covered by the contract were well fed and kept upon the best possible feed in the locality where the sheep were accustomed to range. Witnesses who were familiar with the range where the sheep were kept testified that it was a good range; that the feed consisted of burr clover, alfalfa, and other wild grass. The testimony of Mr. McCall, a witness called for the plaintiff, was to the effect that the sheep were at all times kept on good feed; that in the latter part of April, from 80 to 90 per cent. of the sheep were getting marketable, and on June 1, at least 95 per cent. were fit for market. The court in its findings found as follows: That cross-defendants (meaning plaintiffs) did not fail or neglect or refuse to fatten said wethers or deliver the same to cross-complainant (meaning defendant) as provided in said contract. To explain the terms used in this finding we may here state that the defendant filed a cross-complaint seeking recovery of $1,200, the balance of the $1,500 paid to the plaintiffs on the date of the execution of the contract. This cross-complaint specifically set forth that the plaintiffs, being the cross-defendants named in the cross-complaint, had not fattened the sheep according to contract. The appellant introduced the testimony of a few witnesses to the effect that it was their understanding, when wethers were purchased at about the time of the execution of the contract in controversy, they would expect delivery to be made of the sheep prior to the time when spring lambs would come upon the market, but this, however, as we have stated, does not controvert the finding of the trial court that the plaintiff did what was necessary to fatten the sheep within the time specified in the contract, which we have said, necessarily must mean within a reasonable time. We understand that there was some testimony to the effect that a somewhat longer time would be necessary than that stated by the witness Carey, that green feed was necessary to fatten the sheep, and that they would not fatten upon dry feed.

[6] We will now consider the appellant's contention that its demurrer to the plaintiffs' complaint should have been sustained. The complaint, it is true, does not allege that the plaintiffs complied with their terms of the contract, nor does it allege that the plaintiffs tendered delivery within a reasonable time. These are necessary matters to appear in the case, and should be alleged and proved. This failure of the complaint to contain allegations as to performance on the part of the plaintiffs was raised by the defendant's demurrer, and the defendant's demurrer should have been sustained with leave to the plaintiffs to amend. This, however, does not necessitate a reversal of the judgment. The question as to whether the sheep were kept upon proper feed; as to whether the plaintiffs neglected to fatten the sheep, etc., as we have just stated; and what the plaintiffs did with the sheep; and the time when they were fattened and tendered—were issues which were tried out as fully and completely as though the allegations to which we have referred had been contained in the plaintiffs' complaint. Under such circumstances the error of the court in failing to sustain the defendant's demurrer is cured by section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, where it is specified that error as to a matter of pleading is not reversible unless it has led to a miscarriage of justice.

As the questions at issue were as fully tried out as though the complaint had contained the allegations mentioned, we do not well perceive how the lack of the allegations in any manner resulted in prejudice to the defendant. While the trial court does not, in as clear and precise terms as might be desired, find that the plaintiffs complied with their terms of the contract, such fact is included within the language used, because if the plaintiffs did not fail or refuse or neglect to fatten the sheep and to deliver the same as provided in the contract, they necessarily must have fattened and tendered delivery of the sheep according to the terms of the contract, which would mean within a reasonable time after the date of the execution of the contract.

We do not deem it necessary to review the authorities cited by the appellant as to the manner in which a contract, in which time of performance is unmentioned, should be construed; for the reason that we find that all the authorities cited sustain just what we have stated herein, that the law writes into such a contract the requirement of performance within a reasonable time, but that reasonable time is to be determined by the court in view of the condition of the property at the time of entering into the contract and what is necessary to be done to place the article contracted for in condition fit for delivery. There is nothing in the record to show that such reasonable time should be limited to a period preceding the date when spring lambs should come upon the market. If such had been the contemplation of the buyer, the insertion of such a term in the contract would have been a matter of but little effort. It is not there, as we have said, and the court is not limited by such testimony in the determination of what is a reasonable time to comply with the terms of the contract in this case, even though the court should take into consideration all the conditions and customs of the trade. The sheep in this case were inspected by the buyer, and the defendant had knowledge of what would be required to place them in condition for the market.

[7] It is next contended on the part of the appellant that the damages allowed were and are excessive. In this case section 3049 of the Civil Code governs. The property was resold at auction, and if sold within a reasonable time, the plaintiffs were entitled to judgment against the defendant equal to the difference in the price obtained therefor and the price contracted to be paid. Section 3311 of the Civil Code, in subdivision 1 refers to section 3049, and specifies the amount which the seller is entitled to recover, which is as we have stated above.

[8] It is further contended that the plaintiffs failed and neglected to make sale of the sheep within a reasonable time, and in this behalf attention is called to the testimony of the plaintiffs that they made no effort to sell until the property was sold at public auction, and that some little time elapsed in giving notice of the public sale. Whether this delay did or did not result in prejudice to the appellant does not appear. The testimony set out in appellant's brief in support of this claim is not correctly apprehended, as appears from the following taken from the transcript:

"Q. Do you know, as a matter of fact, what market prices are around July 4th? A. Around 8 cents.

"Q. And these lambs brought around how much in July? A. $7\frac{1}{2}$ cents."

This testimony is relied upon by appellant to support its contention that the price declined from 8 cents to $7\frac{1}{2}$ cents at the particular time when the lambs mentioned in the contract were being disposed of. In making this argument the word "prices" is changed to the word "price," and the word "are" is changed to the word "was." This inadvertent change in the testimony undoubtedly led to the incorrect conclusion advanced by appellant. A reading of the testimony shows that it was a general question and a general inquiry as to the fact that the price of lambs ordinarily declined at that season of the year. This appears from the question and answer preceding what we have stated, to wit:

"Q. Is there anything in the general trend of prices, or can you point to the trend of prices in any year in which the lamb market goes up from June to July? A. I don't know of any particular year but the market seems to be at the bottom a lot of times, a falling market, and it finally comes back a little. After the scare is over people holding that stuff will push it on the market."

The law is well settled that if the seller fails to exercise reasonable diligence, the price he might have obtained may be shown to reduce his damages. 8 Cal. Jur. pp. 786, 787. There is no such showing in this case, and therefore the matters advanced by appellant are purely matters of speculation. It is likewise argued by appellant that, during the time taken by the plaintiff to make resale of the lambs, they increased in weight. Whether this is true or not true does not appear from the testimony. There is some testimony to the effect that between the date of sale and the date when the lambs were weighed there was practically no increase in weight. By reason of the fact that the defendant failed to accept delivery of the lambs at the time when they were ready for delivery, and as found by the trial court, any slight changes in the weight of the sheep would be due to the failure and refusal of the defendant to fulfill its contract, and unless such change was shown to be due to the neglect and failure of the sellers, so as to materially affect the rights of the defaulting buyer, we do not think that the conclusion of the trial court should be reversed.

In addition to the finding of the trial court which we have particularly pointed out, the court also found that all the allegations of the plaintiffs' complaint are true and correct.

While this form of making findings has been upheld, it cannot be approved as the best method of aiding an appellate court when called upon to review questions decided in the court below.

It follows from what we have said that the trial court was correct in denying the defendant any relief by reason of its cross-complaint.

The judgment is affirmed.

WM. J. BETTINGEN LUMBER CO. v. KERRIN et al. (Civ. 6722.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 2, 1929.

1. Mechanics' liens $\Rightarrow$ 246, 304(1)—Lien proceeding is not exclusive, and materialman may bring personal action, or in lien proceeding recover personal judgment and maintain attachment against purchaser (Code Civ. Proc. § 1197).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1197, right to mechanic's lien is not exclusive remedy, but personal action against one purchasing materials for erection of a building may be maintained without reference to such right, or, in action to foreclose the lien, purchaser may be joined as a defendant and a personal judgment recovered against him, and trial court erred in dissolving attachment in action to foreclose mechanic's lien on ground that remedy by attachment was not available therein.

2. Mechanics' liens $\Rightarrow$ 304(1)—Complaint, alleging defendant purchased material and agreed to pay its reasonable value stated, held sufficient to authorize personal judgment.

In materialman's action to foreclose mechanic's lien, complaint alleging that material was purchased by defendant who agreed to pay its reasonable value, which was alleged, and praying judgment against defendant for that sum, held sufficient statement of facts to warrant personal judgment against defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge.

Action by the Wm. J. Bettingen Lumber Company against Gerald E. Kerrin and others to foreclose a mechanic's lien. From an order dissolving an attachment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Carter & Webster, of Pasadena, for appellant.

Harry M. Ticknor and Roland Maxwell, both of Pasadena, Robt. J. Gardner, of Los Angeles, and Hahn & Hahn, of Pasadena, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The above action was brought by plaintiff corporation to foreclose a mechanic's lien upon certain real property of which Gerald E. and Ethel V. Kerrin are the alleged owners, and to recover a personal judgment against Gerald E. Kerrin, who will be hereinafter referred to as the defendant.

The complaint alleged that the defendant, prior to April 15, 1926, began the erection of a dwelling house and garage upon the property, and that between June 29, 1926, and December 14, 1926, the plaintiff sold to him certain building material to be used and which was used in the construction of the buildings mentioned; that the defendant promised to pay the reasonable value thereof, which was $1,637.56; and that of this amount $729.87, and no more, had been paid. The complaint contained further allegations to the effect that a claim of lien for the amount unpaid was filed in accordance with the statute, and that the property was necessary for the convenient use and occupation of the buildings for the erection of which the materials were furnished. Other defendants, who were alleged to have or claim an interest in the property, were joined, and the complaint concluded with the following prayer:

"Wherefore, plaintiff prays judgment against the defendant Gerald E. Kerrin for the sum of nine hundred seven and 69/100 dollars, and the cost of recording and verifying said claim of lien, to-wit: the sum of $1.40, together with interest on said sums at the rate of seven per cent per annum from November 22nd, 1926, the date of recordation of said claim of lien, and for costs of this action; and that said sums be adjudged a lien upon the real property and said buildings thereon hereinbefore described, and upon the interest or interests of defendants and each and all of them therein.

"That the said lands and premises and appurtenances thereunto belonging be adjudged and decreed to be sold by the sheriff of Los Angeles county according to law and the practice of this court, and that the proceeds of said sale be applied as follows: To the payment of costs of sale and any judgment that may be recovered by plaintiff herein, including the cost of verifying and recording said claim of lien as aforesaid; and that it may have execution against said defendant Gerald E. Kerrin for any and all deficiency which may remain after applying all the proceeds of said sale properly applicable to the satisfaction of said judgment.

"That plaintiff may be a purchaser at such sale, and that the sheriff execute a deed to the purchaser, and said purchaser be let into possession of said premises on production of the sheriff's deed therefor; and for such other and further relief as to this court may seem meet and proper."

The plaintiff, following the filing of its complaint, filed an undertaking on attachment, with an affidavit in the usual form, alleging the defendant to be indebted upon the contract as stated in the complaint, and on February 17, 1927, the clerk of the court caused to be issued a writ of attachment directed to the sheriff of Los Angeles county. Pursuant thereto and according to instructions, this officer levied upon the right, title, and interest of said defendant in several parcels of real property situated in that county other than that upon which the mechanic's lien was filed. Subsequently the defendant and Ethel V. Kerrin, upon notice to the plaintiff, moved to dissolve the attachment upon the ground stated in the notice, namely, "that said motion will be made upon the ground that said action is an action solely for the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien and the relief incidental thereto, and constitutes an election to pursue the remedies incidental thereto, to the exclusion of those which might be available in a personal action, and by reason of the said facts the remedy of attachment is not available therein." After a hearing the motion was granted, and from the order the plaintiff appealed, claiming that the attachment was properly issued and its dissolution erroneous.

[1] Section 1197 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides as follows: "Nothing contained in this chapter shall be construed to impair or affect the right of any person to whom any debt may be due for work done or materials furnished to maintain a personal action to recover said debt against the person liable therefor; and the person bringing such personal action may take out an attachment therefor, notwithstanding his lien, and in his affidavit to procure an attachment need not state that his demand is not secured by a lien; but the judgment, if any, obtained by the plaintiff in such personal action shall not be construed to impair or merge any lien held by said plaintiff under this chapter; provided, only, that any money collected on said judgment shall be credited on the amount of such lien in any action brought to enforce the same, in accordance with the provisions of this chapter."

Under this section the right to a lien is not the exclusive remedy. A personal action against the person who purchased materials furnished for the erection of a building may be maintained without reference to such right, or, in an action to foreclose the lien the purchaser may be joined as a defendant and a personal judgment recovered against him (Fresno Planing Mill Co. v. Manning, 20 Cal. App. 766, 130 P. 196), whether he be the contractor (Giant Powder Co. v. San Diego Flume Co., 78 Cal. 193, 20 P. 419) or the owner (Faucett v. Riveroll [Cal. Sup.] 264 P. 1098). Prior to the adoption of the section it was the rule, as held in Brennan v. Swasey, 16 Cal. 140, 76 Am. Dec. 507, that one having secured a mechanic's lien under the statute did not forfeit or waive it by causing an attachment to be issued and levied upon the property belonging to the debtor to secure the same demand. The court in that case also declared that the two remedies were cumulative and might be pursued at the same time.

Reference was made to the above case in Martin v. Becker, 169 Cal. 301, 146 P. 665, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 171, wherein the court said: "* * * It has been held that the right to enforce a mechanic's lien was not lost by reason of the fact that the plaintiff, by levying an attachment upon other property, thereby obtained additional security." Moreover, in Brennan v. Swasey, supra, it was intimated that in case of an attempt to pursue the two remedies by separate actions the party might be put to an election; and it was with reference to expressions in that opinion that the court in Hickman v. Freiermuth, 21 Cal. App. 629, 635, 132 P. 772, 775, said: "It was probably in view of this tentative suggestion that said section 1197 was afterward enacted." We think, as was suggested in the case last cited, that it was the purpose of the enactment to remove any doubt which the opinion in Brennan v. Swasey might have created respecting the right to pursue the above remedies in separate actions without being put to an election, and not to compel that course to be followed by abrogating a rule previously recognized by law. This rule has been followed in other jurisdictions where, as in California (1 Cal. Jur., Actions, § 39, p. 358), both legal and equitable relief may be granted in the same action. The case of Hatcher v. Hendrie, etc., Co. (C. C. A.) 133 F. 267, 271, was commenced in the courts of Colorado and subsequently removed to the federal court. The original action was one to enforce a mechanic's lien and also to recover the contractual debt which it secured. The laws of Colorado expressly authorized attachments in actions on contract, and the statute providing for the enforcement of mechanics' liens declared that "No remedy given in this act shall be construed as preventing any person from enforcing any other remedy which he otherwise would have had, except as otherwise herein provided." Mills' Ann. St. Colo. 1891, § 2897. In sustaining the right to pursue both remedies in the same action, the court said: "The rule is general, in the absence of some provision to the contrary, that the remedy upon a mechanic's lien and the remedy upon the debt are distinct and concurrent, and may be pursued at the same time or in succession. [West v. Flemming, 18 Ill. 248, 66 Am. Dec. 539; Marean v. Stanley, 5 Colo. App. 335, 38 P. 395; Phillips, Mechanics' Liens (3d Ed.) § 311.] * * * In the courts of those states where the prescribed procedure, like that in Colorado (Mills' Annotated Code, §§ 1, 70), permits a blending together of proceedings at law and in equity, both remedies * * * may be pursued in the same action."

It frequently happens that the property subject to liens proves to be insufficient to satisfy the claims filed, and the remedy by foreclosure being only ancillary to the main cause of action, which is the debt itself, no reason appears why, as against an owner personally liable, a claimant in an action to foreclose his lien should not be permitted to obtain by attachment additional security for the payment of a possible deficiency.

[2] It is claimed by the defendant that while the complaint states a cause of action for the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien, the allegations are insufficient to constitute a cause of action upon a personal obligation to pay the value of the materials, and that the remedy by attachment was, consequently, not available in this instance. There is no merit in this contention, as the complaint alleges that the material used and to be used was purchased by the defendant, who agreed to pay its reasonable value, which is alleged, and the complaint prays judgment against the defendant for that sum. This was a sufficient statement of facts to warrant the entry of a personal judgment against the defendant Faucett v. Riveroll, supra.

The record discloses nothing which, in our opinion, justified a dissolution of the attachment, and the order appealed from is accordingly reversed.

(Civ. 6759.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 22, 1929.

Rehearing Granted July 19, 1929.

1. Vendor and purchaser ⇨194—Grape crop grown by vendee held "fructus industriales," and vendor's interest therein after declaring forfeiture depended on land contract provisions.

Crop of grapes grown by vendee of land held "fructus industriales," and vendor's interest therein on his election to terminate and forfeit vendee's rights under land contract, and who was not in possession until after crops were marketed, depended on provisions of land contract.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⇨194—As respects crops, vendee in default continuing in possession after vendor declared forfeiture was "adverse claimant."

As respects crops, purchaser in default under executory contract for purchase of realty, who continued in possession after vendor elected to terminate contract and declared forfeiture of vendee's rights thereunder, became "adverse claimant," and all privity between him and vendor ceased.

3. Receivers ⇨21—Vendor and purchaser ⇨194—Vendor declaring forfeiture and suing to foreclose vendee's rights held not entitled to crop nor to receiver.

Vendor of land, who after purchaser's default elected to declare forfeiture of purchaser's rights under contract, notwithstanding which purchaser remained in possession, could not thereafter assert any right to crop which rested on provisions of the contract, and in his action to foreclose vendee's rights no receiver could be appointed; vendor's remedy consisting in recovery of mesne profits.

4. Chattel mortgages ⇨227—Vendor receiving proceeds from sale of crops by receiver held required to account to crop mortgagee for latter's share.

Where vendor elected to declare forfeiture for vendee's default and sued to foreclose vendee's rights under land contract and for possession of land, he received proceeds from receiver's sale of crops subject to lien of crop mortgage on vendee's half interest in crops to which crop mortgagee was in equity and good conscience entitled, and which mortgagee could therefore recover.

5. Chattel mortgages ⇨227—As respects right to proceeds lien of crop mortgage was not extinguished by removal of crop and sale thereof by receiver.

As respects right to proceeds of crops, where receiver appointed in vendor's action to foreclose vendee's rights under land contract sold crops and paid net proceeds to vendor, held, that no reasonable ground could exist for claim that vendee's crop mortgagee consented to receiver's acts, and vendor's contention that crop mortgage lien was prima facie extinguished by removal of crop could not therefore be sustained.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Charles R. Barnard, Judge.

Action by Serop Yakobian against H. G. Johnson and others. From the judgment, named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Sherwood Green, of Berkeley, and W. E. Simpson, of Fresno, for appellant.

Gallaher & Jertberg and K. Kuyumjian, all of Fresno, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. An appeal by defendant H. G. Johnson from a judgment in the sum of $2,616.16 recovered against him by plaintiff, Serop Yakobian.

Plaintiff's complaint stated two causes of action. In the first count it was alleged that the defendant converted to his own use certain crops of grapes on which the plaintiff held a crop mortgage securing the payment of a note in the sum of $2,500. The second count was for money had and received for the use and benefit of the plaintiff.

The facts were as follows: Some time previous to the year 1924, defendant agreed in writing to sell the land on which the crops were grown to one Papazian, reserving one-half of the crops to be produced thereon as security for the payment of installments of the balance of the purchase price. Subsequently, on January 4, 1924, Papazian mortgaged to the plaintiff one-half of the crops to be produced during the years 1924 and 1925 to secure payment of the note mentioned which by its terms was payable with interest on or before October 1, 1924. During the crop season of 1924 Papazian sold a portion of the crops and received therefor amounts aggregating the sum of $1,713.67. Thereafter he defaulted in the performance of his contract with the defendant. On September 4, 1924, the latter instituted an action to terminate the vendee's rights thereunder and for the possession of the land. Judgment in the action was entered on March 7, 1925, following which defendant went into possession. Upon the filing of that action the court on the application of defendant Johnson appointed a receiver, who took possession of the crops growing on the property. He proceeded to market the same, and received therefor a total of $4,411.64. After deducting the expenses incurred in marketing the crops and his own fees, he paid the sum of $600.85 to defendant Johnson, and expended for the latter's benefit the following: $81.65 for insurance on the buildings on the property; $368.21 for taxes; and $2,280 in payment of the principal and interest of a mortgage executed upon the land by the defendant—the total amount received by the latter directly or indirectly being $3,330.71.

The court entered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $2,616.66, the amount of the chattel mortgage and accrued interest, from which the appeal was taken.

[1-3] Following the execution of his contract with the defendant, the vendee went into possession and, so far as appears from the record, so remained until the entry in 1925 of the judgment terminating his rights. The crops in controversy, which were fructus industriales (Vulicevich v. Skinner, 77 Cal. 239, 19 P. 424; Hovsepan v. Eskender, 69 Cal. App. 379, 231 P. 364), were not in existence when the contract was executed, and the interest of the vendor therein, who was not in possession until after the same were marketed, arose from and depended upon the provisions of the contract. Upon his election to terminate and declare forfeited the rights of the vendee thereunder the latter, notwithstanding, remained in possession, and thereupon became an adverse claimant, and all privity between him and the vendor ceased. Cal. Delta Farms, Inc., v. Chinese, etc., Farms, Inc. (Cal. Sup.) 269 P. 443; Hovsepan v. Eskender, supra. Thereafter the vendor could assert no right to the crop, which rested upon the provisions of the contract (Glassell v. Coleman, 94 Cal. 260, 29 P. 508; Dishian v. Kishishian, 64 Cal. App. 440, 221 P. 669; Hovsepan v. Eskender, supra); and in his action to foreclose the vendee's rights no receiver could legally be appointed (Cal. Delta Farms, Inc., v. Chinese, etc., Farms, Inc., supra), his remedy consisting in the recovery of the mesne profits (Johnston v. Fish, 105 Cal. 420, 38 P. 979, 45 Am. St. Rep. 53; Rector v. Lewis, 46 Cal. App. 168, 188 P. 1018; note 39, A. L. R. 971).

[4] Appellant contends that the receiver was not his agent, but an officer of the court for whose acts he was not responsible. However this may be, appellant received the proceeds from crops subject to the lien of plaintiff's mortgage, to which the latter in equity and good conscience was entitled. Under such circumstances the money may be recovered. Gray v. Huffaker, 176 Cal. 516, 169 P. 1038; Fontaine v. Lacassie, 36 Cal. App. 175, 171 P. 812. Moreover, the receiver held the property subject to the lien of the mortgage (Von Roun v. Superior Court of San Francisco, 58 Cal. 358; Bories v. Union Building & Loan Assn., 141 Cal. 74, 74 P. 552), and the proceeds having been applied to the benefit of the defendant he was to the amount of the mortgage obligated to repay the same to the plaintiff (Crosby v. Fresno Fruit Growers' Co., 30 Cal. App. 308, 158 P. 1070).

[5] Appellant further contends that the lien of the mortgage was prima facie extinguished by the removal of the crop, and that in order to recover it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to show that the removal was tortious, citing Ramsey v. Cal. Packing Corporation, 51 Cal. App. 517, 201 P. 481, and Valley Bank v. Hillside Packing Co. (Cal. App.) 267 P. 746. In each of the cases cited a mortgaged crop was purchased by the defendant after the lien of the mortgage had prima facie been extinguished by the removal of the crop from the land by the mortgagor. It was held to be incumbent upon the mortgagee, if he would still enjoy the benefit of his mortgage security, to meet such prima facie case by showing that the removal was without his consent. In view of the facts shown in the present case, no reasonable ground could exist for a claim that the plaintiff consented to the acts of the receiver, and that portion of the crop removed by the vendee is not involved in the action. Moreover, unlike the facts in the above cases, the defendant was not a purchaser for value or otherwise, and stood in no better position than the receiver.

We find no merit in the appeal, and the judgment is accordingly affirmed.

SHERWOOD v. GREATER BERKELEY LAND CO. (Civ. 6821.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 29, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ☞1040(10)—Overruling demurrer to complaint is not considered prejudicial error, unless demurring party was misled and cause was not fairly tried on merits.

Where demurrer to complaint on ground of insufficiency of facts was overruled, ruling will not be held prejudicial error, unless appellate court is satisfied that demurring party was misled by alleged defects in pleading and cause was not fairly tried upon merits.

2. Specific performance ☞101—Purchaser tendering balance due after vendor had, accepted monthly installments at irregular intervals without protest, was entitled to specific performance.

Where purchaser paid monthly installments at irregular intervals and installments were accepted by vendor without protest and subsequently a sufficient tender of amount due under contract was made and conveyance demanded and refused, purchaser was entitled to specific performance, since, where vendor has waived right to claim forfeiture because of default in time of payment until after all installments are due, condition cannot be revived except by reasonable notice.

3. Evidence ☞441(8)—Conversation between purchaser and vendor's agent, regarding agreement that purchaser's interest should be security for another contract, held incompetent in action for specific performance (Code Civ. Proc. § 1856).

In action for specific performance, where no question of fraud, ambiguity, or mistake was involved, conversation between purchaser and vendor's agent prior to execution of second contract, wherein agent claimed purchaser agreed that her interest under first contract should be security for second contract, was incompetent under Code Civ. Proc. § 1856, providing that when terms of agreement have been reduced to writing by parties it is to be considered as containing all those terms.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; H. V. Alvarado, Judge.

Action by S. Caroline Sherwood against the Greater Berkeley Land Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

L. D. Manning, of Oakland, for appellant.
Will S. Robenson, of Richmond, and Cyrus B. King, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued for the specific performance of a written contract for the sale of real property. The cause was tried before the court, sitting without a jury, and resulted in a judgment for plaintiff, from which the defendant has appealed upon a bill of exceptions.

The complaint alleged the execution of the contract wherein the defendant agreed to sell certain lots of land to the plaintiff for the sum of $2,200. The contract was set out in hæc verba as an exhibit to the complaint. It was further pleaded that the purchase price named was fair and adequate, and that, on July 30, 1927, the plaintiff tendered to the defendant the sum of $356.89, which was the full amount due on account of the purchase price, interest, and other charges. At the same time demand for a conveyance was made upon the defendant and refused.

The defendant demurred to the complaint both generally and specially on the ground that it did not appear that plaintiff had performed the contract according to its terms or that the contract had matured on July 30, 1927, or at the commencement of the action. The demurrer was overruled, and the defendant answered setting up the issue that plaintiff failed to perform in making the payments at the times specified and was in default at the time of the tender.

[1] It is now argued that the trial court erred in overruling the demurrer and in overruling defendant's objection to the reception of testimony on the ground that the complaint did not state sufficient facts. The objection to the complaint is that it failed to allege the very facts pleaded in defendant's answer—the issue upon which was fully and fairly tried. Whatever may be our view upon the pleadings, we would not hold the ruling of the trial court prejudicial error unless we were satisfied that the demurring party was misled by the alleged defects in the pleading and the cause was not fairly tried on the merits. Stein v. United Railroads, 159 Cal. 368, 370, 113 P. 663; Tietke v. Forrest, 64 Cal. App. 364, 367, 221 P. 681.

[2] The undisputed evidence is that plaintiff paid her monthly installments at irregular intervals, and that these were accepted by defendant without protest; that a sufficient tender of the balance due under the contract was made on July 30, 1927, and refused by the defendant. Having found these facts true, the trial court directed a conveyance to the plaintiff as prayed. On this issue the defendant offered no testimony other than to show that plaintiff paid no installments under her contract between December, 1926, and the date of the tender. On the merits of the case plaintiff was entitled to judgment under the well-settled rule of Boone v. Templeman, 158 Cal. 290, 297, 110 P. 947, 139 Am. St. Rep. 126; Stevinson v. Joy, 164 Cal. 279, 285, 128 P. 751; Hoppin v. Munsey, 185 Cal. 678, 688, 198 P. 398; and other cases holding that, where the vendor has waived the right to claim a forfeiture because of default in time of payment until after all installments are due, the condition cannot be revived except by reasonable notice to the vendee.

[3] As a special defense the appellant pleaded a second contract executed on February 7, 1925, between appellant and respondent and respondent's son for the purchase of another tract of land. It was claimed that, prior to the execution of this second contract, respondent orally agreed with appellant that her interest in the land in suit should stand as security for the performance of the second contract until specified payments had been made under the latter. Evidence was received to prove a conversation between respondent and appellant's agent held prior to the execution of the second contract wherein the agent claimed that respondent agreed to his suggestion that her interest in the land in suit should be security for this purpose. The second contract was then received in evidence, and from this it appeared that no mention was made of this plan of security. Respondent then moved to strike the evidence on the ground that it was incompetent and the motion was granted.

The incompetency of this evidence is manifest under the statutory rule approved by all the decisions and found in section 1856 of the Code of Civil Procedure that "when the terms of an agreement have been reduced to writing by the parties, it is to be considered as containing all those terms." Here the written contract was prepared by the appellant and signed by the appellant before it was signed by respondent. There is no question of mistake, ambiguity, or fraud involved, and none of the exceptions to the parol evidence rule is in any wise applicable.

Judgment affirmed.

LAURITSEN v. GOLDSMITH et al.★
(Civ. 6816.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 29, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 27, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 26, 1929.

1. Executors and administrators §210—Claim based primarily on broken promise to compensate by will may also be sufficient to support cause of action on quantum meruit.

Claim based primarily on broken promise to compensate by will for services rendered may also be sufficient to support cause of action on quantum meruit, where facts set forth are such that law will imply from them promise to compensate at termination of services.

2. Executors and administrators §210—Law implies promise to compensate for services at termination thereof, where promise to compensate by will has not been fulfilled.

The law will imply contract to compensate for services at termination thereof where express promise to compensate by will has failed of fulfillment.

3. Limitation of actions §49(2)—Where law implies promise to pay at termination of services rendered deceased, limitations does not run as to any part of period of continued services until decedent's death.

Where law implies promise to pay for services rendered deceased at termination of services, cause of action for such services does not arise until day of decedent's death, and statute of limitations does not bar any part of period of continued services.

4. Appeal and error §878(3)—Executors in action on rejected claim could not question evidence rulings until after adverse judgment.

In action on rejected claim against estate of decedent, executors cannot, until judgment is rendered against them, raise questions of admissibility of testimony of plaintiff's wife and rejection of testimony to show services were gratuitous.

5. New trial §168—In action on rejected claim against estate, defendants held not entitled to new trial after reversal of judgment for them notwithstanding verdict for plaintiff (Code Civ. Proc. § 629).

Upon reversal of judgment for defendants in action on rejected claim against estate of decedent notwithstanding verdict for plaintiff, on motion made in alternative under Code Civ. Proc. § 629, defendants held not entitled to new trial, since statute does not give appellate court power, which trial court had, to pass on reserved motion for new trial, and no reason appeared why appellate court should exercise its power as such to grant new trial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; H. D. Burroughs, Judge.

Action on a rejected claim against an estate, brought by Albert C. Lauritsen against John N. Goldsmith and another, as executors of the last will and testament of Laura Goldsmith Patterson, deceased. Judgment for defendants notwithstanding verdict for plaintiff, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; RICHARDS, J., voting for a hearing.

Clarence N. Riggins, of Napa, for appellant. Pillsbury, Madison & Suto, of San Francisco (Alfred Suto and Eugene M. Prince, both of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

KOFORD, P. J. Plaintiff sued upon a rejected claim presented against the estate of the above-named decedent as follows: "To services rendered Laura Goldsmith Patterson and room, board and care furnished and supplied her at claimant's home in Napa County, at frequent intervals and whenever desired by Laura Goldsmith Patterson from 1919 to the time of said Laura Goldsmith Patterson's death, and eggs and poultry furnished and supplied to her constantly by the claimant during said period, with the understanding and agreement between Laura Goldsmith Patterson and claimant that she would compensate him for said services and things so furnished and supplied to the amount of the reasonable value thereof upon the termination of said services and the furnishing and supplying of said things at or before her death, $4,000.00."

The allegations of plaintiff's complaint followed closely the wording of the claim. Trial was by jury resulting in a verdict for plaintiff. Defendants' motion for a directed verdict having been denied, after the verdict was rendered, defendants moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict under Code of Civil Procedure, § 629. This motion was granted upon the ground of variance between the claim and the proof, and judgment was entered for defendants. The trial court held that inasmuch as the claim was for reasonable value of services and supplies rendered the deceased and the proof was that the services were performed in expectation of and in return for the promise of a legacy, this constituted a fatal variance between claim and proof under the authority of Etchas v. Orena, 127 Cal. 588, 60 P. 45.

Plaintiff appeals from the judgment so entered. He distinguishes the instant case from Etchas v. Orena, supra, upon the ground that here the claim alleged a continuing promise to compensate at death; that such continuing promise served mainly to avoid the statute of limitations; that he is not suing for the reasonable value of the services as the measure of damage for the breach of an oral contract to make a bequest, but because the law implies an agreement to pay for such services under the facts set out in the claim; and that the evidence of the decedent's promise to make a bequest was only offered to show an agreement to compensate on the termination of the services at or before death or to negative the possible inference that such services were rendered gratuitously.

In Etchas v. Orena, supra, the claim presented against the estate was an itemized statement of month by month services rendered deceased at her request. The complaint was in the greater part based upon quantum meruit, but it also alleged that the deceased promised to pay plaintiff the reasonable value of services by making provision in her will in a sum equal to the value of the services. The defense was the statute of limitations. Judgment was for plaintiff notwithstanding the defense of the statute of limitations. This was apparently upon the theory that the decedent promised to pay for the services at the termination thereof, to wit, upon her death. Upon appeal it was held that, inasmuch as the claim filed against the estate made no reference to the decedent's promise to make payment for the services in her will, plaintiff could not rely upon such promise, and therefore the plaintiff's claim was barred and the judgment was reversed. It is said in the decision that, if plaintiff could maintain an action for breach of contract to pay for services continuing for a period of over ten years, it would be necessary to first present a claim against the estate based upon breach of such contract; that inasmuch as the claim presented was for services by the month and no contract was set forth in the claim as to when the wages were to be paid, the presumption was that the hiring was from month to month. It is also pointed out that the executor could not allow the claim as presented, since the greater part of it appears on its face to be barred by the statute of limitations. We understand the doctrine of this case, so far as applicable to the present appeal, is that in order to escape the bar of the statute of limitations by relying upon an express promise to compensate the claimant at the termination of the services, it is necessary that the claim filed against the decedent's estate set out such promise in order that the executor or administrator of the decedent's estate may intelligently approve or reject such claim.

In Giles v. Reed, 44 Cal. App. 367, 186 P. 614, the claim was for services rendered decedent under a contract by which decedent agreed in consideration of the services to be rendered to make a will devising claimant certain property. The complaint follows the claim, alleges the rendition of the services, and the failure of the decedent to make the will as agreed, and also, departing from the claim which was strictly confined to damages for breach of said express contract, the complaint alleged the sum claimed was likewise the reasonable value of the services rendered. The trial court sustained objections to testimony offered showing oral promises of the decedent to make such a bequest because such contract was invalid under the statute of frauds. The decision also holds that the trial court did not err in sustaining objections to testimony tending to prove the reasonable value of the services rendered because such a cause of action was not embraced within the claim filed against the estate. This case is but the converse of Etchas v. Orena, supra. The former holds that a cause of action for damages for breach of express contract cannot be based upon a claim for the reasonable value of services. The latter holds that a cause of action for the reasonable value of services cannot be based upon a claim which declares for damages for breach of express contract.

[1] Apparently the claim filed in the instant case avoided the consequences of relying on the ordinary contract implied by law, as was done in the Etchas v. Orena Case, and at the same time avoided relying entirely upon the express promise to compensate by will, as did the claim in Giles v. Reed. The claim here is evidently framed to steer a middle course between these two cases and follows closely the language of the findings of Mayborne v. Citizens' T. & S. Bank, 46 Cal. App. 178, at page 181, 188 P. 1034. Those findings were held to support a judgment upon a quantum meruit, and it should follow that a claim setting out substantially similar facts should be a sufficient claim upon quantum meruit. The transcript also shows the claim in that case to have been quite similar to that filed in the instant case.

Several decisions hold that a claim based primarily upon a broken promise to compensate by will for services rendered is also sufficient to support a cause of action upon quantum meruit where the facts set forth are such that the law will imply from them a promise to compensate at the termination of the services. Zellner v. Wassman, 184 Cal. 80, at page 88, 193 P. 84; Ruble v. Richardson, 188 Cal. 150, at page 155, 204 P. 572; Warder v. Hutchison, 69 Cal. App. 291, at page 296, 231 P. 563.

[2] In this case respondents claim that the record of testimony does not show any express contract to compensate for the services at the termination thereof, but only an express contract to compensate by will. It is true that the testimony does not show any direct promise to pay in any other way than by will. But it has been frequently held that the law will imply such a promise where the express promise to compensate by will has failed of fulfillment. Estate of Rohrer, 160 Cal. 574, at page 576, 117 P. 672, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 479; Zellner v. Wassman, 184 Cal. 80, at page 88, 193 P. 84; Warder v. Hutchison, 69 Cal. App. 291, at page 296, 231 P. 563; Mayborne v. Citizens' T. & S. Bank, 46 Cal. App. 178, 188 P. 1034.

[3] It is also contended by respondents that a cause of action upon quantum meruit would be barred by the statute of limitations with the exception of that part of the claim which arose during the last two years preceding the death of decedent. It has been held, however, under facts similar to those in this case, that the law not only implies a promise to pay, but implies the promise to pay at the termination of the services, so that the cause of action does not arise until the day of the death of decedent and the statute of limitations does not bar any part of the period of continuous services. Hagan v. McNary, 170 Cal. 141, 148 P. 937, L. R. A. 1915E, 562; Mayborne v. Citizens' T. & S. Bank, 46 Cal. App. 178, at page 189, 188 P. 1034; Warder v. Hutchison, 69 Cal. App. 291, at page 296, 231 P. 563.

[4] Respondents ask us to rule that the testimony of the wife of appellant should be totally disregarded because she has a community property interest in the chose of action. They also ask us to rule that the court erred as against respondents in rejecting certain offered testimony which they claim would have tended to show the services and provisions to have been supplied gratuitously and as an act of friendship only, giving rise to no implied contract to compensate. Respondents cannot raise these points until judgment is rendered against them.

[5] Respondents' motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was made in the alternative form under Code of Civil Procedure, § 629, reserving the right to apply for a new trial if their motion for judgment be denied, but the motion was granted. That section does not give to the appellate court the trial court's power to pass upon respondents' reserved motion for a new trial. No good reason appears why this court should exercise its power as an appellate court to grant a new trial. Following the precedent of Eades v. Trowbridge, 143 Cal. 25, 76 P. 714, we should order judgment entered by the trial court upon the verdict permitting, of course, such further proceedings, as are permitted by law.

The judgment is therefore reversed, and the court directed to enter judgment upon the verdict.

PACIFIC FRUIT EXCHANGE v. SCHROPFER. (Civ. 6755.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 2, 1929.

1. Execution ⇨273—Judgment creditor purchasing at execution sale is protected against unknown latent equities.

Judgment creditor purchasing at his own execution sale is protected against latent equities of which he has no notice at the time of the sale.

2. Mortgages ⇨199(2) — Where mortgage, though in terms including rents, gives no right of possession, mortgagee has no right to rent.

Mortgagee has no right to rent, where no right to possession is given by mortgage, though mortgage in terms includes rents.

3. Execution ⇨274—In suit for rent by judgment creditor purchasing at execution sale, tenant had burden to prove plaintiff's actual notice of claim of mortgagee under owner's assignment of rents.

Tenant in possession of land sold under execution had burden to prove that judgment creditor purchasing at sale had actual notice or knowledge of claim of mortgagee under assignment of lease and rents from record owner, in order to avoid judgment creditor's recovery of rent.

4. Execution $\Rightarrow$ 273—Judgment creditor purchasing at execution sale could recover rents from tenant, notwithstanding landlord's oral assignment of rents to mortgagee prior to judgment.

Judgment creditor purchasing at his own execution sale held entitled to recover rent from tenant under lease from record owner, notwithstanding tenant's defense that lease had been orally assigned by lessor to mortgagee before entry of judgment with authority in mortgagee to collect rents and apply them to indebtedness secured by the mortgage, where no instrument showing mortgagee's claim to rents was recorded and judgment creditor had no actual notice or knowledge of such claim.

5. Execution $\Rightarrow$ 273—Purchaser at execution sale claiming rents from tenant held not chargeable with constructive notice of mortgagee's unrecorded claim under oral assignment of rents and subsequent collection thereof by mortgagee.

Judgment creditor purchasing at execution sale was not chargeable with constructive notice of claim of mortgagee to rents, as against tenant in possession, by virtue of landlord's assignment of lease and rentals to mortgagee to be applied on mortgage indebtedness and mortgagee's subsequent collection of rent, where there was no record of mortgagee's claim and possession of mortgagee was inconsistent with record title and terms of lease.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; C. E. Beaumont, Judge.

Action by the Pacific Fruit Exchange against Joseph G. Schropfer. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jas. E. Babbitt, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

G. Levin Aynsworth, of Fresno, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The defendant, who was a tenant in possession of certain real property, appeals from a judgment entered against him for the rent which accrued subsequent to the sale of the property under an execution.

The judgment upon which the execution issued was recovered by the plaintiff against F. F. Stober and Anna D. Stober on July 23, 1926, and their interest in the property was purchased by the plaintiff at an execution sale on January 17, 1927, following which a sheriff's certificate of sale was duly issued and recorded. The record title to the property stood in the name of Anna D. Stober, and previous to the entry of the judgment last mentioned she, with F. F. Stober, her husband, executed a mortgage thereon to the Southwest Cattle Loan Company, a corporation, to secure the payment of a debt to the mortgagee. The mortgage in terms included the rents, issues, and profits from the property, but was not verified so as to permit its recording as a chattel mortgage. They also executed a deed of trust thereon to secure a sum payable to another corporation; the above instruments being dated October 30, 1924, and June 26, 1922, respectively. On February 27, 1925, Anna D. Stober leased the premises to F. F. Stober, her husband, for a term ending March 1, 1928. Previous to the execution of this lease her husband had executed to the defendant a lease of the same property for a term ending March 1, 1926, with the privilege of renewing the same for a further term of five years. Before the entry of the judgment against the lessors, the renewal was duly executed and the leases were orally assigned by Anna D. Stober to the mortgagee above named, with authority to collect the rent thereunder and apply the same to the indebtedness secured by the mortgage and deed of trust. No instrument showing its right to collect the rentals was placed of record, but the mortgagee, pursuant to the assignment and authority granted, collected the rents from the defendant until the 1st day of January, 1927.

[1, 2] It is the rule in California that a judgment creditor purchasing at his own sale is protected against latent equities of which he has no notice at the time of the sale (11 Cal. Jur. Executions, § 70, p. 130), and that a mortgagee has no right to the rent where no right to possession is given although the mortgage in terms, as was the case here, includes the rents (Freeman v. Campbell, 109 Cal. 360, 42 P. 35, Cowdery v. London, etc., Bank, 139 Cal. 298, 73 P. 196, 96 Am. St. Rep. 115).

[3-5] In the present case it is not contended that the plaintiff had actual notice or knowledge of the claim of the mortgagee, and the burden of proof in this respect rested upon appellant (Garber v. Gianella, 98 Cal. 527, 33 P. 458; Hawke v. Cal. Realty & Con. Co., 28 Cal. App. 377, 152 P. 959), but that, due to the assignments and the subsequent collection of the rent, it became a mortgagee in possession, of whose rights appellant's possession of the property gave constructive notice. Whether an assignment by the owner of the reversion of rent to become due under a lease for a term exceeding one year is within the statute of frauds, or a conveyance as the term is used in the recording acts are matters upon which the authorities are conflicting. These questions, however, need not be determined here, for, as stated, no record of the mortgagee's claim appeared; and while it is contended that appellant's possession was that of the mortgagee, such possession was entirely consistent with the title to the reversion, to which the rent was an incident (Winnisimmet Trust, Inc., v. Libby, 232 Mass. 491, 122 N. E. 575), and the terms of the lease as the same appeared of record. Under such circumstances, appellant's possession was not constructive notice of the claim of the mortgagee, and no duty rested upon the purchaser to make further inquiry. Smith v. Yule, 31 Cal. 180, 89 Am. Dec. 167; Garber v. Gianella, supra; Schumacher v. Truman, 134 Cal. 430, 66 P. 591; Randall v. Allen, 180 Cal. 298, 180 P. 941.

We find no merit in the appeal.

The judgment is accordingly affirmed.

FAHRENBRAKER v. E. CLEMENS HORST CO. et al. (Civ. 3820.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 2, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 1, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Aug. 29, 1929.

1. Mortgages §372(4)—Assignee under unrecorded assignment of rents takes only lessor's rights.

Rights of assignee under unrecorded assignment of rents as against subsequent purchaser of leased premises at sale under trust deed are no greater than, but the same as, lessor's would have been had no assignment been made.

2. Landlord and tenant §53(2)—Rent accrues only on due date, and person then owning reversion is entitled to entire installment.

At common law, rent does not accrue from day to day, but only on day fixed for payment, so that person who owns reversion on that day is ordinarily entitled to entire installment due, though he owned reversion or rent only part of time elapsing since last rent day.

3. Landlord and tenant §53(2)—Grantee of reversion is entitled to all rent due at next rent day, in absence of contrary stipulation.

When the landlord conveys the reversion, grantee is entitled to all the rent which falls due at the next rent day, in the absence of a contrary stipulation.

4. Mortgages §372(4), 548—Conveyance by operation of law, under trust deed or power of sale in mortgage, or under decree or execution valid against lessor, passes reversion and rent thereafter accruing.

A conveyance by operation of law, under a trust deed or power of sale in a mortgage, or by a master or sheriff under decree or execution valid against lessor, passes his reversion and rent thereafter accruing as effectively as a deed from him directly.

5. Mortgages §372(4)—Statute providing for apportionment of rent during redemption period does not apply to sales under trust deeds (Code Civ. Proc. § 707).

Code Civ. Proc. § 707, providing for apportionment of rent during period allowed for redemption of property sold under execution or foreclosure of mortgage, does not apply to sales under trust deeds.

6. Appeal and error §909(5)—Where record on appeal from judgment apportioning rent between assignee and purchaser of premises contains no copy of lease or other evidence of its terms, it must be presumed that lease contained provision therefor.

Where record on appeal by purchaser of leased premises at sale under trust deed from judgment apportioning rent between her and holder of prior unrecorded assignment of rents contained no copy of lease nor other evidence of its terms, it must be presumed, in support of findings, on which judgment was based, that lease contained a special provision for apportionment of rent, if land were transferred.

7. Appeal and error §880(3)—Appellant given judgment for all that was due her cannot complain of excessive judgment for respondent.

Where judgment apportioning rent between assignee thereof and subsequent purchaser of leased premises gave latter all that was due her, she was in no position to complain on appeal that assignee was given judgment for more than was due him from lessor; any excess awarded him belonging to lessor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by Frank C. Fahrenbraker against the E. Clemens Horst Company, Josephine A. Hunt, and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Hunt appeals. Affirmed.

Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, of San Francisco, and John R. Connelly, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Busick & Leeper, of Sacramento, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendant Josephine A. Hunt from the judgment herein apportioning the rent of the lands described in the complaint for the year ending November 1, 1926.

[1] The defendant E. Clemens Horst Company holds the land under a lease from A. D. Murphy for a term of ten years, commencing November 1, 1919, at the annual rental of $1,500, payable annually at the end of each year of the term. The lease was duly recorded. During the term of the lease, Murphy executed a trust deed to secure payment of his promissory note to the appellant and on September 4, 1926, the land was sold by the trustee to satisfy the indebtedness; the appellant becoming the purchaser for the amount of the debt and the expenses of sale. On September 17, 1926, the trustee conveyed the land to appellant. At the time of the sale, the plaintiff held an unrecorded assignment of all rents to become due under the lease as security for an amount due him from Murphy. The assignment was made prior to the execution of the trust deed, but the appellant had no knowledge thereof until after she had purchased and paid for the property and had received the trustee's deed therefor. The court apportioned the rent for the year ending November 1, 1926, awarding the plaintiff $1,316.10 thereof and the appellant $183.90. Appellant contends that she is entitled to all of the rent for the year. The plaintiff's rights under the unrecorded assignment are not greater than, but the same as, Murphy's would have been, if no assignment had been made.

[2, 3] "Rent is not, at common law regarded as accruing from day to day, as interest does, but it is only upon the day fixed for payment that any part of it becomes due. The result of this principle is that, ordinarily, the person who is on that day the owner of the reversion is entitled to the entire instalment of rent due on that day, though he may have been the owner of the reversion or rent but a part of the time which has elapsed since the last rent day. * * * When the landlord makes a conveyance of the reversion, the grantee is entitled, in the absence of a contrary stipulation, to all the rent which falls due at the next rent day." Tiffany on Landlord and Tenant, § 176. In Diepenbrock v. Luiz, 159 Cal. 716, 115 P. 743, L. R. A. 1915C, 234, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1084, the following language in section 389 of Taylor's Landlord and Tenant (9th Ed.) is quoted with approval:

"It is well settled that in all cases of periodical payments, accruing at intervals, and not de die in diem, there can be no apportionment, for rent will not be apportioned in respect of time, unless by force of a statute or of some special provision of the lease."

[4] "A conveyance by operation of law or under a trust deed or power of sale in a mortgage or by a master or sheriff under a decree or execution that is valid against the lessor, will be as efficacious as a deed from him directly. Whatever unqualifiedly passes his reversion will pass rent thereafter accruing." Underhill on Landlord and Tenant, § 318; Tiffany on Landlord and Tenant, § 180; 36 C. J. 366.

[5] In this state rent is apportioned during the period allowed for redemption of property sold under execution or in the foreclosure of a mortgage. Clarke and Cain v. Cobb, 121 Cal. 595, 54 P. 74. The decision last cited, however, is based on the special provisions of section 707 of the Code of Civil Procedure, relating to the redemption of property from sales on execution and foreclosure, which section has no application to sales under trust deeds.

[6] In this case, the record on appeal consists of the judgment roll, and, in addition, copies of the trust deed and the trustee's deed to the appellant, both certified by the trial judge as having been introduced in evidence. It need not be determined whether these instruments are so authenticated as to entitle them to be considered on appeal, because neither of them throw any light on the issues to be determined. No copy of the lease appears in the record, and its terms are not disclosed further than as stated. The complaint alleges that the appellant "has no right, title nor interest in or to said rents * * * earned prior to the 17th day of September, 1926," on which date she became the owner of the land through the trustee's deed. Appellant's answer denies this allegation, and alleges that she "is the owner of and entitled to all rent due under the aforementioned lease * * * and the plaintiff has no right, title or interest in or to any of said rent or any part thereof." The court found that "all the allegations of plaintiff's complaint are true," and that the foregoing denials and allegations of the appellant's answer are untrue. In the absence of evidence showing the terms of the lease, it must be presumed in support of the findings that the lease contained a special provision for the apportionment of the rent in the event of a transfer of the land. 2 Cal. Jur. 877.

[7] Appellant contends that the judgment in favor of the plaintiff is for more than was due him from Murphy. Since the appellant was given judgment for all that was due her, she is not in a position to complain that the plaintiff was given judgment for too much. That is a question in which only the plaintiff and Murphy are concerned. If there is any excess in the award to plaintiff over the amount due him, such excess belongs to Murphy.

The other questions argued by appellant are disposed of by what has already been said.

The judgment is affirmed.

PATENTS PROCESS, Inc., v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (Civ. 6675.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. June 20, 1929.

Divorce 6267—Court, on wife's petition, could appoint receiver for corporation to which husband had conveyed property in which wife had community interest (Civ. Code, § 140; Code Civ. Proc. § 564).

Under Civ. Code, § 140, authorizing appointment of receiver to enforce requirement that wife or husband, as the case may be, provide maintenance or make specified payments, court had authority, on petition of wife, to appoint receiver for corporation to which husband had conveyed property in which wife had community interest, particularly by virtue of the terms of interlocutory decree of divorce, regardless of the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 564, relative to right of court of equity to appoint receiver for property of corporation.

Original application for writ of prohibition by the Patents Process, Inc., prayed to be directed to the Superior Court of the state of California in and for the County of Los Angeles and others. Application denied.

Milton M. Cohen and R. D. Knickerbocker, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

William R. Millar, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. There is pending in the superior court an action, No. 273—391, of Mildred Williams, Plaintiff, v. Frank D. Williams, Patents Process, Inc., a Corporation, and Others, Defendants. In that action the plaintiff sets forth facts showing her right to an interest in described property owned by the plaintiff and by the defendant Williams, as community property, particularly as shown by the terms of an interlocutory decree of divorce granted to Mrs. Williams against her said husband. The complaint in action 273—391, after a statement of facts concerning said interlocutory decree of divorce, proceeds to state another series of facts which tend to show that defendant Frank D. Williams has been and is endeavoring to prevent the plaintiff from receiving her share of the community property awarded to her in the divorce action; that sundry other persons have been induced to confederate and conspire with Williams to accomplish his stated purpose; that, in order to more effectually carry out said plan and purpose, the defendant Patents Process, Inc., was created and organized; that sundry properties held by defendant Williams, and belonging wholly or in part to the plaintiff, were by said Williams caused to be transferred and placed in the name of said corporation; that practically all of the shares of capital stock of said corporation belong to defendant Williams, and those shares which have been issued to names of other persons, are in reality his property; that defendant Williams is general manager, and is in actual control of said corporation and of said properties conveyed by him pursuant to said alleged purpose, plan, and conspiracy. The foregoing indicates the foundation and the nature of the action, but we do not attempt to make a complete statement of the complaint, or of the proceedings therein. Upon the filing of said complaint and, upon application made to a judge of respondent court, an order was made whereby a receiver was appointed of the property of the defendant corporation, Patents Process, Inc. The defendant duly presented a motion to vacate the order appointing the receiver, which motion was denied by an order of May 13, 1929. On the same day the court ordered that defendant Williams deliver to the receiver said described property of Patents Process, Inc., together with all other property of said corporation. The notice of motion to vacate did not state the grounds on which the motion would be made, but the affidavits filed therewith indicate a complaint against the qualifications of the appointee, rather than any challenge of the power of the court to appoint a receiver. In this present proceeding, application is made for a writ of prohibition to restrain the respondent court and the judges thereof from taking further proceedings in connection with the appointment or continuance in office of a receiver for the business of petitioner, and that the appointed receiver be restrained from acting as such receiver, notwithstanding said order of appointment.

In applying for the writ, petitioner relies upon a series of decisions which deny that there is any jurisdiction vested in a court of equity to appoint a receiver of the property of a corporation in a suit prosecuted by a private party, or in any case not directly authorized by the provisions of section 564 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Among these decisions are the French Bank Case, 53 Cal. 495, 550; Neall v. Hill, 16 Cal. 145, 76 Am. Dec. 508; A. G. Col. Co. v. Superior Court, 196 Cal. 604, 614, 238 P. 926; Dabney Oil Co. v. Providence Oil Co., 22 Cal. App. 233, 237, 133 P. 1155.

We are satisfied that the case stated in the complaint in the action in respondent court brings that action within a well-recognized exception to the general rule referred to in the preceding paragraph, and that respondent court had jurisdiction to appoint the receiver. Section 140 of the Civil Code (in the chapter relating to actions of divorce) reads as follows: "The court may require the husband [or wife, as the case may be,] to give reasonable security for providing maintenance or making any payments required under the provisions of this chapter, and may enforce the same by the appointment of a receiver, or by any other remedy applicable to the case." The allegations of the complaint, duly verified, are sufficient to show that the corporation Patents Process, Inc., is but the alter ego of defendant Frank D. Williams, and that the plaintiff, Mrs. Williams, although not a stockholder of the corporation, is an owner of at least a half interest in the property held by said corporation. It follows that the directors of the corporation owe to her, as such owner, a duty similar to that which is owed to the stockholders. Upon those alleged facts the directors are charged with the duty of administering a trust in which, so far as plaintiff's interest in the property is concerned, she is the primary beneficiary. That this trust is involuntary and unacknowledged only adds to the seriousness of the situation. Upon facts which as to the principles involved are the same, it was held that, where such a trust existed, and was being violated, the court had authority to appoint a receiver. As the court there said: "We cannot conceive a state of the law, under the enlightened principles which govern the exercise of the jurisdiction of courts of equity, which would deny the appointment of a receiver, under the allegations of the Charle complaint, merely, upon the ground that the plaintiffs were not stockholders of the corporation." Lieberman v. Superior Court, 72 Cal. App. 18, at page 37, 236 P. 570, 577.

The demurrer to the petition is sustained, and the application for writ of prohibition is denied.

PEOPLE v. BRUNO. (Cr. 1792.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 21, 1929.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court July 18, 1929.

1. Indictment and Information ⇨166—Negative allegations regarding matters peculiarly within knowledge of defendant accused of crime need not be proved.

Under rule of ab inconvenienti, negative allegations regarding matters peculiarly within knowledge of defendant accused of crime need not be proved.

2. Criminal law ⇨327—Legislature cannot by mere fiat bring issue within matters which defendant must prove as within his particular knowledge.

Legislature cannot by mere fiat change inherent nature of issue in criminal case and provide that proof thereof shall be within class of matters which defendant must prove as being within his particular knowledge.

3. Aliens ⇨17—Statute placing burden on defendant to prove citizenship held ineffectual to establish presumption of foreign nativity, in prosecution for possessing firearm of prohibited length as alien, because requiring self-incrimination (Code Civ. Proc. § 1983, as added by St. 1927, p. 434; St. 1923, p. 696, § 2; Const. art. 1, § 13).

Code Civ. Proc. § 1983, as added by St. 1927, p. 434, providing that in any action or proceeding by the state to enforce laws denying certain privileges or licenses to aliens alleged alien shall have burden to establish fact that he was at the time of exercising right or privilege a citizen or eligible to become such, provided state has proved that he actually exercised right or privilege, held ineffectual to establish presumption of foreign nativity in prosecution for possessing firearm of prohibited length as alien, under St. 1923, p. 696, § 2, since issue was not within rule ab inconvenienti as within peculiar knowledge of defendant, and would require self-incrimination contrary to Const. art. 1, § 13.

4. Criminal law ⇨306—Reasonable connection must exist between fact and presumption to be drawn therefrom.

There must be reasonable connection between fact and presumption which law directs to be drawn therefrom.

5. Criminal law ⇨409—In prosecution for possessing firearm of prohibited length as alien, admission in evidence of defendant's admissions as to his place of birth held error, where corpus delicti was not proved (St. 1923, p. 696, § 2; Code Civ. Proc. § 1983, as added by St. 1927, p. 434).

In prosecution for having in possession firearm of prohibited length under St. 1923, p. 696, § 2, admission in evidence of statements of defendant to officer concerning his place of birth abroad and his nonnaturalization was error, where there was no prima facie proof of corpus delicti, since Code Civ. Proc. § 1983, as added by St. 1927, p. 434, in so far as attempting to create presumption of foreign birth from proof of possession of firearm, was ineffectual.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Fricke, Judge.

Joe Bruno was convicted of possessing a firearm of forbidden length, being at the time an unnaturalized foreign-born person, and he appeals. Reversed.

S. S. Hahn and Dan J. Heyfron, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., Buron Fitts, Dist. Atty., and Tracy Chatfield Becker, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for the People.

CRAIG, J. The defendant was charged with the violation of section 2, Statutes of 1923 (St. 1923, p. 696), in having in his possession and under his control a firearm having a barrel less than 12 inches in length, and in being at the time an unnaturalized foreign-born person. He was convicted, and appeals from an order denying his motion for new trial, and from the judgment.

The principal ground of appeal is an asserted insufficiency of the evidence to establish the corpus delicti and to sustain the verdict. However, in this connection certain constitutional questions are raised.

In People v. Quarez, 196 Cal. 404, 238 P. 363, the Supreme Court of this state held that in the offense here charged the corpus delicti consists of two distinct elements, to wit, first, the possession of a certain type of weapon, and, second, the foreign nativity and nonnaturalization of the accused. Section 1983 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as added by St. 1927, p. 434, does not alter the law in this regard. It was also logically further held in the case above mentioned that extrajudicial statements of a defendant are not sufficient in themselves to establish the second element of the corpus delicti, but that other and independent evidence is necessary for that purpose.

The people argue that by the provisions of section 1983 of the Code of Civil Procedure, enacted since the decision in the Quarez Case, a presumption has been created which may be employed to supply the independent evidence required, and that in this case it was so supplied, and that this presumption is sufficient. Appellant insists in this behalf that section 1983 is unconstitutional, as in conflict with several constitutional provisions. The section itself reads, in part, as follows: "Whenever in any action or proceeding, civil or criminal, brought by, or in the name of, the State or the people thereof, * * * to enforce any law which denies any right, privilege or license to any person not a citizen of the United States, or not eligible to become such citizen, * * * and whenever in any action or proceeding in which the State * * * is or becomes a party, it is alleged in the pleading therein filed on behalf of the State, * * * that such right, privilege or license has been exercised by a person not a citizen of the United States, or not eligible to become such citizen, * * * the burden shall be upon the party for or on whose behalf such pleading was filed to establish the fact that such right, privilege or license was exercised by the person alleged to have exercised the same, and upon such fact being so established the burden shall be upon such persons, or upon any person, firm or corporation claiming under or through the exercise of such right, privilege or license, to establish the fact that the person alleged to have exercised such right, privilege or license was, at the time of so exercising the same, a citizen of the United States, or eligible to become such citizen, * * * and was at said time legally entitled to exercise such right, privilege or license."

The only constitutional provision relied upon by appellant which appears to warrant attention is section 13 of article 1 of the Constitution of California, in which it is guaranteed that the defendant cannot be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself. Undoubtedly any law which would have the effect of forcing a defendant to produce evidence against himself would be unconstitutional.

[1, 2] Under the rule, ab inconvenienti, it has been held that negative allegations regarding matters peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendant need not be proved; but this exception to the general rule has been limited in this state to that particular class of cases where the prosecution is required to prove the nonexistence of a license. People v. Quarez, supra; People v. Frey, 165 Cal. 140, 131 P. 127. In these cases it was held that the precise element involved in the charge against the appellant here, the nativity of the defendant, was not of such a nature as to come within the rule ab inconvenienti. The Legislature cannot, by merely declaring it to be so, change the inherent nature of the issue and thus bring proof of the nativity within the class of matters excepted from the general rule as being within the particular knowledge of the defendant, if in fact it is not of that character. Otherwise, it would be competent for the Legislature to pass a law providing that in a prosecution for murder, upon proof of the death of the person alleged to have been murdered, the defendant must show that such death did not come about through unlawful means, and that in the absence of such proof this element of the corpus delicti should be deemed confessed, the act declaring this provision to be within the exceptional rule ab inconvenienti. Obviously the mere fiat of the Legislature could not thus metamorphose the issue as to the nature of the agency that produced death.

[3, 4] Accepting then, the decision of our Supreme Court, as announced in the Quarez Case, that this issue of nativity is not one whose proof is especially within the knowledge of the defendant, we must conclude that it remains not within the exception ab inconvenienti.

It is argued that the only result of the provision is to create a presumption of the foreign nativity of the defendant from proof that he had a firearm of the forbidden length in his possession. But it is clear that in this case far greater and more serious consequences than this would result. The presumption would be but an entering wedge, opening the door to damaging admissions otherwise barred, and which, coupled with the presumption attempted to be created by the statute, might be sufficient to establish the element of nonnativity and thus complete the case against the defendant. We have here an effort to accomplish indirectly that which undoubtedly could not be done directly, to conjure up through a process of legislative necromancy a semblance of evidence, and to require the courts to treat this counterfeit as real evidence. There is no rational connection between the fact that a person has in his possession a firearm of a certain type or size and that individual's place of birth. If evidence of crime may be thus fabricated in the form of a presumption without any foundation in fact, the most serious felony might be presumed from entirely innocent acts and circumstances. There must be a reasonable connection between the fact and the presumption which the law directs to be drawn therefrom. People v. Osaki et al. (Cal. App.) 278 P. 252.

[5] Holding, as we do, that the provision attempting to create a presumption of foreign birth from proof of possession of a firearm of less barrel length than 12 inches is ineffective, it follows that the admission in evidence of the statements of the defendant to the officer concerning his place of birth and nonnaturalization was error, since such admissions cannot be received without at least prima facie proof of the corpus delicti. This leaves the people's case entirely unsupported by evidence.

We find no other point which warrants consideration.

The judgment is reversed.

FORGAY et al. v. PLUM et al. (Civ. 3816.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 19, 1929.

1. Logs and logging $\S$ 3(13)—Vendor under contract for sale of standing timber held not entitled to forfeiture on purchaser's failure to make payments when due, where time was not made of essence.

Vendor of standing timber, under agreement of purchaser to pay $4 per thousand feet on delivery thereof, making semiannual monthly payments, together with payments at rate of $1 per thousand feet of lumber sawed for use of mill, held not entitled to forfeiture of contract and injunction to prevent purchaser's logging operations, on account of purchaser's failure to make payments when due and failure to operate sawmill to full capacity, where time was not made of essence of contract.

2. Contracts $\S$ 318—Failure to perform contract within time stipulated does not permit forfeiture, unless time is made of essence.

Mere failure to pay or otherwise perform contract within time stipulated is not ground for forfeiture, unless time is made of the essence of the contract.

3. Logs and logging $\S$ 3(15)—Action by vendor of standing timber for recovery under logging contract and forfeiture of purchaser's interest could not be treated as suit for rescission.

Action by vendors of standing timber to recover amount due from purchaser under logging contract, and for forfeiture of contract for purchaser's nonperformance, and for permanent injunction against purchaser's logging operations, could not be treated as suit for rescission, where no notice of rescission was given, and purchaser, prior to trial, deposited amount due in proportion to amount of manufactured lumber sold.

4. Logs and logging $\S$ 3(15)—Judgment awarding vendor entire amount due under timber contract, without allowance for purchaser's deposits, was erroneous.

Where finding showed that purchaser of timber under logging contract had deposited amount of certain payments for vendor, judgment awarding vendor entire amount due, without credit for money so deposited, was erroneous.

Appeal from Superior Court, Plumas County; J. O. Moncur, Judge.

Suit by J. A. Forgay and others, doing business under the firm name and style of the Forgay Lumber Company, against C. D. Plum, individually and doing business as the Round Valley Lumber Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

H. B. Wolfe, of Quincy, Lawrence W. Skirving, of Sacramento, C. D. Plum and John V. Filippini, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

M. C. Kerr, of Quincy, for respondents.

FINCH, C. J. This is an appeal by the defendant Plum, on the judgment roll alone, from a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs.

It appears from the complaint that in May, 1926, the plaintiffs entered into a contract with A. P. Newhart, by the terms of which they agreed to sell him all the merchantable timber on the Forgay ranch, and also their sawmill and equipment, for which timber he agreed to pay "$4 per thousand feet, board measure, scaled * * * upon delivery at pond"; payments to be made semiannually. The purchaser also agreed to pay at the rate of $1 per thousand feet of lumber sawed for the use of the mill until such payments amounted to $7,500, when he was to be given a bill of sale for the mill. The title to the lumber was to remain in the sellers until paid for. Payments were to be made "to the credit of the party of the first part at the Indian Valley Bank." The buyer was to commence the operation of the mill "on or before the 15th day of June, 1926, and to diligently continue the operation thereof * * * to full capacity." The buyer agreed to keep insured "all lumber piled or stored in an amount equal to that due" the sellers, the insurance policies to be payable to them to the extent of their interest.

A supplementary agreement was subsequently executed, but its terms are not material here. Time was not made of the essence of the contract, nor was there any provision for a forfeiture contained therein. Newhart assigned to F. C. Wolpert, and he to the defendant; the assignment to the defendant being made prior to May 6, 1927. The breaches of the contract alleged in the complaint are as follows:

The defendant "did log, cut and manufacture into lumber about 170,000 feet * * * of lumber," by reason whereof there became due to the plaintiffs the sum of $850 on the 5th day of July, 1927. On their demand for payment of that sum the defendant "informed said plaintiffs that he did not intend to pay said sum until said lumber was sold and shipped, and * * * that it was his intention to continue to fall and manufacture timber from said premises, but that none of the same would be paid for until sold and shipped." The defendant failed to insure the lumber "piled or stored." He "has failed to operate said sawmill diligently * * * to full capacity thereof, and that since the 1st day of July little, if any, timber has been sawed at said sawmill, and that said mill is now closed down and not being operated to the full capacity, or at all."

The prayer is for judgment in the sum of $850, for an injunction restraining the defendant "from further logging and cutting of timber from said premises," for a forfeiture of "said contract," and for damages.

The complaint was filed July 14, 1927. The findings follow the allegations of the complaint, except as to the mill being "closed down," and additional facts are found as follows:

After the complaint was filed and prior to the trial the defendant "deposited with the Indian Valley Bank cash and bills of lading sufficient to cover said amount" of $850. The defendant "did continue to fall and manufacture timber from said premises into lumber until prevented from so doing by a temporary injunction, and did refuse to pay for the same in accordance with the terms of said agreement and supplement thereto, but continued to have deposited to the credit of plaintiffs the amount of such rental and stumpage as provided in said agreement out of the proceeds of the sale of lumber manufactured from said premises in proportion to the amount of lumber sold." The defendant does "not intend to comply with the terms of the agreement, * * * and that the same will result in a multiplicity of actions."

Judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiffs for the sum of $850, and it was further adjudged that the agreement "be and the same is hereby declared forfeited and void for failure to comply with the terms thereof"; that the defendant be "permanently enjoined from logging, cutting, sawing, or in any way interfering with the timber on said premises mentioned in said agreement, or with the sawmill on said premises; and that plaintiffs have a lien on all lumber manufactured on said premises for the amount due plaintiffs under said agreement."

[1-3] Neither the facts alleged in the complaint nor those found by the court constitute grounds for forfeiture, time not being of the essence of the contract. "Mere failure to pay or otherwise perform within the time stipulated is not ground for forfeiture unless time is of the essence of the contract." 25 Cal. Jur. 608. Such facts may be sufficient to warrant a rescission of the contract by the plaintiffs, but there is neither allegation nor finding that they made any effort to rescind. The action cannot be treated as one for rescission, even if the allegations of the complaint were sufficient to show that the plaintiffs are entitled to rescind. They gave no notice of rescission and the findings show that the defendant has rights to be adjusted if the contract is to be canceled. 4 Cal. Jur. 799.

[4] It appears from the findings that the defendant has deposited in the Indian Valley Bank, as required by the terms of the contract, the amount of certain payments which became due to the plaintiffs. The judgment seems to award the plaintiffs the whole amount which became due to them without any credit for the moneys so deposited.

The judgment is reversed.

EAST BAY MUNICIPAL UTILITY DIST. v. KIEFFER et al. (two cases). ★

SAME v. PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC CO. et al.

(Civ. 3480-3482.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 26, 1929.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 25, 1929.

1. Eminent domain ⇨138—Damages by reason of severance of land condemned is limited to land contiguous to that taken (Code Civ. Proc. § 1248).

Damages by reason of severance of land taken by power of eminent domain is limited, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1248, to land which is contiguous to that taken.

2. Courts ⇨92—Ruling on both grounds upon which judgment of trial court can be rested is judgment of court, and neither is obiter.

Where there are two grounds upon either of which judgment of trial court can be rested, and appellate court sustains both, ruling on neither is obiter, but each is a judgment of court and of equal validity with other.

3. Appeal and error ⇨971(3)—Discretionary power of trial court over cross-examination of witnesses will not be disturbed on appeal, except in case of abuse.

Though wide latitude should be allowed in cross-examination of witnesses, trial court has discretionary power over cross-examination which will be disturbed on appeal only in case of an abuse thereof.

4. Appeal and error ⇨971(3)—Inquiry in determining whether trial court abused discretion over cross-examination is whether sufficiently wide range has been allowed to test credibility and weight.

Where appellate court is called upon to decide whether discretionary power of trial court over cross-examination of witnesses has been abused, inquiry is whether a sufficiently wide range has been allowed to test credibility of witnesses and weight of evidence rather than whether some particular question should have been allowed.

5. Witnesses ⇨267, 330(1)—Trial court has reasonable discretion to determine whether ostensible purpose of cross-examination is to test witness' credibility or weight of testimony.

When question on cross-examination is asked for ostensible purpose of testing credibility of witness or weight of his testimony, trial court has reasonable discretion to determine whether that is in fact purpose of question or whether real purpose is to get substance of inquiry before jury as evidentiary fact.

6. Eminent domain ⇨246(2)—Plaintiff condemning property cannot in effect grant himself new trial by abandoning proceeding after final judgment and then proceed to condemn same property.

Plaintiff in condemnation suit cannot in effect grant himself new trial by simple expedient of abandoning proceeding after final judgment, and then commencing another proceeding to condemn same property.

7. Action ⇨59—Three verdicts, findings, and judgments rendered in three consolidated condemnation proceedings will be treated as one verdict, one set of findings, and one judgment.

Where three condemnation proceedings at time of trial were in same court, between same parties, and were being prosecuted for condemnation of three adjoining parcels of land belonging to defendant, and court made an order consolidating them, three verdicts, three sets of findings, and three judgments will be treated as one verdict, one set of findings, and one judgment, since by consolidation three proceedings became one proceeding and should have been determined by a single verdict, single set of findings, and single judgment.

8. Eminent domain ⇨246(2)—After final judgment, plaintiff was without power to abandon any one of three original condemnation proceedings consolidated for trial without abandoning all.

Where three condemnation proceedings for condemnation of three adjoining parcels of land belonging to defendant at time of trial were in same court, between same parties, and court made order consolidating them, plaintiff was without power to abandon any one of original proceedings after final judgment without abandoning all of them, and therefore defendant could not be injured by partial abandonment.

Appeals from Superior Court, Amador County; C. P. Vicini, Judge.

On petition for rehearing. Petition denied. For former opinion, see 278 P. 476.

James F. Peck, Chas. F. Rafferty, and F. J. Solinsky, all of San Francisco, T. A. Farrell, of Sacramento, and Wm. G. Snyder, of Jackson, for appellant.

T. P. Wittschen, of Oakland, C. Irving, and T. G. Negrich and Ralph McGee, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. [1, 2] The appellant has filed a petition for a rehearing.

It is again urged that physical contiguity of different parcels of land is not necessary to entitle the owner in a condemnation proceeding to severance damages, and that the statement to the contrary in Oakland v. Pacific Coast Lumber & Mill Co., 171 Cal. 392, 399, 153 P. 705, is dictum. The appellant in that case had insisted in the trial court "that the physical separation was negligible because unity of use and not physical contiguity was the controlling factor." The trial court held adversely to this contention. In affirming the judgment the Supreme Court held that unity of use was not the controlling factor and, after quoting from section 1248 of the Code of Civil Procedure, relative to severance damages, said: "This very language limits in terms the award of damages to the property taken and the resultant damages to contiguous property injured by severance of the property taken." This language is not dictum. "Where there are two grounds, upon either of which the judgment of the trial court can be rested, and the appellate court sustains both, the ruling on neither is obiter, but each is the judgment of the court and of equal validity with the other." Union Pac. R. Co. v. Mason City & Ft. D. R. Co., 199 U. S. 160, 26 S. Ct. 19, 50 L. Ed. 134; Williams v. Southern Pac. Co., 54 Cal. App. 571, 579, 202 P. 356.

[3-5] It is further argued that the trial court unduly restricted the cross-examination of the plaintiff's witnesses. It is true that wide latitude should be allowed in the cross-examination of witnesses, but it is equally true that a trial court has "discretionary power over cross-examination which will be disturbed on appeal only in case of an abuse thereof." 27 Cal. Jur. 97. The field of inquiry in cross-examination for the purpose of testing the credibility of a witness and the weight of his testimony is so extensive that the trial court must be given a wide discretion in order to keep such examination within reasonable bounds; otherwise the trial of cases would be overlong. When an appellate court is called upon to decide whether such discretion has been abused, the inquiry is whether a sufficiently wide range has been allowed to test such credibility and weight rather than whether some particular question should have been allowed. People v. MacDonald, 167 Cal. 545, 547, 140 P. 256. The 5,000 pages of the reporter's transcript abundantly bear witness to the extreme liberality of the trial court in permitting a wide cross-examination of the witnesses in this case. When a question is asked for the ostensible purpose of testing the credibility of a witness or the weight of his testimony, the trial court has a reasonable discretion to determine whether that is in fact the purpose of the question or whether its real purpose is "to get the substance of the inquiry before the jury as an evidentiary fact." People v. Weber, 149 Cal. 325, 343, 86 P. 671, 678; People v. Ferdinand, 194 Cal. 555, 562, 229 P. 341. In this case the trial court was justified in the belief that the defendant's real purpose in attempting, by the cross-examination of the plaintiff's witnesses, to show the present selling price of water and electric power was to get those facts before the jury as evidence upon which to base calculations as to the prospective returns to be received by the plaintiff after the completion of the project. That such belief was not without foundation is shown by the argument of counsel for defendant before the jury, during which there was exhibited computations such as the following: "Available supply for domestic use, 200,000,000 gallons daily. Sale of water for domestic use at 10c per 1000 gallons, 200,000 times 10c, $20,000 per day. 365 x 20,000, $7,300,000 per year." The rulings of the trial court in excluding proof of the prices mentioned and similar evidence upon which to base speculative profits do not constitute an abuse of discretion under the authorities cited in the opinion.

Appellant contends that the cases cited in the opinion in support of the doctrine of relation of title "relate to rights respecting the land being condemned, intervening between the filing of suit, or lis pendens, and the payment of the award." There is nothing in the opinion of contrary import, and, since the titles finally acquired by the plaintiff to the lands in the first two suits relate back to the commencement thereof, the defendant's contention that he had established physical union between the lands in the third suit and the Arroyo Seco lands through the medium of those in the first two suits was certainly the assertion of "rights respecting the land being condemned" in those suits. If the owner of the lands in the third suit had retained the ownership thereof and had purchased all of the defendant's lands, with knowledge of the pendency of the first two suits, it would hardly be contended, the other circumstances being the same as stated, that he would be entitled to damages by reason of the severance of the lands in the third suit from the Arroyo Seco lands. It does not appear that the defendant's rights are in any respect different.

[6] Appellant says, in substance, that the plaintiff could have abandoned the first two proceedings at any time within 30 days after final judgment and at the same time could have taken the lands in the third proceeding and that, in such event, under the doctrine of relation as stated in the opinion, the defendant would have been deprived of severance damages to which he would have been entitled. Since the land was being condemned for reservoir purposes, it was absolutely necessary for the plaintiff to acquire at least the greater part of the lands in each suit. To have abandoned any one of the proceedings, therefore, would have been to abandon the project, for it seems clear that the plaintiff in a condemnation suit cannot, in effect, grant himself a new trial by the simple expedient of abandoning the proceeding after final judgment and then commencing another proceeding to condemn the same property. Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Thomas, 167 Ga. 110, 144 S. E. 739; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. City of Chicago, 143 Ill. 641, 32 N. E. 178; Robertson v. Hartenbower, 120 Iowa, 410, 94 N. W. 857; Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. City of Georgetown, 50 Wash. 580, 97 P. 659.

[7, 8] The three proceedings, at the time of the trial, were in the same court, between the same parties, and were being prosecuted for the condemnation of three adjoining parcels of land belonging to the defendant. The court made an order consolidating them. By such consolidation the three proceedings became one proceeding and should have been determined by a single verdict, "a single set of findings and a single judgment." Stanton v. Superior Court, 202 Cal. 478, 484, 261 P. 1001, 1003. There are in fact three verdicts, three sets of findings, and three judgments, but under the authority of the Stanton Case they are to be treated as one verdict, one set of findings, and one judgment. It logically follows that the plaintiff was without power to abandon any one of the original proceedings after final judgment without abandoning all of them and that, therefore, the defendant stood in no danger of being injured by a partial abandonment.

By the statement in the opinion that "the evidence would have supported a larger verdict" it was by no means intended to imply that the defendant was entitled to a larger award. It is equally true that there is evidence which would justify a smaller award. There is nothing in the record to warrant a holding on appeal that the award is not fair and just.

The petition is denied.

BURGE v. MIDWAY PACIFIC OIL CO.★
(Civ. 6221.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. July 3, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 19, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 29, 1929.

1. Corporations ⇄99(2)—Issuance of stock for extension of time to pay for oil property held not void, notwithstanding subsequent decree canceling seller's claim (Const. art. 12, § 11).

Issuance of stock to good faith claimant of oil property in his possession in consideration of extending time for payment of moneys due under contract of corporation's assignor to purchase it held supported by some consideration, and hence not void under Const. art. 12, § 11, as not issued for money paid, labor done or property actually received, notwithstanding subsequent decree canceling claim, where there was no evidence of fraud and corporation obtained actual possession of land and was taking large quantities of oil therefrom when obligation became due.

2. Corporations ⇄99(1)—Some consideration for issuance of stock emanating from legitimate transaction not tainted with fraud and intended to benefit corporation, satisfies Constitution (Const. art. 12, § 11).

Where there is some consideration, emanating from a legitimate transaction not tainted with fraud and intended to redound to benefit of corporation, requirement of Const. art. 12, § 11, that stock be issued for money paid, labor done, or property actually received, is satisfied so far as corporation or its stockholders are concerned.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; E. J. Marks, Judge.

Action by E. D. Burge against the Midway Pacific Oil Company, a corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hyams & Himrod, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Charles D. Swanner, of Santa Ana, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The defendant corporation is, and at all times referred to in this action was, engaged in business as the owner and operator of oil properties. In April, 1910, the plaintiff, then claiming to be the owner of a placer mining claim (oil property) in Kern county, entered into an agreement for the sale of the claim to one Atwood, who thereafter assigned to defendant corporation all of his rights under said agreement. Thereafter, on July 18, 1911, pursuant to an agreement between plaintiff and defendant, the defendant corporation issued to the plaintiff 20,000 shares of its capital stock, in consideration of the extension by plaintiff of the time for payment of moneys which had then become due under the Atwood agreement. In further consideration of the issuance of said stock, the obligation for the unpaid balance was placed in the form of a mortgage upon said oil lands, to become due at a date several years later. On January 18, 1913, an additional 20,000 shares of capital stock of defendant corporation was issued, in consideration of a further extension of the due date upon said mortgage.

The answer of the defendant rests upon its claim that said shares were issued without consideration; and that they were not issued for money paid, labor done, or property actually received by the defendant, and that the issuance thereof was void. The record shows that in a certain action of the United States of America against Brookshire Oil Company and others in the United States District Court for the Southern District of California, and in which both plaintiff Burge and the defendant Midway Pacific Oil Company were defendants, a final decree was entered on the 24th day of December, 1919. It was therein decreed that neither of the defendants "had at any time, or has, or have now," any estate, right, or title in or to the property described in said decree. The property so described included the property covered by the Atwood contract and by the mortgage made by defendant to plaintiff herein. In December, 1920, the board of directors of defendant passed a resolution declaring the cancellation of said shares of stock issued to plaintiff Burge, but did not take any proceedings in court to establish the cancellation thereof. In the present action judgment has been entered quieting plaintiff's title to said 40,000 shares of stock, and declaring that plaintiff is entitled to share with other stockholders in any dividend paid or to be paid and in any dividend of the capital assets of the corporation, in accordance with his ownership of said stock. From this judgment the defendant appeals.

[1, 2] The findings follow the complaint, and do not state any of the specific facts as to the consideration paid or given for the stock. The two principal findings upon this point are that the stock was issued for a valuable consideration, and that it is not true that said stock was issued without consideration, or that the same was not issued for money paid, labor done, or property actually received, by said corporation, or that the same was or is void. The sole point presented on this appeal is that the evidence does not sustain these findings. The evidence to which we have referred establishes beyond controversy that the plaintiff never had any right, title, or interest in the said oil lands. The decree in favor of the government established that fact, and by its terms declared "that the pretended placer mining claim * * * be, and hereby is, cancelled, set aside and declared null and void from the inception thereof."

Under the provisions of the Constitution (article 12, § 11) the issuance of said stock to plaintiff was void unless so issued "for money paid, labor done, or property actually received." We are of the opinion, however, that the evidence is sufficient to sustain the findings, notwithstanding the above-mentioned failure in defendant's title to the land conveyed by him to the plaintiff. So far as appears, the deed may have conveyed to defendant only the plaintiff's right, title, and interest in the land. Indeed, according to testimony of the witness Beazley, this was the fact. Plaintiff was the claimant in possession, and it is not shown that he was not making his claim in good faith. We have before us no evidence showing what fault or failure to meet legal requirements caused the claim to be lost. In the brief of appellant it is asserted that the claim was annulled on grounds of fraud, but there is no evidence in support of that assertion. By means of plaintiff's conveyance defendant obtained actual possession of the land, and thus was enabled to take from the land large quantities of oil. While thus in possession and while obtaining value from the land, defendant's obligation became, or was about to become, due. So far as appears, both parties at that time believed that the obligation was enforceable. It was under these circumstances that appellant transferred the shares of stock to plaintiff, and by that means obtained his agreement to postpone maturity of the contract, and (later) of the note and mortgage. This agreement having been fully performed, it became on both sides an executed agreement. We think that under the foregoing facts there was some consideration for the issuance of the stock. The rule applies, as stated by the Supreme Court in Wenban Estate, Inc., v. Hewlett, 193 Cal. 675, 704, 227 P. 723, 735: "And it is the rule that if there is some consideration emanating from a legitimate transaction, one not tainted with fraud, and intended to redound to the benefit of the corporation, the constitutional and statutory requirements for the issue of corporate bonds, in so far as the corporation or its stockholders are concerned, are satisfied. (McKee v. Title Ins. Co., 159 Cal. 206 [113 P. 140]; Cal. Trona Co. v. Wilkinson, 20 Cal. App. 694 [130 P. 190])."

In the case of O'Sullivan v. Griffith, 153 Cal. 502, 95 P. 873, 96 P. 323, plaintiff sued to recover $2,700 alleged to be due as the purchase price of all the right, title, and interest of plaintiff in certain street railroad franchises. The defendant alleged in his answer that because of the fact that "the proceedings by which the alleged franchises were granted to the original grantees were so defective in several particulars that they were wholly void and that, in consequence, the grants of the franchises were void, or, in other words, that the grantors of the defendant had no title to the franchises they attempted to convey to Griffith, that he received nothing for the transfer, and hence, that there was no consideration." Following a thorough consideration of the point involved, including a review of the authorities, the Supreme Court reached the conclusion that, in the absence of fraud or mistake, a simple grant whereby the grantor purports to convey only his right, title, and interest is a mere deed of quitclaim and "the grantee is not relieved from the obligation of paying the purchase price merely because the grantor had no title to the franchises." Syllabus.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. ALLARD. (Cr. 1782.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California. June 24, 1929.

Burglary $\Leftrightarrow$ 6—House in which owner and family resided was inhabited, though they were temporarily absent on night of burglary; "inhabitant"; "residence" (Pen. Code, § 460).

House in which owner and his family lived was "inhabited," as required by Pen. Code, § 460, to authorize conviction of unarmed person for first degree burglary, though they were temporarily absent therefrom on particular night; "inhabitant" of house being one who resides therein, and "inhabitant" and "residence" synonymous terms.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Inhabit; Inhabitant; Inhabitant; Residence.]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Joseph Albert Allard was convicted of first degree burglary, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Whelan, Whelan & Smith, of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John D. Richter, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CRAIG, J. The appellant was found guilty of first degree burglary, and was sentenced accordingly. He appeals, and bases his claim for reversal upon alleged insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict.

It appears that a house, the property of one R. P. Low, was burglarized by defendant, who at the time was unarmed. The crime was committed in the nighttime, and the house was not occupied on that particular night. Low and his family lived there, but, as testified by him, "were just away for two or three days."

The argument presented by appellant is that, under these circumstances, the house was not "inhabited" as required by section 460 of the Penal Code, in order that the burglary may be first degree where the person committing the crime is not armed with a deadly weapon.

An inhabitant of a house is one who resides therein, and "inhabitaney" and "residence" are synonymous terms. Harding v. Standard Oil Co. (C. C.) 182 F. 421. It has never been held that a person loses his residence by reason of a brief absence from the house where he lives, and without evidence of an intention to depart therefrom and go to live in some other place. Under a statute similar to ours, where a family lived in the house but were away on vacation, it was held to be an inhabited dwelling house. Mason v. State, 27 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 526.

We consider the evidence in this case entirely sufficient.

The judgment is affirmed.

99 Cal. App. 557

FOUCH v. WERNER. (Civ. 3807.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 21, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1002—Appellate court is bound by jury's fact finding on conflicting evidence.

Finding of fact by jury on conflicting evidence is binding on appellate court.

2. Automobiles ⇨171(9)—Failure to conform to statute respecting headlights is negligence per se, entitling plaintiff to recover, if proximate cause of accident (Motor Vehicle Act, § 99).

Failure to comply with Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 517) § 99, requiring motor vehicles from half hour after sunset to half hour before sunrise and at any time when there is not sufficient light to render clearly discernible a person, vehicle, or other substantial object on highway, to be equipped with lighted headlights, is negligence per se, and, if lack of such lights proximately contributes to collision and injuries to plaintiff, defendant is liable for damages, in absence of contributory negligence.

3. Evidence ⇨6—Court judicially notices when sun rises and sets and may so instruct jury (Code Civ. Proc. § 2102).

Court will take judicial notice of the time when sun rises and sets, and may so instruct the jury under Code Civ. Proc. § 2102.

4. Automobiles ⇨245(16, 52)—Where time of collision was in doubt, jury was required to determine whether headlights were required to be lighted, whether they were lighted, and whether omission proximately caused accident (Motor Vehicle Act, § 99).

Where time of collision between plaintiff's motorcycle and defendant's automobile was in doubt, in rendering judgment for plaintiff it was necessary for jury to first determine whether, pursuant to Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 517), § 99, the time of night or insufficiency of daylight required defendant's headlights to be lighted, whether they were actually lighted, and, if not, whether this omission proximately caused the accident, and verdict for plaintiff presupposes answering of all these questions adversely to defendant.

5. Automobiles ⇨246(10)—Trial ⇨243—Instructions which, after quoting statutes regulating automobiles, stated that violation of statute regulating traffic is negligence creating liability for proximate injuries caused thereby, held not inconsistent nor erroneous (Motor Vehicle Act, §§ 99, 129(a), 130(a)).

In action growing out of automobile and motorcycle collision at intersection, instructions which, after quoting Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 517) §§ 99, 129(a), and part of 130(a), respecting headlights, giving visible warning signal before turning, and necessity of going to left of central intersecting point in turning, stated that a violation of provision of statute or ordinance regulating conduct of people while using streets is of itself negligence, and if such violation is proximate cause of injury to another, former becomes liable to one so injured for all damage proximately resulting to latter thereby, provided latter was not himself guilty of negligence proximately contributing to injury, held neither inconsistent nor erroneous.

6. Negligence ⇨6—Application of general statutory rule defining negligence will be modified if unusual conditions exist, but existence of such conditions is matter of defense (Civ. Code § 1714).

Application of general rule stated in Civ. Code, § 1714, that negligence is omission to do something which ordinarily prudent person would have done under given circumstances, or the doing of something which an ordinarily prudent person would not have done under such circumstances, and is not absolute but always relates to circumstances of time, place, and person, will be modified by presence of unusual or extraordinary circumstances affecting transaction, but such unusual conditions are matters of defense, and when one claims existence of no such extraordinary circumstances and offers no instructions regarding them, he may not complain of instruction confined to a declaration of the general rule.

7. Trial ⇨260(1)—Refusal of instruction covered by instructions given was not prejudicial error.

Refusal of defendant's requested instruction sufficiently covered by other instructions was not prejudicial error.

8. Automobiles ⇨171(9)—Arm signals required in turning are intended, not only for drivers in rear, but for drivers of other vehicles which may be reasonably affected (Motor Vehicle Act, § 130).

The arm signals required by Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 517) § 130, in making a turn are intended as a warning, not only to drivers of machines in the rear, but also to drivers of any vehicles which may reasonably be affected by such movement.

9. Automobiles ⇨246(10)—It was unnecessary to charge entire language of statute respecting arm signal in turning, where sufficiency of such signal was not challenged (Motor Vehicle Act, §§ 99, 130).

Where motorcyclist injured in collision with defendant's automobile on a dark and rainy night did not challenge sufficiency of nature of arm signal given by defendant in making turn, but testified that defendant turned at intersection "without a horn, or any warning whatever," and placed his chief reliance on claim that defendant's headlights were not lighted as required by Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 517) § 99, it was unnecessary for court to give jury entire language of section 130 in charging it that before turning onto public highway driver shall give a signal plainly visible to driver of other vehicle.

10. Evidence ⇨471(10)—Refusal to strike out motorcyclist's testimony that, if defendant's automobile headlights had been on, he would have seen them, held not error as being conclusion (Motor Vehicle Act, § 99).

In action for injuries in collision between plaintiff's motorcycle and defendant's automobile at intersection on a dark and rainy night, in which chief controversy was whether defendant's headlights were lighted at time of accident as required by Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 517) § 99, refusal to strike out plaintiff's testimony that if defendant's headlights had been on he would have seen them, on ground that it was a conclusion, held not error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by Charles L. Fouch, by George W. Fouch, his guardian ad litem, against Clarence W. Werner. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Irving D. Gibson, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Martin I. Welsh, of Sacramento, for respondent.

THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment for damages for injuries sustained in a motorcycle accident.

The plaintiff was employed at a gas station located at Thirtieth and M streets in the city of Sacramento. At 6:30 p. m. on April 1, 1927, he mounted his motorcycle and started for home, traveling down Thirtieth street to Stockton boulevard, and thence southerly along the proper side of the boulevard to the point where it was intersected from the southwest by Thirty-Fifth street, which entered it at an angle of about 45 degrees. It was a dark and rainy night. The plaintiff was traveling at a speed of about 15 miles an hour. His headlight was lighted. There were no street lights at this particular corner. The defendant was driving his Chrysler automobile northerly along Thirty-Fifth street on his way to the office of the Sacramento Union where he was employed. There is evidence from which the jury may reasonably have inferred that his view to the left may have been obscured by side curtains, and that he failed to turn on his headlights. Arriving at the intersection of Thirty-Fifth street with Stockton boulevard, the defendant stopped his machine and then slowly turned to his left into the boulevard, running in intermediate gear not faster than 8 or 10 miles an hour. He did not observe the plaintiff's motorcycle approaching from the north. The front end of his machine had scarcely reached the middle line of Stockton boulevard when the crash occurred. The plaintiff claimed that in the driving rain and darkness he was unable to clearly see an object at a distance greater than from 10 to 50 feet, and that the defendant had no headlights lighted; that he first saw the defendant's machine about 10 feet ahead of him and directly in the course he was driving. The pavement was wet and slippery. He immediately applied his brakes but was unable to avoid the collision. His motorcycle struck the left rear fender and wheel of the defendant's car, which was whirled about by the force of the impact, and the plaintiff and his motorcycle were hurled along the pavement some distance. Probably as a result of his contact with the defendant's machine, the plaintiff sustained a very bad comminuted fracture of the lower left limb. The ankle and bones of his left foot were also crushed to an extent that the attending physician testified there would be a permanent defect which would impair his ability to walk. He was confined to the hospital 46 days, and was required to have the fracture reduced by means of an operation and the anchoring of the shattered bones by means of a silver plate. He endured great pain, and was walking with crutches at the time of the trial, six months after the accident occurred. The jury rendered a verdict of damages in the sum of $10,000.

[1] The chief controversy is over the question as to whether defendant's headlights were lighted at the time of the accident. There was a flat contradiction regarding this subject, and therefore, upon appeal, under the well-established rule, this court will be bound by the judgment.

The plaintiff testified as follows:

"It was raining at the time, was dark, and I turned on my lights and started down 30th street * * * to Stockton boulevard. * * *

It was about a quarter to seven. * * *

"Q. You say it was dark and stormy? A.
Yes. * * * It was dark.

"Q. Could you see the length of this room?
A. No sir. * * *

"Q. Could you see ahead as far as 200 feet?
* * * A. Just a blur. * * * I observed the speedometer. * * * I was going at the rate of about 15 miles an hour. * * *
As I approached 35th street and the Stockton boulevard, I was going along, operating my machine about 15 miles an hour, observing the traffic ahead of me, and as I came to 35th street, all of a sudden, this car appeared diagonally in front of me, without lights, without a horn, or any warning whatsoever. * * *
I applied my brakes.

"Q. How far was the car from you? A.
About ten feet. * * *

"Q. You do not know whether or not Mr.
Werner, the driver of the car that you ran into, had headlights or not. A. They were not on. * * * I could see his headlight.
* * *

"Q. Was that lit or not? A. It was not."

Mr. Perry, who was following in a machine about 100 feet behind the plaintiff at the time of the accident, testified that it was dark and drizzling and that the plaintiff was traveling about 15 miles an hour, and that he could discern objects only about 50 feet away. He said:

"Q. I will ask you * * * if the automobile that was involved in the collision had on headlights? A. I did not see any. * * *
I was looking straight forward. * * *

"Q. During all that time you saw no headlight? A. No."

Mr. Graham also testified on behalf of the plaintiff regarding this subject:

"Q. Did you see the lights of the defendant's car as it came into the upper Stockton boulevard? A. No, I did not see no lights.
* * * I did not examine the car. * * *
I turned over there [where it was parked] and looked at it; there were no lights on it."

The record leaves no real controversy over the fact that it was dark enough at the time of the accident to require the use of headlights pursuant to the Motor Vehicle Act.
The defendant himself testified:

"Q. When you left your home was it dark or light? A. It was dark.

"Q. Did you have your headlights on when you left the house? A. My headlights were on when I left."

[2] Section 99 of the Motor Vehicle Act of California (St. 1923, pp. 517, 546) provides that: "Every vehicle when upon any public highway within this state during the period from a half hour after sunset to a half hour before sunrise and at any other time when there is not sufficient light to render clearly discernible a person, vehicle or other substantial object on the highway at a distance of two hundred feet ahead, shall be equipped with lighted lamps and lighted headlights as herein respectively provided. * * *

Failure to conform to the foregoing statute with respect to the use of headlights is negligence per se. If the lack of such lights proximately contributed to the collision and consequent injuries which were sustained by the plaintiff, in the absence of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff the defendant would be liable for damages. *Chalmers
v. Hawkins*, 78 Cal. App. 733, 740, 248 P. 727; Fenn v. Clark, 11 Cal. App. 79, 103 P. 944; 19
Cal. Jur. 632, § 65.

[3] It is true that the court will take judicial notice of the time when the sun rises and sets (Jones on Evidence [3d Ed.] 171, § 129;
People v. Chee Kee, 61 Cal. 404; *People v.
Mayes*, 113 Cal. 618, 45 P. 860), and may so instruct the jury. (Section 2102, Code Civ.
Proc.) It is also true that the sun set at 6:29 o'clock p. m. on April 1, 1927, according to the government weather bureau reports.

[4] Since the exact time when the accident occurred is somewhat in doubt, in rendering a judgment for plaintiff it became necessary for the jury to first determine: (1) Whether, pursuant to statute, the time of night, or the insufficiency of daylight, required the headlights to be lighted; (2) whether they were actually lighted; and (3) if not, whether this omission proximately caused the accident.
The verdict of the jury presupposes the answering of all these questions adversely to the defendant, and while there is a direct conflict of testimony, the record contains substantial evidence upon which to support the judgment upon each of these issues.

There was some testimony on the part of the defendant tending to impeach the plaintiff respecting the rate of speed at which he contended his motorcycle was traveling at the time of the accident. But in view of the conflict of evidence the verdict of the jury is also conclusive on this subject.

[5] The appellant contends that the court erred in giving certain instructions which he claims are conflicting and inconsistent. At the request of the plaintiff the court quoted sections 99, 129(a), and a portion of 130(a) of the Motor Vehicle Act, with respect to the necessity of maintaining lighted headlights on the automobile, the giving of a visible warning signal before changing the course of a machine on a public highway, and the necessity of turning the course of a machine by going to the left of the central intersecting point of streets, and added the following: "A violation of a provision of a statute (or ordinance) intended to regulate the conduct of people while in the use of the streets or highways is of itself negligence, and if such violation on the part of any person so using the streets or highways is the proximate cause of an injury to another, the former would thereby be liable to the one so injured for all of the damage proximately resulting to the latter thereby, provided that the latter was not himself guilty of negligence which proximately contributed to his own injury."

At the request of the defendant the court also instructed the jury that "unless it was proven by a preponderance of the evidence that he (the defendant) failed to use ordinary care, the verdict must be in favor of the defendant."

These instructions, which were given in the language of the statute, were neither inconsistent nor erroneous. Pemberton v. Arny, 42 Cal. App. 19, 183 P. 356; Squier v. Davis Standard Bread Co., 181 Cal. 533, 185 P. 391; 19 Cal. Jur. 764, § 157. Ordinarily injuries sustained as a result of the violation of a statute are actionable on the theory that such conduct constitutes negligence per se. The exercise of ordinary care requires the observance of statutes or ordinances with relation to a particular subject. 19 Cal. Jur. 632, § 65; 20 R. C. L. 38, § 33; 1 Thompson's Comm. on Neg. 12, § 10. The omission to observe the mandates of a regulatory statute is itself evidence of negligence. Mora v. Favilla, 186 Cal. 199, 202, 199 P. 17. If this failure to conform to the statute proximately contributes to the accident complained of, it will become the basis of an action for damages. Circumstances may exist which refute the assumption of negligence for the breach of a regulatory statute, such as the necessity for prompt action in an emergency, the obstruction of a portion of the highway along which it is ordinarily proper to drive compelling the operator of a machine to use the wrong side, or the sudden disconnecting of the wiring system of an automobile causing the extinguishing of the headlights. But such unusual circumstances become matters of defense, the burden of proving which rests upon the one who is charged with a violation of the statute. In the present case no such unusual conditions or circumstances existed or are relied upon by the appellant. There was therefore no error in the giving of these instructions.

The appellant contends that the foregoing instructions with relation to the violation of the Motor Vehicle Act are inconsistent with the following charge, which was given to the jury: "Negligence is either the omission of a person to do something which an ordinarily prudent person would have done under given circumstances or the doing of something which an ordinarily prudent person would not have done under such circumstances. It is not absolute or to be measured in all cases in accordance with some precise standard but always relates to some circumstance of time, place and person. * * *"

[6] This appears to be a correct statement of the law. It is true that an essential ingredient of actionable negligence is the omission to perform a duty which the law imposes upon one (1 Thompson's Comm. on Neg. 4, § 3), and that the term "negligence" has no fixed or invariable application, but, as the court says in the last-quoted instruction, it must depend upon surrounding circumstances and conditions. 19 Cal. Jur. 549, § 4. A definition of what constitutes negligence must therefore be relative and variable in its application, dependent upon the surrounding circumstances. The standard of care employed in section 1714 of the Civil Code, the purport of which was given in the last-quoted instruction, is a mere adoption of Baron Alderson's familiar definition of the term negligence as it appears in the celebrated case of Blyth v. Birmingham Waterworks Co., 11 Exch. 784. It accepts as the test the standard of an ordinarily prudent man under normal circumstances, and leaves it for the jury to determine what such an individual would do under such circumstances. The presence of unusual or extraordinary circumstances affecting the transaction will always modify the application of the general rule. These unusual conditions are, however, matters of defense, and when one claims the existence of no such extraordinary circumstances and offers no proposed instructions regarding such exceptions, he may not complain of a charge to the jury which is confined to a declaration of the general rule. Mora v. Favilla, 186 Cal. 199, 199 P. 17.

[7-10] There was no prejudicial error in refusing defendant's instruction C respecting the credibility of witnesses and the weight of testimony, for the reason that they were sufficiently covered by defendant's instructions T and U. Nor was the modification of defendant's instruction D erroneous. There was no serious controversy regarding the nature or seriousness of plaintiff's injuries. The portion of the instruction which was eliminated is sufficiently covered by plaintiff's instruction No. 2, which was given and which clearly charges the jury that the burden is upon the plaintiff "to prove his case by a preponderance of the evidence." The same observation also applies to the modification and refusal of defendant's instructions Q and V, respectively. It was unnecessary for the court to give to the jury the entire language of section 130 of the Motor Vehicle Act in charging it that before turning onto a public highway the driver "shall give a signal plainly visible to the driver of such other vehicle" indicating his intention so to do. The nature or sufficiency of the signal was not challenged by the plaintiff. It was not contended that an improper signal was given. The plaintiff testified that the defendant turned into Stockton boulevard "without a horn, or any warning whatever." The defendant did testify that he extended his arm in the proper manner before turning into the boulevard. He offered no instruction upon this subject. The arm signals required by statute are intended as a warning not only to drivers of machines in the rear but also to the drivers of "any other vehicle (which) may reasonably be affected by such movement." Moreover, it is quite evident from the record that the chief act of negligence relied upon was the claim that defendant's headlights were not lighted. If defendant's machine could not be seen by the plaintiff, the operating signals would be unavailing. The jury was quite fully instructed regarding the material issues of the case. There appears to have been no prejudicial error in the court's charge. There was no error in refusing to strike out the plaintiff's reply to the effect that if the defendant's headlights had been on he could have seen them. It does not appear to be a conclusion for one to state he could have seen lighted headlights under the circumstances disclosed by the record. Nor does there appear to have been prejudicial error in any of the other rulings of the court respecting the introduction of the evidence.

The judgment is affirmed.

LOS ANGELES COUNTY v. DELAHUNT
et al. (Civ. 5464.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 22, 1929.

1. Bail ☞89(2)—Absence of notice to appear after long silence held unavailable to surety not pleading statute of limitations.

Contention that parties to bail bond should not be held responsible for principal's failure to be present when called for arraignment after silence of over six years, without notice that case would then be called for trial, held unavailable to surety not pleading statute of limitations, but relying solely on plea of laches in bar of stale demand.

2. Bail ☞75—Failure to aver timely call for arraignment or trial, notice to appear, excuse for delay, and acts constituting felony charged, held not open to surety on bail bond.

Alleged defects in complaint and attached bail bond in not showing that principal was called for arraignment or trial within 60 days after being held to answer or notified or called to appear on date case was called for arraignment, nor alleging excuse for long delay between filing of information and arraignment date, erroneously alleging that act charged constituted a felony, and not specifying nature of felony charged, held not open to surety.

3. Pleading ☞8(6)—Allegation of complaint in action on bail bond, that case was duly and regularly called for arraignment, held not mere conclusion.

Allegation of complaint in action on bail bond, that case was duly and regularly called for arraignment, held sufficient as against contention that it stated a mere conclusion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Action by Los Angeles County against M. J. Delahunt and Mrs. H. C. Eggleston. From a judgment against defendant Eggleston, she appeals. Affirmed.

Scherrer & McCarty, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

E. W. Mattoon, Co. Counsel, and McIntyre Faries, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. The respondent county of Los Angeles instituted an action upon a bail bond furnished by one James E. Merritt and signed by the defendants, Delahunt and Eggleston. Mrs. Eggleston's demurrer to the complaint having been overruled, she was given ten days within which to answer, but failed to do so, whereupon her default was entered. Judgment was accordingly rendered, entered, and docketed against the last-named defendant for the amount specified in the undertaking, with interest and costs, and she appeals therefrom.

The complaint alleged that on August 29, 1919, complaint was filed in the justice's court, charging Merritt with having committed lewd and lascivious acts, a felony; that after a hearing he was held to answer in the superior court and committed to the custody of the sheriff until he should give bail in the sum of $500. It appears that on September 2, 1919, such bond was signed by the defendants, that it was filed on September 8, 1919; and it is alleged further that "the said James E. Merritt was under and solely by virtue of the terms of said bail bond, released from the custody of the sheriff of Los Angeles county."

The bond is attached to the complaint as an exhibit, and in paragraph IV, which is the center of attack, it is averred: "That within thirty (30) days after said commitment, the district attorney of the county of Los Angeles, state of California, filed in the superior court of the state of California, in and for said county, a certain information entitled 'The People of the State of California vs. James E. Merritt,' No. 14579 on the records of said court; that thereafter the said case was duly and regularly called for arraignment on January 25th, 1926, in Department 18 of said court; * * * that at said time the said James E. Merritt did not appear and was not present in court and did not render himself amenable to the order and process of said court, whereupon the court ordered that the bail of said defendant, James E. Merritt, be forfeited, which forfeiture was duly entered upon the minutes of said court."

The bond in question required that: "James E. Merritt, the defendant in the action pending as aforesaid, will appear and answer to the charge above mentioned, in whatever court it may be prosecuted, and will at all times hold—self amenable to the order and process of the court. * * *"

[1] The principal grounds of demurrer relied upon are that the complaint is uncertain, ambiguous, and unintelligible, in that it cannot be ascertained therefrom that the defendant "was ever at any time or at all advised or notified that on said day he was to be and appear for arraignment before the said or any superior court of the state of California in and for the county of Los Angeles." General authorities holding a defendant and his sureties amenable to orders of the court and responsible for his appearance under the provisions of an undertaking, are not attempted to be questioned by appellant. The effect of her argument is that such provisions should not receive a construction rendering them binding for all time, without notice, that they should be reasonably construed, and that the parties to such an instrument ought not to be legally held responsible for a failure to be present when called for arraignment after a silence of six years and four months, without any intimation that the case would then be called for trial. A complete answer to this contention is, however, that the defendant did not plead the statute of limitations, but seeks to rely solely upon a plea of laches, in bar of a "stale demand," and the authorities cited in her behalf involve equity proceedings. Kleinclaus v. Dutard, 147 Cal. 245, 81 P. 516, and Wadleigh v. Phelps, 149 Cal. 627, 87 P. 93, were, respectively, for the declaration of an express trust, and to have certain formal deeds declared mortgages in fact. No authority is cited, and we are aware of none, denying the right to recover moneys admittedly due upon an obligation in writing after unusual delay, where, as here, the only defense consists of a general demurrer upon the ground that the complaint fails to state a cause of action.

[2, 3] Particular alleged frailties in the complaint and accompanying exhibit specifically attacked by the demurrer are, that it does not appear that the defendant was called for arraignment or trial within sixty days after he was held to answer, or that he was notified or called to appear on January 25, 1926; that there is no allegation attempting to excuse the long delay between the filing of the information and the date set for arraignment; that the allegation that defendant Merritt was charged with lewd and lascivious acts, a felony, and the recital of the attached bond as an exhibit that he was held for examination "upon a charge of * * * a felony," is insufficient in that lewd and lascivious acts do not constitute a felony, and the bail bond does not attempt to specify the nature of the felony, if any, with which he was charged. These issues are not open to the appellant. Her obligation does not provide that she shall be relieved of liability in case the indictment is void or if the prosecution shall fail for any reason, but only if the defendant shall appear as stipulated. County of Los Angeles v. Rickert, 84 Cal. App. 403, 258 P. 134; Southern Surety Co. v. United States, 23 F.(2d) 55 (C. C. A.); St. Lawrence County v. Goldberg, 175 App. Div. 88, 161 N. Y. S. 641. The attempted criticism that the allegation that "the case was duly and regularly called for arraignment" states but a conclusion, is not well taken. It has repeatedly been held that this expression is sufficient, and that it is not subject to the subtle refinement here asserted. Gurnsey v. Northern California Power Co., 7 Cal. App. 534, 94 P. 858. Other points advanced do not require discussion.

The judgment is affirmed.

COMEAU v. BANK OF ITALY. (Civ. 5438.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 24, 1929.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Aug. 22, 1929.

1. Limitation of actions $\S$ 58(4)—Right of action against stockholder for corporation's debts accrues at same time as that against corporation.

Right of action against stockholder on his liability as such for debts of corporation accrues at same time as that against corporation.

2. Corporations $\S$ 244(2)—Executor of one transferring stock in brokerage corporation before it sold pledged bonds held not liable to pledgor for damages.

Executor, whose testator transferred his stock in brokerage corporation before it sold pledged bonds for less than amount thereof to pay pledgor's indebtedness to it held not liable to pledgor for damages by corporation's breach of contract; its liability being only that of ordinary bailee of personal property until pledgor's debt to it accrued and it exercised right to dispose of bonds for satisfaction thereof.

3. Trial $\S$ 397(1)—Findings held sufficient as against contention that there was no finding respecting brokerage corporation's alleged agreement not to sell pledged bonds without demanding payment of debt.

In actions to enforce stockholders' liability for indebtedness of brokerage corporation to pledgor of bonds sold by it for less than amount thereof to pay pledgor's debt to it, findings including agreement showing no stipulation that plaintiff's securities should not be sold without demand on plaintiff for payment of sums due, as alleged, and stating that no other or different special contract was made concerning them, and that bonds were sold on plaintiff's order, held sufficient as against contention that there was no finding as to such allegation.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Actions by W. A. Comeau against the Bank of Italy, a corporation, as executor of the last will and testament of A. T. Connard, deceased, and another. Judgments for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wiley & Harvey, of Bakersfield, for appellant.

F. E. Borton and James Petrini, both of Bakersfield, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. Appellant herein brought actions against the respective parties above named to enforce an asserted stockholders' liability against A. M. Kean and the Bank of Italy as executor of the estate of A. T. Connard, deceased, as stockholders of Wm. H. Reid & Co., Inc., a corporation. After trial in the superior court of both cases on the same evidence, judgment was rendered in each in favor of the defendants, and the plaintiff appeals from each judgment.

The facts involved are as follows: Wm. H. Reid & Co., Inc., was a California corporation engaged in conducting a stock and bond brokerage business at Taft, Cal. On December 29, 1923, the plaintiff Comeau, opened a trading account with the corporation, whereby Reid & Co., as ordered, agreed to buy or sell, for the account of Comeau stocks, bonds, and securities for the purpose of securing the payment by the latter of any sums for which he might become obligated to the corporation. He deposited with it five bonds of the Brandram-Henderson Company, a corporation, two of which were of the denomination of $500 each and three of which were of the denomination of $1,000 each. On March 11, 1924, Connard transferred stock of the corporation then belonging to them. In June, 1924, Reid & Co. sold the bonds deposited with them for $3,536.38. On the last-named date Connard owed Reid & Co. $249.67, and the difference was never paid.

[1,2] Upon these facts but one issue of law is presented; that is, did the liability of Reid & Co. to the plaintiff accrue before or after Kean and Connard ceased to be stockholders of Reid & Co.? The right of action against the stockholder upon his liability as such for debts of the corporation accrues at the same time as against the corporation. Miller v. Lane, 160 Cal. 90, 116 P. 58. The authorities principally relied upon by appellant may be distinguished from the case before us without difficulty. The leading decision of Coulter Dry Goods Co. v. Wentworth, 171 Cal. 500, 153 P. 939, involved the purchase of goods to be delivered at a later date. It was an unconditional purchase at a fixed price, containing no element of uncertainty as to accrual of the liability of the corporation either as to event, time or amount of payment. The same is true of Chambers v. Farnham, 182 Cal. 191, 187 P. 732, and other lease cases cited by appellant.

We think the California case most similar to this one is Cutting v. Oliphant, 27 Cal. App. 120, 148 P. 940. The Cutting company made an arrangement by which it turned over to the Oliphant company 1,000 cases of tomatoes, upon an understanding with the last-named company that it was to sell them, and, if necessary to meet its obligations, use the proceeds for that purpose. This it did, but failed to pay the Cutting company the price of the tomatoes and certain other incidental items. Suit was brought against the defendants as stockholders of the Oliphant company. It was held that the liability of this corporation accrued on the date of the actual receipt and use of the money derived from the sale of the tomatoes. Until the cases were sold no obligation existed to pay the Cutting company anything. Up to that time the liability was contingent and while so the stockholders were free from this burden.

The situation in the instant case is similar in this respect. While the bonds were merely held by Reid & Co., at least before appellant became indebted to them, no liability had accrued in his favor which could give rise to this cause of action. The bonds were held as a pledge, and the pledgor could have secured their possession at any time; but he could not have maintained an action against the pledgee for their value, based upon their contract, nor for damages for its breach. This is obvious. The right had not come into being. Its birth was still contingent upon the happening of certain events. Until, pursuant to the contract between them, some debt accrued in favor of Reid & Co., and until it exercised its right to dispose of the bonds to satisfy that right, it rested under no liability to the pledgor except that of an ordinary bailee of personal property; until then no debt was incurred by the Reid company. Before that had been done there could have been no breach of contract by the pledgee, and until such a breach occurred no stockholders' liability could have existed, since it is based on a claim for damages for breach of contract. Coulter Dry Goods Co. v. Wentworth et al, supra.

[3] The findings are sufficient. Apparently appellant's criticism of them is not much relied upon nor strongly urged. It is said that there is no finding as to the allegation that plaintiff's securities should not be sold without demand upon him for payment of any sums which he might owe Reid & Co. The findings include the agreement which shows no such stipulation. They further state that no other or different special contract was made between the parties concerning the bonds than that stated, and that the bonds were sold on the order of appellant.

No other points require consideration.

The judgment is affirmed.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. This is a motion to dismiss the appeal in this action on the ground that appellant has failed to comply with that portion of rule VIII of the Rules of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, reading as follows: "The briefs must present each point separately, under an appropriate heading, showing the nature of the question to be presented." The brief here consists of about four pages of printed matter, all under the heading "Statement of the Case." There is no pretense of a heading to show the nature of the point to be discussed. It evidences an entire disregard of the rule—probably on the theory that, since the brief is short, this court could with little labor read it in its entirety. In cases of a direct violation of the rule, where are we to draw the line, if not by requiring a substantial compliance with the rule? If four pages can be filed without incurring the penalty of dismissal, why not twice or five or ten times that number, and so on until the rule becomes a dead letter? We think we must require compliance with the rule in all cases. Appellant's brief was filed April 27, 1928. No substantial prejudice can result to respondent by giving appellant an opportunity to correct his error.

Appellant's brief is stricken from the files, and he is given 30 days within which to file his opening brief.

METZLER v. LOS ANGELES RAILWAY CORPORATION et al. (Civ. 6213.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. June 28, 1929.

Carriers ⇨339—Gross negligence of carrier in rate of speed does not make it liable to passenger whose negligence was proximate cause of accident.

Where negligence of passenger was proximate cause of accident, carrier is not liable for her injury, though it may have been guilty of gross or wanton and willful negligence in operation of its train at an excessive rate of speed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank C. Collier, Judge.

Action by Stephine Olga Metzler against the Los Angeles Railway Corporation and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. B. Drake, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, Paul Blackwood, and Norman S. Sterry, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

YORK, J. Plaintiff and appellant brought this action to recover for personal injuries sustained by her as result of alleged negligence of the defendants. Defendants denied the negligence, and in their answers affirmatively alleged contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff. Upon trial of the issues thus presented, the court, sitting without a jury, rendered judgment in favor of defendants.

Appellant now maintains that the findings made by the court are not responsive to the issues presented by the pleadings, that they are uncertain, vague, unintelligible, not precise or exact, and do not support the judgment, and urges that the court should have found upon the degree of defendants' negligence, and further, that the findings show defendants guilty of gross negligence and that contributory negligence is not a defense thereto.

The court found that the defendant corporation maintained a station at the place of the accident, that the relation of carrier and passenger existed at the time of the accident, and that defendant Chase negligently operated the train at a high rate of speed, but that plaintiff's contributory negligence was the proximate cause of the injury.

Upon a thorough examination of the record before us, which came up on a judgment roll only, we are of the opinion that the findings are responsive to the issues presented by the pleadings and are sufficient to support the judgment.

It was a question for the trial court to determine, from the evidence offered at the trial, whether the negligence of defendants or the contributory negligence of plaintiff was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury. Having decided that plaintiff's negligence was the proximate cause of the accident, it was not incumbent upon the court to find as to the degree of defendants' negligence.

In the case of Sego v. Southern Pacific Co., 137 Cal. 405, 70 P. 279, it was held by the Supreme Court that, even though a railroad company may have been guilty of gross or wanton and willful negligence in operating a train at an excessive rate of speed, still, where it appeared that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence proximately the cause of the accident, a judgment of nonsuit was proper. For a discussion of this and other analogous cases, see Atkins v. Bouchet, 86 Cal. App. 294, 260 P. 828; Trulsson v. Southern Pacific Co., 42 Cal. App. 404, 183 P. 686. The difficulty with appellant's case is that we have not before us the evidence. So far as here appears, the evidence may have proved as a fact that the negligence of appellant was the proximate cause of the accident.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

AMERICAN MULTIGRAPH SALES CO. v.
CHARLES W. CRADICK CO. (Civ. 5347.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 24, 1929.

Judgment  301—After dismissal of claim and delivery case, court could not amend to render judgment for defendant for return of property or its value (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 520, 581, subd. 1).

Where, in action in claim and delivery, on failure of defendant to post redelivery bond, property was seized and delivered to sheriff, and, on demurrer to complaint being sustained, judgment of dismissal was entered, providing for recovery by defendant of costs, held, that court was without authority to thereafter amend judgment to provide that defendant receive back property or its value; such judgment not being authorized by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 520, 581, subd. 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harry A. Hollzer, Judge.

Action in claim and delivery by the American Multigraph Sales Company against the Charles W. Cradick Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

John A. Wallis, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Charles W. Cradick, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. The plaintiff instituted a claim and delivery action against defendant, gave bond as required, and commanded the sheriff to take the personal property described in the complaint. Upon failure of the defendant to post a redelivery bond, the sheriff, who had seized the property, delivered it to the plaintiff. The defendant interposed a demurrer to the complaint, which on September 14, 1925, was sustained. Instead of amending his pleading, the plaintiff, on the same day, filed a dismissal of his action with the clerk. Thereafter, and on September 28, 1925, the court below entered a judgment of dismissal, which provided that defendant have and recover his costs "taxed at $——." Subsequent to the date of this judgment, and on February 2, 1926, the court below amended its judgment of September 28, 1925, adjudging, among other things, "that defendants receive back that certain property taken from them by the sheriff [describing it], or, in the event such delivery cannot be had, the value thereof, to wit, four hundred twenty dollars, together with the sum of one hundred dollars as damages for the taking and the withholding of said property." It is from this judgment that plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

The facts which we have recited are taken from the appellant's brief under the authority of rule V of the rules for the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, the respondent having failed to file any reply brief although the opening brief was filed in this court more than two years ago. Subdivision 1 of section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that an action may be dismissed "by the plaintiff, by written request to the clerk, filed with the papers in the case, at any time before the trial, upon payment of his costs: Provided, a counterclaim has not been set up, or affirmative relief sought by the cross-complaint or answer of the defendant. If a provisional remedy has been allowed, the undertaking must thereupon be delivered by the clerk to the defendant, who may have his action thereon." Section 520 of the same Code provides that the notice, undertaking and affidavit originally handed to the sheriff, together with his proceedings thereon shall be delivered to the clerk within 20 days after the property is taken. That the plaintiff here sought and was allowed a provisional remedy there can be no doubt. That the first-quoted section provides a manner and method whereby the defendant may obtain relief in such a case as this is equally free from doubt. That the defendant would also have an action against the plaintiff for the wrongful taking and conversion of the property is the holding in Tapscott v. Lyon, 103 Cal. 297, 37 P. 225, involving a similar dismissal after answer filed. But it must be apparent that after the dismissal of the action the court was without authority to render a judgment in favor of the defendant, for the reason that nothing was therein pending.

Judgment reversed.

Proceeding on execution by A. Brandon against Frank F. Faria and wife. From an order confirming a report of the appraisers, the wife appeals. Affirmed.

PER CURIAM. An appeal from an order confirming a report of appraisers appointed in a proceeding on execution against certain property selected by appellant, Adeline Faria, as a homestead.

The declaration of homestead was recorded on October 25, 1922. The family of the claimant consisted of her husband, Frank F. Faria, and two minor children, the issue of the marriage. On April 4, 1924, Frank F. Faria by deed of gift conveyed the property to appellant, who, on October 27, 1926, by a similar deed conveyed the same to the two minor children mentioned, reserving to herself a life estate therein. On July 26, 1926, in an action brought by appellant against her husband for divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty, an interlocutory decree was entered, awarding her the custody of the minor children and requiring her husband to pay a sum monthly for her support and the support of the minors, but making no assignment or other disposition of the homestead. On February 17, 1927, an action, numbered 93935, was brought in the superior court of Alameda county by respondent Brandon against appellant, her two minor children, and her husband, Frank F. Faria, alleging that on February 5, 1927, a money judgment for $432.76 was entered against the latter in favor of respondent, who was an assignee, and that an execution issued thereon had been returned wholly unsatisfied. The complaint further alleged that the above deed of gift was without consideration and made with the intent and purpose to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors of Faria, including the assignors of respondent, and prayed judgment that as to respondent the deed be declared void. Frank F. Faria defaulted, and appellant, with the minor children, who appeared by a guardian ad litem, answered, denying the alleged insolvency of Faria and the fraudulent purpose of the deed.

The court found in accordance with the allegations of the complaint, and on June 13, 1927, entered judgment against appellant for the amount of the money judgment referred to in the complaint, which amount she had previously deposited in court, and the judgment so last entered was satisfied on June 23, 1927.

According to the petition in the present proceeding—which was filed on June 29, 1927, and the allegations of which are not denied—a judgment was entered against Faria and in favor of the respondent on the same day in an action in the superior court of Alameda county, which was numbered 96338. This judgment, the evidence shows, was for $2,829.53, and was entered upon a claim assigned to petitioner. It was further alleged that on the same day an execution was issued thereon and levied upon the property claimed as a homestead; that no previous execution arising out of the judgment had been levied thereon; and that Faria had no other property subject to execution. It was also alleged that the property was of a value greater than $5,000. Appellant answered the petition, alleging the conveyance to her by her husband; that he had no further interest in the property; and that the same was owned by the minor children, subject to her life estate therein; and further that an interlocutory decree of divorce had been entered in the divorce action mentioned.

After a hearing an order appointing three persons to appraise the property claimed as a homestead was made. Thereafter a report by the appraisers was filed, in which the property with the improvements thereon was appraised at the sum of $19,000, the improvements consisting of a dwelling house, barn, and outbuildings, being appraised at the sum of $1,000. The appraisers further reported that the property could be divided without material injury, and described a portion which was alleged to be suitable for a homestead. After a hearing thereon the report was confirmed, an order was made directing the appraisers to set apart to appellant and her husband as a homestead the portion of the land described in the order and permit execution of the judgment upon the remainder.

Appellant contends that it was not shown that Frank F. Faria had any interest in the property on or after June 29, 1927, the date of the entry of the judgment sought to be enforced in the present proceeding, or that the deed to appellant was fraudulent as to the assignors of respondent, and that consequently the order was erroneous.

[1, 2] It is not claimed that the homestead was selected from appellant's separate property, but whether the selection was from the community property or the property of her husband does not appear. She was entitled, however, to select from either (Civ. Code, § 1238), and the conveyance of the property subsequently executed by her husband as between them vested the same in her as her separate property, but did not impair the homestead or destroy the right of survivorship created thereby to the extent of the interest conveyed. Wall v. Brown, 162 Cal. 307, 122 P. 478; Estate of Beer, 178 Cal. 56, 171 P. 1062. Nor did the interlocutory decree of divorce have that effect. Remley v. Remley, 49 Cal. App. 489, 193 P. 604; Strupelle v. Strupelle, 59 Cal. App. 526, 211 P. 248; Radich v. Radich, 64 Cal. App. 605, 222 P. 182.

[3-6] Appellant suggests that subsequent to the entry of the order appealed from a final decree was entered in the divorce action, but this fact, if true, is not material to the question whether the order previously made was erroneous. As held in Stone v. McCann, 79 Cal. 460, 21 P. 863, while a claimant is entitled to a hearing upon a petition in a proceeding for the appraisal of a homestead, no formal trial of the issues nor any findings are contemplated by the statute. If a judgment valid on its face be shown, and the execution has been levied on the homestead, which appears to be of greater value than $5,000, appraisers should be appointed. Appellant, however, relying upon the deed from her husband, answered the petition, claiming that he had no further interest in the property. No evidence touching this issue is disclosed in the record except the deed mentioned and the judgment roll in action No. 93935, which, as stated, contains the finding that the deed was without consideration and made with the intent and purpose to delay, hinder, and defraud the creditors of Faria. When the debt sought to be enforced in the present proceeding was incurred does not appear. Assuming, however, that it was after the execution of the deed, the facts found above were prima facie evidence of an intent to defraud subsequent creditors (Hemenway v. Thaxter, 150 Cal. 737, 90 P. 116), which fraud respondent as the assignee of a creditor could assert (Kemp v. Enemark, 194 Cal. 748, 230 P. 441); and if the question of Faria's interest was material in this proceeding, as appellant claims, the order appointing appraisers impliedly determined the issue against her, and the evidence supports the decision. If, on the other hand, as contended by respondent, the question of title is not involved in a proceeding of this character, appellant's claim of ownership, if valid against creditors, can be established in a proper action.

We find no merit in the appeal, and the order is accordingly affirmed.

SCHNITMAN v. HUSTED et al. (Civ. 6824.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 29, 1929.

1. Landlord and tenant §37—Lease must be considered in its entirety to ascertain intention of parties (Civ. Code, § 1641).

Under Civ. Code, § 1641, lease must be considered in its entirety to ascertain intention of parties, and interpretation of language used is not to be arrived at by considering questioned clause as if it stood alone, but by consideration of entire instrument, and, if it appears therefrom that parties have used word or expression in certain sense, that meaning will be imported which parties have shown they intended by other parts of instrument.

2. Landlord and tenant §148(1)—Under lease providing lessor should pay taxes, and that lessee could extend term on same terms, except regarding amount of rent, which should be 4½ per cent. net on appraisement, lessor must pay taxes during renewal term.

Under lease providing that lessor should pay taxes on real estate, and that income from rental should be net to lessor, and not subject to deduction or expense connected with maintenance of property, and providing that lessee could extend term for additional ten-year period on same terms, except as to amount of rent which was to be calculated at rate of 4½ per cent. net on appraisement of land, lessor must pay taxes on real estate during renewal term.

3. Appeal and error §882(6)—Defendants could not remove from case, after adverse ruling, issue they tendered.

Defendants, the appellants, could not remove from case, after adverse ruling, issue which they tendered.

4. Landlord and tenant §53(2)—Successors in interest of lessors could not claim they were not bound by understanding between original parties, where they sought to bind successor in interest of lessee.

Successors in interest of lessors could not claim they were not bound by understanding between original parties as regards renewal of lease when they sought to so bind successor in interest of lessee.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action by Mary Schnitman against R. L. Husted and another to fix the amount of rent during a renewal term. From the judgment, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche and R. L. Husted, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

M. C. Sloss and Frederick W. Kant, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. Plaintiff and defendants are, respectively, successors in interest of the lessee and lessors under a lease of real property in San Francisco. The lease provided for a renewal term of ten years without definitely fixing the amount of rental for such renewal term. The parties being unable to agree upon the amount, and the arbitration provided for in the lease having failed, the plaintiff brought this action in the superior court, and had the court fix by judgment the amount of rent to be paid under the terms of the lease during the renewal term. The defendants appeal from the judgment, claiming that the court erred in its interpretation of the lease, because it decided that defendants should continue to pay taxes assessed upon the land, notwithstanding the lease contained a clause to the effect that such rent should be calculated at the rate of 4½ per cent. net on the appraisement of the land. The appraised value of the land was determined by the appraisement committee of the San Francisco real estate board pursuant to stipulation of the parties.

It is only necessary to set out herein two clauses of the lease, but it should be stated that, at the time of the original lease, the land was vacant, and the lessee agreed in the lease to erect a certain building thereon. These two provisions follow:

"8. The lessor to pay all state, city and county taxes which may be assessed upon the real estate only. The lessee to pay all like taxes that may be assessed on the improvements during the entire term hereby created, and the same shall be paid to the first party at least five days before the same shall become delinquent by law and said second party agrees to pay all assessments that may arise out of the improvements on said property or of the streets or sidewalks surrounding the same, to the end that the income from the rental above specified may be net to said first party and not subject to deduction or expense of any kind connected with the ownership or maintenance of said property." (Italics ours.)

"16. That the lessee may extend the term of this lease an additional period of ten years on the same terms and conditions as herein stated, except as to the amount of rent; that the rent for said additional period shall be, before and within sixty days before the commencement of said additional term, settled and fixed between the parties hereto if they can agree thereon. If the parties hereto cannot agree upon said rental for the succeeding ten years then the same to be submitted to appraisement. The parties each to select an appraiser and if they in turn cannot agree, the appraisers to select a third whose decision shall be final. The amount of the rent to be calculated at the rate of $4\frac{1}{2}\%$ net on the appraisement of the land." (Italics ours.)

At the trial, the appellants took the position that the terms of the lease were ambiguous, and evidence was offered to show the intention of the original parties with respect to the payment of taxes. The finding of the court upon this evidence was adverse to appellants, and they claimed in their opening brief herein that the finding was not supported by the evidence. Respondent replied, showing the finding to be based upon conflicting evidence and indicating testimony to support the decision on that point. She also raised the point that appellants' bill of exceptions is insufficient to permit an attack upon the decision for insufficiency of evidence because the bill fails to specify the particulars in which the evidence is alleged to be insufficient, as required by section 648 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Upon the oral argument, appellants concede the latter point to be good, but contend that the judgment roll alone shows the decision to be erroneous. While clause 16 states the rent shall be fixed at a net amount, the judgment requires the lessors, the appellants, to pay the taxes upon real estate as distinguished from the improvements thereon. Appellants cite definitions of the word "net," and from these definitions argue that net rent means that the lessee shall pay such taxes.

[1] A full copy of the lease is set out in the judgment roll—in the findings of fact. The lease must be considered in its entirety to ascertain the intention of the parties. Civ. Code, § 1641. The interpretation of the language used by the parties is not to be arrived at by considering the questioned clause as if it stood alone, but by consideration of the entire instrument, and, if it appears therefrom that the parties have used a word or expression in a certain sense, that meaning will be imported which the parties have shown they intended by other parts of the instrument. Pringle v. Wilson, 156 Cal. 313, 104 P. 316, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1090.

In clause 8, above quoted, the parties have defined the sense in which they have used the word "net," and in that paragraph it is plainly apparent that, whatever other deductions they contemplated should be made to arrive at the net rent, taxes on the land was not one of them. There they say in almost direct words that, if the lessors pay the taxes levied against the land, and the lessee pays other taxes and assessments, the rent reserved in a definite amount for the first ten years will be considered to be a net rental to the first party, the lessors.

[2] Applying the rule of interpretation which requires harmony among clauses to the end that one clause will not nullify another, we find that to give to the word "net" the definition contended for by appellants would nullify the direct and expressed provisions of the lease which require the lessors to pay taxes levied upon the land. While that clause is primarily directed to the first ten-year period, still all the terms and conditions of the lease by clause 16 are made applicable to the renewal term of ten years, "except as to the amount of the rent." If the parties had intended that the lessee should pay the taxes on the land during the renewal term, we should naturally expect them to have written "upon the same terms and conditions except as to the amount of rent and the payment of taxes" instead of merely "except as to the amount of rent." Clause 16 contemplates that the amount of rent shall be settled and fixed in advance of the beginning of the ten-year renewal term. This could not be done accurately by fixing a definite and stated amount in advance, because the taxes will vary from year to year during the term. The tax covenant could only be changed by changing paragraph 8, which is not a term and condition relating to the amount of rent, but one relating to taxes and assessments.

[3, 4] Appellants, by affirmative allegations in their answer to the complaint, set forth that the parties to the original lease meant and intended by the language of paragraph 16 of the lease that the lessee should pay, among other charges, the taxes levied upon the land. By statements of their counsel at the trial, and by the introduction of evidence of parol declarations, appellants actively led the court to make a decision or finding upon the issue thus tendered. The evidence on that point being conflicting, and appellants admittedly being unable to attack the sufficiency of such testimony, the decision upon that point also requires an affirmance of the judgment. Appellants cannot remove from the case, after an adverse ruling, the issue which they tendered; nor can they now claim they are not bound by the understanding between the original parties when they thus sought to so bind the respondent, who is likewise a successor to one of the original parties. There is no conflict between the findings and any particular clause of the lease because the findings set forth the lease as an entirety.

Whether the lease should be interpreted by considering its language alone or by resort to extrinsic evidence, the same conclusion is reached.

The judgment is affirmed.

In re WITHINGTON'S ESTATE.★

WITHINGTON v. WITHINGTON et al.

(Civ. 6462.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 26, 1929.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing July 25, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 22, 1929.

1. Wills ⇨324(3)—Undue influence in procuring execution of will held insufficient for jury.

Evidence in will contest relative to undue influence in procuring execution of will held insufficient to justify submission to jury.

2. Wills ⇨81—Will with small express bequests and residue to testator's brothers and sisters, with understanding that widow shared in community property, was valid.

Will disposing of estate appraised at more than $878,000, with express bequests aggregating $40,000 and residue to testator's brothers and sisters with the understanding that widow was entitled to her share of community property, was valid.

3. Wills ⇨166(7)—Evidence of opportunities and circumstances creating suspicion of attempted unfair advantage is insufficient to justify court in overturning will otherwise valid.

Evidence that relations and actions of persons surrounding testator furnished opportunities and circumstances which might create a suspicion of attempted unfair advantage in procuring execution of will is insufficient to justify a court in overturning plain directions of last will and testament which is otherwise valid.

4. Wills ⇨327—Directed verdict for proponents of will was proper, where verdict or judgment for contestant would have necessitated order setting it aside on motion.

Where evidence in will contest was such that verdict or judgment in favor of contestant would necessitate an order setting it aside upon motion therefor, trial court properly directed jury to find a special verdict on each of issues presented in favor of proponents.

5. Wills ⇨164(5)—Evidence of beneficiary's disreputable character and occupation 13 years prior to will held inadmissible as tending to show undue influence.

Evidence in will contest relative to disreputable character and occupation of one beneficiary 13 years prior to date of will, and of testator's knowledge thereof, held properly excluded as too remote in point of time and wholly unconnected with any other evidence showing exercise of undue influence.

6. Pleading ⇨129(2)—Failure of answer to deny manner in which undue influence was alleged to have been exercised was unnecessary on failure of proof thereof.

Where contestant of will was unable to prove that undue influence in any manner entered into transaction, the failure of answer to deny allegations as to manner in which undue influence was alleged to have been exercised, or opportunity therefor was obtained, was immaterial.

7. Appeal and error ⇨882(5)—Will contestant introducing evidence in attempted proof of allegations could not complain of insufficiency of answer.

Where will contestant introduced evidence in attempted proof of allegations in pleading, as though fully denied, she could not on appeal complain of insufficiency of answer in such regard.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Eugene Daney, Jr., Judge.

Proceeding by Lysle Woodward Withington and others for the probate of the will of Carl Withington, deceased, contested by Georgia May Withington. Judgment for proponents, and contestant appeals. Affirmed.

Luce & Swing and Albert J. Lee, all of San Diego, for appellant.

Ed. P. Sample and Harden & Green, all of San Diego, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. On October 23, 1925, Carl Withington died testate at San Diego, Cal., leaving him surviving a widow, Georgia May Withington, contestant and appellant herein, and a brother and three sisters. By his will, dated October 15, 1925, he gave, devised, and bequeathed to Louis Kucick and Peter Donarlache $10,000 each, to one Lucille Moore, $20,000, and to his brother and sisters the rest, residue, and remainder of his estate, share and share alike, "understanding that my wife, Georgia May Withington, takes by operation of law, upon my death, certain of our community property." The widow contested the will upon various grounds, and at the conclusion of her evidence the jury were instructed to return a verdict in favor of the proponents. Judgment having been rendered accordingly, she appealed therefrom.

Three grounds or causes of action were asserted in the petition for revocation of the will, and for letters of administration: First, insanity was alleged, in that from some period prior to October 15, 1925, to the date of his death, the testator was not of sound or disposing mind or memory to make a will or to dispose of his property, or to understand his relations to other persons. Second, that Lucille Moore had caused him to separate from his wife, and had prevented a reconciliation; that he had lived in illicit relations with Miss Moore, who, by threats and otherwise had caused him to fear her, and that she, together with the decedent's sisters, had secured domination and control over his mind and actions, and caused him to dispose of his estate by will, whereas he had intended and promised the contestant that it would be distributed during his lifetime. Third, that Lucille Moore had falsely accused the contestant of infidelity, and lack of affection or sympathy for the decedent during his illness, protesting her own love and sympathy for him, falsely representing that his wife did not wish a reconciliation; that she refused to permit the contestant to visit her husband, or to communicate with him. This count or ground of contest attempts to charge statements, representations, and acts in the nature of fraud, and alleges that the testator was caused to rely thereon, and to believe that he could not return to his home, as a result of all of which he executed the will in controversy, making substantial bequests to Lucille Moore which he would not otherwise have made, and that by his said will the testator deprived "his said wife of her just, rightful and proper share of his estate"; and that "the said Carl Withington would not have executed the purported will herein mentioned were it not for the said acts and conduct of the said Lucille Moore mentioned herein."

It appears that both the testator and the appellant had previously had other spouses, but that notwithstanding that fact they had maintained exceedingly intimate relations. She testified that she herself had been attacked by the decedent's former mate for her associations with him, prior to the time she married him, and censured by Withington for visiting the Tia Juana resort of, and being friendly with, one Grundy. Withington had for many years been engaged in conducting saloons, gambling houses, and assignation resorts, in California and in Mexico, prior to and during his marriage with appellant, with some of which she was familiar, and from one of his places of business at Tia Juana she had drawn considerable sums of money. Their marital relations were not blessed with constant congenial peace and quiet; they discussed the subject of divorce, each suggesting that the other obtain a decree, and Withington upon one occasion told the appellant, "Either you get a divorce or I will." Shortly thereafter appellant proposed, "I would get a divorce, and I would go my way, and he could go his," if he would "do the right thing" by her in a financial way. She testified that they had "little disputes," and that at one time, after complaining that she did not love him, and that he had heard rumors, he knocked her down. About the month of May, 1925, Mrs. Withington consulted an attorney regarding divorce proceedings, when she was informed that Withington was living with Lucille Moore, although she had not seen him since January, 1924, and did not see him until August, 1925, or two months after the deceased first entered the hospital for treatment. There were then negotiations between the parties toward a property settlement, Mrs. Withington demanding $350,000, and her husband offering $250,000, which she declined, and filed suit, praying the appointment of a receiver, an accounting, and division of the property. During the attempted compromise Withington, appellant testified, came to her weeping and hysterical, and considered returning home, suggesting that they "bury the hatchet," stating that he was trying to get his health back, and was sorry for past difficulties; that he said: "I cannot give you such money as you are asking;" "I am trying to do the right thing by you and do not intend to beat you out of a thing." During direct examination she testified further regarding this phase of the controversy: "I asked him if he had made a will and he said no." "He grasped me and kissed me good bye;" "he was to come back in ten days, but he did not come back"; "I asked him, 'What about my attorney's fees?' He says, 'Well, I will pay them';" "he wanted to bring his nurse there too"; "I met Dr. Rees and Dr. Brown in front of Jedlick-Heim's, on the corner of Broadway—or on the corner of Sixth and C, and talked to them one night in regard to his condition, and why he could not come home, or why it was he was not coming home, and they said he was too sick." Shortly thereafter the decedent was again removed to the hospital, and, following blood transfusions and operations which proved of no avail, appellant learned of his demise.

Lucille Moore continued with or near the testator during all of the several months of his last illness, both at her home and at the hospital, preparing his meals, and caring for him. Appellant visited the house last mentioned, upon at least one occasion bearing flowers, but she testified that she made no effort to learn what hospital he had entered; "I did not think it my duty to find out about his condition"; "This other woman was there with him all the time he was in the hospital, and until he died, and at the funeral"; "my pride would not permit me to attend his funeral; I sent no flowers"; that she had no reason to write him, and "was never going to run after him." She also testified that she feared Lucille Moore was having quite a bit of influence over the decedent, and that he was giving her "a portion of my community property," but that she knew that the law would allow her one-half of the community property, and that he could not will it away. Upon the other hand, all of the testimony upon the subject indicates that Lucille Moore and Withington did not agree, that she drank to excess, and was at times angry, hysterical, and abusive toward him; that she stated that, having cared for him during all of his illness and tribulations, it would break her heart should he return to his wife. A nurse testified that Miss Moore during one fit of intoxication procured a revolver and threatened to shoot the decedent, but that she disarmed her by force. Various quarrels and arguments occurred, but at none of these times does the subject of a will, or of a property allowance, appear to have been the cause of any such unpleasantness, or to have been mentioned. There is a striking absence of evidence of even a suggestion by Lucille Moore, or by any of the testator's relatives, as to a will or regarding his property. To the contrary, close attendants and friends who were present during his illness swore that they did not hear the subject mentioned, except when Withington sent for an attorney, and when the will was produced, witnesses were summoned, and the document was executed. One witness did say that Lucille Moore remarked before the will was signed that she was not satisfied with its provisions, but there is no testimony tending to indicate that Miss Moore was in any manner instrumental in or connected with its preparation, or that she actually knew its contents.

There was absolutely no proof as to insanity or incompetency of the testator, as charged in the first ground of contest. All of the witnesses, including the attending physician and nurses, testified that he was not only of sound mind at all times, but that he was exceedingly keen and alert up to and including the last hours of his life.

[1] We have especially scanned those features of the evidence tending to exhibit the intimate relations of the testator and Miss Moore, and have made a careful and exhaustive review of the entire record, which embraces the judgment roll, and the testimony, as well as the hospital charts and the proceedings in probate. From it all, we are unable to find support for the allegations that this beneficiary, either alone or in conjunction with Withington's relatives, attempted to persuade or coerce him to make a will, or to make any disposition of any portion of his estate. Conceding, for argument's sake, that her protestations of love for him, and her statements that appellant did not care for him, were false and were made solely for the purpose of appealing to his sense of benevolence, it cannot be said, in the absence of substantial proof of effective dishonesty upon the part of the beneficiary, that a sane man was unduly influenced to give her what he deemed appropriate. Testimony was also adduced tending to show that he realized the existing jealousy between his wife and Lucille Moore, and that he desired to protect them both, but that if he pleased either he would incur the wrath of the other. A witness testified that Withington quarreled with appellant and with Miss Moore, and that apparently there was "no affection between any of them." Under all of the evidence before us, we are impelled to conclude that the testator may well have been deemed by the trial court as having exercised normal faculties and to have merely exercised his undoubted right to make such disposition of his property by will as he saw fit. There is no evidence that his sisters were parties to any wrongful influence in this respect. Whenever the decedent considered returning to his wife they favored it; they were present during his illness, and at the time of the execution of his will, but, aside from such not unusual occurrences, their connection with the case is insignificant.

We have thus treated the second and third counts or grounds simultaneously, since the alleged confidential and illicit relationship between Withington and Lucille Moore, claimed to have resulted in the separation of the decedent and appellant, the preventing of a reconciliation, and the procurement of a will depriving the contestant of a substantial portion of her share of the estate, constitute the substance of each. We conclude that the testator was neither directly nor indirectly caused by undue influence, fear, or fraud to make the will which he did make, nor is there sufficient evidence, tending to indicate that he was at that time insane or incompetent to do so intelligently, to require or justify a reversal.

[2] It is no less apparent that the will itself is valid in its provisions for various beneficiaries, and conveys no property to those other than the widow which the testator might not legally have devised and bequeathed to them without jeopardizing her share of the community. Of an estate appraised at more than $878,000, which had been accumulating for many years prior to the marriage of the contestant and the decedent, which existed but about six years, he gave to two intimate friends, one of whom aided him materially, $10,000 each, and to Miss Moore $20,000. To his brother and sisters he gave the rest, residue, and remainder of his estate, "understanding that my wife, Georgia May Withington, takes by operation of law, upon my death, certain of our community property." Express bequests aggregating but $40,000, from an estate of such comparatively large proportions, though doubtless disconcerting, cannot upon the record before us be held legally injurious to the interests of the contestant.

[3] Appellant testified that the testator promised that he would make no will, and that he handed her a list of his properties, promising to furnish her with other papers and documents, the nature of which she did not state; that she was informed—and certain witnesses corroborated her in asserting—that Lucille Moore may have obtained from Withington's effects a box and some moneys or securities which were secreted and withheld from the estate. Contestant attempts to infer from these and other facts and circumstances heretofore set forth that Miss Moore had custody and control of the decedent and his affairs, and that she succeeded in preventing appellant from receiving her share of the estate, and that the will was unnatural. It is nowhere ventured, however, that Withington at any time promised the contestant more than her share of the community property. In any event, he was legally entitled to change his mind, and to make a will otherwise disposing of his separate property and his share of the community. As already observed, his condition mentally, and his environment, were such that no unnatural or improper influence or coercion appears to have diverted his dispositive act from his true intentions. The most that can be said of the relations and actions of persons about him is that they furnished opportunities and circumstances which might create a suspicion of attempted unfair advantage. But this is not sufficient to justify a court in overturning the plain directions of a last will and testament which is otherwise valid. It therefore follows that the will in controversy is legally a natural one, and that its provisions do not exceed the legal bounds of the testator's properties, or infringe upon the statutory rights of the contestant.

This case is not appreciably unlike that presented in Estate of Langford, 108 Cal. 608, 41 P. 701, wherein the grounds of contest were similar to those here urged, against the provisions of a will conveying to another more of the estate than the contestants anticipated or approved. It was submitted to a jury, who declared it invalid, and in reversing the judgment the Supreme Court said:

"The consideration of the question whether or not a will is 'unnatural'—by which is meant, we suppose, different from what it might have been expected to have been—is of no importance except in a case where there is some evidence immediately tending to show mental incapacity, fraud, or undue influence; in which event it might serve to help out a weak case. But there is no evidence in the case at bar that could be thus helped out. A will cannot be upset because in the opinion of a jury or court it is unnatural. In the opinion of the McDevitt Case [95 Cal. 17, 30 P. 101], it is said: 'Although I do not think it of special interest here, it is well to remember that one has the right to make an unjust will, an unreasonable will, or even a cruel will. Generally, such questions turn our thoughts, as they are often intended to, from the only question at issue, which always is, only, Is the will the spontaneous act of a competent testator? Of course, juries lean against wills which to them seem unequal or unjust. But the right to dispose of one's property by will is most solemnly assured by law, and is a most valuable incident to ownership, and does not depend upon its judicious use. The beneficiaries of a will are as much entitled to protection as any other property owners, and courts abdicate their functions when they permit the prejudices of a jury to set aside a will merely upon suspicion, or because it does not conform to their ideas of what was just and proper.' (See, also, Latham v. Udell [38 Mich. 238], supra.) And, indeed, if it were important to consider it, we do not see how the will in the case at bar can be considered unnatural in such extreme sense as to be remarkable. * * *

"If the law is to be changed, and the right of disposing of one's property by will, the policy of which has been sanctioned by the wisdom and experience of many generations of men, is to be taken away, that result must be effected by the legislative department of the government. As the law now stands that right cannot be frittered away after the death of the testator according to the tastes and notions of others. It is quite likely that in the case at bar the provisions of the will did not meet with the approval of the jurors; but their approval was not necessary."

In the recent decision of the Estate of Smith, 200 Cal. 152, 252 P. 325, the testator's will was contested by his widow upon grounds of alleged incompetency, fraud, undue influence, and persuasion to make a will while in a "dazed" condition. The cardinal principles in such cases are announced in an exhaustive opinion by the court, upon a thorough review of nearly all of the authorities of this state, in the following language:

"The actual mental condition of the decedent at the time of the execution of the will is the question to be determined upon a contest based on his alleged incompetency and evidence tending to show unsoundness of mind either before or after the execution of the will is important only in so far as it tends to show mental condition at the time of the execution of the will. (Estate of Perkins, 195 Cal. 699, 235 P. 45; Estate of Casarotti, 184 Cal. 73, 192 P. 1085; Estate of Dolbeer, 149 Cal. 227, 9 Ann. Cas. 795, 86 P. 695.) To overcome the presumption of sanity the contestant must show affirmatively and by a preponderance of the evidence that the testator was of unsound mind at the time he executed his will. (Estate of Casarotti, supra; Estate of Dow, 181 Cal. 106, 183 P. 794.) * * *

"A testator is of sound and disposing mind and memory if at the time of making his will, he has sufficient mental capacity to be able to understand the nature of the act he is doing, and to understand and recollect the nature and situation of his property and to remember, and understand the relations to, the persons who have claims upon his bounty and whose interests are affected by the provisions of the instrument. (Estate of Sexton, 199 Cal. 759, 251 P. 778; Estate of De LaVeaga, 165 Cal. 607, 133 P. 307; Estate of Huston, 163 Cal. 166, 124 P. 852.) * * *

"Undue influence has been repeatedly defined to be 'the exercise of acts or conduct by one person toward another person by means of which the mind of the latter is subjugated to the will of the person seeking to control it' (Estate of Newhall, 190 Cal. 709, 717, 28 A. L. R. 778, 214 P. 231, 234), that 'In order to establish that a will has been executed under undue influence, it is necessary to show, not only that such influence has been exercised, but also that it has produced an effect upon the mind of the testator by which the will which he executes is not the expression of his own desires. * * * The presumption of undue influence is not raised by proof of interest and opportunity alone. In order to set aside a will for undue influence, there must be substantial proof of a pressure which overpowered the volition of the testator at the time the will was made.' * * *

"The fact that the will of a testator may be unnatural, unfair, or unjust creates of itself no presumption that the decedent was incompetent or that the instrument was procured by undue influence, nor does it shift the burden of proof to the proponent. In Estate of Martin, 170 Cal. 657, 663, 151 P. 138, 141, it is declared that 'a testator has the right to make an unjust or an unreasonable, or even a cruel will and that no will may be legally set aside upon the mere establishment that it is such a will.'"

[4] Under the facts of the case last quoted, which we need not relate, incompetency, misrepresentations, influences, and bequests contrary to antecedent expressions of intention, all contributed to suggest the unnatural character of the will, if not its unreasonableness, far more strongly than do those of the instant proceeding. Yet it was said in effect that, measured by these rules, the contest was not sufficiently supported by substantial evidence to show that the will in suit was not the true expression of the testator's desires. Hence, if the will is in all respects legal and valid, and the evidence is not of a preponderating weight sufficient to warrant any judgment for the contestant, it would not only be an idle act, but perhaps an expensive and inexpedient one, to submit the issues to a jury for decision. It follows that this case falls within the ruling applicable to non-suits, since a verdict or judgment in favor of the contestant would necessitate an order setting it aside upon motion therefor. Estate of Bryson, 191 Cal. 521, 217 P. 525; Estate of Caspar, 172 Cal. 147, 155 P. 631; Estate of Luckenbach (Cal Sup.) 270 P. 961. It was not error for the trial court to direct, as it did, that the jury find a special verdict upon each of the issues presented, in favor of the proponents.

[5] It is further contended that the contestant was erroneously precluded from introducing, over the objection of the proponents, evidence of disreputable character and occupation of Lucille Moore 13 years prior to the date of the will, and of the testator's knowledge thereof. It was represented during the trial that two witnesses would testify that, in 1912 this beneficiary was a prostitute, and an inmate of a house of ill fame at Taft, Cal., in which Withington then had an interest. It is argued that such evidence would tend to show the probability of her scheming to obtain his property, and the unnatural character of the will through which she benefited. It is not suggested, however, that she continued thereafter to follow a dissolute life or occupation as before, nor do we coincide with appellant's assertion that there is any evidence upon which this proof, though it be a fact, would tend to throw light favor to her cause. It is appropriately within the exception noted by the contestant's authorities as "too remote in point of time or wholly unconnected with any other evidence showing the exercise of undue influence." The most that can be said of the proffered proof is that it might have contributed to the mere furnishing of opportunity for undue influence, but in the absence of substantial proof of the principal issue, evidence of opportunity therefor, as we have seen, is of no probative force or effect whatever.

[6, 7] Finally, it is insisted that paragraph VI of proponents' answer by its insufficiency as a specific denial of certain allegations of the contestant's petition constitutes admissions of facts which, if taken as true, would render a verdict for the former erroneous. By five subdivisions, said paragraph of the petition alleged that the decedent's will, if executed at all, was procured by the undue influence of Lucille Moore, aided and abetted by the testator's three sisters, and was not the free and voluntary act of Carl Withington. As grounds of this alleged conclusion, it recites: (1) That Withington and Lucille Moore had lived together illicitly; (2) that he was in fear of her, and that by threats and other means she secured domination and control of his actions; (3) that their relations had been illicit and confidential, and that she had assumed the position and authority of his legal wife, and dictated the management and disposition of his properties; (4) repeating various of the foregoing allegations, it is averred that Withington permitted Miss Moore to assume and exercise such control; and (5) that Withington separated from his wife through his own fault, thereafter desiring a reconciliation, which was prevented by Miss Moore. Other facts and circumstances, claimed by the contestant to have constituted undue influence and coercion, as heretofore stated, are then charged, and it is alleged that but for the same a reconciliation would have been effected, that the decedent would have returned home, and would not have executed the will in question. The proponents deny that said will was procured or caused to be executed by undue influence of Lucille Moore, or any other person, or that it was the result of any undue influence, or was not the free and voluntary act of the testator. It is quite apparent that this is not a specific denial of each and every detailed circumstance of the petition, yet if, under the pleadings as issue was joined, the contestant was unable to prove that undue influence in any manner entered into the transaction, denial of the manner in which it was alleged to have been exercised or opportunity therefor was obtained would be unnecessary. It appearing that said will was the free and voluntary act of the testator, proof of his relations with said beneficiary, as already observed, bears no probative force in this proceeding. Again, since the contestant introduced evidence in attempted proof of the allegations of her pleading, as though fully denied, she may not now complain of the insufficiency of the answer, if it be insufficient in this regard. Henderson v. Northam, 176 Cal. 493, 168 P. 1044.

The judgment is affirmed.

MADERA CANAL & IRRIGATION CO. v. K. ARAKELIAN, Inc., et al. (Civ. 3842.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 27, 1929.

Appeal and error ⇨623—Clerk's transcript filed on appeal on June 17, where proceedings for settlement thereof were terminated on June 15, was filed in time (Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, 660, 939; Rule I, § 1, of Supreme and District Courts of Appeal).

Where clerk's transcript was certified by clerk on June 30, 1928, and filed in District Court of Appeal on June 17, 1929, and proceedings for settlement of transcript were terminated by dismissal in trial court on June 15, 1929, clerk's transcript on appeal prepared under provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, was filed in time under Rule 1, § 1, of Supreme and District Courts of Appeal, and appeal was effective, at least as to judgment roll, though motion for new trial was denied by operation of law by virtue of expiration of time for passing on the motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 660, and though 30-day period thereafter for appeal had expired under section 939.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by the Madera Canal & Irrigation Company against K. Arakelian, Inc., and others, in which defendant named interposed a cross-complaint. From the judgment, defendant named appeals. On motion to dismiss appeal. Motion denied.

Lindsay & Gearhart, of Fresno, for appellant.

Walter C. Maloy, of Covina, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This is a motion to dismiss defendant's appeal on the ground that no bill of exceptions or other record on appeal has been prepared or filed. The following facts appear from the clerk's certificate and the affidavits on file:

"During the course of the trial * * * and after the evidence therein was fully taken and before the said cause was decided, * * * a full and complete transcript of the evidence and proceedings had during said trial was made by the court reporters who reported said cause, and the original of said transcript was left with the judge of said court, * * * and a copy thereof furnished to the attorney for said plaintiff and to the attorney for said defendant." Judgment was entered February 20, 1928. March 2, 1928, the defendant filed notice of intention to move for a new trial. March 29, 1928, notice of the entry of judgment was served on defendant. The court's power to pass on a motion for a new trial expired 60 days thereafter. Code Civ. Proc. § 660. The defendant had 30 days after the expiration of such 60-day period in which to appeal. Code Civ. Proc. § 939. June 12, 1928, the defendant filed notice of appeal and also filed with the clerk a request for a transcript as provided for by section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure. The latter notice stated that the "appellant has arranged personally with the stenographic reporter for his compensation." No further steps were taken in the proceeding for a new trial. February 2, 1929, the plaintiff served the defendant with notice that "the motion for a new trial * * * was, by operation of law, denied on the 25th day of August, 1928." February 12, 1929, the original copy of the reporter's transcript, made as stated during the progress of the trial, was delivered to the clerk. June 30, 1928, the clerk's transcript was certified by the clerk, and it was filed in this court on June 17, 1929. Proceedings for the settlement of a transcript under the provisions of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure were terminated by dismissal in the trial court on June 15, 1929. Rule I, section 1, of the Supreme and the District Courts of Appeal provides that the time for filing the transcript on appeal prepared under the provisions of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure "shall not begin to run until such transcript is approved and certified as required by law, or until the proceeding to obtain the same has been terminated in the court below by dismissal or otherwise." Under the provisions of this rule, the clerk's transcript was filed in time, and therefore the appeal is effective as an appeal on the judgment roll at least. Locke Paddon v. Locke Paddon, 194 Cal. 73, 77, 227 P. 715.

The motion to dismiss is denied.

SILVEY et al. v. FINK et al. (Civ. 6769.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 20, 1929.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing, July 18, 1929.

1. Corporations ⇨617(2)—Corporation, during period of suspension, cannot borrow money, execute notes, or sell stock (Pol. Code, § 3669c, subd. 2).

Corporation and its directors, during period of suspension of powers for failure to pay taxes, under Pol. Code, § 3669c, subd. 2, are without power to borrow money or execute corporation's note therefor, or to enter into contracts of subscription, or to sell stock, and no authority to do such forbidden acts can be conferred by corporation commissioner.

2. Corporations ⇨617(2)—Subscription contracts and stock certificates issued after suspension of powers of corporation were void, and subscribers were entitled to refund of purchase price (Pol. Code, § 3669c, subd. 2).

Subscription agreements made after powers of corporation were suspended for nonpayment of taxes, under Pol. Code, § 3669c, subd. 2, were void, and certificates issued thereunder did not make subscribers owners of stock, and subscribers were therefore entitled to recover money paid for the stock on ground of failure of consideration.

3. Corporations ⇨617(2)—Subscribers to stock of corporation whose powers were suspended for nonpayment of taxes, were not estopped to demand refund, where ignorant of suspension (Pol. Code, § 3669c, subd. 2).

Person subscribing for stock in corporation after suspension of its powers for nonpayment of taxes, under Pol. Code, § 3669c, subd. 2, held not estopped from demanding return of amount paid, in suit against directors, where subscribers were not aware of the fact that the corporate powers had been suspended.

4. Corporations ⇨617(2)—Subscribers to stock, ignorant of suspension of corporation's powers, were not precluded from recovering refund, as in pari delicto, though plaintiffs subscribed on specially favorable terms (Pol. Code, § 3669c, subd. 2).

Where subscribers to stock of corporation were ignorant at the time that powers of corporation had been suspended for nonpayment of taxes under Pol. Code, § 3669c, subd. 2, subscribers were not precluded from seeking refund of amount paid, as having been in pari delicto, though parties to transaction intended that plaintiff should subscribe for stock on more favorable terms than others.

6. Contracts ⇨102—Intended violation of law not actually effected will not prevent recovery on contract.

Intention to violate the law will not prevent recovery on contract, where violation of law, though intended, is not actually effected.

6. Corporations ⇨617(2)—Refund to subscribers of part of amount paid under stock subscription contract would not prevent recovery of balance, where corporation's powers were suspended (Pol. Code, § 3669c, subd. 2).

That part of the amount subscribed for stock of corporation whose powers were suspended for nonpayment of taxes under Pol. Code, § 3669c, subd. 2, had been refunded, would not prevent recovery of balance of purchase price paid by subscribers, where the amount recovered by plaintiffs was but part of that to which they were entitled.

7. Corporations ⇨617(2)—That corporation incurred debts after suspension of powers did not prevent subscribers from recovering amount paid on subscription contracts (Pol. Code, § 3669c, subd. 2).

Fact that corporation, since time of suspension of its powers for nonpayment of taxes, under Pol. Code, § 3669c, subd. 2, may have incurred debts, did not prevent subscribers from recovering amount paid under subscription contract entered into after date of suspension, since corporation could incur no valid contractual obligations.

8. Corporations ⇨617(2)—Failure of subscribers to return stock certificates or part of refund under subscription contracts, entered into after suspension of corporate powers, did not preclude refund (Pol. Code, § 3669c, subd. 2; Civ. Code, § 1691, subd. 2).

Fact that subscribers retained certificates issued by corporation and part of refund of stock subscriptions did not prevent maintenance of action for recovery of balance of price of stock, where certificates were void and without value on account of suspension of corporation's powers for nonpayment of taxes at the time of the stock transaction, under Pol. Code, § 3669c, subd. 2; return of certificates being unnecessary, under Civ. Code, § 1691, subd. 2.

9. Appeal and error ⇨882(4)—Directors of corporation answering amended complaint and proceeding to trial on theory that they were properly joined, could not object that amendment to original complaint, filed against corporation alone, was improper (Pol. Code, § 3669c, subd. 2).

In action by subscribers to stock of corporation, originally filed against corporation alone to recover amount paid for stock, directors subsequently joined as defendants could not complain that amended complaint by which they were joined after plaintiff's discovery that powers of corporation had been suspended, under Pol. Code, § 3669c, subd. 2, introduced different cause of action, where no objection was made to sufficiency of complaint, and answer was filed and trial proceeded on theory that action was one to recover amount from directors.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by John L. Silvey and another against Paul Martin Fink and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

James M. Thomas, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Philip C. Boardman, Louis P. Dunkley, and John R. Tyrrell, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. An action to recover the sum of $5,000 from persons acting as the board of directors of Supreme Paint, Varnish & Enamel Company, a domestic corporation, the powers of which were suspended under the provisions of section 3669c of the Political Code.

Plaintiffs alleged that this amount was loaned by them to the corporation, and was evidenced by a promissory note dated December 1, 1923, purporting to have been executed on its behalf, and that, at the time of the transaction, the powers of the corporation, unknown to plaintiffs, had been suspended for nonpayment of its license taxes for the year 1923. The defendants by their answer averred that the above amount was paid as a subscription for shares of the capital stock of the company after its powers were suspended, as alleged in the complaint, but pursuant to authority to sell the stock granted by the commissioner of corporations, and that the note was executed merely as an accommodation and without consideration, and that plaintiffs received for the above amount and retained 500 shares of the preferred and 125 shares of the common stock of the company, and in addition the sum of $750 paid as a commission on the amount of their subscription.

The court found in accordance with the averments of the answer, and entered judgment for the defendants.

It appears without dispute that the powers of the corporation were suspended at the time of the transaction, and it is admitted by the pleadings that plaintiffs were without knowledge of the fact. This suspension took place on the first Monday in March, 1923, and so far as shown, the powers of the company have never been revived. Theretofore, on November 15, 1922, the corporation had obtained from the corporation commissioner a permit to sell certain of its capital stock, consisting of preferred and common stock, and on May 10, 1923, an amended order was issued, authorizing it to sell 10,000 shares of its preferred stock and 2,500 shares of common stock in units of one share of preferred and one-fourth share of common for the price of $10 per unit, subject to a selling expense of not to exceed $2 per unit. The permit provided that, unless subscriptions for 1,250 shares of its preferred stock should have been obtained, and $12,500 in cash paid thereon such sums to be deposited with a depository named by the commissioner, on or before January 1, 1924, such subscriptions might be rescinded by the subscribers. It is admitted that subscriptions for that amount were received, the proceeds deposited in escrow as directed by the permit, and that they have since been withdrawn by respondents.

The court found that plaintiffs, on August 17, 1923, subscribed for certain of the shares, and on December 1, 1923, the date of the note, subscribed for and purchased 500 additional shares of the preferred and 125 shares of the common stock, for which they paid $5,000, and that this sum was deposited as provided by the permit, and subsequently withdrawn by respondents, and that, at the time of the last subscription, it was agreed that plaintiffs should receive, through A. Murray, the agent of the corporation, the commission payable for the sale of the stock, to wit, 15 per cent. of the subscription price, which amount, after the fund was received from the depository, was paid to plaintiffs. It was also found that plaintiffs, at the time of making their subscription, stated that, if they invested the above sum in the stock of the corporation, they might be in need of money, and requested that the note of the company be executed to them, that they might in that event, negotiate the same, and that defendants, acting as the board of directors of the company, thereupon caused the note in question to be executed; it being agreed that, should the same be negotiated by the plaintiffs, the latter would pledge to the company as security for its payment 500 shares of preferred and 125 shares of its common stock, but that the instrument was not negotiated.

While the evidence thereon was conflicting, the findings last mentioned were sufficiently supported and cannot be disturbed.

Subdivision 2 of section 3669c of the Political Code at the time of this stock transaction provided that, "after 6 o'clock p. m. of the Saturday preceding the first Monday in March in any year, the corporate rights, privileges and powers of every domestic corporation which has failed to pay said tax and money penalty shall, from and after said hour of said day, be suspended, and incapable of being exercised for any purpose or in any manner, except to defend any action brought in any court against such corporation, until said tax with all accrued penalties, and all taxes and charges due the state under the Corporation License Act are paid," etc. The section further provided that, until such taxes, penalties, and charges should be paid, every person who attempts or purports to exercise any of the rights, privileges, or powers of any delinquent corporation should be guilty of a misdemeanor, and every contract made in violation of the section be void.

[1, 2] Under the above section, the corporation and its directors, as such, were without power, during the period of suspension, to borrow money or execute the corporation's note therefor, as plaintiffs claim was done, or to enter into contracts of subscription for, or to sell its stock (Van Landingham v. United Tuna Packers, 189 Cal. 353, 208 P.

973), and no authority to do the acts forbidden by the statute could be conferred by the corporation commissioner. It is admitted that the note was void; nor can it be contended that the subscription agreements were valid contracts of the corporation, or that the subscribers thereby became owners of the stock which the certificates issued purported to represent. Pol. Code, § 3669c, subd. 2; Finch v. Finch, 68 Cal. App. 72, 81, 228 P. 553. In either case there was a failure of consideration for the amount paid by plaintiffs; and, unless they are estopped from making the claim, or the asserted illegality of the transaction forbids relief, that amount, less the sum which they had received, should be refunded. Smith v. Bach, 183 Cal. 259, 263, 191 P. 14.

[3-5] The plaintiffs having previously subscribed for stock in the company and received certificates purporting to represent the same, it is urged that they were stockholders and familiar with the terms of the permit, and that, having paid their subscription and received the certificates, they are estopped from demanding a return of the amount paid; furthermore, that they were parties to a contract declared illegal by the section quoted, and by the agreement for the refund of part of their subscriptions, were parties to a transaction which was a fraud upon other subscribers and the creditors of the company (citing Quartz Glass, etc., Co. v. Joyce, 27 Cal. App. 523, 150 P. 648), and should be denied relief.

We find no merit in either of these contentions, as plaintiffs in making the subscriptions were ignorant of the fact which rendered void the subscription contracts and the certificates issued in both transactions, namely, the suspension of the corporate powers. Their ignorance in this respect also disposes of the claim that, by attempting to make a contract forbidden by the section, they were in pari delicto with the trustees. No contract between the corporation and the plaintiff having been created, that the parties to the transaction intended that plaintiffs should subscribe for stock on more favorable terms than others is immaterial. An intention to violate the law will not prevent a recovery where such is not the effect of the transaction. Cannon v. Cannon, 26 N. J. Eq. 316; Neel v. Commissioners, etc., 94 Ga. 216, 21 S. E. 516, 517; Sutton v. Workmeister, 164 Ill. App. 105, 109; 13 Corp. Jur. "Contracts," § 341, pp. 411, 412.

[6] That part of the amount subscribed was refunded pursuant to an agreement to which, for the reason stated, the corporation was not a party, would not prevent a recovery, as this sum was but part of that to which plaintiffs were entitled; there being as to them a complete failure of consideration.

[7] The court found that the corporation since the above transaction had incurred considerable indebtedness; and it is contended by respondents that it would be inequitable to permit a recovery under such circumstances. Its powers having been suspended, the corporation could incur no valid contractual obligations (Van Landingham v. United Tuna Packers, supra; Ransome-Crummey Co. v. Superior Ct., 188 Cal. 393, 205 P. 446); and, if in ignorance of the suspension—which it was the duty of respondents to prevent—debts have been incurred by them, this furnishes no ground for denying relief to plaintiffs.

[8] It appears that the certificates issued to plaintiffs had not been restored, and that they also retained the amount paid to them by respondents. The certificates being void and without value, their return was unnecessary (Civ. Code, § 1691, subd. 2; Martin v. Lawrence, 156 Cal. 191, 103 P. 913), and plaintiffs were entitled in any event to the moneys received by them (Kales v. Houghton, 190 Cal. 294, 212 P. 21).

[9] The original complaint was filed against the corporation alone. Subsequently plaintiffs discovered that the powers of the corporation had been suspended, and filed an amended complaint against those acting as its directors. Respondents claim that the amendment introduced a different cause of action and was improperly allowed. This contention may be disposed of by pointing out that no objection to the sufficiency of the complaint to state a cause of action against respondents, who answered the same, was made, and the trial proceeded on the theory that the action was one to recover from respondents amounts received by them which equitably they should restore. It appeared that there was a total failure of consideration for the money paid by the plaintiffs.

Respondents should refund this amount less that already paid; and, it being further shown that there were no circumstances which equitably forbid restitution, the trial resulted in a miscarriage of justice, and the judgment is accordingly reversed.

LUBARSKY v. CHAVIS et al. (Civ. 6818.) *

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 26, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 26, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 22, 1929.

1. Quieting title ⇨39—In suit to rescind agreement to purchase chicken ranch, defendant's request for judgment quieting title held cross-complaint demanding answer from plaintiff.

In suit to rescind agreement for purchase of chicken ranch for failure of consideration and for fraudulent representations, defendant's request for judgment for termination of plaintiff's interest in contract and to quiet defendant's title on account of plaintiff's nonpayment of installments of interest held to be cross-complaint demanding answer from plaintiff and not merely an answer, since it asked for affirmative judgment.

2. Pleading ⇨150—Plaintiff's failure to answer cross-complaint confessed allegations therein.

Plaintiff's failure to answer defendant's cross-complaint confessed allegations therein.

3. Pleading ⇨349—In suit to rescind agreement to purchase ranch for failure of consideration and fraud, admission by failure to answer cross-complaint's allegations of plaintiff's nonpayment of installments held not to authorize judgment for defendant on pleadings.

In suit to rescind agreement for purchase of chicken ranch for failure of consideration and fraudulent representations, in which defendant filed cross-complaint alleging plaintiff's nonpayment of interest installments, plaintiff's admission of such fact by failure to answer cross-complaint held not to negative his cause of action, and defendant was not entitled to judgment on pleadings, since issues, if decided in favor of plaintiff, would entitle him to judgment notwithstanding truth of cross-complaint.

4. Vendor and purchaser ⇨15—In sale of chicken ranch, failure to deliver automobile, shortage in number and defective quality of chickens, and defective condition of water supply, do not represent failure of consideration.

In sale of chicken ranch for $11,000, failure to deliver automobile worth $300, shortage in agreed number of chickens, defective quality of chickens, and defective condition of pipe and water supply, represent breaches of contract rather than failure of consideration, and an action for such breaches must be supported by allegation and proof of performance by plaintiff.

5. Vendor and purchaser ⇨123—Plaintiff suing to rescind contract for failure of consideration or fraud need not show he has kept up payments.

In action for rescission on grounds of failure of consideration or fraud, plaintiff need not show that he has kept up payments required of him by contract; rule being different than in action for breach of contract, which must be supported by allegation and proof of performance by plaintiff.

6. Vendor and purchaser ⇨123—Complaint presented issue of rescission of agreement to purchase chicken ranch for failure of consideration by destruction of building.

In suit for rescission of agreement to purchase chicken ranch for failure of consideration and for fraudulent representations, complaint held broad enough to present issue of right of rescission for failure of consideration caused by destruction of $3,000 building on property, total purchase price of which was $11,000, since such building must be held to have been material part of inducement and consideration of contract.

7. Vendor and purchaser ⇨123—After notice of rescission, purchaser suing to rescind agreement held not required to allege abandonment of property.

After purchaser's notice of rescission offering in writing to return everything of value received on condition that vendor restore to him everything received in transaction, purchaser suing to rescind agreement was not obliged to allege that he had abandoned property.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Suit by Moses Lubarsky against C. Pauline Chavis and another to rescind an agreement for the purchase of a chicken ranch. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

W. F. Cowan and J. O. Kroyer, both of Santa Rosa, for appellant.

Wm. J. Hayes, of San Francisco, and Chas. H. Patterson, of Oakland, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Plaintiff commenced this action to rescind an agreement by which he had purchased and entered into possession of a chicken ranch in Sonoma county. Defendant agreed to sell, and plaintiff agreed to buy, certain described real property for $11,000, payable as follows:

$2,000 cash and "the balance in five years from date; such balance to draw interest from date at the rate of five per cent per annum, interest payable semi-annually and if not so paid then to be compounded or at the option of the party of the first part the entire sum shall become immediately due and payable without notice in which event the amounts already paid shall be forfeited and shall become the property of party of the first part as compensation for the use and occupation of said premises and party of the second part will forfeit all right, title or interest in or to said payments or to said property under this contract.

"Party of the first part covenants that the payments being made as herein agreed that she will when the full sum is paid execute a good and sufficient deed conveying said property to party of the second part. * * *

"Party of the second part shall have immediate possession of said premises.

"Party of the second part shall pay all taxes or assessments of whatever nature which are now a lien or which may hereafter become a lien upon said premises and shall maintain fire insurance upon the house to the extent of three thousand dollars ($3,000.00)."

The grounds for rescission were stated in two causes of action. The first was failure of consideration in several particulars, and the second for fraudulent misrepresentations inducing the making of the contract. To this complaint defendant demurred and at the same time answered and filed a cross-complaint asking for judgment against the plaintiff for the termination of his interest in the contract and to quiet defendant's title to the property on account of plaintiff's nonpayment of installment payments of interest on the unpaid purchase price. Plaintiff thereupon demurred to the cross-complaint. The demurrer is plainly labeled "demurrer to cross-complaint," and the body of the demurrer leaves no doubt whatever that the plaintiff well understood the cross-complaint to be a cross-complaint and not merely an affirmative defense in the answer. The demurrer was overruled, and the plaintiff was given ten days to answer the cross-complaint. Plaintiff failed or refused to answer. Defendant thereafter gave notice of motion for judgment upon the pleadings upon the ground that plaintiff had confessed the cross-complaint by default. This motion was granted by the court, and defendant was given judgment quieting her title to the ranch and terminating plaintiff's interest in the ranch under the contract. The plaintiff appeals from this judgment.

[1] We think there is no doubt that the defendant's cross-complaint was in fact a cross-complaint demanding an answer from the plaintiff. Plaintiff understood it as such as shown by the wording of his demurrer thereto. The subject-matter of the cross-complaint also clearly showed it was a cross-complaint and not merely an answer. It asked for an affirmative judgment. The matter it set up was not merely by way of defeating plaintiff's cause of action.

[2, 3] Plaintiff's failure to answer the cross-complaint confessed the allegations therein. The cross-complaint, however, did not tender any new issue except the allegation that plaintiff had failed to keep up his payments under the contract since a certain date. Plaintiff's complaint alleged the payment of the first semiannual installment of interest on the unpaid balance of purchase price. The cross-complaint, however, alleged the nonpayment of the second semiannual installment, and this allegation was confessed by plaintiff's failure to answer the cross-complaint. The plaintiff's admission of this fact did not deprive him of the right to have the other issues in the case tried, if in fact there were other issues material to a full determination of the rights of the parties under the contract. In Langford v. Langford, 136 Cal. 507, 69 P. 235, it was said: "The failure of the plaintiff to answer the cross-complaint did not deprive him of the right to establish the cause of action set forth in his complaint. A verdict upon the cross-complaint in favor of the defendant would not, ipso facto, extinguish his claim against her or defeat his right to have the issue thereon determined. Each of the parties was seeking a money judgment against the other, and if the defendant should establish her claim upon the cross-complaint the court would enter judgment in favor of the one who should establish the greater claim, but only for the difference between the two." See, also, Brooks v. White, 22 Cal. App. 719, 136 P. 500. It is the claim of plaintiff and appellant that there were such issues because his complaint stated a cause of action for rescission upon the ground of fraud and upon the ground of failure of consideration. This case presents a strong analogy to Langford v. Langford, supra. Here both parties were asking for a termination of the contract—the defendant on account of alleged breach, and the plaintiff on account of alleged fraud and alleged failure of consideration. The correct ultimate judgment between the parties could not be arrived at until the issues tendered by the complaint were decided. Those issues would determine whether plaintiff could recover back the money paid or would forfeit it.

[4-6] The briefs contain no argument upon the sufficiency of the cause of action stated in the complaint for rescission on the ground of fraud. It seems to be sufficient. The cause of action upon the ground of failure of consideration contained allegations of unfulfilled representations, some of which are insufficient in amount or materiality to amount to such a failure of consideration as would entitle plaintiff to rescind or furnish him an excuse for not keeping up the payments. These allegations include failure to deliver one automobile of the value of $300, shortage in the agreed number of chickens, defective quality of the chickens, defective condition of pipe and water supply, and the like. These things represent breaches of contract rather than failure of consideration. An action for such breaches of contract must be supported by allegation and proof of performance of the contract upon the part of plaintiff. In an action for rescission, however, upon the grounds of failure of consideration or fraud, plaintiff need not show that he has kept up the payments required of him by the contract. De Bairos v. Barlin, 46 Cal. App. 665, 674, 190 P. 188. These representations, however, are repeated in the cause of action upon fraud. There was also a more material allegation of failure of consideration in the complaint. It was alleged that there was a dwelling house on the purchased ranch of the value of $3,000, which was a material part of the agreement and which burned after the making of the contract through no fault of the plaintiff. It was also alleged, rather imperfectly, that defendant had collected $3,000 insurance, but failed to credit plaintiff with that amount or to reconstruct the dwelling. It was alleged that defendant agreed to keep the building insured and to reconstruct it in case of loss by fire, but the contract of purchase which was annexed to the complaint as an exhibit, contained a provision that plaintiff should maintain $3,000 fire insurance upon the house. The complaint, however, does not allege who bought the insurance which is alleged to have been collected by defendant.

In White v. Gilman, 138 Cal. 375, 71 P. 436, it was held that both vendor and vendee under an executory contract for the sale and purchase of real property had an insurable interest in the improvements, and that the insurance money in case of fire belonged to the one who had bought the insurance. If the complaint here sought only the insurance money, the plaintiff should show that he purchased the insurance; but he also claims the right to rescind on account of the destruction of the building regardless of insurance.

In Conlin v. Osborn, 161 Cal. 659, 120 P. 755, it was held that the vendee was entitled to rescind for failure of consideration upon the destruction by fire of the improvements upon the real property agreed to be purchased. The purchaser there had not taken possession, and the final documents effecting the transfer had not been made and delivered, but the vendee had paid a large deposit and the vendor had agreed to the terms of the sale. The transaction was awaiting examination of title. The vendor had not yet delivered possession, but that fact has not been considered a distinguishing circumstance in California. The case has been followed where the vendee was in possession and where title had not passed.

In Kirtley v. Perham, 176 Cal. 333, 168 P. 351, the loss of personal property by destruction was held to fall upon the vendor who had retained title although the vendee had possession. In Cooper v. Huntington, 178 Cal. 160, 172 P. 591, the destruction of land by erosion was held to be ground for rescission for failure of consideration at the instance of the vendee in possession. This decision at page 166 of 178 Cal. (172 P. 593) makes it plain that the doctrine of the case of Conlin v. Osborn, supra, is not to be limited to where the vendee is not in possession. It was followed in Wong Ah Sure v. Ty Fook, 37 Cal. App. 465, 469, 174 P. 64; La Chance v. Brown, 41 Cal. App.

500, 183 P. 216; and Ogren v. Inner Harbor Land Co., 83 Cal. App. 197, 200, 256 P. 607. See, also, Potts Drug Co. v. Benedict, 156 Cal. 322, 334, 104 P. 432, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 609; Smith v. Phoenix Insurance Co., 91 Cal. 323, 27 P. 738, 13 L. R. A. 475, 25 Am. St. Rep. 191; 22 A. L. R. 575, 578, note; Civ. Code, § 1689, subd. 4.

In the case at bar the clause in the written contract requiring the vendee to keep the building insured and the allegation in the complaint that the vendor agreed to keep the building insured give rise to uncertainty, but that uncertainty relates to the plaintiff's claim for the insurance money or credit for the same. The complaint is still broad enough to present the issue of right of rescission upon the ground of failure of consideration caused by the destruction of the $3,000 building on the property the total purchase price of which was $11,000. The building must be held to have been a material part of the inducement and consideration of the contract, and it is so alleged in the complaint.

We conclude, therefore, that the plaintiff's complaint tendered a good issue of fraud and a good issue of failure of consideration which, if supported by evidence, would entitle plaintiff to rescind the agreement and recover back the money paid. If the plaintiff had the right of rescission upon either of these grounds, he was not obliged to keep up his payments under the contract. His failure to keep up his payments would not bar his right of rescission on these grounds. De Bairos v. Barlin, supra.

The plaintiff's confession by default of the allegations of the cross-complaint did not, therefore, negative his cause of action set out in his complaint. Defendant was not entitled to judgment upon the pleadings because the issues made by the complaint and answer thereto, if decided in favor of plaintiff, would entitle plaintiff to judgment notwithstanding all the allegations of the cross-complaint be true.

[7] The plaintiff's notice of rescission offered in writing to return and restore to defendant everything of value received by him upon condition that defendant restore to him everything received by defendant in said transaction. After this offer in writing the pleadings do not show that plaintiff remained in possession of the property in such a manner as to waive his right to rescind. He was not obliged to allege that he had abandoned it.

The judgment is reversed.

SMITH v. SMITH. (Civ. 6211.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. June 28, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 18, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 26, 1929.

1. Divorce $\Rightarrow$ 182—Allowance of temporary alimony pending appeal, where previous allowance for support had been made, was not cumulative.

Where previous allowance for support had been made, order for temporary alimony pending appeal was not cumulative.

2. Divorce $\Rightarrow$ 182—\$250 attorneys' fees and \$50 costs incident to defense of first appeal in divorce action on application for supersedeas held reasonable.

Allowance of $250 attorneys' fees and $50 costs incident to defense of first appeal in divorce action on application for supersedeas held reasonable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action by Martha A. Smith against Lewellyn J. Smith. From an order modifying order for alimony, and order granting temporary alimony, counsel fees, and costs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

R. E. Wallace and W. W. Kaye, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hewitt, Ford & Crump, J. F. Moroney, and J. Thomas Russell, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

YORK, J. This record discloses that there are two orders from which appeals are taken. See opinion on application for supersedeas, 201 Cal. 217, 256 P. 419.

The first order appealed from was an order modifying a prior order by which modification defendant was required to pay plaintiff $100 per month for three years and $50 per month for an additional three years. Pending the appeal, the plaintiff moved the trial court for an order granting her $100 per month temporary alimony and $250 attorneys' fees, and $50 costs incident to the defense of the first appeal. Upon this motion being granted, defendant again appealed.

It is argued by appellant that no necessity was shown for the making of either order, and that, in the absence of direct evidence as to the exact amount that was necessary for the support of plaintiff and the education of her son, both of the orders of the trial court should be reversed by this court.

The record does disclose sufficient evidence to justify the court in making both of the orders complained of. As to the ability of defendant, he actually was before the court, and, regardless of his property, the court found from testimony given that he was able to earn the amounts ordered paid.

[1, 2] Upon the evidence shown by the record, it does not appear that the trial court abused its discretion in making the order, requiring the defendant to pay plaintiff the amount fixed by the first order appealed from, or that the trial court erred or abused its discretion in not granting defendant's motion to vacate such order.

The second order complained of requiring defendant to pay a certain allowance for support pending the appeal, and attorneys' fees and costs incident to the appeal, was made without the introduction of additional evidence of any change of circumstances other than the appeal itself would imply. But this is of no importance, since we are affirming the previous allowance for support, and as to that allowance the second order is not cumulative. The allowance for attorneys' fees and expenses on the appeal is clearly reasonable and not excessive.

Affirmance of both of the orders of the trial court will, of course, result in defendant having to pay all of the attorney's fees and costs in both orders, but will not have the effect of compelling him to pay both items of $100 per month specified in the orders for the support and maintenance of the plaintiff and Elden L. Smith, the minor child of plaintiff and defendant. This part of the second order being only a duplication of the first order in this particular, the payments of $100 per month as such support money on either order will satisfy that item in the other order.

Both orders appealed from are, therefore, affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

In re INGRAM'S ESTATE.INGRAM v. BOSTER et al.

(Civ. 6650.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 28, 1929.

1. Executors and administrators $\Rightarrow$ 20(8)—Court must make and sign written findings to support refusal of petition for appointment as administrator (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 632, 633, 1716, 1717).

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 632, 633, made applicable to probate proceedings by reference in sections 1716, 1717, court must make and sign written findings on issues framed to support refusal of petition for appointment as administrator of decedent's estate.

2. Executors and administrators $\Rightarrow$ 20(8)—Trial judge's oral opinion, stating reasons for denying petition for appointment as administrator, is not part of findings (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 632, 633, 1716, 1717).

Trial judge's oral opinion, stating his reasons for sustaining opposition to petitioner's appointment as administrator of decedent's es-late, appointing another as administrator and denying petition, is not part of findings, required by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 632, 633, made applicable to probate proceedings by sections 1716, 1717.

3. Executors and administrators ⇨20(10)—Trial judge's oral opinion, stating reasons for denying petition for appointment as administrator, is not properly part of record on appeal (Code Civ. Proc. § 1369).

Trial judge's oral opinion, stating reasons for denying petition for appointment as administrator of decedent's estate, is not properly part of record on appeal, and may be stricken from transcript on motion, so that Court of Appeal cannot consider question whether petitioner was incompetent, as trial court was required to find, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1369, to authorize denial of petition.

4. Executors and administrators ⇨20(10)—Appellant, not demurring to opposition to his appointment as administrator, cannot urge its insufficiency to put his competency in issue (Code Civ. Proc. § 1369).

Where opposition to appointment of petitioner as administrator of decedent's estate was not attacked by demurrer, and parties went to trial on theory that it was sufficient, petitioner cannot urge its insufficiency to put his competency in issue, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1369, on appeal from order denying petition.

5. Appeal and error ⇨882(9)—Appellant cannot complain of hearsay testimony on his own cross-examination.

Appellant cannot complain of admission of hearsay testimony adduced on his own cross-examination.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Guerin, Judge.

Petition by Joseph M. Ingram for appointment as administrator of the estate of Esau A. Ingram, deceased, opposed by Charles G. Boster, who filed a similar petition, and others. From orders sustaining the opposition, appointing Boster as administrator, and denying the petition of Ingram, the latter appeals. Reversed.

J. E. Light, of Glendale, for appellant.

Eugene A. Tucker, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. Esau A. Ingram died intestate in Los Angeles county on January 8, 1929, leaving surviving him a brother, who is the petitioner in this matter, a sister, Mary E. Thrasher, one of the respondents, who waived her claim to letters of administration, and nephews and nieces, who are the other contestants and respondents. On January 21, 1929, Joseph M. Ingram filed his petition for appointment as administrator of the estate of his deceased brother. On January 25, 1929, Charles G. Boster, one of the contestants filed a similar petition, and, in addition thereto, all of the contestants filed opposition to the appointment of Joseph M. Ingram, alleging as grounds therefor as follows: "That the said Joseph M. Ingram is more than seventy-five (75) years of age, and for some time past, and at the present time, is incompetent to transact business, and would be wholly incompetent to take charge of said estate, and to manage the same for the best interests of those interested in said estate." The answer to the opposition denies that petitioner is incompetent either by reason of age or otherwise to serve as administrator, and alleges that he is possessed of all his mental faculties and competent in every way to manage the business of the estate. Upon those pleadings the cause was tried by the court, resulting in an order sustaining the opposition of the contestants, the appointment of Charles G. Boster administrator, and the denial of the petition of Joseph M. Ingram. This appeal is prosecuted by the petitioner from all the orders thus made.

[1] The principal ground relied upon by appellant is that the trial court failed to make any findings upon the issues framed; that without such decision there is no adjudication to support the refusal of the court to appoint the surviving brother of the deceased to administer his estate. Sections 1716 and 1717 of the Code of Civil Procedure by reference make sections 632 and 633 of the same Code applicable to the trial and determination of issues of fact in probate proceedings as in ordinary civil actions. These latter sections render it necessary for the court to make its decision in writing, i. e., to sign findings. It has been said by this court that "the right to findings is a substantial right, as inviolate, under the statute, as that of trial by jury under the Constitution. * * * 'The right to have a material issue presented by the pleadings in a cause determined by a finding of the court is one important to the parties to a suit, and the failure to make such a finding results in prejudicial error entitling the complaining suitor to reversal.' (Huntington v. Vavra, 36 Cal. App. 355, 172 P. 168. See, also, Tucker v. United Railroads, 171 Cal. 704, 154 P. 835.)" Frascona v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., 48 Cal. App. 135, 191 P. 968.

[2,3] When the trial judge orally announced his opinion upon the subject-matter of the contest, he gave his reasons for making the orders appealed from, and counsel for respondents has quoted from this opinion as though it constituted the findings. With this assumption we cannot agree. "Such opinions are not part of the findings." Estate of Felton, 176 Cal. 663, 169 P. 392. They are not properly a part of the record on appeal. Clas-sen v. Thomas, 164 Cal. 196, 128 P. 329. And, as is said in 2 California Jurisprudence, 235: "When it (the opinion) is incorporated in the transcript, it may be stricken out on motion." We are therefore confronted with orders made depending upon an issue of fact joined without a determination of that question, and without an adjudication by the court that the petitioner was incompetent to execute the duties of the trust as required by section 1369 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and by authority. See Estate of Gordon, 142 Cal. 125, at page 133, 75 P. 672.

[4] We have assumed in the discussion so far that the allegation of the respondents was sufficient to put the competency of petitioner in issue. It certainly lacks that degree of certainty which would commend it to the thoughtful pleader. In view of the fact, however, that it was not the subject of an attack by demurrer and the parties went to trial upon the theory that it was sufficient, the appellant can hardly be heard to urge its insufficiency on appeal.

[5] The appellant also assails the orders on the ground that the testimony does not support them. In view of the fact, however, that it will be necessary to retry the issue of the competency of the appellant, it seems to us improper to discuss the state of the evidence other than to observe that hearsay testimony to which appellant objects was adduced on his own cross-examination.

Orders reversed.

DELLAROWE v. KIRCHNER et al.
(Civ. 5406.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 25, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨994(3)—Trial judge has sole right to believe or reject testimony of witness in trial before court.

In case tried before court, trial judge has the sole right to believe or reject the testimony of a witness.

2. Pledges ⇨36—Evidence held to sustain finding that defendant refused to redeliver collateral, though under his possession and control at time of tender of sum advanced, with interest.

Evidence held to sustain finding that notes were delivered to defendant as collateral for loan, only a part of which defendant had advanced, and which was not represented by a note or other evidence of indebtedness, and that defendant refused and neglected to redeliver collateral on demand therefor and tender of amount loaned, with interest, at time when defendant had control and possession of such collateral.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Fleming, Judge.

Action by A. K. Dellarowe against Emil Kirchner and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

Harrah, Louis & Quillian and H. B. Pool, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Ernest B. Coil, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. The plaintiff recovered a judgment in the court below in the sum of $1,500 against the defendants Kirchner and Bartel, the complaint having been dismissed as to the defendant Scoville. The defendant Emil Kirchner prosecutes this appeal from the judgment.

The facts necessary to an understanding of the case are as follows: Some time during November, 1922, the defendant George Bartel executed and delivered to plaintiff's assignor, Jack L. Dawson, eight promissory notes, in the principal sum of $200 each, bearing interest at 7 per cent., and maturing at intervals of 30 days apart. In addition to being signed by the defendant Bartel, the notes were also executed by his wife, Frances Lee Bartel, and one Louise Dawson. Shortly after the execution of the notes, plaintiff's assignor made application to the appellant for a loan, offering as collateral security seven of the notes. Appellant was unwilling to state the amount he would loan, but did agree to and did advance $150, and requested Jack L. Dawson, plaintiff's assignor, to call back within a day or two, and appellant would state the amount he was willing to loan. Dawson made several trips to appellant's office thereafter, but was unable to find him in for 10 or 15 days. About 30 days after the advance was made the appellant indorsed the seven notes, which had been indorsed and delivered over to him as collateral to the defendant George Bartel.

The court has found the foregoing facts, and, in addition, that Dawson offered to appellant and to Bartel the principal sum of $150, together with interest thereon, and demanded redelivery of the notes, but that each of them refused. The principal contention of appellant is that he had a right to assign to the defendant Bartel his claim for $150 (or to indorse the note therefor, which, however, the court has found upon substantial evidence was not executed) and as an incident thereto to transfer the collateral security. He therefore asserts that the following portions of findings Nos. 2 and 3 are not supported by the testimony:

(1) From finding No. 2: "That the said Emil Kirchner at that time agreed to and did advance to the said Dawson the sum of $150 and requested the said Dawson to call by his office within a day or two, and he would be able to state just how much money he would loan to the said Dawson upon said security, and that in the meantime he would investigate the security. That no note or other written evidence of indebtedness was executed or delivered by the said Dawson to the said Kirchner to represent the said advance of $150."

(2) From finding No. 3: "That subsequent to said assignment and transfer and prior to the commencement of this action, the plaintiff caused demand to be made upon each of said defendants George Bartel and Emil Kirchner for the delivery of the possession of said seven notes, at the time of said demand he offered to pay the said sum of $150, together with any and all accrued interest thereon, which said offer and demand was by each of said defendants refused.

"That within 30 days after the delivery of said notes by the said Jack L. Dawson to the said defendant Kirchner, the said defendant Kirchner, without the knowledge of the said Dawson, and against the will and without the consent of said Dawson, sold and transferred the said notes and each of them to the said defendant George Bartel, and caused a delivery of said notes to be immediately made to the said Bartels for a consideration.

"That the said plaintiff was, at the time demand for the possession of said notes was so made as aforesaid, prior to the commencement of said action and at all times thereafter, up to the commencement of said action, ready, able, and willing to pay the said sum of $150 so advanced to the said Jack L. Dawson, together with any and all accrued interest thereon, and upon condition that the said notes be surrendered. That the said Jack L. Dawson at the time he made demand for the possession of said notes, prior to said assignment to the plaintiff herein, was ready, able, and willing to repay the amount of said advancement, namely, $150, together with accrued interest thereon, upon condition that the said notes be returned to him."

[1, 2] In so far as the first quoted portion of the finding is concerned, it is sufficient to say that it is substantially the testimony of plaintiff's assignor, which, of course, the trial judge, under a well-known rule of law, had the sole right to believe or reject. By virtue of this finding it would follow that appellant had not the right to transfer the collateral until the amount of the loan and its terms had been settled, and it becomes of no great importance to determine whether the second quoted portion of finding No. 3 is supported or not. However, appellant testified that he transferred the notes to the defendant Bartel about 30 days after the $150 was advanced to Dawson; that the reason he transferred them was because he "had been informed that there was some trouble brewing or differences in the sale of the drug store from Mr. Dawson to Mr. Bartel, and" he "did not want to be involved." Mr. Kirchner also stated on the stand that, when he sold the $150 note, he received $150 as principal, together with $1.50 as interest, which interest, if computed at the legal rate, would indicate that his transfer to Bartel had been considerably more than 30 days after the money was advanced. In the meantime, according to the testimony of plaintiff's assignor, and about 10 or 15 days after he received the $150 from appellant, he found the appellant in his office and told him, "if he did not want to advance * * * any more money, that" he would take up the notes, and offered to repay the $150 and interest, to make which payment he says he was then prepared. This witness further testified that appellant at this early date said that he did not have the notes in his possession, but had sent them to the bank at Tujunga.

Inquiry at the bank and of the defendant Bartel failed to disclose their whereabouts. Obviously the testimony to which we have referred is sufficient to support all those parts of the finding necessary to support the judgment as against this appellant. Not only did the appellant refuse and neglect to redeliver the collateral at a time when confessedly it was under his control and possession, but the testimony is subject to the construction that he united or co-operated with the defendant Bartel in inflicting a wrong upon plaintiff's assignor.

Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. MAZZOLA. (Cr. 1789.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. July 1, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 15, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 29, 1929.

1. Criminal law $\S$ 1209—Single offense cannot be divided for purpose of inflicting double punishment.

Single offense cannot be carved into different parts in order to inflict double punishment.

2. Intoxicating liquors $\S$ 173—Defendant having possession of still for some time before it was set in operation could be convicted on separate counts for possessing and operating still, since two offenses were involved.

Prosecution under two counts of information for possessing and operating still held to involve separate offenses permitting two judgments to be entered, where testimony was sufficient to authorize conclusion that defendant had possession of still for some time before it was set up and put to work.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 511(1)—Testimony of accomplices held sufficiently corroborated to sustain conviction for possessing and operating still (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1111).

In prosecution for possessing and operating still, testimony of accomplices establishing guilt of defendant held sufficiently corroborated under Pen. Code, $\S$ 1111, in view of testimony as to defendant's presence at and flight from scene of operations and finding of self-incriminating note.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 511(2)—Evidence corroborating accomplice's testimony, where defendant's connection with crime may fairly be inferred therefrom, is sufficient (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1111).

Evidence corroborating accomplices required by Pen. Code, $\S$ 1111, need not establish actual commission of offense, but is sufficient if connection of defendant with crime may fairly be inferred therefrom.

5. Criminal law $\S$ 823(16)—Erroneous instruction that defendant aiding "or" abetting in crime might be convicted as principal held harmless, in view of other instructions and court's use of conjunction "and" in other places.

In prosecution for possessing and operating still, error of trial court in permitting jury to convict defendant as principal if he aided "or" abetted in commission of crime held harmless, where in same instruction court properly used conjunction "and," and stated that it was sufficient if defendant was concerned with some other person in operating still, and court employed language of Pen. Code, $\S$ 31, defining persons concerned in commission of crime.

* Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Charles L. Allison, Judge.

Antonio Mazzola was convicted of possessing and operating a still, and he appeals. Affirmed.

W. T. Kendrick, Jr., of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and James W. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. The defendant, together with Rafael Cervantes and Orville H. Kilbourne, was charged by information filed by the district attorney of San Bernardino county with the offenses of possession of a still and operating a still; the first count alleging the possession and the second the operation. Cervantes and Kilbourne pleaded guilty. The jury found the defendant guilty of both counts, and he appeals from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial.

The grounds set up by appellant as reasons for a reversal are four, as follows: (1) "The appellant was tried for two crimes based upon one transaction, which, under the law, constitute one crime only"; (2) "two judgments in the case are pronounced against appellant for one crime"; (3) there is no testimony other than that of accomplices connecting or tending to connect appellant with the offenses; (4) the court erred in giving certain instructions.

[1, 2] It is to be noticed that the first two points raised by appellant are substantially the same, and both will be determined by finding an answer to the question: Was the only act of possession of the still necessarily involved in that of operating the still? If the possession of which the appellant was found guilty was necessary and incidental only to that of operating the still, then he was guilty of but one offense, and it cannot be carved into pieces whereby to inflict double punishment. Schroeder v. United States (C. C. A.) 7 F.(2d) 60, and cases there cited. If, however, there was possession for a substantial period of time which was not necessarily incident to the operation of the proscribed utensils, the appellant could be found guilty of both offenses. In re Chaus (Cal. App.) 268 P. 422, and cases there cited. Aside from the force of precedent, however, it is obvious that a person might have a still in his possession for an appreciable period of time without attempting to or without any idea of operating the same, and then determine to and actually put it into use. Under such circumstances no doubt could exist concerning the commission of both offenses. The testimony in the instant cause was sufficient to authorize the conclusion that appellant had had possession of the still for some time prior to the time it was set up and put to work where it was found by the officers. We are compelled, therefore, not to agree with appellant that he was guilty of only one offense.

[3, 4] The testimony of the accomplices establishes beyond question the guilt of the appellant. It remains, however, to inquire whether there is independent evidence tending to connect him with the offenses. On the day of the arrest of Cervantes and Kilbourne, i. e., on December 2, 1928, and while the officers were still at the place where the still was found, two men approached the house. Mrs. Cervantes called to the officers, whereupon the men ran. They were not found, but a Studebaker automobile was found on the north side of the premises, of which the police took possession. They discovered that it belonged to a Mr. Walker of Lomita. Walker testified that he was visiting the appellant on this same day; that about four o'clock the appellant told the witness that he was taking his (Walker's) automobile for about 20 minutes; that appellant did not return; and the next time the witness saw his machine was when it was turned over to him by the police. There was also introduced in evidence a note in the handwriting of the appellant, which he had given to one Ray Fowler, the stepfather of Orville Kilbourne, with directions to the former to deliver it to the latter, reading as follows: "You bought the barrels from my wife, you had not been working for me for 10 days. You never saw me on the place at all. I had nothing to do with it at all. And say that the Mexican had nothing to do with the place either, all he was doing there was living there and was to start to work for the owner of the ranch planting trees. You plead guilty and claim ownership of everything and stick to it. I have it all fixed to get you out on parole. And don't let nobody tell you different. Stick to this story and we will all get out O. K. After you have read this about four times destroy it! We all have the same story." Mrs. Cervantes, the wife of appellant's codefendant, also testified to the possession of the still prior to the time it was set up and put into operation at Upland; that she was present when it was set up at the place where it was found; and that the first day there it was operated by the appellant and Kilbourne; that on the day of the arrest appellant did not appear until between 4 and 4:30 o'clock in the afternoon; that when she saw him coming through the trees she called to the officers; that when appellant saw the officers he turned and ran "toward the mountains." She also testified that appellant told her to say she didn't know "anything about it" and that he would supply her with provisions. It cannot be seriously contended that there is not evidence tending to connect the appellant with the commission of the offenses, separate and apart from that of his accomplices. Our attention has not been called to any testimony indicating that Mrs. Cervantes was an accomplice. But aside from her testimony we have the evidence of the presence of appellant at and flight from the scene of the operations by the circumstances attending the finding of the Studebaker automobile, and also the self-incriminating note which he attempted to deliver to one of his codefendants. The books abound with declarations that the corroborating evidence required by section 1111 of the Penal Code need not establish the actual commission of the offense; that it is sufficient if, from the corroborating testimony and circumstances, the connection of the accused with the crime may fairly be inferred. See People v. Yeager, 194 Cal. 452, 229 P. 40; People v. Nikolich (Cal. App.) 269 P. 721.

[5] The error of which appellant complains in the instructions is found in those which deal with the duty of the jury to convict as a principal one who, though he has not directly committed the act, has aided and abetted in its commission, or, not being present, has advised and encouraged its commission. Unfortunately, and erroneously (see People v. Dole, 122 Cal. 486, 55 P. 581, 63 Am. St. Rep. 50), the court, while giving three instructions, used the disjunctive "or" between the words "aid" and "abet" on two occasions. In the same instructions, however, and on the three occasions, he properly used the conjunction "and." In addition thereto, in each instance in which the word "or" was used it immediately followed a statement that it was not essential that the defendant actually operate or physically possess the still, but it was sufficient if he was concerned with some other person in possessing or operating. Also the court employed the language of section 31 of the Penal Code defining what is meant by persons who are "concerned in the commission of a crime" as being not only those who directly commit the act but also those who "aid and abet in its commission, or, not being present, have advised and encouraged its commission." Taking the context of the instructions as a whole into consideration, as well as the circumstances of the instant cause, we are bound to conclude, as did the Supreme Court in People v. Dole, supra, and in People v. Arnold, 199 Cal. 471, 250 P. 168, that the error was not prejudicial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by the City of Albany against William F. Meyer. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Lovett K. Fraser, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Clark, Nichols & Eltse, of Berkeley (Reece Clark, of counsel), for respondent.

NOURSE, J. The plaintiff, a municipal corporation, sued for libel in the sum of $5,000 for damages to its good name, reputation and credit and asked for an additional sum of $5,000 as punitive damages. A general demurrer to the complaint was sustained without leave to amend, and, from the judgment in favor of defendant which followed, the plaintiff has appealed upon a typewritten transcript.

The complaint alleged that the defendant wrongfully and maliciously and with intent to injure the plaintiff published a false, libelous, and defamatory article reading as follows: "Financial Condition of Albany: The City of Albany now faces bankruptcy, borrowing money from the banks at 7% interest in order to pay employees. No money is available for street improvements. Special assessments will have to be made for repairs." It was further alleged that said article was untrue, and that it was published maliciously with intent to injure the plaintiff in its business, destroy its financial standing, and create doubt in the minds of the people of Albany and others in the bay region as to its solvency and ability to perform its contracts and pay its bonds and debts.

From the briefs it appears that the circular in question was published by the defendant and a number of other citizens of Albany in opposition to a proposal for the issuance of bonds for the erection of a new school building by the city. In support of the demurrer the respondent relies upon the provisions of section 9, article 1, of the Constitution, which gives every citizen freedom to speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects "being responsible for the abuse of that right," and upon the authority of City of Chicago v. Tribune Publishing Co., 307 Ill. 595, 139 N. E. 86, 28 A. L. R. 1368. The appellant relies upon the English case of Manchester v. Williams, 1891, 1 Q. B. Div. 94. An exhaustive search of the authorities discloses that these two cases are the only two reported which involve the question of the right of a municipal corporation to sue a citizen for libel. The English case upon which the appellant relies is not authority for the point cited. That was an action by the city of Manchester against a citizen for libel consisting in the published statement that bribery and corruption existed in certain departments of the city council, and that the city authorities were either parties thereto or culpably ignorant thereof. In holding that the action would not lie the English court said: "A corporation may sue for libel affecting property," and cited the decision of Pollock, C. B., in Metropolitan Saloon Omnibus Co. v. Hawkins. The case cited, however, was one by private corporation for an imputation of insolvency, and in the course of that opinion Pollock, C. B., said that a corporation "could not sue in respect of an imputation of murder, or incest, or adultery because it could not commit those crimes. Nor could it sue in respect of a charge of corruption, for a corporation cannot be guilty of corruption, although the individuals composing it may." It is apparent that in the Manchester Case the reference to the Hawkins Case was for the purpose of distinguishing between a suit for libel resulting in an injury to property and one which charged corruption or the imputation of crime. There is not in either opinion any intimation that a municipal corporation, as distinguished from a private corporation might sue one of its citizens for libel whether the libel affected the property of the citizen or merely affected the personal reputation of the city or its officers.

In Chicago v. Tribune Publishing Co. the action was instituted by the city of Chicago because of published statements reflecting upon the credit and financial standing of the municipality and the mismanagement of its affairs by those then in office. These publications were made during the heat of a political campaign in which the Tribune claimed that the city administration was endeavoring to gain political control of the state at large. The court held that the city could not maintain the action principally upon the ground that the right of free speech guaranteed by section 4 of article 2 of the Constitution of the state of Illinois rendered all utterances or publications against the government or the administration then in power, excepting those tending to violate law or overthrow by force or other unlawful means the existing government, absolutely privileged. That section of the Constitution is substantially the same as the provisions of section 9 of article 1 of the Constitution of this state.

In the course of the opinion in the Chicago Case the court pointed out that the old common-law right of the government to punish or sue for libel which prevailed in the days of the divine right of kings on the theory that the king could do no wrong is fundamentally out of harmony with the whole American system of government, which is based upon the theory that the people are sovereign, that its magistrates, as servants of the people can do wrong, and that the people have the fundamental right to criticise them and to expose their inefficiency and corruption. The opinion carefully points out the distinction between criticism of the administration of government and publications tending to incite to crime or to the overthrow by force or other unlawful means the existing form of government, and also points out that there should be no distinction in principle between criminal prosecutions for libel under the old common-law doctrine and civil actions for damages for libel because in the latter class of actions, if the government should be permitted to sue its citizens for damages for every false or malicious criticism of its ministers who are temporarily conducting its affairs, the punishment of the citizen might be as severe as any that could be obtained under a criminal prosecution.

[1-3] But on the question of privilege arising from the express provisions of the state Constitution, and based upon the fundamental right of liberty guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States, the court said: "It follows, therefore, that every citizen has a right to criticise an inefficient or corrupt government without fear of civil as well as criminal prosecution. This absolute privilege is founded on the principle that it is advantageous for the public interest that the citizen should not be in any way fettered in his statements, and where the public service or due administration of justice is involved he shall have the right to speak his mind freely." With this principle we agree. The privilege found in the section of the Constitution goes to every citizen of the state in the matter of the free expression of his sentiments on all public subjects, and by the provisions of that section he is responsible only for the abuse of that right. This constitutional privilege controls over any of the provisions of section 47 of the Civil Code specifying privileged communications as between persons. If in any case a municipal corporation might maintain libel actions against one of its citizens for published criticism of the conduct of its affairs or of its administrative officers, an essential element of the complaint would be the allegation that such publication was in abuse of the right of free speech guaranteed by this section of the Constitution. The complaint under consideration does not contain any allegations which charge that this right of the citizen was abused in the publication complained of. The mere fact that it is said to have been false and malicious does not meet the point. Falsity of the publication is not an abuse of the right of free speech, and the charge that the publication was malicious necessarily means that the respondent spoke with malice towards the municipal corporation and not with malice towards the administrative officers thereof, and, if this could under any theory be grounds for an action on the part of the municipal corporation, it would be necessary to go further and allege facts showing such malice, or facts which would take the publication out of the privilege found in the constitutional section.

[4] But aside from any technical objections to the form of pleading, "this action is out of tune with the American spirit, and has no place in American jurisprudence," as said the Illinois court in the Chicago Case, because, if the administrative officers of any branch of the government may use the process in libel, either civil or criminal, to control criticism of their financial policies in the management of the government's business, then the constitutional guaranty of free speech becomes a shadow without a substance. That right means nothing if it does not mean a guaranty of freedom of thought and of speech antagonistic to those in power as well as freedom of that which is favorable to, or commendatory of, them. Mr. Justice Holmes has expressed the view in his dissenting opinion in the recent case of United States v. Schwimmer (May 27, 1929, No. 484, October term, 1928) 49 S. Ct. 448, 73 L. Ed. —, that "if there is any principle of the Constitution that more imperatively calls for attachment than any other it is the principle of free thought—not free thought for those who agree with us but freedom for the thought that we hate."

Judgment affirmed.

It read: "Please enter the order of the undersigned for the following secondhand adding machines:" Here follows description of the machine and numerous clauses defining the obligations of the parties. The document contained the further clause: "This order is not binding until accepted by the Company at its Executive Office. Notice of acceptance is hereby waived by the undersigned." A blank space was provided at the end of the form for the signature of some one on behalf of plaintiff at its executive office.

B. Harris is the defendant and the sole proprietor of the Harris Company. His testimony was that he told Irons that the machine was not satisfactory and that thereupon Irons said, "Send it back and I will cancel the contract," so defendant gave the contract to Irons and sent the machine back to the Adding Machine Exchange store October 1. Mr. Irons, the salesman, was not a witness, and defendant's version of his conversation with him is therefore uncontradicted, except possibly by the following: C. A. Ray, general manager of the Adding Machine Exchange store, testified that upon the return of the machine to his store he telephoned to the defendant's store asking for Mr. Harris, and that whoever answered the phone said the machine was returned pursuant to arrangements made with Mr. Irons for a different and later type of machine, so he let the machine remain.

Mr. Engelhardt, manager of Burroughs Adding Machine Company at San Francisco, testified without objection that no one but himself had authority to take back sold machines and he only upon instructions from the home office; that before delivery of the machine certain attachments had been added at defendant's request. He also testified that he sent letters to defendant. These letters were self-serving in the main part and had no evidentiary value except to show that the return of the machine was not accepted as a rescission or cancellation of the alleged contract.

[1] As a salesman Irons had no authority to cancel the contract if one existed. His authority was to sell and not to cancel the sale after one was made. Lindow v. Cohn, 5 Cal. App. 388, 90 P. 485, is directly in point, being much similar in its facts to the case at bar. See, also, Thomas v. Anthony, 30 Cal. App. 217, 157 P. 823; Morton v. Albers Bros. Milling Co., 66 Cal. App. 391, 226 P. 809.

[2] The question remains whether a contract of sale had been entered into under the facts. The appellant contends that no contract existed, because it was never signed by respondent at its executive office as contemplated. He contends that this fact brings the case within the general rule that in such case no contract is made until signed by all who are intended to sign. Respondent contends for the application of the exception of that rule, namely, that, where the parties have both acceded to the terms of the contract and acted upon it as if it had been formally entered into as contemplated, then the parties are estopped from asserting that the contract does not exist. Sparks v. Mauk, 170 Cal. 122, 148 P. 926; Vitagraph v. Liberty Theatres, 197 Cal. 694, 242 P. 709. We need not determine whether the acts of the parties in this action are such as to bring the case within the exception to the general rule because it has been called to our attention upon the oral argument that the appellant's answer by its failure to deny certain allegations of the complaint has admitted the making of the contract and the delivery of the machine by the plaintiff. The judgment roll shows this to be the fact.

The judgment appealed from is, therefore, affirmed.

SAWYER v. BERKELEY SECURITIES CO.
et al. (Civ. 3822.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 21, 1929.

1. Taxation ☞658(3)—Tax sale notice held insufficient for failure to state hour of sale (Pol. Code, § 3767).

Notice of tax sale, reciting that property on which taxes were a lien would, "by operation of law, be sold to the State of California, on Wednesday, the 29th day of June, 1921," held insufficient under Pol. Code, § 3767, for failure to state hour when property would be sold.

2. Taxation ☞658(3)—Mailing notice of tax sale less than 21 days before sale to person to whom land was last assessed held void (Pol. Code, § 3771a).

Notice of tax sale mailed to person in whose name property involved was assessed within less than 21 days before date of sale mentioned in notice held void under Pol. Code, § 3771a, even if delinquent taxpayer had actual notice of sale before its date, since length of time during which notice must be given is a substantial requirement, in view of sections 3764, 3771.

3. Taxation ☞734(2)—Assessment showing no dollar mark or other explanation indicating value of property or amount of taxes, and tax sale thereunder, held void (Pol. Code, § 3650).

Where original assessment on which tax sale was based did not show any dollar mark or other mark, sign, word, abbreviation, or explanation to indicate what was meant by figures in column designated to show value of property and amount of taxes, the assessment and tax sale thereunder were void under Pol. Code, § 3650.

4. Taxation ☞814(3)—Amount former owners must pay purchaser at tax sale to recover property held not dependent on validity of statute prescribing penalties or whether state had right to require purchaser to pay penalties (Pol. Code, §§ 3817, par. 2, 3898, subd. 5).

Under Pol. Code, § 3898, subd. 5, amount which former owners of land sold for delinquent taxes should pay to purchaser at tax sale in order to recover property does not depend on validity of section 3817, par. 2, prescribing penalties, or whether state had absolute legal right to charge penalties therein prescribed and require payment thereof by purchaser at time he received tax collector's deed, as against contention that, as property was not sold to state each year between date of first advertising of sale and date when property was sold, penalties did not attach.

5. Taxation ☞814(1)—Former owners having come into equity to recover property sold for taxes held not entitled to relief without reimbursing tax purchaser.

Where purchaser at tax sale instituted action to quiet title to lands purchased, but former owners asked to be let into possession and for such further relief as to the court might seem just and equitable, held that, since former owners came into equity asking equitable relief to obtain judgment invalidating tax sale and deed, they were not entitled to any relief except on condition that they first repaid tax purchaser the money paid out by him in obtaining whatever title or color of title state possessed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; J. C. Needham, Judge.

Action by J. L. Sawyer against the Berkeley Securities Company, bankrupt, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed, and remanded with directions.

Clark, Nichols & Eltse, of Berkeley, and Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, and Milton Newmark, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

David Bush, of Oakdale, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. Plaintiff had judgment quieting title to certain lands situate in the county of Stanislaus, state of California, described as follows: North tract lots E, F, 26 to 30, inclusive, and 15 acres lying southeasterly of above, being east of Sixth avenue, and northwest of south line of E street, in southwest quarter section 11, township 2 south, range 10 east. From this judgment the defendants appeal.

The plaintiff's title is based upon a certain deed of conveyance dated the 30th day of June, 1926, executed by Ed Whitmore, tax collector of the county of Stanislaus, as the party of the first part, to J. L. Sawyer, the plaintiff in this action, as party of the second part, whereby the said party of the first part purported to convey to the plaintiff the lands above described pursuant to the sale made thereof by the party of the first part to the party of the second part on account of delinquent taxes.

At the trial of said action, and upon this appeal, the appellants contend that the deed purporting to convey the above-described premises to the plaintiff was and is void for the following reasons: First, that the notice of the delinquency and sale of said property on account of the failure of payment of taxes assessed for the year 1920, was irregular and void, in that it did not specify the hour when, by operation of law, said property would be sold; second, that no notice of the sale of said property to the plaintiff was given to the person in whose name said property stood, and to whom it was assessed, as provided by law, the name and address of said person appearing upon the assessment roll; and, third, that the assessment for the year 1920 was and is void, and furnished no basis for a sale of said property and conveyance thereof to the plaintiff. Some other objections are made, but they are only incidental to the three which we have mentioned. The defendants in an answer, in addition to denying the title in the plaintiff, ask that they be let into possession, and for such other and further relief as to the court may seem just and equitable. The record shows that after the execution of the deed to the plaintiff, as above recited, the plaintiff went into and remained in possession of the premises described in the conveyance, and has received the rents, issues, and profits thereof, if any. The noncompliance with the provisions of the Political Code relative to notices and the alleged invalidity of the assessment in the first place, all appear of record and are matters about which there is no dispute, the legal sufficiency or insufficiency constituting the subject of controversy. We will consider the alleged invalid proceedings in the order named herein.

[1] Section 3767 of the Political Code, specifying the notice that shall be given when taxes have become delinquent, and title, by operation of law, will pass to the state unless payment is made, reads as follows: "The publication must designate the day and hour when the property will, by operation of law, be sold to the State, which sale must not be less than twenty-one nor more than twenty-eight days from the time of the first publication, and the place" of sale "shall be in the tax-collector's office." The notice given by the tax collector of the county of Stanislaus, so far as this question is concerned, read as follows: "The real estate upon which taxes are a lien will, by operation of law, be sold to the State of California, on Wednesday, the 29th day of June, 1921." In 24 California Jurisprudence, p. 237, § 300, we find the law as to what shall be stated in the notice and the authorities supporting the necessity for setting forth each particular requirement contained in the section, worded as follows: "Under the Code as amended in 1895, the tax collector is required to append to, and publish with the delinquent list a notice that unless the delinquent taxes, together with the costs and percentages, are paid, the real property upon which such taxes are a lien will be sold, designating the day and hour and place at which the property will be sold to the State. Such notice is designed to afford the property owner protection and enables him to pay his taxes before title shall pass from him, and is a jurisdictional prerequisite to the making of a valid sale." In the case of Numerator Gold Mining Co. v. Katzer, 83 Cal. App. 161, 256 P. 464, this court said: "The notice of the time of sale is statutory and jurisdictional, and the court may not speculate as to the actual date intended to have been inserted." Citing Lewis v. Tulare Reclamation District, 56 Cal. App. 52, 204 P. 421; Simmons v. McCarthy, 118 Cal. 622, 50 P. 761. And quoting from section 207 of Black on Tax Titles, is as follows: "It (the notice) must designate the time and place of the sale with such certainty that there can be no reasonable misconception in regard to it." Citing, also, 3 Cooley on Taxation (4th Ed.) p. 2804, § 1415. See, also, Bernhard v. Wall, 184 Cal. 612, at page 622, 194 P. 1040. In Beck v. Wilson, 49 Cal. App. 281, 193 P. 158, the court, in speaking of the notice required by this section, expressed its views in these words: "The legislature has seen fit to provide that such sales shall be made within a specified time after the first publication of the notice, and there can be no deviation from the rule which requires a strict compliance with such a provision. The rule is so well settled and of such universal application that it would seem an idle act to cite authorities in support thereof." However, a number of authorities are there cited. To the same effect is Cooley on Taxation (3d Ed.) vol. 2, pp. 929 and 930, that whatever the provision may be relative to the hour, day, and place specified in the statute, it must be strictly complied with.

[2] The second alleged failure to comply with the Code provisions refers to the mailing of the notice of sale, at which sale the plaintiff became the purchaser. The record shows that the tax collector of the county of Stanislaus mailed a copy of the delinquent list, addressed to the person in whose name the property involved was assessed, giving notice of the sale, and which delinquent list was mailed on June 11, 1926, which was less than 21 days before the date of sale mentioned in said notice. As to the failure of the tax collector in relation to the first notice, the court found as follows: "That while the notice of sale set out in this finding did not specify an hour of sale, that fact did not materially affect the rights of anyone or the authority of the tax collector to make the tax deed mentioned in finding No. 1." And in relation to the failure to mail notice as required by the Political Code, the court found as follows: "That the failure to mail said notice at least twenty-one days before the date of said sale fixed in said addenda was not material and did not materially or substantially affect the rights of the defendants or any of them." While the first notice referred to herein, published in 1921, stated that the property would be sold to the state, it is only by operation of law or fiction of law that we can treat the property as sold to the state. No deed in fact was ever executed, and thereafter the tax collector proceeded to advertise and sell the property under and in accordance with the provisions of sections 3764, 3771, and 3771a of the Political Code, and the intervening sections which are not material to consider herein. Section 3764, supra, provides that on or before the 8th day of June of each year the tax collector shall publish the delinquent list, which notice shall state a day and hour and place of sale, which must be had not less than 21 nor more than 28 days from the time of the first publication. And section 3771a of the same Code requires "that * * * the tax-collector shall, within five days after the first publication of said delinquent-list, mail a copy of said list or publication, postage thereon prepaid and registered, to the party to whom the land was last assessed next before such sale, at his last known" residence, "said notice to be mailed at least twenty-one days before the date of sale," etc. In 24 California Jurisprudence, p. 351, we find the following: "The notice, when given, must be mailed at least twenty-one days before the date of the sale thereunder, and to the party at his last known post office address, or the sale and deed will be void. The length of time during which a notice must be given is quite as substantial as the requirement that notice of sale shall be given at all." In the case at bar it is simply a question of a failure to give notice for the length of time required by the statute. In Knight v. Hall, 28 Cal. App. 435, 152 P. 952, a case involving the mailing of notice as required by the statute as it then read giving three weeks' notice, the notice being mailed on the 2d day of February, and the sale fixed for February 19th, the contention was made that the property owner had received actual notice, and at the trial the appellant offered in evidence a receipt showing that the person to whom the registered letter was addressed had receipted the same. Upon objection this offered testimony was excluded. This ruling was sustained upon appeal, the court in its opinion using the following language: "There was no error in this ruling, since it did not tend to prove a compliance with the provisions of the statute, without which there was no authority in the tax-collector to make the sale." Citing Cooley on Taxation (Ed. 1883) p. 335. "Actual notice of the time fixed for the sale cannot be deemed a substitute for the statutory requirement." Hearing of this case in the Supreme Court was denied. In Joslin v. Shaffer, 66 Cal. App. 69, 225 P. 307, this court had before it the question of the sufficiency of mailing a notice as provided by section 3771a of the Political Code, and also other sections relating to the mailing of notice, and in holding that a notice mailed, which contained a direction upon the envelope to return to the tax collector within a certain number of days, if not delivered, and which was returned undelivered, insufficient to comply with the statute, and quoted with approval the case of Smith v. Furlong, 160 Cal. 522, 117 P. 527, and Healton v. Morrison, 162 Cal. 668, 124 P. 240, where it was held "that, in a sale by the State under the provisions of section 3897" of the Political Code, "publication and mailing of notice 'were both jurisdictional prerequisites to a valid sale by the State, and that a failure to give the latter notice when the condition existed requiring it, rendered the sale and the deed thereunder void.'" A number of cases are cited in the opinion in the case, prepared by Presiding Justice Finch, showing that strict compliance with the Code provision as to the giving of notices is requisite. In Brady v. Bostwick, 21 Cal. App. 526, 132 P. 472, one of the earliest cases in which the District Court of Appeal passed upon the questions here involved, we find the following (quoting from the syllabus): "A tax sale is invalid if the tax collector fails to mail a copy of the notice of sale at least three weeks prior thereto, to the party to whom the land is assessed, if his name and address are known." This decision was handed down in 1913, prior to the amendments to the Political Code requiring twenty-one days' notice. To the same effect is the decision of this court in Cordano v. Kelsey, 28 Cal. App. 9, 151 P. 391, where, speaking through Presiding Justice Chipman, the court held that failure to give notice for the time specified, renders the sale void. The Code provision at that time required three weeks' notice before the sale. Twenty days' notice, only, was given. The time limit fixed by section 3897 of the Political Code being twenty-one days, and the notice having been mailed only twenty days before the day of sale, was one day short of the requirement of the statute, and, consequently, insufficient. In Rudell v. Collins, 174 Cal. 363, 163 P. 204, the court, having before it the sufficiency of a notice under section 3897 of the Political Code as it read in 1913, held as follows: "The mailing of the notice, where the post office address of the party to whom the land was last assessed is known, is a prerequisite to the authority of the tax collector to make the sale." Citing a number of cases. In Krotzer v. Douglas, 163 Cal. 49, 124 P. 722, in speaking of the Code provisions requiring mailing of notice, it is said: "That compliance with this requirement is essential to the authority of the tax collector to make the sale is no longer open to question." This decision was rendered in 1912, and was based upon the giving of notice for the requisite time specified in section 3897 of the Political Code. The only limitation relative to the giving of notice is found in the cases where the facts show that the name and address of the person to whom the property was last assessed does not appear upon the assessment roll. This is pointed out in the recent case of Jacoby v. Wolff, 198 Cal. 667, on page 681, 247 P. 195, 200. This limitation, or, as sometimes expressed, excuse for not mailing the notice, does not apply in the case at bar, as the record shows the name and address appeared. Other cases might be cited, but as said in one to which we have made reference, the law as to notice, being jurisdictional and necessary to be given in strict compliance with the Code, is so well settled that the fact only needs to be mentioned.

In answer to the failure to give notice as required by the sections of the Political Code to which we have referred, the respondent relies upon the case of Scott v. Beck (Cal. Sup.) 266 P. 951, where it is said, "that the law applicable, at the time of the sale, for delinquent taxes follows through all the proceedings dependent thereon," and contends that as sections 3764 and 3771 of the Political Code were amended in 1921 (section 3771 was divided into two sections, to wit, 3771 and 3771a) the notices provided for therein are not applicable to the case at bar. An examination of the case of Scott v. Beck, supra, discloses that the contention is not tenable. That case was decided in April, 1928, but the sale upon which the validity of the title involved in that action depended, took place on July 3, 1919, and, of course, irrespective of the time when the cause was heard, the decision necessarily was based upon the code provisions in force at the date of the sale. Applying the same rule here, the Code provisions in force at the date of the sale to the plaintiff would be as of the time of the sale, to wit, in June, 1926, long after the sections referred to as amended became effective. So far as the giving of notice of sale may be concerned, it has been held that the state has a right to change the requirements in relation thereto, and these requirements apply to any property which has, by operation of law, been sold to the state, and is thereafter sold to private parties; no deed ever having been made to the state. Buck v. Canty, 162 Cal. 226, 121 P. 924.

[3] It is finally contended by the appellants that the original assessment for the delinquent taxes alleged to be due, on account of which the property was sold to the state in 1921, is invalid. This contention appears to be well taken. A copy of the assessment roll, in so far as it affects the property involved, for the year 1920, is set forth in the transcript. An inspection of the assessment sheet shows that it does not comply with the requirements of section 3650 of the Political Code, and that it does not give the cash value of the real estate or of the improvements, or the total value of the property, or the amount of the taxes due. The assessment roll contains figures only, and no dollar marks to indicate value, save and except one line of the assessment sheet contains the following words: "30 acres of alfalfa at $8." As to the real estate under the head of the word "Section," are the figures "11." Under the title of "Township" appears figure number "2." Under the head of "Range," the figure "10."

Under the heading "Number of Acres," the figure "40." Under the heading "Value of Real Estate," the figures "3600." Under the heading "Value of Improvements," the figures "240." Under the heading, "Total Value of Property," "3840." On the first sheet appears the word "over." To the page referred to we find the following: "Total tax," "107 52." "Total School Taxes," "57 60." "First Installment School Tax," etc., "28 80." "First Installment Tax on Personal Property," "53 76." Under the title, "Fifteen Per Cent Added," "8 06." Under the title, "Fifteen Per Cent Added," "4 32." Under the title, "Second Installment, Remainder on School Tax," "28 80." Under the title, "Second Installment, Remainder on Real Estate," "53 76." There is no dollar mark at the beginning or at the heading of any of the columns under which the figures which we have set forth appear. Nor is there any explanation contained upon the assessment roll to indicate values, other than as stated. In Emeric v. Alvarado, 90 Cal. 444, 27 P. 356, the court had before it an assessment roll identical with the one which we are considering—the failure of the assessment roll to contain any dollar mark, word, or abbreviation showing what was meant by the figures under the headings of the respective columns where the figures appeared. The court there said: "That such a defect is fatal to an assessment has been too long the established law to be now questioned; it has become a rule of property." Citing Hurlbutt v. Butenop, 27 Cal. 57; Brady v. Seaman, 30 Cal. 611; People v. S. F. Savings Union, 31 Cal. 132; People v. Hastings, 34 Cal. 571; People v. Hollister, 47 Cal. 408. In Fox v. Townsend, 152 Cal. 51, 91 P. 1004, the same question was considered, and the court in its opinion said: "The assessment of this lot, upon which the tax sale was based, shows that there was no dollar mark or other mark, sign, word, abbreviation or explanation on the assessment roll to indicate what was meant by the figures in the column designed to show the value of the property and the amount of the taxes. This being the case, the assessment was void, and the sale and deeds made thereunder are likewise void" (citing the cases above referred to); and then continues: "This omission appearing in the assessment itself necessarily invalidates the proceedings. In this respect this case is to be distinguished from the case of Carter v. Osborn, 150 Cal. 620, 89 P. 608, where the omission of the dollar mark or sign was in the delinquent list and not in the assessment." In the case at bar the failure is in the assessment, and therefore renders the assessment invalid and the whole proceeding based thereon likewise invalid. The Fox Case, supra, is cited among others as authority in the case of Lewis v. Tulare Reclamation District No. 749, 56 Cal. App. 52, 204 P. 421. In answer to these cases the respondent cites Knobloch v. Associated Oil Co., 170 Cal. 144, 148 P. 938.

An examination of the facts recited in that case shows that it is readily distinguishable from the case at bar, in that the dollar mark does appear in the heading of the column showing the total value of the real estate. That was the only question involved in that case, and differs from the facts of the one at bar in that there is no value whatever save and except as to the alfalfa, which we have stated, and the total value of that is not indicated. In the case at bar there is an absolute want of any word, sign, or character to indicate the amount of the tax, and likewise, the value of the real estate assessed.

In view of what has been said, it does not appear necessary to consider the objections urged as to the invalidity of the school taxes, by reason of the fact that the proceedings leading up to the sale and the invalidity of the assessment necessitates a reversal, irrespective of whether the names of the respective school districts were or were not stated.

[4] It is further contended by the appellants that as the property was not sold to the state, each year between the date of the first advertising of sale and the date when the property was sold to the plaintiff the penalties prescribed by the second paragraph of section 3817 of the Political Code do not apply. This question is not really before us to be decided, as the amount which the defendants should pay to the plaintiff does not depend upon the validity or invalidity of the subdivision of the section referred to or whether the state had the absolute legal right to charge the penalties therein prescribed and require payment thereof by the plaintiff at the time he received the tax collector's deed therefor. Subdivision 5 of section 3898 of the Political Code provides that where the purchaser at a tax sale is not finally awarded the property, "no decree of the court shall be given declaring a forfeiture of the property until the former owner, or other party in interest, shall have repaid to the purchaser the full amount of taxes, penalties and costs paid out and expended by him, to be determined by the court, in pursuit of the state's title to the property so sold." As we have said, the state's title or claim of title arose by operation of law or fiction of law, and to obtain the title which is in litigation in this action, the plaintiff was compelled to pay the penalties mentioned in the second paragraph of section 3817, supra.

[5] It is finally argued that as the assessment was void, the defendants should not be required to pay the sums expended by the plaintiff in obtaining a title from the state, nor any sums paid on account of taxes or assessments thereon since the date of the purchase. This question has been variously discussed and decided favorably and adversely by our own courts, the decisions being based in some instances upon what is called a void assessment, and others, upon irregularities in the sale, leading to a decree adjudging the proceedings void and the deed executed to the purchaser likewise void. We see no distinction between the effect of a decree declaring a deed void, whether that result is brought about by reason of the invalidity of an assessment or the invalidity of the proceedings. The purchaser pays the same in either case. True, the statute speaks of the state's title, but the state, in fact, only had, in any case, a color of title. If the state really possessed the title, and the proceedings were irregular, the state would still hold the title. But better reasoning appears to us to be contained in the cases hereinafter cited which hold that the purchaser is entitled to recover the moneys paid by him in the obtaining of whatever title or color of title the state apparently possesses. Again, the distinction has been made between whether the purchaser or the former owner instituted the proceedings. In the case at bar the purchaser has instituted this proceeding, but the defendants asked to be let into possession, and for such other and further relief as to the court might seem just and equitable. This places the court in the position of doing what, under the circumstances, appears to be just and equitable.

In the case of Holland v. Hotchkiss, 162 Cal. 366, 123 P. 258, L. R. A. 1915C, 492, in a well-considered opinion written by Justice Shaw, we find the following: "In view of this weight of authority and the inconsistency of our own cases on the subject, the decisions which deny the applications of the rule to tax cases should be deemed overruled, and the correct principle declared. Where the owner comes into equity asking equitable relief to remove or cancel the tax deed or sale as a cloud upon his title, or to obtain a judgment which, in effect, will invalidate such sale or deed, the court should refuse any relief except upon the condition that he first repay to the tax purchaser, or his grantee or assignee, the taxes, penalties, interests, and costs justly chargeable upon the land and which the purchaser has paid at the sale, or afterward upon the faith of it, with legal interest from the time of such payment, less rents received, if any, if the purchaser has been in possession." In Joslin v. Shaffer, supra, this court expressed the same view. The appellants ask that this court calculate the amount that should be paid, and direct judgment to be entered. Owing to the fact that the purchaser has been in possession and in receipt of the rents, issues, and profits, if any, it is impossible for this court to ascertain the amount which the appellants should be directed to pay to the plaintiff. The opinion of the trial court that the omissions to comply with the Code provisions herein referred to were not material cannot be allowed to set aside jurisdictional requirements. The proceedings are in invitum, and the cases which we have cited hold that the subjects discussed are all jurisdictional, and courts are not permitted to speculate as to whether failure to observe jurisdictional requirements does or does not result in injury.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded to the trial court, with directions to ascertain and fix the amount which should be paid by the appellants to the plaintiff, and enter judgment to the effect that the plaintiff acquired no title by reason of the purported conveyance to him of the premises involved, by reason of the tax deed involved in this action, and that the appellants be let into possession upon paying to the plaintiff or depositing in court to his credit the amount of the taxes, penalties, and costs expended by the plaintiff as herein referred to, less the rents, issues, and profits, if any, of the premises, received by the purchaser since the 30th day of June, 1926.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 2, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 29, 1929.

1. Bills and notes $\S$ 351—Evidence of contemporaneous agreements between parties to accommodation note held admissible in action thereon by purchaser for value after maturity.

In action against accommodation maker of note by purchaser for value after maturity, evidence of contemporaneous agreements between parties to note was admissible.

2. Bills and notes $\S$ 351—Want of consideration for accommodation note held good defense as against holder for value without notice acquiring note after maturity (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1459, 3097, 3133, 3139).

Where finance company, at request of president of bank, executed and delivered its accommodation note to bank to be used in taking up paper of corporation of which president of bank was also president, because bank held more of corporation's obligations than it was entitled to hold under the law, and bank thereafter sold out to plaintiff and note was delivered to plaintiff nearly a year after its maturity, held, that under Civ. Code, $\S$ 1459, 3097, 3133, 3139, defense of want of consideration was available to maker as against plaintiff, since defendant maker got nothing and plaintiff was not holder in due course, though it bought for value without notice.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Denver S. Church, Judge.

Action by the Pacific-Southwest Trust & Savings Bank against the Valley Finance Corporation. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

H. A. Savage, of Fresno, for appellant.
Christian Hoepfner and Wakefield & Hansen, all of Fresno, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action to recover on a promissory note. The defendant answered by interposing certain denials, by alleging a guaranty, and by alleging an affirmative defense to the effect that the plaintiff was not the holder in due course and that the note sued on was an accommodation note for which the defendant received no value, and by alleging a further defense that the note was ultra vires. The action was tried before the trial court sitting without a jury. The trial court made findings of fact in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff has appealed.

As the facts are not clearly set forth in the briefs of either party, we will make an attempt at setting them forth. The note sued on was a renewal note made by the defendant on March 1, 1923, and by its terms was due May 30, 1923. It was made payable to and delivered to the Valley Bank. The payee sold out to this plaintiff and the note was delivered to this plaintiff on March 1, 1924, nearly a year after its maturity.

On August 22, 1922, W. D. Mitchell was president and chief executive officer of the Valley Bank. He was likewise president of the California Motor Transport Association. The defendant corporation was engaged in dealing in automobile paper. It was financially sound and was a depositor in the Valley Bank. About two weeks prior to August 22, 1922, Mr. Mitchell sent for the officers of the defendant, and when they called at the bank he stated that the California Motor Transport Association was embarrassed financially; that it had moneys due it which would be paid in the near future, but that for the time being it was short of cash. He also stated that said corporation had borrowed from the Valley Bank and that the bank held more of the obligations of the Transport Association than it was entitled to hold under the law; that the bank examiner was expected at any time and therefore it was the wish of himself and of the Valley Bank that the amount of the obligations of the Transport Association should be reduced to the extent of $2,500; and that he and the Valley Bank wanted the defendant to execute an accommodation note which would be used in the following manner: The defendant was to execute its note to the bank, receive from the bank $2,500 to be deposited in the account of the defendant, and that defendant should thereupon draw its check in favor of the Transport Association. The Transport Association would execute its note in favor of the defendant. That note would be used as collateral to be attached to defendant's note. As fast as the Transport Association could make collections, the amounts would be paid on its note to the defendant, and as that note was liquidated, at the same time the defendant's note to the bank would be liquidated. Such proceedings were had that a note was written by the Transport Association in favor of the defendant on the 18th day of August, 1922. That note was in the sum of $2,575. Mr. Mitchell caused said note to be made in the sum of $2,575 instead of $2,500 without consulting the defendant and, in fact, defendant never knew until a later date that the variance existed. On the 22d day of August, 1922, the president and secretary of the defendant corporation appeared at the bank and a note dated August 22, 1922, in favor of the bank for the sum of $2,500 was placed before the officers of the defendant corporation, and they were shown the place to sign and they signed. At the same time a check in favor of the Transport Association in the sum of $2,500, under the same date, was drawn on the bank and was presented to the officers of the defendant corporation and they were shown where to sign and they signed. At the same time, and as a part of the same transaction, the check was indorsed by the trustee of the Transport Association and was deposited in the account of the Transport Association. Furthermore, a deposit slip was prepared and executed showing a deposit in the Valley Bank by defendant, "Note..... $2500." Each and all of these acts occurred in the office of Mr. Mitchell in the Valley Bank. Each and all of the foregoing facts were testified to by Mr. Hunt, who was trustee of the Transport Association and messenger for Mr. Mitchell, by Mr. Knapp, secretary of the defendant corporation, and by Mr. Williams, vice president of the defendant corporation. No witness was called in contradiction. It should be added that at the time of the transaction on August 22, 1922, Mr. Mitchell stated that as an official of the bank he could not sign any of the paper, but that he would personally guarantee to protect the defendant corporation from any liability on the note executed by it. At no time and in no manner did the defendant corporation receive anything except as hereinabove stated.

After the defendant had executed its said note dated August 22, 1922, Mr. Mitchell produced the note of the Transport Association dated August 18, 1922, asked the defendant to indorse it, and after it was so indorsed, attached it to the defendant's note as collateral security thereof.

There is not a particle of evidence in the record that at any time the Valley Bank turned over, or agreed to turn over, to the defendant any of the notes of the Transport Association which were at that time held by the bank.

Except as recited above, the defendant never had the physical possession of the note dated August 18, 1922, executed by the Transport Association.

[1] The plaintiff contends the trial court erred in receiving evidence of contemporary agreements between the parties and it cites and relies on Leonard v. Miner, 120 Cal. 403, 52 P. 655; San Jose Savings Bank v. Stone, 59 Cal. 183. Neither of those cases involved an accommodation note, and neither case arose since the amendment in 1917 to Civil Code, division 3, part 4, title 15. Coghlin v. May, 17 Cal. 515, did involve an accommodation note, and it rules the point against the plaintiff.

[2] The plaintiff's main contention is that plaintiff, for value, bought, without notice, the note from the Valley Bank, and although it so bought after the maturity of the note, the defendant may not set up as a defense the facts above recited. The plaintiff cites and relies on Bank of Orland v. Harlan, 188 Cal. 413, 206 P. 75. The defendant states that the case cited is not in point, and then the defendant cites First Nat. Bank v. Reed, 198 Cal. 252, 244 P. 368. In reply the plaintiff points out that Reed got nothing and that the rights of no third person were involved. This defendant got nothing, and if the distinction went no further the defendant's answer is sufficient. But the plaintiff stands on the further claim that it is an innocent purchaser for value, and as against this defendant the defense is not sound. In reply the defendant asserts that the plaintiff is not a holder in due course and that it is in no better position than its vendor (Civ. Code, § 3133), and that in this plaintiff's hands the note is subject to the same defenses as if it were nonnegotiable (Civ. Code, § 3139), and that it is statutory law that the transfer of a nonnegotiable instrument transfers "all the rights of the assignor under the instrument to the assignee, subject to all equities and defenses existing in favor of the maker at the time of the indorsement" (Civ. Code, § 1459). And the defendant further claims that: " * * * As regards a remote party other than a holder in due course, the delivery * * * may be shown to have been * * * not for the purpose of transferring the property in the instrument." Civ. Code, § 3097. The exact point has never been decided since the amendment in 1917 to the Civil Code, sections 3082-3206. The point has been much discussed in the reviews and the authorities are not in harmony. In the case of Bartels v. Suter, 130 Okl. 7, 266 P. 753, the Supreme Court of Oklahoma entered upon an exhaustive consideration of the question. It reached the conclusion that if all of the sections of that law are read and construed together that, under a similar set of facts, the defense, pleaded by this defendant and found by the court to be true, constitutes a complete defense under the statute. See, also, Brannan's Negotiable Instrument Law (4th Ed.) p. 286.

Under these authorities we think the judgment should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

ANSBACH v. DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS, DIVISION OF INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENTS AND SAFETY, et al. (Civ. 6509.) *

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. July 1, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 18, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 29, 1929.

- 1. Master and servant $\S$ 419—Court must assume that award includes only items authorized by statute (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act, as amended).

It must be assumed that in making award of compensation to employee for permanent disability under Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act, St. 1917, p. 831, as amended, department included therein only such items as are expressly authorized by statute or impliedly authorized thereby, and that recovery for past physical pain and mental anguish suffered by employee is not included.

- 2. Master and servant $\S$ 419—Employer joining employee in action against third party to secure reduction of award, must have items of settlement segregated (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act, § 26, as amended).

If employer becomes party plaintiff in suit by employee for damages against third party under Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act, St. 1917, p. 831, § 26, as amended by St. 1919, p. 921, § 8, and St. 1927, p. 1213, § 1, no settlement can be effected without employer's consent, and employer should segregate items going to make up total of settlement so as to show how much was allowed for pain and suffering and how much for permanent disability, in order to secure reduction of compensation award.

- 3. Master and servant $\S$ 419—Department of Industrial Relations held without jurisdiction to deduct from award for permanent disability, amount recovered by employee from insurance carrier's surgeon for malpractice, where proportion of settlement representing damages for past suffering was not shown (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act, § 26, as amended).

Department of Industrial Relations, having adjusted employee's compensation for injury in employment and injury resulting from malpractice of surgeon attending employee at direction of employer and insurance carrier held without authority, under Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act, St. 1917, p. 831, § 26, as amended by St. 1919, p. 921, § 8, and St. 1927, p. 1213, § 1, to deduct from such award amount received by employee in settlement of action for damages brought against surgeon for malpractice, where employer was notified of employee's commencement of action but failed to join therein, and where it did not appear what part of settlement received by the employee represented damages suffered by reason of past physical and mental suffering claimed in his complaint, since past physical pain and mental anguish would not be proper element of compensation award for permanent disability.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by the Federal Mutual Liability Insurance Company for the reduction of an award of compensation entered in favor of G. M. Ansbach. The Department of Industrial Relations, Division of Industrial Accidents and Safety, entered an order reducing the award, and claimant brings certiorari. Order annulled.

Kirtland I. Perky and Ralph W. Eckhardt, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondent Commission.

Willis I. Morrison, of Los Angeles, for respondent insurance company.

HOUSER, J. Certiorari. Somewhat condensed, the history of the present proceeding before this court is that, in the course of his employment, petitioner was injured, for which injury, at the instance of the employer and the insurance carrier, petitioner regularly received medical and surgical treatment. Some months after the happening of the accident which caused the injury, and pursuant to the direction of the employer and the insurance carrier, in an attempt to further relieve the employee from the effects of the injury received by him, by reason of the alleged malpractice of the attendant surgeon, petitioner received injuries which greatly added to his infirmities. Thereafter, on application made by petitioner to the respondent tribunal, the compensation to which petitioner was entitled under the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as variously amended) was adjusted.

By the terms of section 26 of said act, as amended by St. 1919, p. 921, § 8, and St. 1927, p. 1213, § 1, a claim for compensation from the employer has no effect upon the right of the employee to an action for damages arising out of his injury against any person other than the employer; but, where judgment is so recovered against such "third person," the employer is entitled, on application, to a first lien thereon on account of his "expenditures for compensation."

Following the adjustment of the employee's compensation by the respondent tribunal, the employee commenced an action against the surgeon for damages alleged to have been sustained by the employee by reason of the malpractice of the surgeon. Subsequently, and after a mistrial of the action, a money settlement of the controversy was agreed upon by the respective parties thereto. Later, on application presented by the insurance carrier, the respondent tribunal made an order by which the award therefore made to the employee was reduced in the amount received by him in the settlement of the action brought by the employee against the surgeon on account of his alleged unskillful practice in treating the employee. It is with reference to such order that it is contended the respondent tribunal exceeded its jurisdiction. Before considering the question thus presented, it may be observed that from the conclusion reached herein it becomes unnecessary to definitely decide whether within the meaning of the statute here involved the surgeon was a "third person"; or whether a voluntary settlement by a "third person" in an action brought against him constitutes a "judgment."

In the application made by the employee for adjustment of his claim against his employer, the employee asked for "a total permanent disability rating." On the hearing evidence was received, not only as to the nature and effect of the original injury, but as well relating to the surgical operation which resulted in the aggravation of the injuries received at the time the accident occurred. Findings of fact upon which the award of compensation was made by the respondent tribunal, among other things, contained the statement that "said injury caused permanent disability * * *"; and it was on account of and based upon such "permanent disability" that compensation was awarded.

[1] With reference to the injury sustained by the employee, and for which he claimed damages from the surgeon, in addition to specific averments relating thereto, the complaint contained the allegation that by reason of the acts of the defendant, the plaintiff "has suffered great physical pain and mental anguish." In the settlement effected between the parties to such litigation, a release from all "claims, demands, rights and causes of action * * * as set forth in the complaint," was given by the plaintiff to the defendant; from which statement it would appear that the "physical pain and mental anguish" suffered by plaintiff on account or by reason of the alleged malpractice of the defendant on the plaintiff was included in such settlement. The question therefore arises as to whether an award of compensation by the respondent tribunal for "permanent disability" of the employee did include, or could have included, the item of "physical pain and mental suffering" theretofore endured by the employee. Although, as argued by respondents, the respondent tribunal has authority to determine the percentage of disability of an applicant for compensation, and as one of the several items which may be taken into account in reaching a conclusion thereon may include therein "pain, grief, suffering," which are present and which affect the employee's then "ability to work," nowhere in the express terms of the statute, or in the judicial decisions of this state to which our attention has been directed, may be found any indication that past "physical pain and mental anguish" endured by the employee may be compensated. In other words, so far as is discoverable, the jurisdiction of the respondent tribunal in the premises is limited to a determination of the percentage of disability existent in the employee at the date of hearing of his application for compensation. It must be assumed that, in making its award of compensation to the employee for "permanent disability," the respondent tribunal included therein such items only as were either expressly authorized by statute or which were impliedly authorized thereby; and, consequently, that the past "physical pain and mental anguish" suffered by the employee were not included within the "permanent disability" of the employee for which the award of compensation was made.

[2, 3] Reverting to section 26 of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act, it will be noted that, when either the employee or the employer institutes an action for damages against a "third person" for or on account of his alleged negligence in connection with the injury suffered by the employee, "he shall forthwith notify the other * * * of such fact,* * *" whereupon the other may join in such action as a party plaintiff. Herein it appears that, when the employee commenced the action against the surgeon, he immediately in writing notified the employer of such fact, but that the latter took no action in the premises other than to aid, assist, and encourage the defendant therein. It is manifest that, had the employer been a party litigant, no settlement thereof could have been effected without his consent thereto, and that, in the event of a settlement, if the employer wished to protect his interests, it would become his duty to segregate the items going to make up the total thereof, so as to show at least how much thereof was allowed for "physical pain and mental suffering" and what amount, if any, was allowed for "permanent disability," as contemplated by the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act. For aught that now appears or may be ascertained the total amount received by the employee represented the damages which he suffered by reason of his past "physical pain and mental suffering." If so, as hereinbefore intimated, the respondent tribunal was without jurisdiction to deduct such amount from the award for "permanent disability" theretofore made to the employee. Nor, assuming that the award originally was composed of two or more items, would it be possible either for the respondent tribunal or for this court, either now or at any future time, to separate the total award into its several component parts. It is manifest that in the settlement the employee may have considered that the total amount, or at least some substantial portion thereof, represented his damages for past "physical pain and mental anguish." On the other hand, the defendant in the action either may have mentally divided the amount of the settlement into many different items without including therein any sum for "physical pain and mental suffering," or may have paid it with the idea that it represented some unspecified sum for each item expressly mentioned in the complaint in the action or impliedly contained therein.

It results that, in making the order here in question, the respondent tribunal acted without and in excess of its jurisdiction, for which reason the said order is annulled.

REID v. THOMAS. (Civ. 3818.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 3, 1929.

1. Libel and slander ⇨38(3)—Charge of insanity in complaint in judicial proceeding held absolutely privileged (Civ. Code, §§ 45, 47).

Charge of insanity contained in complaint filed in a judicial proceeding in justice court was absolutely privileged under Civ. Code, §§ 45, 47.

2. Libel and slander ⇨97—Where complaint discloses that libelous matter complained of is absolutely privileged, claim of privilege need not be set up by answer or demurrer.

Where complaint affirmatively discloses that libelous matter complained of is absolutely privileged, it is unnecessary to set up claim of privilege by either answer or demurrer, since complaint fails to state a legal cause and the language complained of is not actionable.

3. Libel and slander ⇨97—Claim of absolute privilege must be raised by answer or demurrer, where complaint does not disclose privileged character thereof.

Where complaint does not show that libelous matter complained of is absolutely privileged, claim of privilege must be asserted by answer or demurrer.

4. Pleading ⇨408—Demurrer is unnecessary, where complaint absolutely fails to state cause of action, but defect may be raised at any stage and in any manner.

Where a complaint absolutely fails to state a cause of action, a demurrer is not necessary, but the defect may be raised at any stage of proceeding and in any manner which presents grounds of objection.

Appeal from Superior Court, Glenn County; Ernest Weyand, Judge.

Action by Samuel W. Reid against John Thomas. From an order and judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Robert E. Jeffress and Pardini, Scampini & George, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

George R. Freeman, of Riverside, for respondent.

THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from an order and judgment of dismissal in an action for libel.

The plaintiff filed a suit for damages against the defendant. Two causes of action were alleged. The first cause was based on a charge of libel consisting of a complaint for insanity which was sworn to and filed in the justice's court at Willows, Cal. This accusation of insanity appears in full as a part of the complaint in this action. The second cause of action consists of a charge of malicious prosecution based upon the same proceeding which is alleged in the first cause of action. No demurrer to the complaint was filed. The answer consists of a general denial, and does not affirmatively allege that the making and filing of the accusation of insanity was a privileged proceeding. But as a matter of law, it appears to be absolutely privileged. At the trial the court sustained objections to the introduction of evidence on the part of plaintiff with respect to the first cause of action, and a judgment of dismissal was subsequently entered. At the close of plaintiff's evidence, a nonsuit was also granted in the second cause of action. The plaintiff has appealed only from the order and judgment of dismissal in the first count, and asserts that the defense of privilege with relation to the publication of libelous matter is waived unless it is claimed by either a demurrer or answer to the charge.

[1] The alleged libelous matter, consisting of the charge of insanity, appears on the face of the complaint in this action. It was alleged to have been filed in a judicial proceeding in a justice's court, and was, therefore, absolutely privileged. Section 47, Civ. Code. "Libel is a false and unprivileged publication. * * *" Section 45, Civ. Code.

If the proceeding was privileged, it was, therefore, not libelous or actionable. Language employed in a judicial proceeding belongs to the class which is absolutely privileged, and which is, therefore, exempt from liability. Language used in judicial and legislative proceedings and in the discharge of official duties, as specified in subdivisions 1 and 2 of section 47 of the Civil Code are absolutely privileged in character. Hale Co. v. Lea, 191 Cal. 202, 205, 215 P. 900; Stevens v. Snow, 191 Cal. 58, 64, 214 P. 968; Ball v. Rawles, 93 Cal. 222, 236, 28 P. 937, 27 Am. St. Rep. 174. In 17 Ruling Case Law, 330, § 76, it is said: "An absolutely privileged communication is one in respect to which, by reason of the occasion on which it is made, no remedy can be had in a civil action. The class of absolutely privileged communications is narrow, and is practically limited to legislative and judicial proceedings and other acts of state. Where there exists an absolute privilege, proof even of actual malice will not support an action for libel or slander, absolute privilege being in all cases a complete defense which cannot be rebutted or overcome by evidence that the publication was false and malicious."

[2-4] When a complaint affirmatively discloses the fact that the libelous matter complained of is absolutely privileged in its character, it is unnecessary to set up the claim of privilege by either answer or demurrer, for the reason that it appears that the pleading fails to state a legal cause and the language complained of is not actionable. 37 C. J. 58, § 421; 17 R. C. L. 401, § 158; 18 Standard Enc. of Proc. 928. Where, however, the privileged character of the proceeding does not appear in the complaint, it is necessary to raise the issue by answer or demurrer. Where a complaint absolutely fails to state a cause of action, a demurrer is not necessary, but the defect may be raised at any stage of the proceeding and in any manner which presents the grounds of objection. 21 Cal. Jur. 250, § 175. None of the cases relied upon by the appellant are in conflict with the foregoing declaration of law. In two of these cases it is said by the court that: "Where the complaint shows on its face that the publication was privileged, the point may be raised on general demurrer." But this may not be taken to mean that the defense is waived, unless it is raised by answer or demurrer. It means no more than the statement that, where a complaint fails to state a cause of action, that fact may be raised by a general demurrer. This does not mean it is the only way by means of which the point may be raised. Where the privileged character of the communication appears on the face of the complaint, it states no cause of action, if the privilege appears to be absolute. When no cause of action is stated, there is nothing to be waived, and no demurrer is required. A different principle is involved with respect to the statute of limitations. The limitation of time prescribed by statute within which an action may be maintained is a mere defense to the suit, or personal privilege which must be asserted, or it is deemed to have been waived. 16 Cal. Jur. 603, § 199.

In Gosewisch v. Doran, 161 Cal. 511, 119 P. 656, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 442, where this language with reference to a demurrer was used, the appeal was from a judgment entered upon the sustaining of a demurrer to the complaint. The absence of a demurrer or claim of an absolute privilege by means of an answer were not involved in that action. In Stevens v. Snow, 191 Cal. 58, 64, 214 P. 968, where similar language is used, the question of an absolute privilege was not involved. The expression of the court so far as it applies to an absolute privilege is dicta. There is good reason for distinguishing between pleadings which are necessary to raise the issue of conditional or qualified privileges and those which are absolutely privileged. The first class may be libelous, dependent upon the motive or malice with which they are uttered. The latter are neither libelous nor actionable under any circumstances. The reason for exempting one from liability for the publication of language employed in legislative or judicial proceedings or in the discharge of official duties, although such utterances might otherwise be libelous, is founded on public policy and is deemed to be necessary for the general welfare of governmental institutions and society.

The judgment is affirmed.

JANSEN v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND
FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.
(Civ. 6501.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. July 3, 1929.

Appeal and error ⇨571—Divorce ⇨262—Trial court could not refuse to settle transcript because defendant husband was in contempt, and mandamus would compel settlement.

After notice of appeal given by husband, appellant, from interlocutory judgment in divorce action, trial court cannot refuse to settle reporter's transcript for sole reason that appellant is guilty of contempt in refusing to comply with order directing him to pay plaintiff specified sum to enable her to defend as against such appeal, and mandamus will issue to require settlement of transcript.

Application by Joseph M. Jansen for a writ of mandamus prayed to be directed to the Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County and Douglas L. Edmonds, Judge, to require respondents to settle reporter's transcript. Writ granted.

William Bronsten and Guy B. Graham, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

James F. McBryde, of Glendale, and Oliver O. Clark, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

HOUSER, J. Mandamus. The question presented by this proceeding is whether, after notice of appeal given by a husband, appellant, from an interlocutory judgment in a divorce action rendered against him, the trial court may legally refuse to settle the reporter's transcript on appeal for the sole reason that the appellant is guilty of contempt of court in refusing to comply with an order of said court by which he was directed to pay to the plaintiff (respondent in the appeal) a specified sum of money to enable her to defend as against such appeal.

On the authority of the cases of Manriquez v. Superior Court, 199 Cal. 749, 251 P. 1118, and Archer v. Superior Court, 81 Cal. App. 742, 254 P. 939, the question should be answered in the negative. It follows that a peremptory writ of mandate should issue from this court directing respondents superior court and Douglas L. Edmonds, as judge thereof, to proceed in accordance with the provisions of the Code and the statutes relating to the settlement of transcripts on appeal, without reference to the fact of whether or not the appellant is in contempt of court as hereinbefore noted. So ordered.

PEOPLE v. MACHADO. (Cr. 1832.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. July 2, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 15, 1929.

1. Physicians and surgeons ⇨2—Act punishing practice of medicine without license held not repealed by Chiropractic Act (State Medical Practice Act, § 17, as amended by St. 1915, p. 199, § 13; Chiropractic Act, §§ 7, 15, 18).

State Medical Practice Act (St. 1913, p. 722) § 17, as amended by St. 1915, p. 199, § 13, making it misdemeanor to practice medicine without license, held not in conflict with, nor repealed by, Chiropractic Act (St. 1923, p. lxxxviii) §§ 7, 15, 18, authorizing practice of chiropractic, but not authorizing practice of medicine, nor denouncing as public offense practice of medicine without license, but merely punishing practice of chiropractic without license from state board of chiropractic examiners.

2. Criminal law ⇨1169(1)—In prosecution for practicing medicine without license, error, if any, in not calling druggist to show medicine taken, was as prescribed by defendant, held not prejudicial (State Medical Practice Act, § 17, as amended by St. 1915, p. 199, § 13).

In prosecution for violating Medical Practice Act (St. 1913, p. 722) § 17, as amended by St. 1915, p. 199, § 13, by practicing medicine without license where certain bottles of medicines prescribed by defendant were received in evidence, and it appeared that defendant left pharmaceutical preparations with one of patients and prescribed their use and gave prescriptions which were filled at drug store, and used by patients, and portions of filled prescriptions appeared to be filled as prescribed by defendant, error, if any, in failing to call druggist to prove that he did not substitute another and different drug for that prescribed, was so slight as not to be prejudicial.

3. Criminal law ⇨1168(2)—District attorney's failure to elect in advance violation of Medical Practice Act state relied on for conviction held not prejudicial error, where violation first proved was deemed election (State Medical Practice Act, § 17, as amended by St. 1915, p. 199, § 13).

Where offense of practicing medicine without license in violation of State Medical Practice Act (St. 1913, p. 722) § 17, as amended by St. 1915, p. 199, § 13, was alleged to have been committed on or about certain date, and state relied on instance of practice first introduced in evidence showing medical practice, and court announced that prosecution would be bound by such evidence, defendant was not prejudiced by failure of district attorney to announce in advance on which particular violation of statute intended to be proved state would rely for conviction, especially where it did not appear from record that opening statement was made, and evidence first offered was deemed an election.

4. Criminal law ⇨678(2)—State should elect violation relied on for conviction at commencement of trial, or after opening statement.

Election by prosecution of particular violation relied on for conviction should be made at commencement of trial; but if this is not done, and district attorney makes opening statement, trial court should require election at close of such statement.

5. Physicians and surgeons ⇨6(8, 10)—Authority to practice chiropractic held no defense to prosecution for practicing medicine without license, and court properly required defendant to prove license if found practicing medicine (Medical Practice Act, § 17, as amended by St. 1915, p. 199, § 13).

Where defendant was charged with having violated Medical Practice Act (St. 1913, p. 722) § 17, as amended by St. 1915, p. 199, § 13, in that he unlawfully practiced system or mode of treating sick and had diagnosed, operated, and prescribed for diseases and other mental and physical conditions of human beings without having license to practice medicine, and there was no evidence that defendant had certificate to practice, fact that defendant may have been qualified and authorized to practice chiropractic was no defense, and hence instruction that defendant, if shown to have been practicing system of treating sick, had burden of proving possession of valid certificate to do so, was not error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

Manuel Machado was convicted of violation of the State Medical Practice Act, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Shaeffer & Weldon, of Santa Maria, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and C. C. Ward, Dist. Atty., of Santa Barbara, for the People.

CRAIG, J. The appellant, an alleged chiropractor, appeals from a judgment convicting him of having violated the State Medical Practice Act, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

He was charged with having on or about February 19, 1929, willfully and unlawfully practiced, advertised, and held himself out as practicing, a system and mode of treating the sick and afflicted, and with having unlawfully diagnosed, treated, operated for, and prescribed for the diseases, injuries, deformities, and other mental and physical conditions of human beings, without then and there having a valid, unrevoked certificate of license from the board of medical examiners so to do.

It appeared that during the month of January, 1929, the defendant examined a three year old child which was brought to his office, diagnosed its disease as pneumonia, and upon five or six consecutive days thereafter visited its home, where he prescribed and caused to be administered rhubarb and soda, a pharmaceutical preparation, and some pills. There was evidence also tending to show that he prescribed tincture of digitalis for a man on or about February 16, 1929, and other preparations for a woman and a boy about three months prior to the trial, all of whom he examined and diagnosed as cases requiring the treatments prescribed. Evidence relating to cases other than that first above mentioned was expressly admitted by the trial court for consideration by the jury solely upon the question of intent and motive, and the jury were thereafter so instructed. When upon the stand in his own behalf, the defendant identified a certificate of license issued by the board of chiropractic examiners, issued in 1928, authorizing him to practice chiropractic, and a receipt showing payment of his annual license fee in 1929, and he testified that he had been receiving patients at his office "under the chiropractic act." Objections by the district attorney to the introduction of the certificate and receipt were sustained, upon the ground that they were irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial, and constituted no defense to a violation of the Medical Practice Act.

It is insisted on behalf of appellant that it was prejudicial error to reject this evidence, because it conveyed the impression to the jury that he was not a licensed chiropractor, and assumed that even so licensed, it was not a defense to a charge of illegally practicing a system or mode of treating the sick and afflicted as alleged in the information. By comparison of the two statutes, appellant attempts to urge as a ground for reversal that the Chiropractic Act, being later in date of enactment, repealed the penal provisions of the Medical Act, for the reason that in this respect they are conflicting. By section 17, chapter 354, of the Statutes of 1913 (p. 722), as amended (St. 1915, p. 199, § 13), it was provided by the Legislature that: "Any person who shall practice or attempt to practice, or who advertises or holds himself out as practicing, any system or mode of treating the sick or afflicted in this state, or who shall diagnose, treat, operate for, or prescribe for, any disease, injury, deformity, or other mental or physical condition of any person, without having at the time of so doing a valid unrevoked certificate as provided in this act, * * * shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than one hundred dollars ($100.00) nor more than six hundred dollars ($600.00), or by imprisonment for a term of not less than sixty (60) days nor more than one hundred and eighty (180) days, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

Sections 7, 15, and 18 of the Chiropractic Act (Stats. 1923, p. lxxxviii, in effect December 21, 1922) provide:

"One form of certificate shall be issued by the board of chiropractic examiners, which said certificate shall be designated 'License to practice chiropractic,' which license shall authorize the holder thereof to practice chiropractic in the State of California as taught in chiropractic schools or colleges; and, also, to use all necessary mechanical, and hygienic and sanitary measures incident to the care of the body, but shall not authorize the practice of medicine, surgery, osteopathy, dentistry or optometry, nor the use of any drug or medicine now or hereafter included in materia medica."

"Any person who shall practice or attempt to practice chiropractic, * * * or any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than fifty dollars and not more than two hundred dollars, or by imprisonment in the county jail for not less than thirty days nor more than ninety days, or both."

"Nothing herein shall be construed as repealing the 'medical practice act,' of June 2, 1913, or any subsequent amendments thereof, except in so far as that act or said amendments may conflict with the provisions of this act as applied to persons licensed under this act, to which extent any and all acts or parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed."

[1] It is at once obvious that there is neither real nor apparent "conflict" between the penal provisions of these statutes. The Medical Practice Act authorizes a properly qualified licentiate to practice medicine, as the practice of medicine is therein defined in detail, and makes it a misdemeanor to so practice without the prescribed license of the board of medical examiners. The Chiropractic Act authorizes one licensed thereunder to practice chiropractic in accordance with certain specified standards, but does not authorize its licentiates to practice medicine, nor does it denounce as a public offense the practice of medicine without a license therefor.

The only misdemeanors of this nature, punishable under this latter act, consist of practicing chiropractic without a license from the board of chiropractic examiners, fraudulently bartering a certificate to practice, and the use by a licensed practitioner of a name, term, or initials "which would indicate that he or she was practicing a profession for which he held no license." Each statute defines offenses peculiar to its own sphere, and confines its penalties thereto. Appellant seeks to rely upon authorities holding that in the event of a conflict in the penal provisions of statutes applicable to the same offense, the more recent enactment repeals those of the statute preceding it, and from this it is argued that he should have been tried under the Chiropractic Act of 1923. However, since appellant was charged with an offense clearly violative of the Medical Practice Act of 1913, as amended, and to which the later statute obviously has no relation, to wit, practicing medicine without a license from the state board of medical examiners, there is no merit in this contention.

[2] Certain bottles of medicines alleged to have been prescribed by the defendant as above mentioned were received in evidence over the objections of his counsel, and these rulings are also assigned as prejudicial error. It is not denied that appellant prescribed certain remedies, nor that the patients who received from him such prescriptions carried or sent them to a druggist, there had them filled, and took the contents of the bottles received from the druggist for the afflictions diagnosed by the defendant. It was also testified by a qualified chemist that he examined the contents of these containers, which he found to be pharmaceutical preparations within the category of materia medica. It is appellant's contention, however, that there was no showing that the druggist furnished the drugs named in the prescriptions, nor that the medicines so taken by the patients, portions of which were so analyzed and produced in court, were the preparations which were actually prescribed. Briefly stated, the substance of this objection is that the druggist should have been called to prove that he did not substitute another and different drug for that prescribed. It is true, as contended, that in one instance the prescriptions were not connected with the defendant, but in the Nunez Case, for which he was prosecuted, it appears that Machado both prescribed and personally left with the mother a mixture of rhubarb, soda, glycerine, and spirits of peppermint, which, under his orders, was administered to a three year old child for a malady which he diagnosed as pneumonia. In another instance the defendant visited an aged man who then had and was taking digitalis under the directions of a physician; appellant examined him, pronounced the case doubtful, altered the dosage, but prescribed digitalis, which was continued. In another case the defendant stated to the patient that he should apply tincture of green soap and carbolated vaseline for eczema, wrote a prescription, which was filled at a drug store and used as directed. A sample of this latter preparation, examined by the chemist, was pronounced a pharmaceutical preparation conforming to the prescription which Machado had indicated to the patient should be used, at the time of furnishing the written prescription which was exchanged with the druggist for the substance which the patient so applied and delivered to a special agent of the medical board. If there was error, it was so slight that it was not prejudicial.

[3, 4] Nor was the defendant prejudiced by the failure of the district attorney to announce in advance upon which particular violation of the statute, intended to be proved, the people would rely for a conviction. The offense was alleged to have been committed on or about February 19, 1929, and evidence was offered which tended to show that the defendant had practiced medicine illegally, both in January and February of this year. Mrs. Joe Nunez and her son were first called, and professional visits, diagnosing, and prescribing at their home were proved by them, although they were illiterate and did not remember dates, but believed these acts to have occurred in the month of January. As already observed, the people relied upon this instance, and the court announced that the prosecution would be bound thereby, and so instructed the jury. This was in compliance with previous decisions upon the subject. It is the better practice to make an election at the commencement of the trial, but if this be not done, and the district attorney makes an opening statement, the trial court should require that it be done at the close of such statement. People v. Williams, 133 Cal. 165, 65 P. 323; People v. Barnett, 15 Cal. App. 89, 113 P. 879. However, it does not appear from the record that an opening statement was made, and under the circumstances the evidence first offered was properly deemed an election. People v. Williams, supra; People v. Harlan, 29 Cal. App. 600, 156 P. 980.

[5] It is next contended that the trial court erred in instructing the jury that if they found from the evidence to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was practicing, attempting to practice, or holding himself out as practicing, a system or mode of treating the sick and afflicted, the burden lay with him to prove that he had a valid, unrevoked certificate of license so to do. It is argued that as a chiropractor he was entitled to practice a system or mode of treating the sick and afflicted. This argument entirely overlooks the fact that the jury were instructed that the defendant was charged with having violated the state Medical Practice Act, in that he had unlawfully practiced a system or mode of treating the sick and afflicted, and had diagnosed, treated, operated, and prescribed for diseases, injuries, deformities, and other mental and physical conditions of human beings, without then and there having a valid, unrevoked certificate of license from the board of medical examiners of this state so to do. From our preceding review of the evidence it is obvious that Machado held himself out as practicing, and did practice, the system or mode of treating the sick and afflicted forbidden by the state Medical Practice Act, except as to those holding a certificate from the board of medical examiners. There is no evidence, nor is it claimed, that he had such a certificate, and the evidence of his guilt was ample. That he may have been qualified and authorized to practice some other and different system or mode of treating human beings was no defense, and we do not conceive of any legal theory upon which it can be said that the jury were confused in this regard by the instructions of the court.

No other points are advanced which require discussion, and reversible error not appearing, the judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

Action to recover treble amount of interest paid on promissory note secured by trust deed under the provisions of a statute relating to usury by Primo Degli Esposti against Rivers Bros., Inc., and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Soren X. Christensen and J. C. Wood, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Oscar Samuels and J. Samuels, both of San Francisco (A. Dal Thomson, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This appeal is from a judgment of the superior court of the state of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, in favor of the defendants and against the plaintiff, rendered and entered after the court had sustained a general demurrer to the plaintiff's amended complaint without leave to amend. The action was commenced to recover treble the amount of certain interest paid upon a promissory note, secured by a trust deed, under the provisions of section 3 of the act relating to usury (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii). The facts upon which the plaintiff relied for his recovery as set forth in his complaint, and repeated in his amended complaint, may be briefly stated as follows: On March 9, 1926, Joseph Varsi and wife executed the note and trust deed to which the plaintiff in his complaint refers, and which called for a payment of $20,000, with interest monthly in advance at the rate of one per cent. per month. During the month of March, 1927, the makers of the note paid to the payees thereof, who are the defendants herein, the sum of $3,170, of which the sum of $3,000 was to be applied upon the principal, and the sum of $170 as advance interest upon the reduced principal for the month extending from March 9, 1927, to April 9, 1927. During the latter period Joseph Varsi and wife conveyed the property described in the trust deed to one Frederick Huelter, subject to the trust deed, for the sum of $17,000. On April 8, 1927, Frederick Huelter paid the defendants $170 as interest on said amount at the rate of one per cent. per month from April 9, 1927, to May 9, 1927, and thereafter made four additional monthly payments at said rate upon the note. During the month of August, 1927, Frederick Huelter conveyed the property, subject to the trust deed, to one Harry Schwartz, who, on the same day, conveyed it to the plaintiff. Thereafter the plaintiff paid the interest accruing upon the note at the same rate monthly in advance for five months; the last payment being made on January 9, 1928. The complaint further shows that on March 8, 1928, the plaintiff tendered to the defendants the sum of $11,500, together with the interest amounting to $170 for the month beginning February 9, 1928, and ending on March 9, 1928. ESPOSTI v. RIVERS BROS., Inc., et al.
(S. F. 13051.)

Supreme Court of California. July 15, 1929.

1. Usury ☞130—Grantee of property taking subject to usurious mortgage, amount of which is deducted from price, cannot complain of usury in inception of mortgage.

Grantee of property taken subject to usurious mortgage, amount of which is deducted from purchase price, cannot complain of usury in inception of mortgage.

2. Assignments ☞26—Transferee of property taken subject to usurious mortgage could not assign right to recover treble usurious interest to his transferee (Usury Act, § 3).

Transferee of property taken subject to usurious mortgage, amount of which was deducted from purchase price, had no right to recover treble amount of usurious interest paid under Usury Act, § 3, and could not assign right to recover such interest to his transferee.

3. Assignments ☞26—Right of original maker of usurious note and mortgage to recover treble interest is not assignable (Usury Act, § 3).

Right of original maker of usurious note and mortgage given under Usury Act, § 3, to recover treble amount of interest paid is not assignable.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

such tender the plaintiff advised the defendants of the assignment to him of whatever right of action existed in said Frederick Huelter for the recovery provided for in section 3 of the Usury Act. The defendants refused to accept these tenders; whereupon the plaintiff deposited the sum thus tendered to the credit of the defendants with the Bank of Italy, which immediately notified the defendants of such deposit. Thereupon the plaintiff commenced this action to recover the sum of $5,100, being treble the amount of the alleged usurious interest paid by the plaintiff and his assignor Huelter, praying that said sum be deducted from the principal due under said indebtedness, and for general relief. The defendants presented a general demurrer to the original complaint, which the trial court sustained and also presented a general demurrer to the amended complaint, which the trial court also sustained without leave to amend. The judgment followed from which this appeal has been taken.

[1] There are two points presented by the appellant upon this appeal. The first is that, the transaction between the defendants and the original makers of the promissory note and trust deed being usurious, the plaintiff as the transferee of the property affected thereby, and which he took by the foregoing several transfers, subject to said indebtedness, is entitled to recover the trebled amount of interest paid by himself and his assignor Huelter upon said obligation. The second point urged by the appellant is that the right of action to recover and to treble the amounts of interest thus paid by his predecessor in interest Huelter was properly assignable and was duly assigned to him. In presenting the first of these propositions, the appellant relies upon the recent decisions of this court upholding the view that the transaction which is set forth in his pleadings is a usurious one, and chiefly upon our decision in the case of Haines v. Commercial Mortgage Co., 200 Cal. 609, 254 P. 956, 255 P. 805, 53 A. L. R. 725. In so doing, however, the appellant entirely overlooks the proposition of law upon which the trial court apparently relied in its order sustaining the defendants' demurrer without leave to amend. That proposition of law, broadly stated, is that a grantee of property taken subject to a usurious loan, the amount of which is deducted from the purchase price, will not be permitted to complain of usury in the inception of the loan. The respondents, on the other hand, present an amplitude of authority upholding this proposition and showing it to be in this as well as in most other jurisdictions in this country well-settled law. The following are some of the leading cases upon which the respondents thus rely: Matthews v. Ormerd, 140 Cal. 578, 74 P. 136; Trusdell v. Dowden, 47 N. J. Eq. 396, 20 A. 972; Terminal Bank v. Dubroff, 66 Misc. Rep. 100, 120 N. Y. S. 609; Brown v. Jones, 89 Misc. Rep. 538, 152 N. Y. S. 571;

Stein v. Indianapolis Building, etc., Ass'n, 18 Ind. 237, 81 Am. Dec. 353; Essley v. Sloan, 116 Ill. 391, 6 N. E. 449; Key West Wharf & Coal Co. v. Porter, 63 Fla. 448, 58 So. 599, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 173, 188, and cases cited. The appellant has furnished us no reply to the point thus presented, nor to the foregoing list of persuasive authorities, and we are satisfied that none could be made, and hence the trial court, in reliance upon the foregoing legal principle, was justified in sustaining the defendants' demurrer without leave to amend.
